And while President Roosevelt met with little opposition from the big financial interests in the spring of 1933, it must be admitted that he and they faced our business problem with distinctly different points of view.

Both were anxious that business should recover. But President Roosevelt wanted business to recover so that it might support the masses of people who are dependent on it. These financial interests wanted business to recover so that it might have another grand spree.

What they actually said was, "Recovery before reform."

I am not objecting particularly to these attacks upon the President. Every President who has done anything worth while has been subjected to just such attacks. Washington met with so much unfair criticism that he declared he would rather be in the grave than in the Presidency; but America remembers Washington and has utterly forgotten who those critics were.

Even President Roosevelt is not being attacked more bitterly and more unfairly than was Abraham Lincoln; and if Washington and Lincoln could take it, I am not going to worry about Franklin Roosevelt. In spite of the squealing of the special interests through the newspapers which our industrial evolution placed in their hands, the masses of America are going to have a New Deal; and when that happens, they will remember Franklin D. Roosevelt, and forget that there ever was any such opposition.

Moreover, I am glad that I live in a country in which the administration can be attacked unfairly; for if we were to begin by suppressing unfair criticism, we would surely wind up by suppressing all criticism, and the day of American liberty would be over.

All that I am interested in is that the American people shall understand the nature of these attacks. If they then agree to act and to vote in the way in which these special interests are urging them to act and vote, we can't blame the special interests; for we shall richly deserve what will then be coming to us.

Then we may look forward to one more spree of unrestrained speculation, and one more crash, even more disastrous than the last one, and more terrible years of hopeless, deadening unemployment.

The issue, after all, is very clear. It might not be clear, to be sure, if our newspapers were not obliged to tell the news, and if they could keep the American public in the dark as to what is actually happening. All Americans want business recovery. We all want business, not only to get well, but to stay well. The only question is whether this can best be achieved by the New Deal or by the Old Deal; and the difference between the two is easily grasped if one has access to the news.

The New Deal seeks to revive business by enabling the masses to purchase its products, and therefore gives first attention to the welfare of the masses. The Old Deal places all emphasis on retaining and reviving the traditional rights and privileges of wealth. It is not opposed necessarily to the masses becoming prosperous, but insists that they can do so only if we resume the course which led first to the depression and then to the crisis of 1933.

It is not an issue then between labor and capital, for whichever method leads to lasting recovery is best for capital and for labor, too. Nor is it an issue between agriculture and industry, for if either agriculture or industry is depressed the other is bound to become depressed. The issue is one of how to achieve recovery—shall we believe the news or believe the editorials?

Nevertheless, if this attack on the President should succeed, it means that America must abandon every effort to achieve recovery through adequate buying power to the masses of the American people.

The N. R. A. was such an effort. American business, to be sure, failed to use the N. R. A. for that purpose and the N. R. A. was only partially successful; and later the Supreme Court declared that no such arrangement would be legal unless America should make it legal by some amendment to the Constitution.

Even the partial business revival which we are enjoying is definitely attributable to acts of the administration for which the President is being criticized most bitterly.

It is charged against him by these big business newspapers that he has poured out money by the billions of dollars, for no other purpose, apparently, than to find jobs for millions of American wage earners who must otherwise have starved to death.

Now, the special interests did not actually want those millions to starve, and the President didn't think that these public-works projects were the best way of employing the unemployed. He preferred to have our businessmen employ them in our factories, which, if we had cooperated under the N. R. A. we might have done.

But business refused to do that, and it turned out to be unconstitutional anyway, so the administration had to pour out billions or else let the masses starve. The administration poured out billions, and these financial minds did not approve.

That is the real meaning of those editorials which declare that we should first have balanced the Budget, regardless of the millions who were out of work. President Roosevelt has surely been eager to balance the Budget; but when balancing the Budget means starvation to millions of Americans, he preferred to let the Budget wait.

The traditional banker-mind preferred to let the starving millions wait. So apparently does William Randolph Hurst, although he is a bit more outspoken than even the banker-owned editors.

Hearst, by the way, is something of an exception in journalism. He doesn't deal so much in accurate news as in popular entertainment; and people read his journals not for information but for thrills. But it has been a very profitable business and Hearst has been able to live on his glorified California estate in a way which might well arouse the envy of an ancient Roman emperor.

I am not criticizing him. Hearst believes that Hearst should live like that, and he is entitled to persuade others to his way of thinking, if he can. What he has been objecting to most of late are the income taxes. The Government has been pouring out so many billions for mere relief of the unemployed, and the Hearst income taxes have consequently been so high that he says he can no longer afford to keep up that estate.

No wonder he hates the Roosevelt administration. And if he can persuade his readers to repudiate the Roosevelt administration because of this, there is no sense whatever in blaming him.

If one wants to know how this so-called orgy of spending has actually worked out, however, all he needs to do is read the papers. I mean, of course, the news columns. By this relief work millions of Americans who would otherwise be penniless have been getting wages and spending them. And they have been buying the products of American industries, and business therefore is actually picking up again.

The banker-owned press says that we could not afford to pay out all this money for nothing more than employment. But let us see.

Money, after all, is not wealth and cannot by itself produce any wealth. All financiers know this, but they do not all act as if they did.

Wealth comes and can come from just one source. That source is employment.

All our values that are measurable by money are produced out of Nature's raw materials by human effort. All that money does is to enable us to exchange these values and thus get things we want in return for whatever it is we have to sell, which is usually our labor power.

All that I am suggesting is that we take sides against confusion by studying the news instead of taking these editorials too seriously.

If you read in the news columns that business is reviving, and you read in the editorial columns that it is being strangled by the Roosevelt administration, which statement will you be likely to believe?

The newspapers, in their news columns, have told us where the money went; and we all know that the President was as anxious as the newspapers that the Budget should be balanced. It was only a question of when it should be balanced.

If he had balanced the Budget when these angry newspaper owners wanted him to balance it, millions of Americans must have starved to death. He had to let the Budget wait or let the starving millions wait. If anyone is angry because he did not let the millions starve, I suppose we must let him be angry. But we can do our own thinking about it.

Every act of the Roosevelt administration has been an effort at least to get adequate buying power into the hands of the masses of Americans so that by their buying they might keep business good and keep themselves employed.

There had to be a New Deal if we were ever to be prosperous again. Some way had to be found to get sufficient buying power into the hands of the masses so that they could buy the now enormous output of our machines. Unless that were done, business must continue in the dumps, our machines could not be operated at anything like their capacity, and millions must, therefore, remain unemployed.

Hoover naturally couldn't see this. He can't see it yet, and is still insisting that the way to prosperity is the way which he tried and which sank us further and further into depression.

And particularly I am not proposing any censorship. I am simply proposing that the public understand this issue. When the American public does understand, I know it will not agree to starve to death, even to please our erstwhile financial authorities, and to comply with their notion of how the Budget should be balanced; and it will not turn against an administration which has not only promised to represent the masses but in every official act has dared to keep that promise.

It has dared, for instance, to pour out billions, when only the pouring out of billions could relieve the poverty and distress which resulted from these interests being permitted to have their way too long.

It has dared to inaugurate unemployment insurance, which no previous administration had ever dared to do. It has dared also to inaugurate old-age insurance. It dared to abolish child labor, although by decree of the Supreme Court child labor may temporarily come back. It has dared to deal with the farmer, not with mere words but with actions which provided him with buying power and enabled him to do his share in the present business revival. More than all, it has dared to propose an arrangement whereby, if we will, we can distribute to the masses the huge abundance which it has now become possible to produce.

Under the N. R. A. we could have done just that. And under one more Roosevelt administration we can and will do it. So I am not worrying about the issue. Business leaders may have been slow to grasp it, but they are now waking up. Our financiers generally have been slower still, but they will wake up.

They must, if they read the news columns of the papers which they own.

For those news columns do contain the facts. The editorial columns contain nothing but opinions; and in a conflict between our opinions and our facts, it is more than likely, in the long run, that the facts will win.

JEFFERSONIAN DEMOCRACY—ADDRESS BY POSTMASTER GENERAL FARLEY

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Hon. James A. Farley, Postmaster General, before the Young Democratic Clubs of Kentucky, at Louisville, Saturday, October 5, 1935.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is gratifying to appear before a young Democratic meeting, for it means an audience vitally alive to the necessities and the duties of the present hour. We are living in a new age. The "good old days" that are the dream of the reactionaries will never come back again. This is an age of readjustment too long postponed. Today we face new problems, and upon their courageous solution depends the preservation of our democratic institutions.

Here in Kentucky the Democrats have just nominated a splendid young Democrat as their candidate for Governor, a fine example of the far-sighted, intelligent, militant, and loyal young Democratic leaders of your great State, in the person of your lieutenant governor, A. B. Chandler, Jr., well known to all Kentuckians as "Happy" Chandler.

I believe it is most important that you have in the capitol at Frankfort a Democratic Governor thoroughly in sympathy with the aims and purposes of our great Democratic President—Franklin D. Roosevelt. I have no doubt as to the outcome in Kentucky in November any more than I have in the great victory which is assured in November 1936.

The new problems of the day cannot be solved by the old formulas. The world is passing through a new phase and the world of tomorrow is being made today. And because the world of tomorrow will determine the status of the young men of today, this is the young man's day.

We propose to save the democracy of which Jefferson was the philosopher. Yes; the cause that Jefferson thought for, and Jackson wrought for, is today being fought for by that gallant leader who thinks as Jefferson thought, and fights as Jackson fought. It is a glorious thing to go into a battle behind the plume of a fighting leader who is as fearless in combat as Andrew Jackson.

The struggle just beginning is not without its touch of humor. Could anything be more ridiculous than the spectacle of the old Hamiltonians, notoriously contemptuous of Jefferson and equal rights, lugubriously lamenting and wailing lest the party of Jefferson depart from the fundamental principles of its patron saint?

You younger Democrats are to be congratulated on having a blessed heritage in the political principles of the founder of the party. These principles are so fundamental and eternal that their verity cannot be affected by the passing of the years. They are grounded deep in human nature and rest upon the inalienable rights of man. The principles of Jefferson are the formula of a free society and of a free people. In view of the Hamiltonian interpretation of Jeffersonian democracy so fashionable among the discredited spokesmen of the old deal it may not be amiss to briefly touch upon them.

What are the fundamental principles of Jefferson?

You will find the heart of his philosophy in the preamble of the Declaration of Independence—that the people are endowed with certain inalienable rights, and that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and that to secure these rights governments are instituted among men deriving their just power from the consent of the governed.

That is the keynote of Jeffersonian democracy, and thickly sprinkled through his letters and public papers are powerful amplifications of that idea. He declared for equal rights for all and special privileges for none. He said that no one had a right to use government as a stirrup by which to mount and ride on the backs of his fellow men.

He shocked the Bourbons of his day by the assertion that human rights come first, that legitimate property rights must be respected, but that in case of conflict the rights of men must prevail. He invited the abuse of the ancestors of the present-day eulogists of Jefferson by saying that governments are the servants of the people and not their masters; that they are instrumentalities to be employed in the interests of the people.

And he was against the exploiters of the masses, whether they wore a crown or waved a wand of gold.

Yes; he was the first American statesman to force reforms to prevent a concentration of wealth in the hands of a few. Scarcely had he written the Declaration when he hurried back to Virginia to demand the abolition of the law of primogeniture. This was a law conceived by feudalism to prevent the dissipation of great landed estates through their division on the master's death. It gave to the eldest son the whole of the land and left the others without an acre. He called it a relic of feudalism. He denounced a system which he said "made one member of every family rich and all the rest poor." And he took his stand four-square for its repeal.

He was denounced by the reactionaries as a traitor to his class.

He was assailed as an enemy of property.

He was abused as a demagogue and a Communist.

All the reactionary forces in Virginia mobilized against him and fought him with a bitterness that persisted to his dying day; but Thomas Jefferson changed that law of inheritance avowedly to prevent the concentration of financial power in the hands of the few. In the last days of his life he said it was one of the greatest services he had rendered his country.

A little while ago President Roosevelt asked if the American people, acting through their Government cannot, under the Constitution as it stands, give to the Nation a program of social and industrial regulation?

Instantly the financial power was on its toes shouting for the Constitution. They denounced him as an enemy of the fundamental law. Forgetting that the fathers of the Constitution wisely provided a method for its amendment to meet the changing conditions of future times they stooped to the cheap demagogy of pretending that to suggest an amendment is to attack the fundamental law.

And in the same breath they had the temerity to evoke the name of Jefferson.

Was Jefferson opposed to amendments when required? Why history records that he mobilized his forces and led the fight for amendments within 2 years of the adoption of the Constitution. An amendment? No; he was more wicked than that—he asked 10 amendments. And why did he demand them? Because the constitutional fathers had failed to incorporate into the Constitution a single provision for the protection of the inalienable rights of man. The most sacred part of your Constitution is your Bill of Rights, the 10 amendments that Jefferson forced within 2 years of the establishment of the Republic.

I am willing to submit to any audience of the free men of America that the first ten amendments forced by Jefferson constitute the immortal part of that immortal instrument.

Nor is that all we know of Jefferson's attitude toward amending the Constitution whenever the service of the people may require. He abhorred the idea that any generation could forever put the American people in a strait jacket. His sense of realism and common sense revolted at the thought of putting a young and expanding nation into a concrete cast. His statesman's visions foresaw that the passing years would create new problems not dreamed of by the founders that would require new remedies not provided.

And so he wrote to a correspondent (Dumas):

"Happily for us that when we find our Constitution defective and insufficient to secure the happiness of our people, we can assemble with all the coolness of philosophers and set them to rights."

Do you note the words "when necessary to the happiness of our people"?

And again he wrote (to Benjamin Vaughan):

"Had our Constitution been unalterable—pardon the absurdity of the hypothesis—we must have gone to ruin with our eyes open."

And again he wrote: "Whatever by the Constitution, great care must be taken to provide a mode of amendment when experience or a change of circumstance shall have manifested that any part of it is unadapted to the good of the Nation."

And now again, against the clamor of the reactionaries concerned solely with the preservation of their privileges, let me read you the answer that comes ringing down the generations in a letter to Samuel Kerchival:

"Some men look at constitutions with sanctimonious reverence and deem them like the Ark of the Covenant, too sacred to be touched. They ascribe to the men of the preceding age a wisdom more than human and suppose what they did to be beyond amendment. I knew that age well. I belonged to it and labored with it. It was very like the present but without the experience of the present; and 40 years of experience in government is worth a century of book reading; and this they would say themselves were they to raise from the dead * * * I know that laws and institutions must go hand in hand with the progress of the human mind."

So much for the cheap demagogy of the special pleaders of the old deal who would persuade the followers of Jefferson that he would oppose amendments to the Constitution to make it adaptable to the present needs.

But Jefferson did not escape the demagogues of privilege in his day. From the hour he entered upon his Presidency until he retired to private life he was constantly charged by the opposition orators and papers with destroying the Constitution.

When he asked for the repeal of the partisan judiciary act, passed on the eve of his inauguration for the purpose of packing the Federal branch courts with enemies of democracy, they cried hysterically that he was wrecking the Constitution.

When he bought Louisiana for a song and gave a vast empire to the flag they said he had murdered the Constitution.

When he asked for another amendment on the election of the Presidents to make more certain the registering of the public will, they screamed that Jefferson had trampled on the Constitution.

When he resorted to an embargo as a substitute for war, when war would have meant ruin, they lashed him with the charge that he had torn up the Constitution.

And the experience of Jefferson was the experience of Andrew Jackson. For 8 years when that great warrior was fighting his heroic battle against the incipient plutocracy of his time, and making the people's government serve the people's interest, they said he was an enemy of the Constitution.

It is a curious fact that from the days of Thomas Jefferson to the days of Franklin D. Roosevelt there has not been a battle waged against privilege and for the rights of the common man that the special pleaders of the privileged class have not raised their hands piously to Heaven and rolled their eyes in pretended anguish over the mangled form of the Constitution.

Thus President Roosevelt has not escaped the slander that was poured so lavishly on Jefferson and Jackson. Why, there are reactionaries of the Hoover regime of suicide and soup who are convinced that when President Roosevelt moved the Capitol of the Nation from Wall Street to Washington he sacrilegiously abandoned the Constitution.

There is not an enemy of real democracy in the land who is not against him; not a reactionary who is not against him; not one of the exploiters of the people that is not against him; but the people are for him, because he is fighting their battles with a courage that has put the fear of the Lord into the hearts of their enemies.

And who is the leader, the spokesman, the pensman of the opposition? Behold an old acquaintance—Herbert Hoover. True, Ogden Mills is playing second fiddle in the old-deal orchestra, and Andrew Mellon is singing low, but head and shoulders above them all is the leader—Mr. Hoover.

He takes his place at the head of the procession prating the old hackneyed phrases that tortured our ears through the 4 Hoover years of inertia and human misery. He personifies the old deal; and the people will take their choice.

You are not so young that you did not see the old deal ripen and rot. You saw the crash upon the market and the wiping out of billions of credit in 4 days. You saw the factories chill their furnaces and turn breadwinners out into the street to beg or starve. You saw the arm of the jobless lengthening day by day through 4 years of deepening shadows. You heard the constant crash of banks throughout the country as the savings of a lifetime of the middle classes and the poor were swept away. You heard the constant hammering of the auctioneer knocking down the homesteads of farmers whose fathers had redeemed them from the wilderness. You saw these tillers of the soil in desperation sally forth into the highways with pitchforks in their hands. You saw commerce fading from the sea and our greatest harbors almost deserted by ships of trade.

You saw the sound banks choked with idle dollars and granaries choked with unused grain, while legitimate enterprise could get no credit and starving children could get no food.

You heard the starving idle asking their Government for a chance to earn their bread in self-respecting toil, and heard the old deal answer that the American way was to seek the bread of charity. You heard the farmer beg for relief from ruin, and heard the old deal, speaking with the tongue of a member of the Cabinet, reply that he should take advantage of his leisure to travel and see the world.

Oh, how well you remember the old deal; how well you remember the assurance of Mr. Hoover that "prosperity is just around the corner."

We challenge the old deal, grass roots and all, with this assertion: That through 4 years of the tragic human misery not one constructive act or thought came from the administration of Herbert Hoover. It stood helpless in the midst of the ruin its pet policies had wrought—and it had no plan. With the economic life of the Nation moving with ever increasing rapidity toward utter ruin the old deal sat twirling its thumbs, stupidly waiting for something to turn up.

Do you want to go back with Mr. Hoover, grass roots and all, to the old deal?

Within 2 days of his inauguration Franklin D. Roosevelt acted—closed the banks and saved the Nation from the greatest financial catastrophe in human history. From that hour on this remarkable man has acted constantly, with courage and decision. And from that hour we began to slowly climb from the slough of despond. He acted for the farmers—and last year they made more than a billion dollars. He acted for the depositors in banks—and as if by magic the bank failures ceased to claim the headlines. He acted with the audacity of necessity for business—and the merchant on the verge of bankruptcy, noting an increasing trade again, held himself erect with hope and confidence. He acted so wisely for all that the income-tax receipts for 1934 mounted by many millions. And he is acting now for the jobless, on useful public works, and soon many of these idle will be on the pay rolls; and the pay rolls will reach the merchants; and these merchants' increased trade will reach the factory; and the factory, with increased orders, will put added men to work.

But the President and the New Deal are not through. Franklin D. Roosevelt does not patch—he builds. He is building for the future and building against a return of the tragedy of this prolonged depression. He is building in the spirit of democracy and against the necessity for a dictator tomorrow. He knows, as blind Bourbons never know, that a return to the old deal is a return to the old practices and wrongs, and that a return to these is a return to the economic chaos and ruin from which we are now emerging. Thus, he is writing social justice into our system and, when he is finished, unless the people are homesick for Mr. Hoover and the old deal, he will go down into history as one of the greatest humanitarians that ever sat in the seat of the mighty.

We have principles—the principles of sound democracy.

We have a cause—the cause of justice and humanity.

And we have a leader who looms today as one of the foremost figures in all the world.

Providence has always brought us a leader for a crisis. Never a graver crisis and never a more inspiring leader than this smiling warrior in the White House. He possesses the qualities the times require.

He has courage—and no one doubts his courage.

He has initiative—and that is a matter of record now.

He has decision—and he never falters.

He has honesty of purpose—and no one dares question that.

He has an open mind—and that means that he has not stubborn pride of authorship that would impel him to cling to an error.

He has a heart—and God knows in days like these we need a man of heart and humanity in the seat of power.

He has frankness—and the frankness of this man has been a marvel to the Washington correspondents. He has no spokesman; he speaks for himself. He has no question box—he takes his questions hot from the bat. He has nothing to hide.

He has the Jeffersonian idea that he is engaged in the business of all the people.

No other President has ever known such pressure, such solemn obligations; but these almost superhuman labors for the people have not robbed him of his smile.

The privileged and the exploiters cannot intimidate or move him from his righteous purpose, and the people will sustain him overwhelmingly at the polls.

RESTORATION OF NATIONAL PROSPERITY

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a plan to restore national prosperity worked out and proposed by W. C. Simons, publisher of the Lawrence (Kans.) Daily Journal-World. Mr. Simons is a practical businessman and a successful newspaper publisher, whose views are entitled to the attention of practical and successful men. His plan for restoration of national prosperity, based on restoring purchasing power to agriculture, is essentially simple. Mr. Simons would pay a subsidy equal to the tariff on wheat, cotton, and hogs actually exported. The Government would employ first-class salesmen to help dispose of these products in foreign markets. How the proposed plan would work is explained by Mr. Simons in his statement, which I ask to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the plan was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A PROPOSED PLAN FOR RECOVERY IN THE UNITED STATES, WHICH WILL ALSO AID IN THE WORLD-WIDE RESUMPTION OF BUSINESS—THE FARMER OF THE UNITED STATES HAS NOT SHARED IN NATIONAL PROSPERITY FOR 15 YEARS. DURING THAT PERIOD FARM PROFITS HAVE LARGELY VANISHED WHILE TAXES HAVE GREATLY INCREASED

The farmer today needs almost everything in and about the home and farm.

Put purchasing power in the hands of the farmer and it will accomplish many important results, among them being:

It will start factories to work.

It will make farmers' credit good at banks.

How can we give the farmer purchasing power?

Through paying a subsidy equal to the tariff on wheat, cotton, and hogs, actually exported.

How will this help?

It will automatically set the price on these articles on the domestic market at the world price, plus the tariff.

Will such an act shut us out of world markets on manufactured cottons, or on processed wheat or pork products?

No; for the act should provide to refund to the manufacturer or processor the amount of the subsidy on the wheat, cotton, or hogs required to produce the manufactured or processed articles.

What will be done with the surplus? Will it not be true that the presence of this exportable surplus will depress the domestic market?

I think not. The Government should secure first-class salesmen to assist its consular service in finding markets in foreign lands, using the reciprocal provisions of our tariff to grant preferential rates to countries buying our goods.

Will such action work to the injury of American industry through flooding our country with foreign goods?

No; because by such action we shall have placed in the hands of American farmers greater purchasing power, and as a result have opened factories and restored credit at home. Not only this, but it will also help break the frozen conditions in other nations, and will in turn give to their peoples greater purchasing power for our goods.

We are still dependent on foreign lands for many products that either we do not produce at all, or in quantities insufficient for our needs. Our trading efforts should center on such products rather than to receive freely imports of all kinds.

Is this price fixing?

No; excepting as it adds to the world price the amount of the tariff as a subsidy.

Will not the result be that everyone will increase production?

There probably will be increased production, because there will be greater consumption, but in the end the law of supply and demand will tend to keep production in balance. The retirement of some marginal lands might also aid in controlling production.

How will it affect credits?

It will restore to agriculture and industry activity and profit. These increased activities and earnings will warrant an extension of credit and banks will be glad to make loans which will then be good loans because given to going, profit-making concerns, or to successful individuals.

Will such action be expensive to operate?

No; no additional bureaus and few additional employees will be needed to handle all matters connected with granting subsidies. As the Government grants the subsidy only on the products actually exported, no investigation will be necessary to see how much cotton or wheat is grown, nor the number of hogs raised. With increased domestic consumption the exportable surplus should not be too large to be equitably handled by our trade representatives.

How will it affect Federal income?

At present receipts from income taxes are growing less and less. With renewed and sound activity on the farm and in industry incomes will be increased, producing more revenue through income taxes; and the increased consumption of other products will also result in an increase in duties collected.

How long will it take to bring this about?

It should come about in part immediately, and to a great degree with the marketing of another crop. The local packer, miller, and manufacturer will automatically be forced to pay the world price plus the tariff, as he cannot import such articles without even greater expense, and the grower can sell his products for export.

Are enough farm products included?

I think so; but if later it should be found that other articles should be included, such action may be taken.

Will organized labor protest increased costs?

It may, until it is shown that the demand for labor in all lines will be greatly increased under such a law. By the action proposed men will return to the farms and will be held by the farms, who for 10 years or more have been forced to seek jobs elsewhere.

The above outline was prepared by W. C. Simons after several years of study of the farm question. A more incomplete outline was first submitted to the Hoover administration; and later an enlarged outline to C. B. Merriam, Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and by him to Secretary Wallace, of the Department of Agriculture.

The plan is not spectacular, is not revolutionary, and the total cost of its operation would be immaterial, compared to the volume of public spending during the past year. The plan simply applies the protection of a tariff on certain farm products in the only manner in which they can be protected by a tariff.

The whole plan has been thoroughly discussed with Prof. John Ise, of the department of economics at Kansas University, and with several other outstanding American economists. It is nonpartisan, and while it offers an opportunity to protect American farmers in the only way in which the tariff may be effectively employed to their surplus products, it also paves the way for better international understanding and good will.

The plan has been discussed with Senator CAPPER, Congressmen GUYER and MCGUGIN, with the late John A. Simpson, national president of the Farmers' Union, with national leaders of the Grange, and with prominent agriculturists and stockmen. The publication of the plan has been urged by several of those familiar with it, but it has been witheld until the effects of present plans and policies could be determined. It will be noted that the plan in no wise violates the American ideals of government and does not give the Government control of the land.

A thorough discussion and criticism of the plan is welcomed.

RISE OF GRASS—ARTICLE BY CHESTER C. DAVIS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask permission to have published in the RECORD an article entitled "Rise of Grass", written by Chester C. Davis, Administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which was published in the Country Gentleman for January 1936.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Country Gentleman for January 1936]

This is a story of the return to grass here in the United States. Grass is growing on a thousand hills today where a few years ago 30-cent wheat and 6-cent cotton were being mined out of the eroding land at the expense of our soil, which was, in effect, being sold down the river by the billions of tons.

It has been said that during the eighteenth century great progress in agriculture was made in the general field of animal breeding; in the nineteenth century the development came in the field of crop production, including scientific farming, fertilization, mechanization, and better seed varieties; and now in the twentieth century a positive trend toward the development of a more efficient pastoral agriculture seems to be indicated.

A review of our agricultural history here in the United States—and I will make it brief—discloses a steady retreat of the grass line, a constant surrender of grass to cultivated crops.

Here was a continent of grass and forest drinking deeply of the rains. The run-off of water and eroded soil was at Nature's minimum rate. Her grass and forest floor protected New England from floods and soil erosion as her stern and rock-bound coast guarded her from the sea. Grass caught in the breeches buckles at the knees of the Pilgrim Fathers when they stepped from Plymouth Rock. The moccasins of Daniel Boone fell silently on the forest floor of our central highlands, and grass brushed the stirrups of Buffalo Bill. The Texas Trail from Ogallala to the Rio Grande led through an empire of unplowed range, and the Union Pacific laid its rails on prairie sod from the Missouri River to the setting sun.

But those few hills of corn, planted by the Pilgrims and fertilized with fish, had become a hundred million acres in 1909. They numbered 108,000,000 in 1932. Wheat and cotton have erased the Texas Trail, the hillsides of our central highlands are scarred and gullied and often bare, and the Mississippi River dumps into the Gulf of Mexico each year more than 300,000,000 tons of soil that has been stripped of its protective covering, grass. The wealth of the land of Crockett and Houston and Buffalo Bill, of Ezra Meeker and Brigham Young, the wealth of our country, is going down to the sea in mud.

Now, during the earlier scenes in this triumphant march of our fathers across the continent there were certain conditions that no longer prevail today—and an unlimited range to plow was not the only condition that has changed. A huge export demand for our agricultural crop was one. An unbuilt West that needed building from the raw was another. Debts and interest to pay to Europe was another still. How strange those conditions sound to us today, and yet they were very real only a few short years ago.

The natural thing then to do was to plow our West, and that was done.

FORCED TO MINE THE SOIL

In the latter days of this era I lived in the Dakotas while the plowing fever was on, and I took a hand in it in Montana. Then the interest was to get the grass plowed under in the fastest time possible; today it is in getting grass cover back on much of that land.

In the next era, during the war, when a stimulated demand and high prices prevailed and both patriotism and profit urged greater production of crops, the American farmer threw in his tractor clutch and turned over still another 50,000,000 acres of land that had never felt the plow before. Again it was the natural thing to do.

Another era led up to 1933. Perhaps that period is so close to us now we cannot appraise it as easily as the previous ones—just as the beginning of the present one, the era of the "rise of grass", is still harder for many to see in full perspective. My suggestion is to consider these latter two eras, as I discuss them briefly, from the standpoint of an ordinary farmer, a good farmer, instead of from the standpoint of a grass-rooter, an economist, or a politician.

In the period after the war that led up to the dark days of 1932, the American farmer, inheritor of the land of his fathers, was forced to quit farming, as he knew good farming, and go into the business of mining his soil instead. There are no specious economics involved in that fact. With low prices for what he sold and high prices for what he bought, the farmer had to dig deep down into the only final resource he had, the fertile soil of his farm. He spat on his hands and began to mine that soil for all it would bring today, forced to sacrifice what it would yield tomorrow. He spent his soil desperately, regardless of the cost to future generations of farmers and consumers.

The farmer, in those days before 1933, couldn't practice the farming principles that he knew from teaching and from experience were sound, and rotate enough of his land in grass and other soil-building crops. He had no chance to work for the future; if he didn't mine his land to the limit now there would be no future! He had no choice. There were just so many acres of land in his farm; at 30 cents for wheat and 6 cents for cotton it took all those acres—and then some—to meet the high fixed charges of interest, taxes, and overhead that previous production had established on his land.

Even with supplies of wheat and cotton and corn piled up, untaken by society at prices below cost of production, the farmer had no choice but to produce still more, to mine still further into the fertility of his land.

He sold his crops on the auction block for less than it cost to grow them, and he washed his soil down the river and sold the future producers and consumers down the river with it.

Today, after 3 years of cooperating with his neighbors in a national effort to correct that reckless expenditure of resources, the farmer who had been forced to turn miner straightens up from his labors to look around. He sees his best land growing crops at fairer prices. He looks across to the green uplands of his farm, to the few acres he has been able to change from surplus cultivated crops to grass. And the miner, who is by way of turning farmer again, recognizes on those acres the real value in the future of his land and shouts with all the fervor of one who has made a discovery of wealth:

"There is gold in the grass on them thar hills!"

Perhaps before I go further into a discussion of the grass revolution that has been taking place during the past 2 or 3 years, we should realize how great the toll had been before. Let us measure it in terms of "idle acres."

If present-day agriculture is to be measured negatively in terms of so-called idle acres, let's see where the real idle acres are.

Already more than 50,000,000 acres of once productive land in the United States are now out of production because of soil erosion. It is not temporarily set aside to be put back into cultivation when needed. It is completely and permanently ruined as productive land. That is an area as large as the whole State of Iowa. In addition to that, another 125,000,000 acres now in cultivation have lost all or most of the original producing soil, mostly from sheet erosion, and another 100,000,000 acres are on the way, according to the Soil Conservation Service.

The Soil Conservation Service estimates that where land is cultivated continuously the surface soil is completely lost in from 7 to 75 years, depending on rainfall, slope, and kind of soil. Every year erosion takes away from our fields about twenty times as much plant food as is removed in harvesting crops.

AN IMPRESSIVE OBJECT LESSON

We all know what Iowa soil is worth to the Nation. Land used for corn according to prevailing practices in southwestern Iowa lost 9 tons of soil per acre during the year and a half which a recent soil-erosion experiment covered, while only 1 pound of soil per acre was lost where the corn was grown in alternate strips with alfalfa.

Oklahoma offers a graphic illustration of the trend of our agriculture because of the kaleidoscopic speed with which its record has unfolded, and because of its importance as a farming State. It ranks among the first three or four States in the Union in both major crops of cotton and wheat.

The whole agricultural history of that State, as far as the white man is concerned, has been written within the span of my own lifetime. Fifty years ago Oklahoma was untouched by plow; today it is regarded as one of the most severely eroded States in the Union, according to The Land, February 1935. One 47 years ago the eighty-niners wrote in one immortal day the first chapter of Oklahoma's history. And, before the dust on the new-plowed prairies had dried the ink on that first chapter the sons of the eighty-niners went ahead to exhaust their heritage at the same rate their fathers had founded it. For example, a region of valuable land near Muskogee which was broken for cultivation less than 30 years ago is now seriously impoverished by sheet erosion.

Go to Oklahoma and see the uneroded Kirkland silt as it was before the luxuriant bluestem sod was broken. Then, just 25 feet away, see where more than 12 inches of soil have been removed through sheet erosion, with the clay subsoil showing through and supporting only a meager growth of wire grass. That field has been abandoned. It is "retired acres." And the man who formerly farmed that field is not sitting in a hammock or playing croquet as the owners of "idle acres" are sometimes depicted as doing today.

The pioneers came and plowed and, urged first by unusual opportunity and later by sheer economic pressure, they left drought, dust storms, and idle acres behind them. I will stand and cheer the legendary pioneers, the builders of our West, but I will criticize the economic pressure which drove them and their sons to mine the land they had won. And, what is more, I will not cheer them on to pillage their heritage further as the advocates of a false abundance would have them do today.

We have sung the praises of the pioneer and built monuments to him, his covered wagon, and his plow. Always his plow. With it he conquered; yes, just as Cortez conquered with those other weapons of conquest, the broadsword and the spear. If such a conquest is followed by proper occupancy, then conquest may be justified. But the raping of the temples of the Incas by the gold-thirsty soldiers of Pizarro in Peru was no more destructive than the razing of our forests and prairies by our land-thirsty farmers who conquered with the plow.

In this indictment I do not blame our farmers any more than I would blame alone the soldiers of Pizarro in Peru or Cortez in Mexico. Spain wanted gold. The merchants, the courts, and the courtesans wanted gold. The soldiers were not to blame, as they were ordered by their captains and by the times and were driven across the land.

Similarly, our farmers had their partners in crime as well. Those partners were the railroads who counted on volume in freight; civic associations who wanted their districts "developed"; processors and handlers who clamored for volume, and traders who clamored for exports; and, of course, the consumer cannot be blamed for lining up on that side too. Those were the farmers' allies who, like the farmers, wanted their gold today.

It is a dark picture, so let's shift the scene. In some parts of the West the season we call spring is known as "the rise of grass." I suppose the Indians gave us that term; anyway, I like it. I like the sound of it when people say what they will do "the next rise of grass." It is a living term, a recognition of all the season means, which is an era of freshened hope, a reawakening of life.

I believe we are in "the rise of grass" in other than the seasonal sense. There has to be some economic mainspring to make it temporarily profitable as well as permanently profitable for farmers to reverse the trend toward overcropping that has had us in its grip for generations. The 3,000,000 agricultural-adjustment contracts, with the benefit payments which equalize the current earnings of the man who rests part of his land with the earnings of the man who crowds all of his, are providing that mainspring now. New contracts that are being drafted bear down heavily on "positive" performance, requiring farmers to establish not only the fact that they have retired the agreed area of land from surplus cash-crop cultivation but that they have increased the area of land on their farm that is devoted to soil-building, constructive uses, by a like amount.

I do not imply that adjustment contracts are the only kind of economic mainspring that will work. No doubt there are others. At least 10 years ago former Gov. Frank O. Lowden, of Illinois, advocated a plan under which States would provide by law for lower tax rates on land sown to legumes in order to encourage the shift from cultivated crops into uses that protect and build soil. His plan never was put into effect. If it had been, the present trend to grass would have begun a few years sooner than it did.

In Illinois, where a careful study was made of the use of the acreage contracted under adjustment programs, it was found that 400,000 additional acres were planted to legumes in 1934, and the increase is estimated at more than 1,000,000 acres in 1935. A study made on 810 farms in Illinois showed that about four-fifths of the contracted acreage was planted to legumes. The farms studied averaged 19.4 contracted acres per farm.

A complete study of the more than 900,000 contracted acres in Minnesota which were shifted from corn and wheat by more than 92,000 signers of adjustment contracts brings out the fact that, because of the drought, 55 percent of this land was used for emergency forage crops, such as Sudan grass, sorghums, millet, soybeans, and other roughage, while only about 12 percent was planted to alfalfa, new seedings of clover, timothy, and other similar soil-improving crops, and to trees. The remaining 33 percent was summer fallowed to control noxious weeds or to conserve moisture or were left to natural growth.

In spite of the drought, short seed supplies of many legumes and grasses and limited farmer purchasing power at the beginning of the program, the reports show the extent of the "rise of grass" in the United States. The national alfalfa acreage increased 14 percent, or 1,750,000 acres, in 1935 more than in 1934. Soybean acreage went up 1,200,000 acres, an increase of 29 percent over 1934. Lespedeza for hay purposes increased by 50 percent in 1934, and this on top of previous large increases. The hay acreage for 1935 increased by 5,384,000 over 1934, or about 9 percent, according to the United States Bureau of Agricultural Economics, which reported that "acreage taken out of production under A. A. A. contracts has been planted in large part to forage crops."

USE OF CONTRACTED ACRES

Our replacement crops section made a study last summer in five major cotton-producing States—Georgia, South Carolina, Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Texas—and found that all but about one-fiftieth of the contracted cotton acres in those States had been put to constructive use either in producing food and feed for home use or for soil improvement and erosion prevention, including terracing and strip cropping.

These studies show that, for the Nation as a whole, more than three-fourths of the 35,000,000 contracted acres of 1934 were planted to new seedlings of meadow and pasture crops and to forage crops to meet the drought emergency and for home use—crops of a class that prevent erosion. Sound farm practices, such as better rotations, terracing, and strip-cropping in eroding regions, planting farm wood lots, and the growing of erosion-preventing crops, were accelerated by the use of contracted acres. The more than 30,000,000 contracted acres of 1935 were put to similar constructive uses in adjusting farm practice.

This increase in grasses, legumes, and pasture crops in the farm-crop rotation is not due to education. The farmer has long known the value of such practices. It has been taught by experience and by the colleges, farm press, experiment stations, and extension-service forces for years. It had been taught each good farmer by his father. But the adjustment programs with their benefit payments made it financially possible for the 3,000,000 farmers of America who are cooperating to set aside some thirty to thirty-five million acres on their farms, and temporarily change these acres from cash crops to erosion-preventing and soil-building crops.

A QUESTION TO ANSWER

There is one point which should be discussed in connection with the "rise of grass", this increase in grass and pasture. What will be the effect on the cattleman and dairyman?

I was going over these points the other day with a man who has grown gray in the service of one of the largest milk producers' organizations in the world. He agreed on the general desirability of the shift to less intensive cropping, but he wanted to know: "What is going to be done with the grass?"

That is a natural question: If farmers plant fewer acres in corn, cotton, and wheat, and more acres in pasture and grass, what about the dairyman? What about the cattleman and the sheepman?

I believe that, as a whole, these livestock industries and the consumers of their goods should both profit materially through the cropping systems that are encouraged by the adjustment programs. It takes more acres of pasture and meadow to produce the same units of feed that previously were produced on the 30,000,000 acres that have been changed over from corn and cotton and wheat.

MEAT, MILK, AND WOOL

Records show that land in harvested grain crops produces at least twice as much feed for livestock as does the same land in the average meadow and pasture crops. Experiments in South

Dakota have shown that 50 acres of cultivated crops will put as much gain on steers as 100 acres of native grass. During the war farmers plowed up their grassland and farmed it and thereby obtained twice as much livestock feed as the pasture had supplied.

In the last 45 years we have reduced our grazing areas by about 10 percent and increased our acreage of harvested crops by at least 50 percent. This has been largely responsible for stepping up our pork and milk production by 50 percent. Reversing the trend, reducing the acreage of wheat, corn, and cotton and returning the land to grass should not, therefore, cause damaging surpluses of meat, milk, and wool.

According to Dr. J. R. Mohler, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, a shift to more pasture would not necessarily cause an increase in total meat, although there might be an increase in certain classes of livestock, particularly of sheep. He believes smaller carcasses would be marketed, which is a change in line with market demands.

As for dairying, more pasture and good roughage would mean less milk per cow, but an improvement in the health of the animal and in the quality of the milk and a lower cost of production, which should be a break for both the producer and the consumer.

HEALTHIER DAIRY HERDS

O. E. Reed, Chief of the Bureau of Dairy Industry, says that the American consuming public would be better served if 40 million cows with sufficient improved pasture and the right amount of home-grown roughage were producing the milk supply instead of the 25 million cows now producing it on comparatively concentrated rations and with inadequate pasture and roughage. The heifer problem, which has been so serious in recent years, would be solved for a long time through such an adjustment. There would be less Bang's disease and bovine tuberculosis, and the purity, mineral content, and vitamin content of the milk would be improved. Consumption would possibly be increased through the lower cost of production brought about by feeding on pasture and home-grown roughage with the minimum of concentrates.

The retreat from the high-water mark of our cultivated crop production I believe is inevitable, and it will undoubtedly mean some shifts in the volume of production among areas. In percentages, the shift will not be large. Still it is just as well to analyze their causes and prepare for them. But that is another story.

It all comes to this: If we are to hand on our soil resources in reasonable repair, we have no choice except to modify our intensive overcropping. Crop farming has lent itself to the indulgence of two of our national fancies—hard work and machinery. We have come to measure success by how much hard work we could get done or how fast our wheels were turning. We could enjoy these through crop farming.

Modified pastoral farming offers a different reward. It involves patience and care and skill; it requires all the deep-seated agricultural craftsmanship of crop farming, but not the brute work. It is the master's eye that fatteneth the flock in pastoral farming; it is the sweat of the brow and the bending of the back that makes the crops grow. And possibly it is partly for these reasons we have built up our efficient, ruthless, mass production crop farming, while New Zealand, Denmark, and Argentina undersell us in the world markets with the products of their pastures and their patience.

The President's Executive order of November 26, 1934, withdrawing the remainder of the public domain in Western States from homestead entry brought to an official close an important era in American history, the era of exploitation of land.

The leaders of that era just now closed were those brave souls who could advance new frontiers and hold them against whatever force they met. The challenge to their sons today is to develop another new frontier, to conserve and improve what we have, and to hold everlastingly that frontier in spite of those exploiters who echo the old refrain of production for today regardless of tomorrow. The choice is really ours to make. We may condemn future generations of Americans to an economics of scarcity, or we may assure them of a continued soil fertility and an abundance for today and for tomorrow.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

PAYMENT OF ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9870) to provide for the immediate payment of the World War adjusted-service certificates, for the cancelation of unpaid interest accrued on loans secured by such certificates, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I appreciate the fact that Senators are impatient to vote upon the pending measure. We have been told by the chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. HARRISON] that it will pass this body by an overwhelming vote, and he has also prophesied that it will be signed by the President. That it will be approved by the Senate I have no doubt, but I cannot believe that it will receive the approval of the President.

On the 22d of May of last year President Roosevelt returned to the Senate, without his approval, H. R. 9870, known as the soldiers' bonus measure. The bill before us contains substantially the same provisions as those found in the vetoed bill. The reasons assigned by the President for his opposition to the bill cannot be successfully challenged, and they are as applicable to the pending measure as they were to the bill disapproved. The President stated in the veto message referred to that he believed—> * * * the welfare of the Nation as well as the future welfare of the veterans wholly justifies my disapproval of this measure. * * *

Mr. President, legislative bodies are not endowed with infallibility. Experience has demonstrated that in this and in other countries they have given their approval to unwise, unsound, and unjust measures. The Parliament of Great Britain, which speaks for a liberal and progressive nation, is chargeable with grievous blunders and oppressive legislation. An omnipotent Parliament was largely responsible for the tyrannous measures denounced in the immortal Declaration of Independence. It cannot be said that the volumes of measures approved by the American Congress are free from follies, inconsistencies, and grievous mistakes. Legislation is often the result of extraneous pressure and aggressive active minorities.

It is a fact known to all that legislative bodies are profoundly swayed by local demands and the pressure of group organizations. The measure before us has the active support of various organizations, and we are told that a number have united in urging, if not demanding, its passage. So, the Senator from Mississippi undoubtedly is correct in his statement that it will be overwhelmingly passed by the Senate.

Mr. President, I have favored generous provisions for the dependents of those who lost their lives in the military service of their country as well as for those who were wounded or suffered disabilities as a result of their military service. I have supported measures carrying hundreds of millions of dollars; indeed in the aggregate billions of dollars, for the ex-service men and for soldiers of the Civil War and other wars, and for their families, but I have not favored the various so-called bonus bills that have been presented for our consideration. All Americans have pride in the valor and heroism of those who have served in the American Army and in the American Navy, and they are entitled to the gratitude of the American people. A number of my relatives, among them a son, served in the World War. One was killed upon the battlefield and several were wounded. They only did their duty as did millions of other American boys.

In February 1919 Congress enacted a measure providing that at the time of discharge, an additional payment in the amount of $60 would be made to persons serving in the military or naval forces during the war who were separated from duty under honorable conditions. During the year 1919 proposals were submitted for the granting of a consideration to those who had served during the World War. Senators are familiar with such proposals. Among them was a suggestion for the issuance of a paid-up insurance policy; and in 1922 a measure was passed providing various types of optional settlement from which ex-service men might select. The President vetoed the measure, which provided adjusted-service pay, paid-up endowment insurance, vocational-training aid, and farm or home aid.

In 1924 a measure passed both Houses of Congress which provided as adjustment compensation certain payments of cash to a restricted group, and the issuance of adjusted-service certificates in the form of 20-year-endowment-insurance policies. Under this act provision was made for the granting (to veterans who had served for a given period) of adjusted compensation at the rate of $1 per day for services in the United States and $1.25 per day for services overseas. For a service credit of $50 or less payment was made in cash, but if the service credit exceeded $50 an adjusted-service certificate was issued. A restricted class of surviving dependents of eligible veterans were privileged to receive benefits. The amount of the adjusted-service certificate was determined by taking the net service credit and adding thereto 25 percent, and the figure thus arrived at was used as a net single premium according to the American experience table of mortality, with interest of 4 percent per annum, compounded annually, to procure for the veteran a paid-up 20-year endowment policy of insurance.

Many arguments were advanced in favor of this proposal as against an immediate cash payment. I shall not take the time of the Senate to present the various views which led Congress to adopt the plan just referred to.

To November 30, 1935, there had been issued 3,737,123 adjusted-service certificates, with a maturity or face value of $3,683,536,600. Of these certificates, 218,932 had matured due to the death of the persons to whom they were issued, leaving 3,518,191 certificates in force with a maturity value, or face value, of $3,464,988,330. The basic credit—that is, the adjustment at the rate of $1 and $1.25 per day—represented by the maturity value of the outstanding certificates, is $1,377,950,134, and the present value of these certificates is $2,187,998,155. If only the earned portion of the additional credit granted because of deferment of payment is allowed, and if the full additional 25 percent is allowed, the present value of the certificates on this basis is $2,420,821,127.

The original act permitted certificates to be borrowed upon at the expiration of 2 years from date of issuance to an amount equal to 90 percent of the reserved value of the certificate on the last day of the current certificate year, the reserved value to be based on an annual level net premium for 20 years and computed according to the American experience table of mortality, with interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum, compounded annually.

Subsequently, a number of laws were enacted changing the rate of interest and permitting loans to be made from the United States Government life-insurance fund, which fund constitutes a trust administered by the Government, but the beneficial interest therein lies with the holders of United States Government insurance policies. Congress also enacted a measure effective February 27, 1931, granting authority for the making of loans from the Adjusted Service Certificate Fund. This fund was created for the purpose of accumulating the necessary reserves in order to meet the maturity value of the certificates. In 1932 a further change in the interest rate on loans was made reducing the maximum rate to 3½ per centum, and modifying the provision that required a 2-year period to elapse from the date of the issuance of the certificate before a loan could be secured thereon. On December 31, 1935, 3,026,190 certificates had been borrowed upon, and the liens against them amounted to $1,763,144,548.

Mr. President, on the 18th instant I offered a substitute for the pending bill; it was read by the clerk and will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that day. Perhaps all Senators have not examined the substitute offered, and I shall briefly refer to some of its provisions.

It provides for the payment to veterans upon application of the cash surrender value of their adjusted-service certificates, after deducting therefrom any indebtedness of the veterans on account of any loan or loans, with interest, if any, accrued to the date of settlement under the provisions of the substitute.

May I add, parenthetically, that one of the strongest reasons given by the President in his veto message of the bonus bill passed at the last session of Congress was that it sought to advance by 10 years the date of the payment of an obligation, thus increasing the payments more than $1,000,000,000. The effect of this change in the contract was, as set forth in the President's message, to pay to the ex-service men more than a billion dollars, based upon the present cash surrender value of the certificates. The cash surrender value of an adjusted-service certificate is defined as the amount of the net single premium necessary to purchase paid-up endowment insurance for the maturity amount of the certificate at the then attained age of the certificate holder for the unexpired portion of the original 20-year term of the certificate. The amount of the net single premium is determined on the basis of the American experience table of mortality with interest at 4 percent per annum, compounded annually. The anniversary date to be selected as the basis for determining the amount of the net single premium is the anniversary date of the certificate nearest to the date upon which the application for payment was filed by the veteran with the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

To be entitled to benefits under the provisions of the proposed substitute, there must be complete surrender by the veteran of the adjusted-service certificate, together with all rights and privileges thereunder.

Benefits payable under the terms of the proposed substitute shall be paid to the estate of the veteran if the veteran dies after application for benefits is filed with the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, and payment has not been made to the living veteran or his representatives. No change is made in the provisions of the existing law relative to the payment of the proceeds of the adjusted-service certificates to the designated beneficiaries of the veterans who may die prior to the filing of an application with the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs for benefits under the proposed substitute.

The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized to redeem certificates held by banks as security for loans by payment to the banks of such unpaid principal and unpaid interest as it is necessary to pay in full satisfaction of the claims of the banks, and he is authorized to serve notice upon banks when it is desired to redeem the certificates held by them. He is also authorized to refuse payment of interest accrued after the 15th day following such notice if the banks fail to submit the certificates and notes for redemption within the 15-day period after such notice has been served upon them. He has authority to redeem from the United States Government life-insurance fund certificates held as security for loans made out of that fund. To redeem these certificates the Administrator is authorized to pay to the fund the amount of the outstanding liens against the cerificates held by the fund, including all interest due or accrued, together with such amounts as may be due under the provisions of subdivision (m) of section 502 of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended.

Payments to veterans under the provisions of the proposed substitute will be deferred until 3 months subsequent to the date of the enactment of the measure.

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to redeem from the United States Government life-insurance fund all adjusted-service certificates held by that fund on account of loans made thereon and to pay to it the amount of the outstanding liens against such certificates, including all interest due or accrued, together with such amounts as may be due under subdivision (m) of section 502 of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended. The Secretary is also authorized and directed to make such payment by issuing to the United States Government life-insurance fund bonds of the United States which shall bear interest at the rate of 4½ percent per annum.

No such bonds shall mature or be callable until the expiration of a period of at least 10 years from date of issue, except that any such bond shall be redeemed by the Secretary of the Treasury and the principal and accrued interest thereon paid to the United States Government life insurance fund at any time upon certification by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs that the amount represented by such bond is required to meet current liabilities. Bonds issued for the purposes of this section shall be issued under the second Liberty Loan Act, as amended, subject to the provisions of this section. Mr. President, I assume Senators will be interested in learning the difference between the amount which the Government will be required to pay under the bill which I have offered, and the measure reported by the Senator from Mississippi. In the latter measure the maturity value of the certificates issued would be $3,683,537,660.

This large sum is made possible only by compounding the interest annually upon the base sum fixed in 1924 from that date until 1945. This point was clearly demonstrated in the veto message of the President to which I have referred. Of the certificates issued, 218,932 have matured by reason of the death of the holders of the same. The matured values of such certificates was $218,545,330. There are now outstanding 3,518,191 certificates and the matured value of the same by anticipating the date of payment 10 years aggregates $3,464,988,330.

The substitute bill which I have offered provides for the cash surrender value of the certificates as of January 1, 1936; and the present cash surrender value amounts to $2,420,821,127. Large sums have been borrowed by ex-service men from the Veterans' Administration, and in order to extend these credits, the Administration was required to resort to the adjusted-certificate fund and to the life-insurance fund, which funds were held by the Veterans Administration as trustee to meet the maturing obligations in 1945.

Accordingly, in ascertaining the amount of cash now due upon outstanding certificates, there must be deducted from the $2,420,821,127, $1,471,000,000 taken from the adjusted-certificate fund, and $492,500,000 taken from the Government life-insurance fund, and also $60,000,000 borrowed from banks by the ex-service men for which their certificates were used as collateral.

After restoring to the two funds referred to the amounts mentioned, and paying to the banks the $60,000,000 due, there remain due the veterans $652,821,127. The substitute bill, therefore, would save to the taxpayers of the United States considerably more than $1,000,000,000.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. My understanding of the substitute is that it undertakes to pay to the soldier the cash value of his certificate at the present time.

Mr. KING. That is correct.

Mr. HASTINGS. I may say to the Senator that if that were satisfactory to the soldier, I should be very glad to support it, and I think many Members of the Senate who are opposed to the bill presented by the committee would support it, but may I inquire of the Senator seriously whether or not the adoption of this substitute would really get us anywhere in particular? In other words, should we not still have a difficult problem left before the Congress because of the fact that it would not be satisfactory to the soldier?

My own position is that when we come to the point of passing something, if we are going to do it for the purpose of getting rid of a problem we ought to give to the soldier what he demands. That is the only way we are ever going to get rid of the problem.

Mr. KING. As I understand the Senator, his view is that the "problem" will not be settled until the demands of the veterans are complied with. With that view I am not in entire accord, nor do I believe that if the measure reported from the committee is passed there will be no further "problems" in connection with veterans' legislation still to be met. But may I inquire of the Senator whether he believes that the conduct of the legislative branch of the Government, regardless of the convictions of Senators and Congressmen, should depend upon the desire or demands of any group or minority organization? Certainly it cannot be contended that Congress should surrender its views to group pressure merely to get some "problem" out of the way. The history of legislation shows that many laws have been passed as a result of strong pressure, and the Congress and the country have lived to regret the complacency of the legislative branch of the Government. Recently there were passed the A. A. A., the N. R. A., and the Frazier-Lemke bills. I think it is common knowledge that many Members of Congress believed these measures to be unconstitutional and that their passage would not settle the economic and agricultural problems before the country.

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; but may I inquire of the Senator why he makes this proposal at all unless it is going to be satisfactory to the soldier?

Mr. KING. I am submitting the substitute because I do not regard the bill reported by the committee as resting upon sound and satisfactory grounds. As I have heretofore stated, the President in vetoing the bonus bill at the last session of Congress condemned it as unjust and unfair, and I place myself upon what I conceive to be as the ground occupied by the President.

Mr. HASTINGS. But for the request of the soldier, we should not have any bill here. If that is true—and I think that is true—why do we undertake to substitute something that is not satisfactory to the soldier?

Mr. KING. Using an illustration given by the President of the United States in the veto message to which I have referred, paraphrasing it a little, suppose the Senator from Delaware—if he will pardon me for using him as an illustration—has a note outstanding, payable in 1945: Does he think he ought to be coerced into paying it in 1936 in order to settle the controversy, or get the matter behind him? He would regard the action of any court or any legislature that would compel him to pay the note in advance of the date of maturity as unsound, and, of course, as violative of his rights.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the Senator from Utah will pardon me for one further observation, I satisfy myself by opposing the measure. It seems to me it is useless to suggest something else, as the Senator is now doing.

Mr. KING. If the Senator's view prevailed, there would be but little legislation except that which was backed by active and aggressive minorities or extraneous pressure, because if it is necessary in order to secure legislation that the "demands" of the proponents of the legislation be satisfied, then the functions of Congress would be unimportant and the legislative branch would merely register the views of others rather than its own. The Senator, I am sure, recognizes that because a measure is introduced which meets the demands of a large number of people, Senators and Representatives who are not satisfied with the measure and who believe that it contains elements of injustice, should not refrain from offering substitutes or amendments; indeed, it would be their duty, it seems to me, to do all that they could in a proper way to perfect measures. Even though bills are so strongly supported as to make it apparent that any substitute or amendment will be brushed aside, the obligation, it seems to me, rests upon those who believe that it should be amended or changed to offer such suggestions or amendments as they regard as proper.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator has stated that this is a contract made payable in 1945. I have a telegram this morning from some veterans stating that they never assented or consented to the contract so far as the time question is concerned; that the veterans had no opportunity to pass upon the question as to when the amount should be paid, they claiming that it should be paid at the time the Congress found it was due.

I should like to ask the Senator his views on that subject, because I think that matter has been discussed considerably, and may have led to misunderstanding in some directions. I do not understand that the veterans ever formally assented to the time of payment provided for in the certificates. What are the facts about this assent of the veterans to postponement of the date of payment?

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I may suggest to the Senator that a letter was addressed to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] in April 1922 by the legislative body of the American Legion, in which they approved, so far as they could do so, the acceptance of the adjusted-compensation certificates in 1922.

Mr. KING. I think an adequate reply to the statement of the Senator from Idaho is found in the veto message of President Roosevelt. He referred to the declaration which stated that the act of 1924 constituted a "contract." My understanding is that the veto message had the approval of representatives of the Veterans' organizations throughout the United States. Among the "whereases" in the bill quoted by the President is the following:

> Whereas the payment of said certificates will not create any additional debt, but will discharge and retire an acknowledged contract obligation of the Government——

Evidently, the representatives of the Veterans' organization—I know several of them appeared before the Finance Committee of the Senate—represented to Congress that there was a contract to which the United States and the veterans were parties. Statements are frequently made by proponents of this measure, and by veterans, that a contract was entered into under the terms of which the ex-service men are entitled to the payment of the certificates issued to them. Notwithstanding the maturity of the certificates is 10 years in the future, it is insisted that the certificates should now be paid.

The President, quoting the language of that bill, which received the assent of the veterans' organizations, who denominated it a contract, assumed that there was a contract, and that if it was a contract, then the payment was not due until 1945.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. For just a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it is recalled by all who were familiar with the circumstances at the time that what the ex-service men desired and requested, insofar as they could make a request, was cash payment, but under the circumstances which existed at the time everybody recognized the impossibility of securing cash payment, because of the veto message, and because of the inability to pass the bill over the Presidential veto.

Then the certificate plan was devised, and some of the representatives of the ex-service men, because they recognized it was either that or nothing, that that was all they could get, did go so far as to approve the plan. Insofar as the question as to whether it is a contract between the Government and any individual soldier is concerned, I suppose it could only be construed to be such in view of the fact that the soldier accepted it from the Government, but he accepted it not because he preferred it to cash, but because it was that or nothing; and, as has been said here, even if it can be construed to be a contract, it is the contract fixed by one party to it, and only accepted by the other because it was either that or nothing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GERRY in the chair). The Senator's time on the amendment has expired; he has 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not assent to the conclusions reached by my friend. As a matter of fact, he will recall that one of the most powerful veterans' organizations upon one or more occasions declined to ask for the premature payment of the contracts, so called. Indeed, when the question of adjusted compensation was under consideration in 1924 there was a diversity of views among the ex-service men, some of whom did not favor a bonus; but the plan to which the Senator has referred, the plan of 1924, was worked out and the ex-service men took the certificates provided for in the act.

The act was, as I understand, regarded as a contract between the Government and the ex-service men which did not mature until 1945. The ex-service men accepted the certificates provided for, and many utilized them as a basis for credit. Certainly, as stated by the President, the terms of the act or so-called contract—did not call for the payment of the certificates until 1945.

Interest has accumulated upon loans made to veterans from the Veterans' Administration. It is proposed to forgive or cancel $263,000,000, the amount owing as interest upon these loans. The settlement now proposed in the reported bill aggregates $3,719,000,000. This includes unpaid interest of $263,000,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the Senator carried out his computation so as to show the present value of a certificate?

Mr. KING. Of an individual certificate?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. KING. It would differ according to the age of the individual, but it is approximately $715.

Mr. ROBINSON. Assuming that the certificates are for $1,000?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the Senator carried out the computation far enough to show what would be the result to the veteran if he has borrowed on his certificate the maximum amount he is permitted to borrow, and if he has paid the interest that is required under the Senator's amendment?

Mr. KING. No; I have not carried the computation out, and the computation to which I am referring was made by the Veterans' Administration at my request.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. For a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. I assume, then, that the Senator also has not computed the amount due to a veteran on a hypothetical $1,000 certificate, who borrowed the maximum amount and has not paid any interest on it?

Mr. KING. I have not made that computation. My position, as I have stated, is that there was included in the total face value of the certificates, the difference between what the veteran would have received in 1924, with interest compounded annually between 1924 and 1945, and what the present cash surrender value should be the basis of settlement, if the veterans are unwilling to wait until 1945, the date of maturity of the certificate. The difference between the present cash surrender value and the maturity value is $1,271,178,873.

We hear statements to the effect that the ex-service men have been paid but little, if anything, by the Government. Only a few days ago the Senator from Illinois indicated that the ex-service man was something like the pathetic Roman soldier to whom he referred, who was standing at the door trying to enter in.

In reply to the statements referred to I bring to the attention of the Senate a statement prepared by the Veterans' Administration showing the disbursements for relief of World War veterans from 1918 to September 30, 1935. This shows that the total disbursements amount to $9,049,810,419.51. This large sum exceeds the amount paid to all the soldiers of the Civil War and their dependents down to the present time.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, has the Senator a record here of how many States gave soldiers' bonuses?

Mr. KING. No; but as I understand States have paid in bonuses to the veterans of the World War more than $400,000,000, so that the amount paid to the soldiers by the Federal Government and by the States would be in excess of the nine billion to which I just referred.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I take it that the distinguished Senator from Utah, in referring to a speech of the Senator from Illinois——

Mr. KING. A very eloquent speech.

Mr. LEWIS. Referred to the speech which I made. I am the Senator?

Mr. KING. The Senator is the one to whom I refer.

Mr. LEWIS. I wanted to know to whom the Senator referred.

Mr. KING. I do not think the Senator had any doubt as to the person to whom I referred, but if there should be any doubt I indicate now—in italics—that it was the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the Senator in the memorandum to which he has referred a break-down of this $9,000,000,000, plus, which he says has been paid to the soldiers?

Mr. KING. Yes; I shall not take the time to read it. I can state to the Senator that it consists of direct benefits, compensation, death benefits, that is, for the families; disabilities, emergency officers' retirement pay, allowances for nonservice pensions, adjusted-service certificate fund, death claims, adjusted service and dependent pay, loans to veterans for transportation, military and naval insurance, United States Government life-insurance payments, allotments and allowances, vocational rehabilitation, total expenditures for direct benefits, and the total expenditures for direct benefits for the year 1934, as an illustration, amounted to more than $336,000,000.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I seek information from my able friend?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. KING. For a question.

Mr. LEWIS. Which is all I wish to propound.

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Does the Senator from Utah, in the aggregate amount he charges against the soldiers as benefits, include the sums paid to the wounded for their treatment in hospitals and for the medicines which had to be prescribed for them?

Mr. KING. Yes; that is part of the $9,000,000,000.

Mr. LEWIS. I wanted to know whether the Senator included those items as benefits to the soldiers.

Mr. KING. Of course they are benefits. If I should pay the Senator's hospital bill, it would be a benefit to him.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Did I understand the Senator to include the approximately billion and a half dollars which has been set aside in the Treasury sinking fund to redeem these bonds when they become due? I understood that one of the items was the fund which has been set aside.

Mr. KING. That fund has been almost entirely depleted by loans to veterans.

Mr. BARKLEY. Still, it could not be said to have been necessarily a benefit because it was loaned to the soldiers.

Mr. KING. The Government, in order to pay the certificates upon maturity, set up a fund to which annual payments were made. Veterans who have resorted to that fund for loans, I am sure, do not expect to receive the full maturity value of their certificates. It is expected that the ex-service men shall have deducted from the amount found to be due under the bill reported the loans made by them, less interest, which is to be forgiven, amounting to $263,000,000.

Appropriations were made by Congress to the Veterans' Administration for the year 1935 totaling $641,398,096, and for 1936, $726,670,000. It is estimated by the Veterans' Administration that the appropriations for the Veterans' Administration for 1937 will amount to $793,727,000. It certainly cannot be contended that the Government has been indifferent to the ex-service men.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] asked if I had a break-down of the $9,000,000,000 plus which I mentioned; I ask permission to insert in the RECORD a statement furnished me by the Veterans' Administration which shows the break-down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Veterans' Administration disbursements for relief of World War veterans, 1918 to September 30, 1935

Direct benefits:
Compensation or pension:
Death	$458,349,693.47
Disability	2,253,628,139.78
Emergency officers' retirement pay	54,228,402.29
Disability allowance or nonservice pension	214,763,401.32
Adjusted-service certificate fund (death claims)	214,287,163.49
Adjusted service and dependent pay	49,066,283.18
Direct benefits—Continued.
Loans to veterans for transportation	$76,103.36
Military and naval insurance	1,848,949,875.97
United States Government life insurance	260,950,971.20
Allotments and allowances	582,944,668.10
Vocational rehabilitation	[1] 644,908,964.05
Total expenditures for direct benefits	6,582,153,666.21
Administration	1,285,943,916.79
Grand total	7,868,097,583.00
Appropriations for adjusted-service certificate fund—$1,396,000,000 less $214,287,163.49 death claims	1,181,712,836.51
Total disbursements	9,049,810,419.51

[1] Includes $7,843.07 revolving fund, loans outstanding Sept. 30, 1935. "Administration" includes salaries and expenses; printing and binding; medical, hospital, and domiciliary services; hospital construction; marine and seamen's insurance; and miscellaneous expenditures.

NOTE.—Amount disbursed from insurance premiums, allotments, and vocational rehabilitation gift fund, $1,051,549,382.57, is included in the above.

Mr. KING. I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks an editorial from the Christian Science Monitor, one of the leading newspapers of the United States, whose editorials upon public questions are illuminating and instructive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial from the Christian Science Monitor is as follows:

WHOSE BUDGET?

"Budgets," said Gladstone, "are not merely matters of arithmetic but in a thousand ways go to the root of prosperity of individuals, the relation of classes, and the strength of kingdoms." The United States is being reminded of this on every side in connection with the fiscal estimates just communicated to Congress by President Roosevelt and Henry Morgenthau, Jr., Secretary of the Treasury.

The President's official Budget message put a seemingly hopeful face on the situation for a time. But it appears now that relief will take something like another $1,500,000,000; that the loss of processing taxes may entail anywhere from $700,000,000 to more than twice that amount, and that the veterans' bonus may add $2,000,000,000 or more to the Nation's indebtedness, all this together pushing the public debt probably above $36,000,000,000.

Until now the public has rightly laid to President Roosevelt the responsibility for the fiscal situation of the Government. It has been on his initiative or with his approval that public works and other appropriations have been made which carried the debt above its previous peak. But now there is reached a point at which Congress is more willing to spend what the Treasury has not yet collected than is the President. This is in the immediate payment of the veterans' bonus.

Herein is indicated a weakness of the American financial planning system. Theoretically the United States has had since 1921 an Executive Budget; that is, the President, through a Budget Director, gathers the estimates of the various departments, sifts them down to his own recommendations, and conveys the whole to Congress. He is presumed to lay out a fiscal plan for the Government in which over a reasonable period income and outgo will balance and the needs of the Nation for governmental services will at the same time be met.

But if the executive branch presents a program for the utmost in expenditures that it considers the revenues and credit will wisely stand, and then the legislative branch votes not only all of those appropriations but also some substantial ones of its own devising, the result is an overdraft for which the Executive cannot be held altogether accountable, and for which the whole country may have to foot an uncomfortable bill. The bonus is not the only example of this; it happened less conspicuously in Congress gradual whittling away of virtually all the savings made in the economy bill at the opening of President Roosevelt's administration, and it has happened in the case of pork-barrel bills for post-office buildings, river and harbor improvements, and other purposes in other administrations.

In his book, The Budget in Governments of Today, A. E. Buck, technical adviser to the United States Budget Bureau, indicates this as one of the principal reasons why budgeting results are so unsatisfactory and deficiencies so common in the Federal Government and in most American States. A similarly bad situation exists in the French Government, where Parliament and its finance committee so readily override the efforts of a ministry to effect a balanced account.

In Great Britain the Parliament has bound itself by its own rules to abide strictly by the list of expenditures proposed by the ministry. Without the executive's consent it may not modify these except to reduce them.

Mr. Buck quotes the French economist, M. Leroy-Beaulieu, as saying: "There are some sciences so lofty and serene that they leave in peace those who are not concerned with them, but finance is not one of these; it has a way of taking terrible revenge upon nations and upon individuals who neglect or despise it." A fundamental question facing the American people is whether they want to continue a kind of two-headed fiscal planning that often divides responsibility and defeats itself, or whether they want a real executive budget.

Mr. KING. I also ask to have inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks excerpts from an article by Walter Lippmann, a distinguished writer, whose views upon public questions are read with interest and profit. First I will read a few lines:

The political leaders of both parties have made perfectly clear their notion of the ideal solution of the bonus question—

And that was evidenced by the question propounded to me by the Senator from Delaware—

It is to pay the veterans the money in the period between the national conventions in June and the election in November and to make the payments in the form which puts no visible or tangible burden on the taxpayers. Congress is following the ancient rule that it loves to spend and hates to tax.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The excerpts from the article by Walter Lippmann are as follows:

THE BONUS AND THE SPENDING POWER

The political leaders of both parties have made perfectly clear their notion of the ideal solution of the bonus question. It is to pay the veterans the money in the period between the national conventions in June and the elections in November, and to make the payments in a form which puts no visible or tangible burden on the taxpayers. Congress is following the ancient rule that it loves to spend and hates to tax.

It is this aspect of the question which transcends all others. For the fundamental reason why Congress is unable to resist the demands of the veterans' lobby, why it is willing to add a billion dollars to the amount owed the veterans, is that Congress is operating under a system whereby the benefits it confers are visible and the burdens it imposes are invisible. There does not exist, therefore, any effective check on the spending power. The benefits are definite and politically conspicuous. The costs are concealed either in indirect taxes or in the even more indirect form of bond issues borrowed from the banks.

The veterans are by no means the only organized interest which dominates Congress in this way. The tariff, as operated in the United States, is the oldest and the greatest example of the same principle. Almost any producer can write his own tariff rate because the tax levied by the tariff is invisible and indirect. The consumer cannot see it and is hardly aware that it exists.

The most recent and, in its implications for the future, the most disturbing manifestation of the same principle is to be found in Federal relief. Thus the other day the mayors of the large cities united in making a demand for larger relief appropriations than the President is supposed to be contemplating. The essential reason why they wish the Federal Government to carry so large a part of the load is that local relief has to be financed out of local and clearly visible taxes, whereas Federal relief is paid for by bond issues that seem to cost no one anything.

In its decision the Supreme Court has confirmed the spending power of Congress. It is plain that unless some way can be found to make the costs as visible as the expenditures the power to spend will be exercised irresponsibly and will be at the mercy of pressure groups. There is no way to keep expenditure in check if the people do not realize that they are paying the bill. To be able to appropriate money which seems to cost no one anything is to be under an irresistible temptation to appropriate money. Yet that is the system under which the Government is conducted. It is a system which is certain to produce destructive extravagance and to corrupt profoundly the political habits of the Nation.

* * * * * * *

The problem is not personal and it is not partisan. It is a national problem. And the question is whether the American people can be aroused long enough and sufficiently to bring about a radical reform of the Budget and the tax system.

Without such reform the outcry about expenditures will act only as a slight discouragement to an otherwise irresistible tendency to spend.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I omitted to state that under the terms of the war-risk-insurance law large sums have been paid to ex-service men. The premiums collected have been and are inadequate to meet the payments, and I am advised by the Veterans' Administration that there will be an obligation resting upon the Federal Government amounting to $394,094,961.22 which must be paid to this fund.

Mr. President, there seems to be but little concern as to where the funds are to be obtained with which to meet the demands which will be made if the bill reported by the Finance Committee is enacted into law. It will call for approximately $2,000,000,000. The indebtedness of the Federal Government has now reached colossal proportions, and before this Congress adjourns there will be appropriations and authorizations which will create a total indebtedness to be paid by the Federal Government of between thirty-five and forty billions of dollars.

When the Senator from Delaware referred to meeting and "settling the problem", he did not envision the appropriations which the Government will be called upon to make by ex-service men, their dependents and families. Pensions will be demanded, and other drafts will be made upon the Treasury. The costs of the World War will not end with the payment of the bonus. For many years to come appropriations will be made, and, judging from the experience of the past—remembering that we are still paying Mexican War pensions—it is not an unjustifiable statement to make that future payments growing out of the World War will exceed $50,000,000,000. Never before has Congress been so lavish in its expenditures, and it is certain that the demands of the future will not go unheeded by succeeding Congresses. Provision must be made to meet the stupendous expenditures which will be made.

It is imperative that this and future Congresses should make provision to meet all governmental obligations. The credit of the Government must not be impaired.

Mr. President, I hope the substitute which I have offered will be adopted. By so doing, the taxpayers of the United States will be saved more than a billion dollars, and the obligations of the Government to the ex-service men growing out of the so-called "bonus" legislation will be met.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark	Hayden	O'Mahoney
Ashurst	Connally	Holt	Overton
Austin	Coolidge	Johnson	Pittman
Bachman	Copeland	Keyes	Pope
Bailey	Costigan	King	Radcliffe
Bankhead	Couzens	La Follette	Reynolds
Barbour	Davis	Lewis	Robinson
Barkley	Dickinson	Logan	Russell
Benson	Dieterich	Lonergan	Schwellenbach
Bilbo	Donahey	McAdoo	Sheppard
Black	Duffy	McCarran	Shipstead
Bone	Fletcher	McGill	Smith
Borah	Frazier	McKellar	Steiwer
Brown	George	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	Gerry	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Gibson	Minton	Townsend
Burke	Glass	Moore	Trammell
Byrd	Gore	Murphy	Truman
Byrnes	Guffey	Murray	Vandenberg
Capper	Hale	Neely	Van Nuys
Caraway	Harrison	Norbeck	Wagner
Carey	Hastings	Norris	Walsh
Chavez	Hatch	Nye	White

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ninety-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, it had not been my intention to make any remarks on the pending bill, although I have some very definite convictions with regard to it. I am constrained now to say just a word by reason of the statement made by the able Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] before the Senate last Saturday afternoon. At that time he referred to the fact that a few years ago Congress authorized every holder of adjusted-service certificates to borrow 50 percent of the whole amount which would be due, according to the terms of the certificate, in 1945, or payable to the heirs of the holder upon the death of the holder prior to that time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. For some time we have not been able to hear a considerable part of the proceedings which have taken place in the Chamber. Either we should have order at this time, or we should adjourn until we can have order in the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho makes the point of order that the Senate is not in order. The Chair calls attention to the fact that even low conversation in the gallery is magnified, and that it adds to the confusion in the Chamber and makes it difficult to hear what is going on.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I think I have some difficulty in making myself heard from the position I occupy in the Senate Chamber, so I shall try to overcome that difficulty by coming forward to speak.

I referred to the fact that last Saturday the junior Senator from South Carolina, in the course of his remarks in favor of the passage of the bill, mentioned the law with which we are all familiar, passed a few years ago, to enable the veterans to borrow 50 percent of the full amount which would be due on the certificates, in accordance with the terms thereof, in 1945. He then suggested, and it seemed to me at the time a most unusual statement to be emphasized or to which even reference should be made by a proponent of the bill, that after the passage of this act the first veteran to appear at the Veterans' Bureau to ask for the loan, or the prepayment, as it really amounts to, of half the amount of his certificate, was a man worth more than $1,000,000.

I have been thinking about that since the statement was made. It seems to me, Mr. President, that that shows a fatal weakness in the bill now proposed. The millionaire bonus holder referred to by the Senator from South Carolina, of course, was not an isolated example. I do not mean that our Army was filled with millionaires; but every sensible person knows that there are hundreds of thousands of men of wealth, either inherited or earned, men holding good positions, high executive positions, professional men, lawyers, doctors, and others, men holding good jobs, who now have and are entitled to have bonus certificates in their possession. I do not, for myself, see any justification at this time of financial strain upon the United States Treasury, when, for 7 years past, we have been accumulating an enormous deficit, for extending any benefits to men who do not need them.

What is it that this bill proposes to do? First, in the case taken as an example, of the millionaire certificate holder referred to by the Senator from South Carolina, who undoubtedly received his 50 percent and, more than likely, in view of what the Senator said, is one of that large number who has not paid any interest on the amount which he borrowed, it is proposed to give outright to that man of wealth and to all other veterans who may be wealthy or, at least, well-to-do and able to get along and take care of themselves, the full amount of the interest that has accumulated upon their bonus certificates even if they are in the group that has not paid any interest.

In the second place, it is proposed to turn over to them, to this millionaire bonus certificate holder and the hundreds and thousands of others who are not in need, bonds which they may turn in at once and receive cash.

In the third place, as an inducement to them, if these men who do not need the money will hold their certificates, they are to have an added gratuity of 3 percent per annum for whatever time they hold them up to 1945.

It seems to me that there could be no serious objection at this time to paying the full amount not already paid on the adjusted-service certificates to any certificate holder who is out of work and in need, but to pay it now to the superrich and the well-to-do veterans and those with good jobs, considering the financial stress and strain upon the Treasury, seems to me to be an outrageous thing to do.

I know it will be justified by some who have been opposed in general to this program because they say the present administration has been engaged in a spending program. I listened to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] on last Saturday make such an argument. At least this much ought to be said, it seems to me: That if this bill becomes law with the support of those who have been critical of the spending program of this administration, they ought, at least, to have the decency never again to criticize any feature of the spending program.

There is one other thing that has been said very frequently in this debate, namely, that this is a bill that the President could very well approve. I have taken occasion since last Saturday to reread the record made by the President during the past 4 years upon this subject. With high courage and unanswerable logic, he has taken a position which cannot be successfully assailed. I prefer to believe that he will maintain that position; I prefer to believe that he will use his influence to see that this bill shall be amended so that the millionaire bonus certificate holder referred to by the junior Senator from South Carolina in this case will not be the first to be entitled to receive these additional benefits.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I move to amend section 4 by striking out the words "or multiples thereof" appearing at the end of line 21, page 11. By striking out the words "or multiples thereof" then all these bonds will be in denominations of $50.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. I have one further amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to make a motion before these amendments are all disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Chair recognize one Senator to offer a half dozen amendments before recognizing any other Senator?

Mr. HARRISON. I may say that this is the only amendment I have. The amendment I now intend to offer will not require any discussion. If it shall, I will withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there is no penalty provision in this bill. It has been suggested by the Department that a penalty provision should be in it. So I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the committee amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the committee amendment it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 11. Whoever knowingly makes any false or fraudulent statement of a material fact in any application, certificate, or document made under the provisions of this act, or of any regulation made under this act, shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator insist on including in the amendment the words "or of any regulations made under this act"? Does he propose to make the violation of a regulation punishable by fine in the amount proposed? It seems to me that is rather severe, even admitting the principle, which I do not admit.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say that this proposal follows largely the language of the adjusted-service compensation law; it is merely proposed to follow it through. I hope that no one will be subjected to the penalty, but it seems to me there ought to be a penalty provision in the bill in the event someone should practice fraud upon the Government.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; if he violates the law, that is so. But I am not favorable to this practice of making the violation of some regulation of some department punishable as a crime.

Mr. President, if I may be permitted to do so, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "or any regulations made under this act."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] was rejected on Saturday last, and I ask that that amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 8, after line 22, it was proposed to insert the following:

That provisional first and second lieutenants who served as such in the World War, and who were discharged or resigned within 1 year after November 11, 1918, shall be eligible to receive the benefits under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, on the same terms as other officers of the same rank.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, unless the Senate shall reconsider its action rejecting this amendment, a very grave injustice will be done a small group of men who were among the best soldiers of the United States in the World War.

In 1917 there were three classes of commissions available to officers who had completed the required course of training and sought commissions in the Army of the United States. They could either apply for a commission as provisional officer, as Reserve officer, or as an officer of the National Army. Many of these young men, feeling that if they applied for a commission as provisional officer in the Regular Army they would thereby reach France and the front earlier, applied for a commission of that type.

In the original act adopting the adjusted-compensation plan, for some reason, a provision was written in section 202 that provisional officers should not receive the benefits of the measure; and if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas be not adopted, we will have this condition and this state of facts: A large number of officers who held Reserve commissions during the World War and after the World War went into the Regular Army. Those men today hold commissions in the Regular Army and, at the same time, hold their adjusted-compensation certificates. A small group who were provisional officers retired from the service immediately after the war and have neither commissions in the Regular Army or adjusted-compensation certificates. Why should these men be penalized, even though they constitute a small group, by being denied the benefits of the measure which are allowed to officers of the Reserve Corps now in the Regular Army? How can we say to a provisional lieutenant in the First Division who served in every battle in which the American troops were engaged that because he was a second lieutenant with a provisional commission he shall not have any bonus certificate and, at the same time, give to a Reserve officer who served in another division an adjusted-compensation certificate, although he may hold a commission in the Regular Army today? It will be a rank discrimination if the Senate shall not adopt this amendment and allow the men in this group, who are few in number, the same benefits of adjusted compensation as are allowed those who held commissions in the National Army or in the Reserve Corps.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not understand why it is that provisional officers were excluded on the ground that they were professional soldiers. What justifies that sort of a conclusion I do not know. I know provisional officers who were never professional soldiers and never intended to be. They went into the service and served overseas; they came back and were honorably discharged, having served creditably, and resumed the occupations in which they were previously engaged. Some of them were lawyers; some belonged to other professions. They never intended to be professional soldiers. I cannot see how it may be contended that those provisional officers should be classified as professional soldiers.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Florida that there is no good reason on earth why we should discriminate against this small group of brave and patriotic soldiers who in their zeal to reach France and serve in the first-line trenches and to follow their flag into the first battle in which the American troops engaged accepted provisional commissions in order that they might go over with the first or second divisions. Many believed that if they accepted provisional commissions they would reach the front before those who accepted commissions as National Army officers or as officers in the Reserve Corps.

Mr. CONNALLY. And they did reach the front first.

Mr. RUSSELL. The provisional officers, as stated by the Senator from Texas, practically all saw actual combat service during the World War.

This amendment does not allow adjusted compensation to every one of the provisional officers but only to those who left the service within 1 year after the armistice. If this amendment be not adopted, as I have heretofore said, the reserve officers or national Army officers, who are very numerous, will have their adjusted-service certificates, and adjusted compensation will be paid them in full, while the provisional officers will not receive one dime, and, in addition, we will have some men who today still have commissions in the Army collecting bonus certificates while those who merely accepted provisional commissions will not be able to obtain one nickel of this belated justice to the American soldier.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. When the Adjusted Compensation Act was passed there were nine classes which were exempted from its provisions under section 202. In computing the adjusted-service credits no allowances were to be made to classes A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, and I. Why does the Senator feel this particular class, among the nine exempted in that act, should now be taken care of by reenacting the provision or by inserting in this bill a provision which would take them out of the original Adjusted Compensation Act, which was fought out at the time and argued about, and which has been introduced as a separate measure from time to time since, and fought out before committees, none of which has ever favorably reported it on the merits.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a bill did pass the Senate providing for it.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is never too late to correct an injustice. There has never been any sound reason for discriminating against these provisional officers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Why not go back and take in all nine classes which were exempted when the act was passed?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Kentucky understands the theory upon which this provision was inserted in the original law. It is on the theory that a provisional officer was a professional soldier and would maintain his position in the Regular Army as a commssioned officer. I may say to the Senator from Kentucky that a measure looking to the correction of this injustice has been pending, has been favorably reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, and is now on the Senate Calendar. The Senate is seeking to correct this injustice.

Mr. BARKLEY. In view of that fact, does the Senator feel that the pending measure ought to be complicated by trying to correct that injustice here, which effort might make it necessary to send the bill to conference and bring about a delay, and which might offer additional complications with respect to the final enactment of the measure?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no desire nor intent nor purpose to delay action of the Senate on the bill. I have voted for the full and immediate cash payment of the adjusted-compensation certificates every time such a measure has been before the Senate since I assumed the duties of my office here. I have believed in paying the certificates, and I certainly would not today be one to delay action on the bill. I do not believe the adoption of this amendment, reaching as it does only a small group, is calculated to delay action upon the bill any more than the adoption of the committee amendment which this amendment seeks to amend.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, no Senator ought to vote according to what another body may do respecting legislation of this kind, but it has been the hope that when the bill shall be passed by the Senate the House will agree to the amendment which the Senate may adopt. My information is that the House will not agree to this amendment of the Senator from Texas, which would make it necessary to send the bill to conference. In view of that information, it seems to me, as a matter of practical legislation, it might endanger the passage of the bill and might complicate it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not propose to be deterred in doing what I deem to be my duty here by any threat of what might transpire in another Chamber with reference to this bill. The amendment only proposes to do simple justice and delayed justice to a small group of men who were among the finest officers we had in the World War. I cannot conceive of the fact that the other body would delay action on the bill because the Senate is seeking to do justice to a small group of men who followed their flag throughout the World War.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator if he knows how many individuals would be affected by the amendment of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am advised there are only about 2,000.

Mr. CONNALLY. There are 2,257.

Mr. RUSSELL. I cannot conceive of the House of Representatives delaying action on this important measure merely because the Senate seeks to do justice to this small group of officers who have been the victims of circumstances and of a very apparent misunderstanding on the part of Members of Congress when the original act relating to adjusted-compensation certificates passed this body. I hope my motion will be adopted.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly.

Mr. STEIWER. Are we to understand that this proposal, for which the Senator now seeks consideration, affects the status of these officers for the purpose of getting adjusted compensation?

Mr. RUSSELL. It does.

Mr. STEIWER. The amendment, as I recall, is in the form of an amendment to the World War Veterans' Act of 1924. Is not that correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am not advised as to the exact form of the amendment. In substance it seeks to correct an injustice. The amendment was not offered by myself, but by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. If I understood the statement of the Senator from Texas in submitting it, the amendment was designed to permit these 2,000 or more provisional officers, men who left the service within 1 year, who did not remain in the Army as regular officers, some of whom were actually denied commissions in the Regular Army, the single justice of receiving the benefits of this act. They are being discriminated against on the ground that they are professional soldiers, when, in fact, their status is no different from that of other officers who rendered similar services under the same conditions.

Mr. STEIWER. I am not unfriendly to the idea of removing what appears to be an injustice to this small class of officers, but I think the form of the proposal submitted by the Senator from Texas relates to the act of 1924 and relates primarily to the status of those officers for compensation purposes and not for a bonus or adjusted-service compensation. If that be true, it seems to me it really injects extraneous matter, and it may be a serious consideration in case the House should not look with favor upon the proposal to broaden the basis of the measure.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have no objection to modifying the amendment to accomplish what the Senator from Oregon has in mind, because that is what I intended to do. As a matter of fact, these officers get compensation anyway.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I suggest that the Senator from Oregon is correct in saying that the amendment does relate to the Adjusted Compensation Act of 1924.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, it goes back to 1924 and permits adjusted-compensation certificates to be issued to these men which they may turn in and have cashed under the terms of the pending bill. They would have to have original bonus certificates issued to them as if they had been entitled to them under the act of 1924, and that would give them a status which would entitle them to the benefits of the pending bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. All I am trying to do is to accomplish for 2,257 officers what all the other Senators who are worried about my amendment are trying to do for 3,500,000 veterans. That is the difference.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Have any of the officers to whom the Senator's amendment relates received benefits under the Tyson-Fitzgerald Retirement Act?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know about that.

Mr. McKELLAR. If many of them have, it would be manifestly unjust for them also to receive the benefits under this measure.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true of the other officers. The retirement act to which the Senator refers applies to all Reserve officers.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Tyson Act related to disabled emergency officers.

Mr. CONNALLY. It did not apply to these men at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. It might have applied to them.

Mr. CONNALLY. These men were not emergency officers. They were Regular Army officers. But what difference does it make, anyway?

Mr. McKELLAR. It makes this difference. That was a very liberal measure to the officers who were entitled to pay under it. If any of them received pay under that measure, I do not think they justly would be entitled to pay under this bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want them treated as lieutenants in other branches of the service are treated.

Mr. President, I feel sure that Senators, when they voted down the amendment Saturday, did not understand its import. I hope the Senate will reconsider its action so we may have a real chance to give it consideration. We had no opportunity Saturday to do so. It was late in the day. Senators were anxious to get away. The Chair was in a mood under which the steam roller was quite favorable in its operation, and we had no chance to have the amendment properly presented before this body.

What does the amendment propose to do? As was said by the Senator from Georgia, when the war began many young officers who had attended training camps for the purpose of serving only during the World War were induced by Regular Army officers and others to accept commissions as provisional first and second lieutenants. They accepted those commissions, they went through the war, and when the war was over they resigned or were discharged and went back to their regular vocations. Why is not that sort of a lieutenant just as much entitled to the so-called bonus as a lieutenant who went through the same training camp and was given a commission as a Reserve officer? What is the difference?

This amendment provides that in order to get the bonus a man must have resigned or been discharged within a year after the war came to an end. As was suggested by the Senator from Georgia, men who went in as Reserve officers, even with the rank of captain and who then remained in the Regular Army, get this bonus, while provisional second lieutenants who went out of the service do not get it. Is there any justice in that? Is there any fairness in that? Is there any equality in that? Mr. President, there is none.

Now, let us see about this.

I happen to know, from my own little home town, three boys who went to a training camp. None of them has asked me to offer this amendment. I have had only one letter about it. Two of these boys, when they graduated at the training camp were commissioned as provisional lieutenants. They were sent to France with the first contingent of General Pershing's troops. They were assigned to the First Division. They went through the battles to which the Senator from Georgia has referred. They were at Soissons. They were in the drive in July 1918 that held in check and crushed the last German drive. They went through all those fights with the First Division. When the war was over they came back home, resigned their commissions, and went back to work. They did not want permanent commissions. They wanted to fight. When the war was over they came home.

I know another boy who went to the training camp, obtained a commission as a first lieutenant, stayed all during the war, had a fine record, fought the battles, but decided that he wanted to stay in the Regular Army; and he did stay in the Regular Army, with the rank of a captain. I helped keep him in the Regular Army. According to the Senator from Georgia he will get his bonus. I do not know whether he will or not.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CONNALLY. Just a moment. That boy will get his bonus. He is in the Regular Army now, with the rank of a captain. These two boys who were lieutenants, who did not want to stay in the Army, who joined simply because the country needed them, will get no bonus. Is there any justice in that?

I now yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I was out of the Chamber. I did not hear how many men are included in this amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Two thousand two hundred and fifty-seven.

Mr. BURKE. Can the Senator give us any information as to the number of that 2,257 who are in need of a gratuity from their Government at this time?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; I cannot. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that if he will consult my record he will see that my views on this matter have not been unlike his own in certain respects. I have not voted for it heretofore.

Mr. President, if we are going to do this kind, generous thing that we talk about, if we are going to compensate more than 3,000,000 veterans, why do we wish to penalize 2,257 men who were just as good soldiers as the others? If we are so anxious to reward 3,000,000, why not be fair and just to this little group of 2,257?

The Senate Military Affairs Committee has reported this amendment as a separate measure. Probably it will some day be passed; but why not put it on this bill and pay these men now when we are paying everybody else?

I ask the Senate to reconsider its action in rejecting this amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to explain briefly my position on the pending bill at this time.

Every World War veteran now holds an adjusted-compensation certificate, which is the promissory note of the Government, payable in 1945. The debt upon the Federal Treasury and upon a succeeding generation of American taxpayers was created when the veterans' bonus was voted and the certificates issued, in 1925. It was simply the payment of the cash which was postponed. The bonus certificates today are just as much part of the national debt as any other notes and bonds issued by the Federal Treasury on the faith and credit of the United States. The only difference is that the bonus certificates are not negotiable or immediately cashable, and the interest, instead of being periodically payable in cash, was computed and became part of the lump sum payable at maturity.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. I am very much interested in what the Senator is saying; but is not the Senator going to point out that there is another difference, in that the actuaries, the technical advisers of the Treasury, have never carried the bonus certificates into the debt structure of the Nation, and in making the Treasury reports of the public debt, with some little exceptions, the bonus certificates are not included in the total?

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate having the Senator's contribution. His statement is in accord with my understanding.

Mr. STEIWER. That being true, I think the Senator from Massachusetts is justified in adding to what he started to say the statement that this debt ought to be carried into the debt structure. The American people have been deceived long enough concerning the obligations of our country. I claim, and I believe the Senator from Massachusetts will agree with me, that it is only good business that the debt reports of our Treasury should reflect the truth in order that the country may know what is the total indebtedness of the Nation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the bonus bill before the Senate today proposes to give every World War veteran the privilege of obtaining in cash now the face value of the Government's promissory note, which he now holds, less whatever amount has previously been advanced to him as a loan. This is to be accomplished by exchanging for the veteran's present certificate, which is his present promissory note, a new promissory note in the form of Government bonds in $50 denominations, which will be redeemable in cash to demand, and which will bear interest at the rate of 3 percent until redeemed.

Mr. President, the immediate result of this exchange is that the Government's present debt to the veteran will be shifted from a nonnegotiable, non-interest-bearing deferred-payment note to an interest-bearing note payable on demand. Insofar as the present noteholders, either from necessity or from choice, elect to draw the cash, the Government, by borrowing elsewhere the cash to pay the veteran, will simply shift its debt from one person to another.

It is quite true that the effect of this plan will be to increase the Government's interest-bearing I O U and to that extent increase the total interest item in the annual Budget. It is quite true also that in giving the veterans now cash or its equivalent for a note not due until 1945, the interest between now and then represents in reality an extra payment and to that extent an enlargement of the veterans' bonus. But neither of these contentions which have been raised by objectors is, in my judgment, of sufficient weight to warrant rejection of a proposition which, in other respects, is so deserving and so desirable.

I cannot accept the contention that prepayment of the bonus at this time, in advance of maturity, will dangerously overload the Government's debt structure, while it is admitted that new bond issues for new ventures can be floated with entire safety.

I perceive no validity in the argument that it is unconscionable to redeem the bonus certificates in cash at a time when millions of Americans are out of work and on relief. We have not counted the cost or spared the Treasury or the taxpayers in our effort to relieve distress and to provide jobs. Furthermore, we are not proposing to redeem the bonus certificates at the expense or disadvantage of any particular group of our citizens or any particular section of the country.

To whatever extent the question of cash redemption of the bonus is to be related to the question of whether the Nation as a whole is enjoying prosperity or is in the grip of depression, certainly from the standpoint of the beneficiaries it is infinitely better to redeem the bonus certificates in bad times than in good times. Furthermore, if increased purchasing power provided by the Public Treasury—and that is the policy we have been pursuing in all our appropriations to bring about purchasing power—means benefit to all, and betterment to business and industry, then the benefits flowing from cash redemption of the bonus certificates will not be confined to the veterans, but will accrue to everyone.

I favored at the outset a veterans' cash bonus. I have been sympathetic to recurring proposals for liberalization of the loan value of the certificates and the redemption of the certificates in cash, prior to maturity, when, as, and if circumstances permitted, on a sound-money, sound-credit basis.

The question of whether cash payment of the bonus would in fact that that moment dangerously drain the Treasury has always been hotly disputed. On that aspect of the matter I have been disposed to give great weight to the opinion of those directly in charge of and responsible for the Government's finances, namely, the Secretary of the Treasury and the President. But whatever distinction there may be, so far as Government finance is concerned, between a bond issue to refund and redeem the bonus certificates and a bond issue creating brand-new debt to raise cash for some brand-new Government venture, I cannot be persuaded that the former is dangerous while the latter is safe. If anything, it is the other way around.

Accordingly I shall vote for the bill now before the Senate in full confidence that under existing circumstances it provides a justifiable settlement from the standpoint of the veterans, the Treasury, and the taxpayers.

Mr. HARRISON obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Holt	Overton
Austin	Coolidge	Johnson	Pittman
Bachman	Copeland	Keyes	Pope
Bailey	Couzens	King	Radcliffe
Bankhead	Davis	La Follette	Reynolds
Barbour	Dickinson	Logan	Robinson
Barkley	Dieterich	Lonergan	Russell
Benson	Donahey	McAdoo	Schwellenbach
Black	Duffy	McCarran	Sheppard
Bone	Fletcher	McGill	Shipstead
Borah	Frazier	McKellar	Smith
Brown	George	McNary	Steiwer
Bulkley	Gerry	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Gibson	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Burke	Glass	Moore	Townsend
Byrd	Gore	Murphy	Trammell
Byrnes	Guffey	Murray	Truman
Capper	Hale	Neely	Vandenberg
Caraway	Harrison	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Carey	Hastings	Norris	Wagner
Chavez	Hatch	Nye	Walsh
Clark	Hayden	O'Mahoney	White

Mr. LEWIS. I reannounce the necessary absence of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this matter is one of a good deal of importance, in my opinion. I cannot understand the force of the argument of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and that of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] that these provisional officers cannot under the law get their bonus, so to speak. The War Department has been very much opposed to this proposal.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the Senator that that does not have any particular weight with me, but it does have some weight in our effort to have a law enacted as to which we are skating on pretty thin ice. If we know that the position of the War Department is very strongly against including these provisional officers, then we would just be throwing ourselves against that additional buttress, in trying to have this piece of legislation enacted, if we were to include this amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is the War Department advocating the bonus bill?

Mr. HARRISON. No.

Mr. CONNALLY. If we were to follow them, we would not have this bill here at all.

Mr. HARRISON. It would be adding another obstacle, if the provisional officers were included. If this matter were presented in a separate bill, I would vote for it. If the matter should come before the Finance Committee, as a member of that committee I would vote for it. But we know, as practical men, that the amendment advocated by the Senators might complicate this particular piece of legislation.

There is an appeal that these men should be included, but it must not be forgotten that after they went through the training camps and were in the service as provisional officers, during the 6 months when they were provisional officers, if they had been injured or something had happened to them which disabled them, they would have been retired on three-fourths the pay of a Regular Army officer. They had that advantage.

Of course, they got out of the Army after their 6 months' service, and they are not now included within the benefits of the pending legislation. But they did have certain rights while they were provisional officers which did not attach to emergency officers or to others except officers of the Regular Army.

From a practical standpoint, so that we may get along with the proposed legislation, I hope the motion to reconsider will be voted down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. AUSTIN. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON. I announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 50, as follows:

YEAS—38

Austin	Connally	Lonergan	Sheppard
Benson	Copeland	Maloney	Shipstead
Black	Davis	McAdoo	Smith
Bulkley	Donahey	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Duffy	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Capper	Fletcher	Murray	Townsend
Caraway	George	Neely	Truman
Carey	Hayden	Norris	Van Nuys
Chavez	Johnson	Russell
Clark	La Follette	Schwellenbach

NAYS—50

Adams	Couzens	Holt	Pittman
Bachman	Dickinson	Keyes	Pope
Bailey	Dieterich	King	Radcliffe
Bankhead	Frazier	Logan	Reynolds
Barbour	Gerry	McKellar	Robinson
Barkley	Gibson	McNary	Steiwer
Bone	Glass	Minton	Trammell
Borah	Gore	Moore	Vandenberg
Brown	Guffey	Murphy	Wagner
Burke	Hale	Norbeck	Walsh
Byrd	Harrison	Nye	White
Byrnes	Hastings	O'Mahoney
Coolidge	Hatch	Overton

NOT VOTING—7

Ashurst	Costigan	Metcalf	Wheeler
Bilbo	Lewis	Tydings

So Mr. RUSSELL's motion to reconsider was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending bill having been received from the House of Representatives and referred, under order of the Senate, by the Secretary during a recess of the Senate, the Chair suggests that by unanimous consent the first and second readings of the bill be considered as having been waived. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. NEELY. I purpose an amendment, which has been sent to the Clerk's desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the amendment reported by the committee it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. —. Payment of the value of the bonds issued under the provisions of this act shall be made in United States notes not bearing interest. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue such notes in such amount as may be required to make such payment, and of the same wording, form, size, and denominations as United States notes issued under existing law, except that the wording thereon shall conform to the provisions of this act. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed jointly to prescribe rules and regulations for the delivery of such notes in payment for such bonds as may be presented for redemption as provided herein.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President—

> If it were done, when 'tis done, then 'twere well
> It were done quickly.

So said Macbeth in contemplating the horror of the cold-blooded murder which he was about to commit upon his royal guest the King of Scotland. But the murderous transaction was not completed when Duncan's lifeblood had entirely ebbed away. As usual, retribution, infallible and inescapable, finally struck down the assassin, and thereby satisfied the ancient law of "An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth." And retribution will pursue us, and overtake us and torment us, if we deliberately and inexcusably lay an additional heavy burden of interest upon the bent and breaking backs of the taxpayers of the United States.

Practically the entire membership of the Senate unconditionally favors the full and immediate payment of the World War veterans' adjusted-service certificates. My vote was cast for the original bill by virtue of which these certificates were issued. Later both my senatorial vote and my feeble voice were exercised to the limit of my capacity in favor of the passage of the bill over President Coolidge's veto.

Every subsequent effort that has been made to enforce the payment of these certificates has received my unhesitating, whole-hearted support. My fervent desire to speed long-deserved and long-delayed relief to our World War veterans will impel me to vote for the bill now before the Senate, even though defeat should be the fate of my amendment, which is designed to save the taxpayers $1,800,000,000 in interest without subtracting a farthing from the compensation of the veterans.

But let us hope that the pending amendment, which simply proposes to write the Patman plan of payment into the bill, will be adopted by a majority greater than that by which the plan was approved by this body during the last session of the Congress.

Ever since the enactment of the Federal Reserve law it has been generally proclaimed and believed that the Government may safely issue any amount of currency that is fortified by a gold reserve of 40 percent. Whether this particular ratio between currency and gold be valid or invalid, the Senate and the world are nevertheless challenged to name a single financial authority since the invention of money who has ever laid down the principle or enunciated the doctrine that the issuance of any volume of currency, great or small, that is supported by more than a hundred percent of gold can be fraught with any danger of inflation, depreciation, or repudiation.

The Government, which under the terms of the bill will soon be issuing new 3-percent interest-bearing bonds of the aggregate par value of more than eighteen hundred million dollars to redeem veterans' certificates, now has in its vaults more than $10,166,000,000 in idle gold.

The total amount of paper money now in circulation in the United States is less than $5,404,000,000. If the Government were to issue $2,237,000,000 additional paper money with which to discharge the veterans' certificates in full, there would still be in the Government's vaults not only a hundred cents in gold behind every dollar of all our outstanding paper money but also a surplus of more than $2,525,000,000 in excess of this abundant measure of safety. Every dollar of such new money would be just as good as any dollar of American money that is outstanding today, and better than a similar amount of the currency of any other nation in the world.

The redemption of the outstanding certificates by this means would not only satisfy every one of our veterans, but it would also save him and his posterity from sharing an intolerable burden of additional taxation for interest on bonds which, in the natural course of events, will ultimately amount to $1,800,000,000 or more.

Everyone has heard the trite interrogatory: "If we can issue enough paper money to pay the soldiers $2,237,000,000, why can we not issue enough to pay all the other billions which the Government owes?"

Obviously, there is just as much logic in this inquiry as there would be in the assertion that because a man can walk 10 miles a day he should be able to walk a thousand miles in the same length of time.

Certainly the Government cannot issue unlimited quantities of paper money.

But who will name the financial authority in America, Great Britain, Germany, France, Austria, Russia, Italy, Holland, Japan, or in any other civilized country, who says that it is inflationary or dangerous for any Government to pay its debts with paper money that is fortified with 125 percent of gold bullion or coin? For this Government to pay the obligation that is to be created by the legislation before us with interest-bearing bonds instead of paper money secured by its vast and idle hoard of gold—which under present law is useless for any other purpose—would be to imitate the improvidence of a man who, owing $100 and having $500 in the bank, with no obligation of any kind against his deposit, would obligate himself to pay someone $80 in interest for the use of enough money to postpone for 20 or 30 years the final payment of his $100 debt instead of paying it immediately with a check drawn against his deposit.

If anyone should commit such an act of folly his informed neighbors would promptly and truthfully say of him that he was either crazy or a natural-born fool.

Mr. President, constantly increasing, all-devouring, insatiate interest on Government obligations is today the most appalling curse of the American people. Every day and every night, every hour and every minute, every second and every heartbeat, through winter's storm and summer's calm, the merciless monster of devastating interest is gnawing at the vitals of every man and woman and child in the Republic.

This abomination of desolation alone prevents the advent of an era of prosperity greater than any the people have ever known.

Yet the Senate is, without the slightest justification and with the experience of all history, imperiously and impatiently admonishing it to the contrary, on the verge of voting to put an additional load of $1,800,000,000 on the backs of the staggering, suffering, swooning burden bearers of this Nation.

The people are not unwilling to incur legitimate expenses or to make financial sacrifices for proper and necessary purposes, but they will never forgive this Congress if it inexcusably and indefensibly imposes this additional stupendous sum of $1,800,000,000 in interest upon them.

The exaction of unnecessary, unjustifiable, and intolerable taxes has destroyed governments, overthrown kingdoms, dissolved empires, and cursed the world with war throughout the history of civilization. As the result of such tyrannical conduct, Rehoboam, Solomon's son, lost 10 of the famous twelve tribes of Israel. He insolently said to his perishing taxpayers who begged him to lighten their burdens and grant them relief:

> My father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

So he did, and—

So Israel rebelled against the House of David unto this day.

The laying of unnecessary, unjust, and intolerable burdens upon the backs of the French people brought on the great revolution, during which the maddened population set up in the Place de la Concorde the guillotine, that ingenious horror of horrors from which human blood flowed like rivers of water through the streets of Paris.

The levying of unjust taxes upon our forefathers caused Great Britain to lose her American colonies, which have since become more valuable than any other earthly possession. If we today tread the beaten path of folly in which both Jews and Gentiles have gone to disaster, shall we not tomorrow eat their black bread of affliction and drink their bitter cup of regret? Shall we not repent of our transgression when it is too late to retrieve our losses, and impossible to right the wrongs that we have done?

Let us adopt the pending amendment and immediately pay our debt to the veterans with our own money instead of borrowing it and thereby improvidently increasing our burden of interest almost $2,000,000,000. If we fail to do our duty in this matter, we may depend upon it that, sooner or later, the retribution that sent Macduff to the battlefield to slay Macbeth, the retribution that beheaded untold thousands of the people of France, the retribution that stripped Great Britain of her American colonies will relentlessly pursue us, and, with the gloom of unspeakable remorse, enshroud our little lives to the end of our days.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. NEELY. Gladly.

Mr. BONE. I wonder if the Senator from West Virginia has considered the possibility of providing that the Treasury notes contemplated in his amendment might be retired by taxation, so that this transaction would retain the character of a debt? Obviously we cannot have something for nothing, but the notes should be retired by taxation, so that we could get away from the interest burden the Senator mentions.

I quite agree that it is very much of a debatable question whether we would not do the Government credit more injury by inflicting another large bonded debt on the country than if we pursued the method the Senator suggests, but I am wondering if there is not a happy compromise in the situation by providing that these Treasury certificates shall be retired by taxation and then actually called in and physically destroyed; so that I in my income tax will pay a certain definite amount to retire this issue of Treasury notes. That would require them, it would compel them, to retain, at least, the character of a debt, on the theory that we cannot have something for nothing, but at the same time would enable the Government to escape the burden of interest which attaches to a bond issue.

Mr. NEELY. In my opinion, the Senator's suggestion is not feasible at this time. We shall either accept the method provided by the amendment now before the Senate or be burdened with at least $1,800,000,000 additional debt for interest.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. NEELY. Gladly.

Mr. OVERTON. As I understand the Senator's amendment, it undertakes to rewrite into the pending bill the Patman plan?

Mr. NEELY. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. OVERTON. Of course, the main object of this bill is——

Mr. NEELY. Let me add that during the last session of the Congress 55 Members of the Senate approved the Patman plan by a record vote.

Mr. OVERTON. I was one of them; but, in view of the fact that the Patman plan, after it had been passed by both Houses, met a Presidential veto——

Mr. NEELY. And it is now said on the street and in the cloakroom that this bill will meet one no matter what form of payment may be provided.

Mr. OVERTON. Of course, I do not know; I am not in a position to say as to that; but, in view of the fact that the Senate refused to pass the Patman bill over the President's veto, and in view of the fact that the real purpose of our endeavors here today is to obtain the immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates, does not the Senator think that our purpose and the main object of this bill would be endangered by the adoption of his amendment instead of agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance?

Mr. NEELY. Certainly not; otherwise the Senator from West Virginia never would have offered his amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. NEELY. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has said in his remarks——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from West Virginia has stated in his remarks that the payment of the bonus by the method provided by the bill will involve an additional $1,800,000,000 in taxes on the American people by reason of interest. How does the Senator arrive at those figures?

Mr. NEELY. I arrive at those figures by virtue of the fact that the greater part of the Government's debt to the veterans is to be paid directly or indirectly with interest-bearing bonds. It is proposed to supply immediately practically enough bonds to satisfy the veterans' certificates.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, if the entire $2,200,000,000 were represented by new bonds bearing 3-percent interest, the interest would be only about $63,000,000 a year and over a period of 10 years, terminating in 1945, that would amount to a little more than only $600,000,000, which is only one-third of the $1,800,000,000 the Senator mentioned.

Mr. NEELY. We should multiply the Senator's sum by at least three, because of the fact that, with our untold billions of present indebtedness on which we have to pay interest, these new bonds cannot be retired at the end of 10 or even 20 years except by refunding operations. It will be at least 30 years, and probably 50 years, before we shall have fully paid the principal and interest on the obligations which we are authorizing here today. We may change the form of the debt, but in my opinion we shall not extinguish it in less than 50 years.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is speculative. The same statement might be made with respect to all the rest of the obligations of the United States.

Mr. NEELY. Certainly it might be, but there is no speculation in issuing a check against deposits we have in the bank or in the Treasury, and common sense says that that is the method by which we should pay the veterans the debt which the Government so justly owes them.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, answering the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] that these bonds which it will be necessary to issue will probably be retired in 10 years, let me remind the Senator from Kentucky that the bond issues necessarily voted to finance the North in the War between the States amounted to only a few millions of dollars. That was 70 years ago. Some of those bonds are still unpaid, have been running for 70 years, and the people have been paying interest on them from then until the present day.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator will recall, of course, that those bonds for a long period of time were used as a basis of our circulating currency in the form of national-bank notes. There was no particular desire, either upon the part of the Government or upon the part of the banks, to retire them, because they were a basis for a very large part of our circulating money at that time. That privilege will not attach to these bonds.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Of course, no one can tell when these bonds will be paid; but a prophecy might be made that if the Civil War bonds have lasted for 70 years, these bonds may run one-half that time. If it will require $600,000,000 to pay the interest on the bonds necessary for 10 years, in 30 years the interest would amount to $1,800,000,000, as stated by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY].

Mr. President, this bill or similar bills, have been pending before the Congress for years. From the tenor of telegrams I have received and conferences I have had I am convinced that the public does not now understand what the bill means. I am likewise convinced that even the Senate does not know what the bill means. I have proof before me that some of the bright young men in the press gallery do not know what the bill means. I am not criticizing the correspondents in the press gallery, because as a rule they get their statements accurately; but one of the great papers of the country, the New York Times, yesterday, on the front page, had this to say:

> The second amendment by Senator THOMAS, making it mandatory to pay the bonus from unexpended funds previously appropriated.

Mr. President, I offered no such amendment; and because I was misinterpreted and because the writer of the story did not understand the situation, I take occasion now to explain the amendment, which evidently was not understood Saturday.

Before I come to that explanation, let me lead up to it. The bill has been changed this morning. Saturday it was proclaimed that the veteran who had $1,000 due him could expect only one bond in the sum of $1,000. The bill has been changed this morning. The veteran who has $1,000 due him will not get 1 bond, but will get 20 bonds of $50 each, making a total of $1,000.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNES. I wonder if the Senator is correct in that statement. I do not believe the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] or anyone has stated that there was any intention on the part of the Treasury or anyone having sponsorship for the bill that there should be any bonds printed except in the denomination of $50. Inasmuch as the language left it discretionary with the Treasury and it might be subject to the criticism which the Senator has voiced, the bill was amended this morning so as to provide specifically that the bonds should be issued only in $50 denominations.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I wanted that to be made clear. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] stated Saturday that the bonds might be printed in sheets, perforated, and that the veteran receiving a sheet of 20 bonds might tear off one of the perforated slips and cash it. This morning we are to have each $50 bond printed separately, and each veteran is to receive as many bonds as his certificate will entitle him to have. Some of the veterans, not having borrowed on their certificates, have as much as $1,500 coming to them. Such veterans will get 30 of the $50 bonds. Now we are going to print them in blocks and each veteran who receives bonds on his certificate will have a block of bonds and that block may be perhaps as thick as the little booklet I now display to the Senate.

That is not the point, however. When the veterans receive their bonds under the terms of the bill they will have these special pieces of paper. I wish to ask the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] or some other member of the Finance Committee what provision is made in the bill for the veteran who receives his bonds to get the money on the bonds which he will receive under the terms of the bill? In other words, where is there in the bill a provision for a veteran to get the money on his bonds through the bill which we will pass here today? There is one exception. The bill makes available the amount remaining in the adjusted-service-certificate fund. There is about $254,000,000 in that fund. If the bill passes there will be that much available to cash the bonds, but aside from that there is not a penny of money provided for in the bill to cash the bonds.

If the bonds are issued and delivered by the 15th day of June, we all know there will be some two and a half million veterans who will take them to the post office or to the bank to get their money. Unless something is done between now and the 15th day of June there will be no money in the post office or in the bank to cash up any of those bonds.

Saturday I offered an amendment providing for the appropriation of a sum sufficient to redeem the bonds when they shall be presented in June or July or August. That was the amendment which the New York Times correspondent said I had offered to appropriate the funds remaining in the relief fund to cash the bonds. I offer no such amendment.

If the bill passes in its present form, before the veteran can get his money there must be another bill passed, either a separate bill or an item in an appropriation bill, carrying the money to pay the veterans when they present themselves and their bonds at the post office or the bank some time in June or July or August. That will bring on another fight again. Unless the Congress shall appropriate the money to pay the bonds there will be no money available, and until the Congress appropriates the money the Treasury Department cannot issue the bonds to raise the money to pay the bonds. Before the Treasury Department can issue bonds and sell them there must be an appropriation. If and when an appropriation is made the Treasury is obligated to finance the appropriation. If the bill passes without additional legislation, there will be no authority in the Treasury to issue bonds to raise the money. My amendment Saturday was for the purpose of giving the Treasury the right and power to issue bonds and to sell them to get the money to pay the veterans when they bring their bonds to the post office or to the bank for redemption.

The amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] does not change a single word or a single line in the present bill. The bill as it is now written can pass. It provides for delivery to the veterans of their bonds, but the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia provides that when we go to pay the bonds, instead of issuing the bonds, the Treasury can issue money direct from the Treasury, Treasury notes, as was provided for under the Patman bill, on which we voted last session of the Congress.

So, Mr. President, I shall support the amendment pending before the Senate. If the bill passes as it will pass, I predict that the House will accept the Senate substitute. It will go to the President. If he approves the bill, it will become a law. If he vetoes the bill, it will come back to the House of Representatives, and they will have a chance to consider it under the Constitution. If they shall pass the bill a second time, notwithstanding the veto, the bill will come to this body again. Then we will have a chance to act under the Constitution by voting on the bill a second time. If the House shall pass the bill over the veto and the Senate shall pass the bill over the veto, it will go to the Secretary of State and become a law. By such action the bonds will be authorized and will be delivered to the veterans. Then the fight will come again in the House and in the Senate over the appropriation of the money necessary to redeem the bonds. The fight will come again; and unless the fight does come again, unless the Congress does appropriate the money, there will be no funds any place available to redeem the bonds, save the small amount now available in the adjusted-compensation certificate fund, which is something like $250,000,000.

Mr. President, I shall vote for the amendment submitted by the Senator from West Virginia. When the bill is upon its final passage, of course, I shall vote for it in whatever shape it may be in at that time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I voted for the Patman bill when it was before the Senate. I should vote for it again if, in my judgment, there were any chance for it to become a law.

The situation with which we have to deal at the present time is this: The able Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRI-SON], in his opening remarks upon this measure, stated that if the Senate should pass this bill as reported from the committee it would become a law. We know the intimate relationship of the Senator from Mississippi with the President of the United States. We are aware also of the knowledge the Senator from Mississippi has of the political situation in Washington. His statement, therefore, means one of two things: Either that the President will sign the bill, or, if he does not sign the bill, that the President's supporters and friends in the Senate will vote to override his veto. In other words, the matter of a veto is a mere incident that is not to interfere with the passage of the bill.

I can only construe the statement of the Senator from Mississippi to mean that he knows precisely whereof he speaks—either that the President will sign the bill or that the friends of the bill have the votes to override the President's veto. In any event, the only means we have of making the payment, if we are going to make it, is the bill which has been proposed by some three or four Senators in collaboration with one another, and therefore agreed upon pretty generally in the Senate.

I voted against the amendment offered by the able Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and I shall vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], because I am perfectly sure it would be another futile effort; that we could not succeed. On the other hand, I have every reason to believe that if this bill shall be passed as reported by the committee it will become a law, and that the question of the so-called bonus matter will be finally disposed of.

I shall not vote for the bill with any degree of enthusiasm; but this matter of paying the soldiers' bonus has been here now, off and on, for about 20 years. There was only one time when we could have determined not to pay the bonus as provided in the committee amendment, and that was before we made the contract to do so. After we made the contract to pay the soldiers an additional compensation, there was only one question left, and that was the question of time, and that has never been a controlling factor with me. Since the day in 1924 when the Government admitted that it owed the veterans, there has been little argument against payment. I was opposed to making the contract, but I have never been able to justify delay once the debt was admitted. I should much prefer to pay it in the manner provided by the Patman bill, but I know it is impossible to do so. I shall, therefore, vote for what seems to me the only practical means by which to dispose of this question and have it behind us once and for all.

That does not dispose of the question incorporated in the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia or the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma as an ultimate proposition, but in my opinion it does dispose of it so far as legislation upon the subject in a practical way at this session is concerned.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I have voted for the bonus bill whenever one was here. I am not going to speak now on the bill. Whatever I have said on the subject I said a long time ago, when the measure was not so popular as it is now.

I desire to state, however, for the purpose of the RECORD, that I cannot agree with the principle advanced by some eminent economists and eminent Senators who hold to the theory that legal tender Treasury notes are more of an inflation instrument than an expansion of the credit of the Federal Government. Both are obligations of the Federal Government. The difference is, one increases the debt by the amount of the interest.

Webster's Dictionary explains what is meant by inflation. It says it is an abnormal expansion. We may have an overexpansion of either currency or credit, or both; and when we arrive at that point we have a depreciation of currency in either event.

What is it that makes a man's $100 note worth only $10 if it is not the fact that he has issued so many notes that he cannot meet them? What is it that depreciates the currency? Overexpansion of the credit of the Government beyond its capacity to redeem and to pay.

I introduced in the Senate and voted for the Patman bill. I shall vote for this amendment. I know that this amendment will not be adopted; but I did not wish to have the RECORD go out to the country without explaining my position and my views on the question of the possibility of depreciation of the American currency, and without stating that I believe it can be done as effectively by overexpansion of the credit as by overexpansion of the currency.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a few moments ago I propounded an inquiry to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. He was not present at the time. Since his return, I think it would be well for the RECORD——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The Chair will state that the Senator from Oklahoma has already consumed his time on the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I will ask for recognition on the amendment, and yield to the Senator. I do not know that I can answer his question, but I shall be glad to attempt to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi is recognized and yields to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think the RECORD should show that the men who receive the bonds to be issued under the bill are going to be provided with money when the time comes to cash them; and, to save the necessity of writing a good many letters, I think the chairman of the committee should make an explanation on the subject. I hope he can make it to the effect that money will be available at some convenient place at the time the bonds are in the hands of the soldiers and they want to cash them.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Senator from Oklahoma appreciates the fact that there is going to be some delay in getting the cash for these bonds. I am trying to visualize the mechanics of the situation. If the committee amendment should become law, I imagine the Veterans' Administration would immediately ask to have all the applications sent in, so that they might enlarge their force, and put the enlarged force to work on just what is due each soldier on his particular certificate, to ascertain whether the holders of the certificates owe any money on certificates which they have put up as collateral for various purposes, and how much is due each ex-service man. Then they will have to certify the amount to the Treasury Department, and so much cash and so many bonds must be sent to each one.

That is going to take some time; but in my conversations with the heads of the ex-service organizations I have been assured that they are going to try to make it plain to the ex-service men that it will be impossible for them to get the money tomorrow, or day after tomorrow, because the mechanics of the matter will prevent that. However, I am assured that in the event the committee amendment should become a law the machinery will be set in motion immediately to take care of that situation.

As to the immediate appropriation, I have never seen the Congress falter when an appropriation of this magnitude was authorized and the proper recommendations were made. The Senator from Oklahoma is a very distinguished, and I may say illustrious, member, and certainly a most useful member, of the great Committee on Appropriations, and I am sure that committee will take up this matter. I am sure the Appropriations Committee of the House will do likewise; and whether or not a Senator or a Representative shall vote for this proposed legislation, after we shall have enacted it I cannot conceive that any of them will try to withhold the necessary appropriation. So I feel quite sure, and I may say quite sanguine, that the appropriation will be made just as soon as possible and practicable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. NEELY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] is necessarily absent. I am informed that if he were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO].

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 65, as follows:

YEAS—23

Benson	Donahey	Murray	Shipstead
Bilbo	Frazier	Neely	Smith
Bone	Holt	Norbeck	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	McCarran	Nye	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	McGill	Schwellenbach	Trammell
Caraway	Murphy	Sheppard

NAYS—65

Adams	Connally	Hastings	Overton
Ashurst	Coolidge	Hatch	Pope
Austin	Copeland	Hayden	Radcliffe
Bachman	Couzens	Johnson	Reynolds
Bailey	Davis	Keyes	Robinson
Barbour	Dickinson	King	Russell
Barkley	Dieterich	La Follette	Steiwer
Black	Duffy	Lewis	Townsend
Borah	Fletcher	Logan	Truman
Brown	George	Lonergan	Vandenberg
Burke	Gerry	McKellar	Van Nuys
Byrd	Gibson	McNary	Wagner
Byrnes	Glass	Maloney	Walsh
Capper	Gore	Minton	White
Carey	Guffey	Moore
Chavez	Hale	Norris
Clark	Harrison	O'Mahoney

NOT VOTING—7

Bankhead	McAdoo	Pittman	Wheeler
Costigan	Metcalf	Tydings

So Mr. NEELY's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, the first cost of the World War was in excess of $36,000,000,000. Of this tremendous sum there was paid to the personnel in the military establishments about four and one-half billion dollars. This great war cost left the United States in debt to the extent of about $26,000,000,000, the debt representing approximately one-eighth of the entire national wealth of this country.

In the foreign countries which had engaged longer in the war than we had, and which had a smaller national wealth than we possessed, the national debts ranged all the way from 10 to 40 percent of the entire national wealth of those countries. Yet in those countries the governments adjusted the compensation of those who had served in their armies in varying amounts, ranging from rather small payments made by Italy to very large payments made by some other nations which had participated in the war.

As I recall the figures, Belgium made adjustment by the payment of nearly $500 to each of her soldiers, Canada an adjustment by the payment to each of her soldiers of approximately $600, Great Britain an adjustment by payment to her soldiers of varying amounts, from a relatively small sum to certain groups of privates, which was, I think, $140 each, to a large sum, in excess of $7,000, to officers of the higher ranks who had served throughout the struggle.

It is, I think, uncontradicted that nearly all of these governments adjusted the compensation of their soldiers in terms of ability to pay; that is to say, in terms of national wealth, in terms of ratio of public debt, in terms of the economic status of their people and the necessities of their people considered from the standpoint of the purchasing power of their money under the standards under which they lived; and in so doing they paid more money than was allowed to American veterans by the Adjusted Compensation Act of 1924.

Not only that, these various nations, so much weaker than we, paid the adjusted compensation in cash, and, so far as I am advised, the great United States was the only country that asked its veterans to take adjusted-compensation certificates maturing 27 years after the war was over.

Traditionally the United States has not always been the last of the nations in the world in the treatment of those who have defended the country in emergency. Following the Revolution and in the Indian wars further bounties were provided. Generally those bounties were in the form of land. It is a historic fact that General Washington was offered and accepted his land bounty. Abraham Lincoln, following the Black Hawk war, was offered and accepted his bounty. These great men, whose names we have been taught to revere and to respect, were not ashamed to accept what their Government offered them in adjustment of their compensation as soldiers.

Following the World War our country adhered to its traditions in some respect. We treated others more generously than we treated our soldiers.

History records that many adjustments were made, not to those who had received the four and one-half billion dollars during the war, but to those who had received more than $30,000,000,000, those who had furnished supplies and munitions, and who had furnished services, those who had contributed something either directly or indirectly to the winning of the war.

We made adjustments to our contractors, including those whose contracts were on a cost-plus basis, on a basis where there was no hazard on the part of the contractor, because the Government guaranteed to pay him that which he expended, and then to give him his profit. That system was such that the more that was expended by the contractor the more he received in profit, and cash adjustments were promptly made with him.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I am glad to yield, but I call attention to the limitation of time, and I do not wish to be interrupted for more than a question.

Mr. LEWIS. I shall ask the able Senator a question.

Mr. President, conscious that the Senator from Oregon has given careful study to the question, may I reveal to him that where I have attempted to invite comparison between the payment which other governments made to their soldiers, the particular governments which we called our allies, with that which we paid, the suggestion has been made, particularly in my State, by certain organizations, that we had paid so much more to the soldiers while in service than the soldiers of these other countries, our allies, received for their service, that it gave to our soldiers in the final analysis a superiority of money. Will the able Senator say if that be true or not in his judgment?

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, nothing could be more fallacious. We took away from our soldiers $6.60 per month for the payment of their life insurance. We insured our ships which crossed the seas but we required our soldiers to insure themselves. We took away from our soldiers the allowances that they sent back to their families. We took away from our soldiers to such an extent that in literally tens of thousands of cases men came to the pay table and received nothing for their monthly compensation, or else they received a very nominal sum. I wish I could develop that idea further, Mr. President, but time does not permit. But it is not true, considering all factors that are involved in this equation, that we were overly generous to our soldiers. The fact is that in one branch of the National Legislature there was consideration given to increasing the compensation to the soldiers during the war. The matter was deferred. It was thought that it might well be done after the war. So, Mr. President, we are confronted with the question at this time.

I say that we adjusted the compensation of our contractors, we adjusted the compensation of the railroads, and after the railroads were turned back by the Government to their owners we gave them a bounty or a bonus, as I recall it, of $3,000,000 a day for 6 months.

We adjusted the compensation of the bondholders in advance by increasing the compensation for the use of their money so it was higher than it had been prior to the war, and to this end we obligated ourselves to pay 5¼ percent interest on Federal bonds; soldiers who were taxpayers were obliged even to contribute to that.

We adjusted the salaries of our civilian employees by substantial increases in pay for all those whose salaries were less than $2,500 per year.

We even adjusted with the Federal taxpayer by giving him back his overpayment, and giving him 6 percent upon his money. At the same time in the adjusted-compensation service certificates we calculated the interest rate at 4 percent to the soldier.

So I say, Mr. President, America has not traditionally been laggard in dealing with her veterans, and in the World War America was not lacking in generosity in dealing with others whose services were employed in the effort to win the war.

Finally the Congress did provide these certificates which are now before us for consideration. Time does not permit a discussion as to how the certificates were made up. But let me point out to Senators who may not have thought this thing out that there is a limitation of 500 days placed upon the period for which compensation would be adjusted, and many soldiers served 50 percent longer than that, and for that 50 percent there has never been even a pretense on the part of our Government to bring about an adjustment of compensation; so far as I know, the soldier does not ask any adjustment for those days in addition to the 500 days.

There is a group to which attention was called this morning by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. I refer to the so-called provisional officers of the Regular Army. There are others whose rank was above that of captain. There were numerous others who for one reason or other received no adjustment at all in compensation given them by their Government. And then as to all veterans the first 60 days of service was deducted on account of the clothing and subsistence allowance that was paid at time of discharge.

Mr. President, it has been repeatedly said here that the act of 1924 creating these certificates constitutes a contract. I wonder if any lawyer would seriously urge that contention. The soldiers were not a party to the legislation. It is true they accepted their certificates in the main, although some two or three hundred thousand have never accepted the certificates offered to them by their Government. There is no logical basis upon which to consider that legislation as a contract.

Moreover, as I regard it, there is nothing sacred in that legislation any more than there is in any other legislation, and Congress has not so regarded it. We have amended the law two or three times, chiefly with respect to the amount of money that could be loaned upon the certificates. We have never considered it sacred in any other respect. But when the suggestion is made that we prepay the certificates in order to give the veteran his money 18 years after the war ended instead of 27 years thereafter, then it is immediately said that a contract was entered into and that any disturbance of that contract will destroy the good credit of the Government.

I desire to suggest that the act of 1924 was merely the thought of the moment. The question now properly for our consideration: Does that act do the justice which the Congress contemplated and intended? If it does full justice to the veterans, then there is no occasion to disturb it. If it does not, however, treat our veteran in the generous way that we want him to be treated and the way in which he deserves to be treated by reason of the character of the service which he performed for the country and in comparison to treatment accorded others, then I say that we need not regard that act as sacred but may very properly substitute a formula which will do justice to all.

I submit, Mr. President, that the proposal in the pending bill is a wiser proposal than that contained in the original act. There are advantages to be gained by prepaying this obligation. We know that prepayment will stimulate business for a time. We know that it will bring the money to the veteran at a time when he needs it most, at a time when his need, I believe—at least I hope—is greater than it ever will be again. We know that in the main the veterans will distribute this money by spending it, and the purchasing power thus created will bring business to every corner grocer and every shop in America.

We know that a great majority of these soldiers were inducted into the service by the draft and that they came from the length and breadth of the land. The proposed prepayment will, more than any other proposal which I can imagine, make a thoroughly just, equitable, and fair distribution of the money as between the citizens of our country.

We know, moreover, Mr. President, that the payment of this money at this time will perform a part of the function of a costly public-works program, but that it will not do so by the creation of a new debt. It will do it, Mr. President, in the main, at least, by paying off a debt which has been heretofore admitted by the Congress. By discharging a debt, not by the creation of a new obligation.

I desire to submit, Mr. President, without attempting to make any emotional appeal, without seeking to arouse any feeling on account of discriminations against the veterans in favor of other classes, without any reference to what was paid by other nations to veterans of their wars, that we ought to stop at this moment and consider just what it means in national welfare to deal generously with the veterans of our wars.

We do not know when we will need our soldiers again. We hope that we will remain at peace with the world, but I am prepared to defend the proposition that if our country now or later is drawn into a struggle, the first requirement of the successful prosecution of that struggle is that the people of this country shall have confidence that their Government will deal justly with them. The prime requisite to inspire their confidence is that we shall have dealt fairly with veterans of the wars which have gone before.

I submit to the Senators who now listen to me that the veterans of the war earned this money. They deserve generosity at our hands. This war was not won by the high command exclusively; it was not won by the Secretary of War exclusively, nor the Secretary of the Navy, nor the other gentlemen who were assisting them. In the final analysis it was won by the spirit and sacrifice of the American people, those who sat in their homes at the hearthsides, and by the heroic endeavor of those who wore the uniform and bore the burden in the midst of the struggle. The pay adjustment contemplated by the 1924 act provided merely that the compensation of the soldiers be increased to the pay level of a worker engaged in common labor. It was meager at most. But wartime service is not common labor. It continued 24 hours per day. It resulted in complete exhaustion. The strain of battle added to its exactions. Even those who escaped disability are marked by their service—they have paid a price which government can never compensate. Lucky is the soldier who can forget his experience and erase from mind a memory of war's gruesome horror.

Mr. President, if the Republic is to retain their gratitude, affection, and esteem, let us now rise above carping about contracts; let us not tarry too long to consider the cost, when in the main we are merely retiring one obligation by creating another. But let us yield to the impulse to reward those who have deserved reward by their services to their country, and give our support to the measure which is now pending before the Senate.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I intend to vote for the pending measure. I am in favor of immediate cash payment of the veterans' adjusted-compensation certificates. This is a debt to the veterans of the World War that is long overdue. I voted a year ago for cash payment. I regretted very much at that time that the measure was vetoed, and I voted to override the veto.

It is not necessary to enter into a prolonged discussion of the merits of the measure. Cash payment has already been discussed in Congress too long and too frequently. The Senate understands the situation. The country understands it. The country expects the Senate to pass this measure. It expects cash payment to be made to the veterans within the next few months.

I was Governor of my native State of Kansas during the World War. I saw thousands and thousands of the young men of Kansas sent to the front. Many of them volunteered. Others were drafted into service. They received $1 a day for risking their lives on the battlefield. Their companions who were not inducted into service made wages many times that amount.

The relatively small amounts granted the veterans through their adjusted-service certificates are meager returns indeed for the services these men rendered. It is a blot upon our country that this slight compensation to those who risked their all for their country has been granted so grudgingly; that payment has been delayed so long.

One would think, from the attitude taken by some of the opponents of this legislation, who themselves received millions of dollars in war profits, large salaries, and good dividends on their investments, that the veterans of the World War had committed some crime in serving their country.

I say that what we are about to do is little enough, when we consider what these men did. When they were inducted into service we told them that nothing was too good for them. I think we meant it at the time. I know I did. And I think we mean it today.

No vote I have cast or will cast in the Senate gives me more pleasure than the vote I intend to cast for cash payment of the adjusted-compensation certificates. And no vote is cast in a more worthy cause. It is my hope that the measure will pass speedily and by an overwhelming vote.

THE VETERANS' BONUS AND INFLATION

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, it is not my intention to delay the Senate by an address on the pending bill. However, there is one aspect of the problem now before us which is frequently, and at times in good faith, misrepresented in some press references and public discussions. I refer to the subject of inflation.

As a Member of the Senate who expects to vote for the pending bill, and who, last Saturday, voted for alternative possible methods of payment provided for in the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], I feel that the record should be supplemented by the incorporation of some testimony given by qualified witnesses less than a year ago on inflation.

At that time, at hearings of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate on provisions of the Banking Act of 1935, evidence was given, in response to questions of members of that committee, by Dr. Sprague, professor of banking and finance at Harvard University, and Governor Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board. Both these well-known, expertly qualified representatives of the science of banking, if it may be so termed, in substance depreciated inflationary effects, often said to be expected following the adoption at that time of either the so-called Patman method or the so-called Vinson method of payment of the World War veterans' adjusted-service certificates. I ask to have incorporated in the RECORD, without reading, two brief extracts, still believed applicable from the testimony then given by the witnesses named, with respect to paying the bonus by currency or by bonds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COSTIGAN. On May 3, 1935—hearings, page 221—the following statements were made:

Dr. SPRAGUE. There are two kinds of inflation, as I see it: A business inflation and a fear inflation. You cannot get a business inflation except when that is initiated by the process of securing loans.

Senator BULKLEY. Are you ready to predict what would happen right now if we should put out a couple of billion dollars of currency to pay the bonus?

Dr. SPRAGUE. Why, no.

I might be willing to put it in this way: That if it were done grudgingly by the administration, and if everyone knew that it was distasteful to the administration, and that the administration was disposed to offset it, to some extent, then no fear inflation would follow.

Senator MCADOO. We are just issuing four to five billion dollars of bonds—which, of course, have a decided inflationary tendency and are bound to create inflation eventually.

Dr. SPRAGUE. I do not agree to that, Senator.

Senator MCADOO. Don't you?

Dr. SPRAGUE. No, sir.

Senator MCADOO. I should think that we would get a very large measure of inflation.

Dr. SPRAGUE. I am afraid that I differ from my sound-money friends on that point. You can increase the Government debt, without inflation, so long as the increase does no more than absorb current savings. You can increase the Government debt to the point at which the people begin to be doubtful of the credit of the country. But that is a point that is far away, of course.

But the mere increase of $4,000,000,000 of Government debt in itself is no more inflationary than a similar increase of private investments arising out of an increase in the bonds and shares of stock of industrial companies all over the country.

On May 10, 1935 (hearings, p. 305), Governor Eccles, testifying before the same committee, in answer to questions, said in part:

Governor ECCLES. * * * There is an elastic currency created as a result of the Federal Reserve System, because they can create currency based upon the call for currency by their members so long as those members have reserve with the Reserve System.

Senator GLASS. Yes.

Senator TOWNSEND. And there is no urgent demand for printing more currency?

Governor ECCLES. No; not at all. You couldn't keep it out if you printed it. You just could not get it out.

Senator COUZENS. Well, if you put the Patman money out, that will not mean anything, will it?

Governor ECCLES. It will not mean that you will increase the amount of money in circulation, because the Patman money would displace some of the existing currency, but the total amount of currency that will be in circulation as a result of paying the $2,000,000,000 bonus would not be increased any more than by putting out $2,000,000,000 of Government bonds.

Mr. President, before concluding references to the pending bill, it may also be appropriate to ask to have incorporated in the RECORD a portion of a well-considered editorial published on January 4 in the Philadelphia Record, the essence of which is that we should pay the veterans now obligations Congress long ago agreed to pay later and should strain every nerve to keep out of any future war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Record of Jan. 4, 1936]

As Congress meets, The Record presents it with a fundamental program in one sentence—

Pay the boys for the last war and stay out of the next one.

The bonus is only a minor part of the terrific cost of the last war. And it is well that this cost should come before the public mind again as Congress considers neutrality legislation.

It is well to remember, too, that the very interests which fight hardest against neutrality legislation are the interests most unwilling to pay the soldiers.

The Liberty League, which opposes the bonus, is largely supported by the Du Ponts and other munitions manufacturers who have the most to gain if neutrality legislation fails.

If a war develops abroad and we let our exporters sell munitions and war supplies to the belligerents, big business will get its bonus in the form of big wartime profits. Then, if our trade with the warring nations leads us—as it probably would—into the war, our boys who survived the battlefields would have to come back and fight all over again in Congress against big business for their bonus.

The Record favors payment of the bonus at this time on two counts:

1. The veterans served their country well and deserve better compensation than they got;

2. The country as a whole will be benefited and helped toward recovery by payment of the bonus.

The first point is self-evident. The second requires a little more explanation.

The Government has agreed to pay this bonus eventually. The whole point under discussion is whether it is wiser to pay it now or later. * * *

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. If he were present, he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I have had occasion today to announce the absence of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. I reannounce his absence. I do not know how he would vote, if present; but the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], who was suddenly called to Chicago on official business, authorized me to say that if he were present he would vote "yea." As has been stated, he is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. CONNALLY. On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], who is unavoidably detained. I am informed that if he were present he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 74, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—74

Adams	Clark	Logan	Pope
Ashurst	Coolidge	Lonergan	Radcliffe
Austin	Copeland	McAdoo	Reynolds
Bachman	Costigan	McCarran	Robinson
Bailey	Davis	McGill	Russell
Bankhead	Dickinson	McKellar	Schwellenbach
Barbour	Dieterich	McNary	Sheppard
Barkley	Donahey	Maloney	Shipstead
Benson	Duffy	Minton	Smith
Bilbo	Frazier	Moore	Steiwer
Black	George	Murphy	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Gibson	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Borah	Gore	Neely	Trammell
Bulow	Guffey	Norbeck	Truman
Byrnes	Harrison	Norris	Van Nuys
Capper	Hatch	Nye	Walsh
Caraway	Holt	O'Mahoney	White
Carey	La Follette	Overton
Chavez	Lewis	Pittman

NAYS—16

Brown	Couzens	Hastings	King
Bulkley	Gerry	Hayden	Townsend
Burke	Glass	Johnson	Vandenberg
Byrd	Hale	Keyes	Wagner

NOT VOTING—5

Connally	Metcalf	Tydings	Wheeler
Fletcher

So the bill was passed.

The bill as passed is as follows:

[H. R. 9870]

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 38, ch. 11), the adjusted-service certificates issued under the authority of such act are hereby declared to be immediately payable. Payments on account of such certificates shall be made in the manner hereinafter provided upon application therefor to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and upon surrender of the certificates and all rights thereunder (with or without the consent of the beneficiaries thereof). The payment in each case shall be in an amount equal to the face value of the certificate, except that if, at the time of application for payment under this act, the principal and unpaid interest accrued prior to October 1, 1931, with respect to any loan upon any such certificate has not been paid in full by the veteran (whether or not the loan has matured), then the Administrator shall (1) pay or discharge such unpaid principal and interest as is necessary to make the certificate available for payment under this act, (2) deduct such unpaid principal and so much of such unpaid interest as accrued prior to October 1, 1931, from the amount of the face value of the certificate, and (3) certify to the Secretary of the Treasury as payable an amount equal to the difference between the face value of the certificate and the amount so deducted.

SEC. 2. In the case of each loan heretofore made pursuant to law by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs and/or by any national bank, or any bank or trust company incorporated under the laws of any State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia, upon the security of an adjusted-service certificate, any interest unpaid accrued subsequent to September 30, 1931, that has been or, in consequence of existing law, would be charged against the face value of such certificate shall be canceled insofar as the veteran is concerned, notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary. Any interest on any such loan payable to any such bank or trust company shall be paid by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

In the case of any such loan which is unpaid and held by a bank or trust company at the time of filing an application under this act, the bank or trust company holding the note and certificate shall, upon notice from the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, present them to the Administrator for payment to the bank or trust company in full satisfaction of its claim for the amount of unpaid principal and unpaid interest, except that if the bank or trust company, after such notice, fails to present the certificate and note to the Administrator within 15 days after the mailing of the notice, such interest shall be paid only up to the fifteenth day after the mailing of such notice.

SEC. 3. (a) An application under this act for payment of a certificate may be made and filed at any time before the maturity of the certificate (1) personally by the veteran, or (2) in case physical or mental incapacity prevents the making or filing of a personal application, then by such representative of the veteran and in such manner as may be by regulations prescribed. An application made by a person other than a representative authorized by such regulations shall be held void.

(b) If the veteran dies after the application is made and before it is filed it may be filed by any person. If the veteran dies after the application is made it shall be valid if the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs finds that it bears the bona-fide signature of the applicant, discloses an intention to claim the benefits of this act, and is filed before payment is made to the beneficiary. If the death occurs after the application is filed but before the receipt of the payment under this act, or if the application is filed after the death occurs but before mailing of the check in payment to the beneficiary under section 501 of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, payment under this act shall be made to the estate of the veteran irrespective of any beneficiary designation. If the veteran dies without making a valid application under this act no payment under this act shall be made. If the veteran dies on or after the passage of this act without having filed an application under section 1, in making any settlement there shall be deducted on account of any loan made on an adjusted-service certificate only interest accruing prior to October 1, 1931.

(c) Where the records of the Veterans' Administration show that an application, disclosing an intention to claim the benefits of this act, has been filed and the application cannot be found, such application shall be presumed, in the absence of affirmative evidence to the contrary, to have been valid when originally filed.

(d) If at the time this act takes effect a veteran entitled to receive an adjusted-service certificate has not made application therefor he shall be entitled, upon application made under section 302 of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, to receive, at his option, under such rules and regulations as the Administrator may prescribe, either the certificate under section 501 of such act, as amended, or payment under this act.

SEC. 4. The amount certified pursuant to section 1 of this act shall be paid to the veteran or his estate on or after June 15, 1936, by the Secretary of the Treasury by the issuance of bonds of the United States, registered in the name of the veteran only, in denominations of $50 having a total face value up to the highest multiple of $50 in the amount certified as due the veteran, and the difference between the amount certified as due the veteran and the face amount of the bonds so issued shall be paid to the veteran or his estate by the Secretary of the Treasury out of the fund created by section 505 of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended. The bonds shall be dated June 15, 1936, and shall mature on June 15, 1945, but shall be redeemable at the option of the veteran or his estate at any time, at such places, including post offices, as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate. Such bonds shall be issued under the authority and subject to the provisions of the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and shall not be transferable, assignable, subject to attachment, levy, or seizure under any legal or equitable process and shall be payable only to the veteran or, in case of death or incompetence of the veteran, to the representative of his estate. Interest on each bond issued hereunder shall accrue at the rate of 3 percent per annum from June 15, 1936, to date of maturity or payment of the principal of the bond, whichever is earlier, and will be paid with such principal: Provided, further, That no interest will be paid on any bond redeemed prior to June 15, 1937. The provisions of this section shall be carried out subject to regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury to be issued from time to time to effectuate the purposes of this act.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to redeem from the United States Government life-insurance fund all adjusted-service certificates held by that fund on account of loans made thereon, and to pay to the United States Government life-insurance fund the amount of the outstanding liens against such certificates, including all interest due or accrued, together with such amounts as may be due under subdivision (m) of section 502 of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make such payment by issuing, to the United States Government life-insurance fund, bonds of the United States which shall bear interest at the rate of 4½ percent per annum. No such bonds shall mature or be callable until the expiration of a period of at least 10 years from date of issue, except that any such bond shall be redeemed by the Secretary of the Treasury and the principal and accrued interest thereon paid to the United States Goverment life-insurance fund at any time upon certification by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs that the amount represented by such bond is required to meet current liabilities. Bonds issued for the purposes of this section shall be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, subject to the provisions of this section.

SEC. 6. The adjusted-service certificate fund is hereby made available for payments authorized by this act.

SEC. 7. Notwithstanding the provisions of Public Law No. 262, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 12, 1935, no deductions on account of any indebtedness of the veteran to the United States, except on account of any lien against the adjusted-service certificate authorized by law, shall be made from the adjusted-service credit or from any amounts due under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, or this act.

SEC. 8. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 10. Whoever knowingly makes any false or fraudulent statement of a material fact in any application, certificate, or document made under the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

SEC. 11. This act may be cited as the Adjusted Compensation Payment Act, 1936.

Mr. GEORGE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed House bill 9870, the so-called "bonus" bill, as amended.

Mr. HARRISON. I move to lay the motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

DRAWBACK ON IMPORTED CONTAINERS—PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, last spring at the time Senate bill 1421 passed I was ill and not present to oppose it, as I would have done for the following reasons:

The bill would have the effect of amending subsection (a) of section 313 of the Tariff Act of 1930 in respect to drawback paid on imported materials in case of reexport of such materials.

The provisions of the bill, S. 1421, if enacted into law, would alter the long-established principle and practice of American industry by allowing a drawback to apply in cases where "imported containers, packages, coverings (including materials for coverings), vessels, brands, and labels" shall be used in putting up or packing articles manufactured in the United States and so exported.

If passed by the House of Representatives, where it now rests with the Ways and Means Committee, this bill would be injurious to the interests of American industries which are manufacturing various types of containers.

Imported containers would take away employment from American workmen, including miners of coal, limestone, and iron ore, furnace men, steel-mill workers, those employed in the manufacture of steel drums, tin cans, and so forth, including bottle-cap workers, and last, but not least, the labor employed by the American railroads necessary for the transportation of raw materials used in manufacture.

Our present problem of unemployment is now sufficiently extended without adding to it by legislation of this kind.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I understand it is the purpose of the Senator from Arkansas to move now for a recess until Wednesday?

Mr. ROBINSON. My intention is to move a recess until Wednesday, which will leave the unfinished business, the bill reported by the Senator from Oklahoma, before the Senate as the regular order of business.

Mr. GORE. When we convene Wednesday the unfinished business will be taken up for immediate consideration?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would be the unfinished business at that time.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF STONEWALL JACKSON

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, Stonewall Jackson, one of the greatest generals this country has ever known, was born on the 21st of January 1824, so tomorrow will be the one hundred and twelfth anniversary of his birth. A sketch of his life and career has been prepared by his great-granddaughter, Mrs. Emil Shaffer, of Winston-Salem, N. C.; and as I understand the Senate will not be in session tomorrow, I respectfully ask unanimous consent that this sketch be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of today, and likewise printed as a public document.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed as a public document and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BIOGRAPHY OF STONEWALL JACKSON

By Mrs. Emil Shaffer

Thomas Jonathan Jackson, usually known as Stonewall Jackson, was born in Clarksburg, Va., now West Virginia, on the 21st day of January 1824. He died at Guinea Station, Va., on the 10th day of May 1863, being 39 years of age. He was the son of Jonathan Jackson, of Clarksburg, a promising and well-to-do young lawyer, and his beautiful and accomplished wife, Julia Beckwith Neale. His great-grandfather, John Jackson, the first of the line in America, by birth a Scotch-Irishman, came from London about 1748 and located first in Maryland and later the western portion of Virginia. The Jacksons became in time quite a numerous family, owning large boundaries of mountain land. They were noted for their honesty, indomitable wills, and physical courage, holding many positions of public trust and honor in what was then known as western Virginia.

EARLY CHILDHOOD

When Thomas Jonathan Jackson was 3 years of age his father died with typhoid fever, contracted while he was nursing his little daughter, who also died. He left a widow and three children in very limited circumstances. Mrs. Jackson, after recovering in a degree from the double shock—the death of her daughter and husband—supported her little family as best she could with her needle and by teaching school for about 3 years, when she married Capt. Blake B. Woodson, a gentleman from eastern Virginia, of excellent family and delightful manners but visionary and unsuccessful. When her health became impaired the children were placed temporarily with relatives. A year later Jackson's mother died, and thus at the age of 7 he was left a penniless orphan.

One story most characteristic of him is that when about 12 years of age he appeared at the house of Federal Judge John G. Jackson in Clarksburg and addressed his wife, saying, "Aunt, Uncle Blake (referring to the relative he was then living with) and I don't agree. I have quit him and will never go back any more." He never did, but walked 18 miles to the farm of Cummins Jackson, bachelor half-brother of his father. There he lived happily until he was appointed to West Point through the political influence of his Uncle Cummins, at the age of 18. Before going to West Point he held his only political office, that of constable, and satisfactorily discharged the duties of the office.

The first year at West Point, having had but indifferent preparation, he stood near the foot of the class; but each year, by dint of untiring study, he advanced steadily until he graduated no. 17 in a class of 60. One of his professors remarked that if there had been one more year in the course before graduation he would have led his class.

IN MEXICO

After graduating at West Point in 1846 he at once went to the Mexican War and served with distinction in the battle there, coming out brevet major, with a noble reputation for bravery and extremely popular with the Mexican people of the higher classes, for whom he entertained to the end of his life great admiration.

AT LEXINGTON, VA.

In 1851 he became professor of military tactics at the Virginia Military Institution, Lexington, Va., known as the West Point of the South, at a salary of $1,200 per year and a residence. Lexington was at that time a small town in the midst of the Blue Ridge Mountains, also the seat of Washington College, now Washington and Lee University. The community at that time was largely dominated by the Presbyterian Church, whose pastor was Rev. William S. White, for whom Jackson formed a great affection. General Jackson was deeply interested in religious matters, and though baptized in the Episcopal Church, joined the Presbyterian Church the first year he was in Lexington.

In 1853 he married Miss Eleanor Junkin, daughter of Dr. George Junkin, president of Washington College. In a year his wife died. The young husband was heartbroken, and this thoughts turned more than ever to religion. In fact, it was at this time that his intense religious nature began to assert itself outwardly.

In 1855 Jackson and Col. J. T. L. Preston, who was subsequently his adjutant general, organized a Sunday school for Negroes in Lexington. Some local antagonism was aroused against them because slaves were taught to read and write in this school. The school was carried on successfully, however, up to the outbreak of the war.

On the 16th day of July 1857 he was married to Miss Mary Anna Morrison, of Lincoln County, N. C., the daughter of Dr. Robert Hall Morrison, who founded Davidson College, Davidson, N. C., and Mary Graham Morrison, a sister of Gov. William A. Graham, of North Carolina.

IN THE WAR BETWEEN THE STATES

Though opposed to secession, Jackson, like many of the leading citizens of the South, was equally opposed to the coercion of the Southern States, and therefore promptly offered his services to the State of Virginia when war was declared against it, believing that his first and highest loyalty was to his native State.

Jackson had been commissioned by the Governor of Virginia to take charge of the State militia detailed to keep the peace during the trial and execution of John Brown at Charles Town in 1859. In a letter to his wife he gave an interesting account of this occurrence.

At the actual outbreak of hostilities he spent his time drilling soldiers. He was then made colonel of the Virginia State troops. First at Manassas, he was given his famous sobriquet of "Stonewall" by General Bee, of South Carolina. His promotions to brigadier, major general, and lieutenant general were very rapid. His fame as a soldier rests largely upon what is known as the valley campaign, where in rapid succession he won a series of brilliant victories—McDowell, Winchester, Port Republic, Cross Keys, and Cedar Mountain. Of these, he himself is said to have considered Cedar Mountain his greatest victory.

On May 3, 1863, in the midst of the brilliant victory at Chancellorsville, he was wounded by his own men, usually supposed to belong to one of the North Carolina regiments, and died a week later.

After half a century has elapsed it is hard to realize the feelings of sorrow and hopelessness which swept over the South when the news of Jackson's death flashed along the wires. Everywhere men and women broke down and cried as though a beloved member of their own family had been taken. When the news of his death reached Europe the newsboys and porters in the hotels announced that "Stonewall Jackson was dead", for his was a familiar name throughout the world. The people of all nations felt a great soldier and a noble Christian hero had fallen, while in the hearts of the people of the South there was a deep and unexpressed fear that the cause which they loved so well had suffered an irreparable blow the day his casket with the Confederate flag wrapped around it was placed in the cemetery at Lexington.

It is not our purpose to attempt any eulogy of Jackson's career as a soldier. The English historian, Colonel Henderson, probably the greatest military critic of the nineteenth century, says that he was in no way inferior to Wellington, Napoleon, Lee, or any of the great generals of history. He was one of the few generals who was never defeated, and without any effort on his part maintained the confidence and admiration and, one might say, the adoration of all his troops.

APPEARANCE AND CHARACTERISTICS

In private life Jackson was a simple, rather silent Scotch-Irish, Presbyterian gentleman, with large blue eyes, pensive and deep; dark-brown hair, which was very slightly curly and worn rather long; about 5 feet 11½ inches in height, with a fine, full figure. His complexion was fair, almost like a girl's, except when tanned by outdoor exposure. He was noted for his politeness, gentleness of manner, and love of children. While never talkative, he felt always the duty when in society to be responsive to the conversation of others, and was at times a delightful companion and full of pranks and humor, though these occasions were rare. His habits of life were methodical and rigid. According to Dr. R. L. Dabney's Life of Jackson, he always rose at dawn, had private devotions, and then took a solitary walk. When at home family prayers were held at 7 o'clock, summer and winter, and all members of his household were required to be present, but the absence of anyone did not delay the services a minute. Breakfast followed, and he went to his classroom at 8 o'clock, remaining until 11, when he returned to his study. The first book that then engaged his attention was the Bible, which was studied as he did other courses. Between dinner and supper his attention was occupied by his garden, his farm, and the duties of the church, in which he was a deacon. After supper he devoted his time for half an hour to a mental review of the studies of the next day, without reference to notes, then to reading or conversation until 10 o'clock, at which time he always retired. There was no variation in this daily program.

There were certain maxims of his life which had much to do with framing his character. One was that "you can be what you resolve to be ", the other, "do your duty." His last words are supposed to have been, "Let us cross over the river and rest under the shade of the trees", though others of the attendants at his bedside tell us that the last words were, "Soldiers, do your duty."

General Jackson left one infant daughter, 6 months old, whom he had the privilege of seeing upon only one occasion, when Mrs. Jackson visited him in camp. He named her Julia Neale, for his mother; and in 1885 she married Capt. William E. Christian, of Richmond, author and newspaper man, now living in Washington, D. C. She died in 1889, leaving two infant children, the eldest, Mrs. Julia Jackson Christian Preston, wife of Randolph Preston, an attorney, lives in Charlotte, N. C., and has five children; the youngest, a boy 18 months old, bears the name of his great-grandfather. Mrs. Christian's son, Thomas Jonathan Jackson Christian, is a major in the United States Army, now stationed (1928) at the University of Chicago. He married Miss Bertha Cook and has two children, a boy, Thomas Jonathan Jackson Christian, Jr., aged 11, and a girl, Margaret, aged 7.

General Jackson left surviving him an only sister, Laura, the wife of Mr. Jonathan Arnold, of Beverley, W. Va. This sister survived him until the year 1911, when she passed away at the age of 85 years, leaving one son, Hon. Thomas Jackson Arnold, and a number of grandchildren surviving her.

Mrs. Mary Anna Jackson, the widow, lived in Charlotte with her granddaughter until March 24, 1915, when at the age of 83 she passed to her reward. Her Christian faith, great wisdom, and cheerful, courageous disposition marked her as a most unusual woman. Her plan of life was as simple as her husband's, which consisted of finding out each day what she believed to be her duty, through prayer, Bible reading, and meditation, and then doing it uncomplainingly and with as little affectation as possible.

In 1907, when offered a pension by the Legislature of North Carolina, though she greatly needed it, she authorized one of her relatives, then a member of that body, to say that she preferred the money be given to help needy soldiers, or to found a school for wayward boys. At this session there was chartered the Stonewall Jackson Training School, one of the greatest institutions of its kind in America, and certainly the name it bears is an appropriate and inspiring one for the 500 boys enrolled there.

General Jackson's life was representative of the simple virtues for which the South was noted—honesty in thought, speech, and action, freedom from sordid ambition for wealth or notoriety, a high sense of honor and chivalry, unselfish patriotism, and benevolence toward his fellow men. To these traits were added an absolute reliance upon God, and trust in His providence as guarding, guiding, and controlling the daily lives of His servants.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT, as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations (and withdrawing a nomination), which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received and nomination withdrawn, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

RECESS UNTIL WEDNESDAY

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until Wednesday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Wednesday, January 22, 1936, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 20 (legislative day of Jan. 16), 1936

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The following-named persons to be members of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for terms of 2 years from January 22, 1936 (reappointments):

Jesse H. Jones, of Texas.
Charles B. Henderson, of Nevada.
C. B. Merriam, of Kansas.
Frederic H. Taber, of Massachusetts.
Charles T. Fisher, Jr., of Michigan.

NATIONAL MEDIATION BOARD

James W. Carmalt, of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the National Mediation Board for the term expiring February 1, 1939. (Reappointment.)

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The following-named passed assistant surgeons to be surgeons in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from the dates set opposite their names:

Edwin H. Carnes, January 21, 1936.
Franklin J. Halpin, February 21, 1936.
Gregory J. Van Beeck, March 11, 1936.

CHIEF OF NATIONAL GUARD BUREAU

Albert Hazen Blanding, National Guard of Florida, to be Chief of the National Guard Bureau of the War Department, with the rank of major general, for a period of 4 years from date of acceptance, with rank from December 1, 1935, vice Maj. Gen. George E. Leach, Chief of the National Guard Bureau, whose term of office expired November 30, 1935.

POSTMASTERS

ALABAMA

Albert H. Thompson to be postmaster at Rockford, Ala. Office became Presidential July 1, 1934.

CALIFORNIA

Walter L. Haley to be postmaster at Associated, Calif., in place of W. L. Haley. Incumbent's commission expires January 26, 1936.

Percy W. Helena to be postmaster at Los Altos, Calif., in place of J. M. Francisco. Incumbent's commission expired June 3, 1933.

John H. Canning to be postmaster at Oxnard, Calif., in place of J. H. Canning. Incumbent's commission expired January 9, 1936.

FLORIDA

Avie L. Hansford to be postmaster at Altha, Fla. Office became Presidential July 1, 1935.

Douglass G. Perry to be postmaster at Avon Park, Fla., in place of O. L. Head. Incumbent's commission expired February 14, 1935.

James A. Chadwick to be postmaster at Gainesville, Fla., in place of E. W. McCreary, deceased.

John F. Yearty to be postmaster at Gulf Hammock, Fla., in place of J. F. Yearty. Incumbent's commission expired January 13, 1936.

Sinclair A. Bryan to be postmaster at Raiford, Fla., in place of S. A. Bryan. Incumbent's commission expired January 13, 1936.

Chauncey Smith Daniel to be postmaster at Tavares, Fla., in place of W. W. Rees. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1934.

GEORGIA

Marie E. Harrell to be postmaster at Pearson, Ga., in place of M. E. Harrell. Incumbent's commission expired January 7, 1936.

Nancy A. W. Griffis to be postmaster at Screven, Ga., in place of J. M. Wright, deceased.

Etta Sneed Arnall to be postmaster at Senoia, Ga., in place of C. H. Travis. Incumbent's commission expired May 29, 1934.

Pearl E. Hughs to be postmaster at Stillmore, Ga. Office became Presidential July 1, 1935.

Claude M. Proctor to be postmaster at Summit, Ga., in place of C. M. Proctor. Incumbent's commission expired January 7, 1936.

HAWAII

Arthur W. Carlson to be postmaster at Lanai City, Hawaii, in place of A. W. Carlson. Incumbent's commission expired January 7, 1936.

Virginia S. Mathias to be postmaster at Waiakoa, Hawaii, in place of V. S. Mathias. Incumbent's commission expired January 7, 1936.

IDAHO

James W. Christensen to be postmaster at Downey, Idaho, in place of G. T. Hyde. Incumbent's commission expired January 23, 1935.

ILLINOIS

Jacob Feldman to be postmaster at Batavia, Ill., in place of C. J. Ekman. Incumbent's commission expired February 14, 1935.

Harold F. Kuettner to be postmaster at Dundee, Ill., in place of C. C. Wendt. Incumbent's commission expired May 17, 1932.

INDIANA

Bessie L. Gage to be postmaster at Ashley, Ind. Office became Presidential July 1, 1935.

IOWA

Kenneth F. Baldridge to be postmaster at Bloomfield, Iowa, in place of J. J. Ethell, removed.

Nelle Cullen to be postmaster at Sioux Rapids, Iowa, in place of C. L. Sipe. Incumbent's commission expired February 14, 1935.

KANSAS

Harold J. March to be postmaster at Bucklin, Kans., in place of E. D. Bolinger. Incumbent's commission expired February 6, 1934.

Winona D. Stough to be postmaster at Cherokee, Kans., in place of Lela Martin. Incumbent's commission expired January 30, 1933.

Carl P. Briley to be postmaster at Walnut, Kans., in place of E. L. Robison, removed.

KENTUCKY

Octavia M. Sturgill to be postmaster at Hindman, Ky., in place of M. C. Bray. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1934.

Effie Lee Bailey to be postmaster at New Castle, Ky., in place of Dea Whitaker. Incumbent's commission expired January 8, 1934.

MAINE

Fred S. Littlefield to be postmaster at Brooks, Maine, in place of E. E. Brown. Incumbent's commission expired January 7, 1936.

Adrian F. Kelleher to be postmaster at Camden, Maine, in place of L. D. Ames. Incumbent's commission expired January 7, 1936.

Carlton R. Barlow to be postmaster at East Boothbay, Maine, in place of E. M. Vannah. Incumbent's commission expired January 7, 1936.

Arthur H. Carpenter to be postmaster at Limerick, Maine, in place of C. E. Sadler. Incumbent's commission expired January 22, 1935.

Clara M. Colcord to be postmaster at Stockton Springs, Maine, in place of G. H. Hopkins. Incumbent's commission expired January 7, 1936.

MARYLAND

Lena S. Townsend to be postmaster at Girdletree, Md., in place of C. J. Scarborough. Incumbent's commission expired January 28, 1935.

Jacob H. Reinhardt to be postmaster at Lansdowne, Md., in place of J. H. Reinhardt. Incumbent's commission expired January 11, 1936.

Turner B. Waters to be postmaster at Severna Park, Md., in place of T. B. Waters. Incumbent's commission expired January 11, 1936.

MASSACHUSETTS

Maynard N. Wetherell to be postmaster at Chartley, Mass., in place of M. N. Wetherell. Incumbent's commission expires January 27, 1936.

Mary A. Fallon to be postmaster at West Stockbridge, Mass., in place of M. A. Fallon. Incumbent's commission expires January 27, 1936.

MICHIGAN

Marvin J. Elzinga to be postmaster at Ellsworth, Mich., in place of H. L. Dawson. Incumbent's commission expired January 13, 1935.

Thomas Newton to be postmaster at Metamora, Mich., in place of J. P. Robertson. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1934.

MINNESOTA

William Danielson to be postmaster at Cyrus, Minn., in place of M. J. Stensby. Incumbent's commission expired February 20, 1935.

William J. Crook to be postmaster at Pipestone, Minn., in place of G. L. Chesley. Incumbent's commission expired February 25, 1935.

MISSOURI

William H. Kendrick to be postmaster at La Belle, Mo., in place of J. A. Richmond, removed.

MONTANA

Phyllis M. Crockford to be postmaster at Sweetgrass, Mont., in place of Robert Parsons, resigned.

NEBRASKA

Maude S. Yancey to be postmaster at Cody, Nebr., in place of L. H. Deaver, removed.

Henry C. Paquin to be postmaster at Dakota City, Nebr., in place of C. H. Fueston. Incumbent's commission expired January 9, 1933.

Edna M. Miner to be postmaster at Ericson, Nebr. Office became Presidential July 1, 1935.

NEW JERSEY

Lottie A. Cubberley to be postmaster at Hamilton Square, N. J., in place of E. C. Henderson. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1934.

Floyd Smith to be postmaster at Montville, N. J., in place of M. F. Beach. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1934.

Bessie M. Lippincott to be postmaster at Pemberton, N. J., in place of I. H. Collom, removed.

Frances B. Tonking to be postmaster at Tabor, N. J. Office became Presidential July 1, 1932.

NEW YORK

Helena F. Cuatt to be postmaster at Mohegan Lake, N. Y., in place of Douglas Rockett, removed.

Francis D. Lynch to be postmaster at Stony Point, N. Y., in place of F. D. Lynch. Incumbent's commission expired January 18, 1936.

NORTH DAKOTA

Carl Jahnke to be postmaster at New Salem, N. Dak., in place of August Kreidt, resigned.

Bridget A. Hennessy to be postmaster at Tolna, N. Dak., in place of B. A. Hennessy. Incumbent's commission expired January 7, 1936.

OHIO

Charles H. Mullen to be postmaster at Pomeroy, Ohio, in place of F. R. Smith. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1934.

Lema M. Collins to be postmaster at Proctorville, Ohio, in place of L. M. Collins. Incumbent's commission expired January 7, 1936.

OKLAHOMA

Dudley C. Allsup to be postmaster at Willow, Okla. Office became Presidential July 1, 1935.

PENNSYLVANIA

Morris A. Rood to be postmaster at Albion, Pa., in place of R. M. Steiger, removed.

Rosa V. Hawk to be postmaster at Cresco, Pa., in place of E. H. Hilgert. Incumbent's commission expired February 25, 1935.

Margaret M. Kavanagh to be postmaster at Fort Washington, Pa., in place of E. M. Lang. Incumbent's commission expired April 9, 1934.

Harold D. Akens to be postmaster at Linesville, Pa., in place of H. D. Lowing. Incumbent's commission expired January 9, 1935.

Delia Dina Fornataro to be postmaster at Russellton, Pa., in place of B. E. Dembaugh. Incumbent's commission expired January 28, 1935.

PUERTO RICO

Juan D. Rivera to be postmaster at Coamo, P. R., in place of Angel de Jesus Matos, removed.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Robert W. Evans to be postmaster at Cameron, S. C., in place of D. H. Taylor, transferred.

Eugene C. Jones to be postmaster at North, S. C., in place of E. C. Jones. Incumbent's commission expires January 25, 1936.

George Allard Douglass to be postmaster at Whitmire, S. C., in place of M. P. Epting. Incumbent's commission expired February 25, 1935.

SOUTH DAKOTA

Grace M. McGillivray to be postmaster at Garden City, S. Dak. Office became Presidential July 1, 1935.

George Kremer to be postmaster at Lesterville, S. Dak. Office became Presidential July 1, 1935.

TENNESSEE

H. Woodruff Booth to be postmaster at Knoxville, Tenn., in place of J. J. Graham, retired.

TEXAS

George W. Ragland to be postmaster at Abernathy, Tex., in place of G. W. Ragland. Incumbent's commission expired January 8, 1936.

Elmer A. Hoppe to be postmaster at Carmine, Tex., in place of J. A. Weyand. Incumbent's commission expired February 14, 1935.

Roberta M. Isom to be postmaster at Carrollton, Tex., in place of W. F. Hofmann, removed.

Claude H. Martin to be postmaster at Crane, Tex., in place of C. H. Martin. Incumbent's commission expired January 8, 1936.

Homer Dewey Thompson to be postmaster at Devine, Tex., in place of Jean Teel. Incumbent's commission expired January 13, 1935.

James C. Lovelace to be postmaster at Olney, Tex., in place of A. A. Cooper, removed.

James R. Kersey to be postmaster at Ozona, Tex., in place of J. R. Kersey. Incumbent's commission expired January 8, 1936.

John Edgar Kimsey to be postmaster at Texon, Tex., in place of J. E. Kimsey. Incumbent's commission expired January 8, 1936.

UTAH

William L. Sargent to be postmaster at Coalville, Utah, in place of H. E. Calderwood. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1935.

WEST VIRGINIA

James A. Rowan to be postmaster at Kingston, W. Va., in place of M. F. Forgey, resigned.

Hugh V. Burt to be postmaster at Mannington, W. Va., in place of F. A. Burt, deceased.

WISCONSIN

John F. Clancy to be postmaster at East Troy, Wis., in place of H. B. Linde, removed.

Anna Kettering to be postmaster at Glen Flora, Wis. Office became Presidential July 1, 1935.

Charles E. Martin to be postmaster at Medford, Wis., in place of Winford Suits, resigned.

Exilda L. Grendahl to be postmaster at Sheldon, Wis., in place of W. F. Dietlein, removed.

Samuel Dewar to be postmaster at Westfield, Wis., in place of Samuel Dewar. Incumbent's commission expires January 18, 1936.

WYOMING

Alvah J. Macy to be postmaster at Moorcroft, Wyo., in place of A. J. Macy. Incumbent's commission expires January 22, 1936.

Mayme A. Jackson to be postmaster at Osage, Wyo., in place of M. A. Jackson. Incumbent's commission expired January 13, 1935.

WITHDRAWAL

Executive nomination withdrawn from the Senate January 20 (legislative day of Jan. 16), 1936

POSTMASTER

ILLINOIS

Rufus B. Grissom to be postmaster at Toledo, in the State of Illinois.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 20, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful and loving Father, whose children we are, the words of Thy servant of old are with us: "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, even lift them up ye everlasting doors and the King of Glory shall come in." Almighty God, help us to lift up our heads, that the King of the eternities, whose glory fills the universe, may shine round about us, thus inspiring us to render faithful service to our country. Direct our hearts to lofty altitudes and set our feet in the ways of helpfulness. Give the charm of gentleness to our conduct and let the tone of tenderness carry love's message over all barriers to our fellow men. Through Christ, our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 17, 1936, was read and approved.

THE WORLD WAR—LIKE BANQUO'S GHOST

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, the World War, like Banquo's ghost, "will not down."

Not only is this true with respect to the pending controversy over the bonus, but it is true with regard to the causes and circumstances of the war itself and of our participation in it. It is an irony of history that within the last few days a bitter controversy has arisen among Senators over the motives of President Wilson, Secretary of State Bryan, and various persons who figured prominently in national and international affairs in those historic days. Nearly a quarter of a century has elapsed and we have not yet discharged our obligations to the men who bore the arms of their country in the strife of 1917–18. Yet before this debt is paid, we see a situation across the ocean that, except for the most vigilant care on the part of our Government, might drag the United States into new bloodshed.

Without discussing the merits of the dispute raging between the several Senators about intentions of American leaders nearly 20 years ago, I would stress the fact that the evils of that fearful struggle which cost us so dearly are yet with us to vex and plague our Nation. We are still paying the price and suffering the consequences of the criminality of monarchs, aristocrats, empire builders, financiers, and munitions makers of foreign lands—and, I may say in all frankness, the folly of not a few of our own statesmen. Just as we are paying the price in 1936, we shall be paying a residue of it 10 and 20 years later, for the sinister results of wars follow nations for indefinite periods. They are almost inescapable.

It is futile to attempt to analyze the purposes of anybody in detail, from potentate to peasant or from capitalist to worker or farmer. People's motives are never wholly good or bad. But it is not futile to acknowledge the real cause of such a dreadful thing as a war. On the contrary, it is our duty to do this, and to use all our national power, judgment, skill, and character to see that our own Nation does not again contribute to the barbarous business of international conflict.

We ought to know by this time that economic pressure sweeps men and nations along in a strong current that is at times almost irresistible. When this pressure is great enough even the best and ablest of men find it easy to persuade themselves that a war is necessary and righteous. The solution of the problem is the elimination of the causes—of the economic pressure to which I have referred. These causes can be eliminated to large degree by pursuing a strict neutrality policy such as is now being mapped out. By keeping our bankers and capitalists out of profit-making trade relations with governments engaged in hostilities, there will be slight risk of our own country being drawn into them. Eventually, we must go even further than this. The private ownership of public resources, such as banks and munitions factories, requires profits. Naturally, the proprietors of such concerns will be impelled to bend every effort to pile up these profits. The temptation to seek to accumulate them regardless of neutrality laws will always be a severe one. While such statutes should be enacted as speedily as possible and should be most carefully drawn, let us also bear in mind the necessity for finally placing in the hands of the Government the sources of credit and of war machinery.

It is fitting to review the features of the World War even at this late date, for I have said the frightful costs still cling to us, and for a century we shall still be liquidating some of them in one form or another. The financial expenses are bad enough, but the loss to a nation and to the world in life, limb, ideals, and principle are greater yet.

My record as a defender of the veterans is well known. I have steadfastly urged payment of the bonus. The bill that now seems about to be passed is better than none, although I deeply regret that the money is not to be paid by the Government immediately; and I also regret that interest must be paid private interests by the veterans to get their bonds cashed.

Because I appreciate the gravity of the Nation's demand upon a man's body when it conscripts him into military service or when it accepts him as an enlisted soldier, I hope that the future of our beloved America will never witness another such call. I hope, moreover, that increasing civilization will minimize the need for enlistments.

PAYMENT OF VETERANS' ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article with reference to payment of the adjusted-service certificates.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I have supported and voted for the payment of veterans' adjusted-service certificates on every occasion this matter has come before the House of Representatives. Not only have I voted for the bills when first presented to the House for consideration, but I have also voted to override Presidential vetoes. My position in this regard has not changed. I shall support the present bill (H. R. 9500) and shall vote for it.

The fact that I have continuously favored the payment of the bonus is too well known to require any lengthy discussion at this time. Heretofore there has been some difference of opinion as to the method which should be followed in paying these certificates, which I might say in all frankness has been rather embarrassing to the friends of our veterans; but the present bill has the unanimous endorsement of not only the major veterans' organizations but of those Members of Congress who have been earnestly striving in behalf of the veterans. It should be speedily enacted into law.

The legal responsibility of the Federal Government to meet this obligation has long since been established, but the moral obligation for its immediate payment is far greater than any legal requirement that it be paid in 1945. Humanitarian consideration of the present needs of our veterans should impel every Member of Congress to favor the immediate payment of the bonus. Human rights are involved. They demand consideration.

The welfare of thousands of veterans has been seriously impaired during recent years. No greater obligation can rest upon government than the rendering of assistance to those who offered their lives in its defense. The payment of the bonus will be of great assistance to these veterans at this time when they need it most.

I have not been impressed by some arguments which have been advanced that the payment of the bonus would impair the credit of the United States. Whether it is paid now or not, it is an obligation to be met sooner or later within the next 9 years. By any method of accounting it is a liability of the Government which must be met. The amount required is less than one-half of 1 percent of the wealth of the United States. It is less than one-fourth of the amount which has already been appropriated by the Federal Government, both directly and indirectly, for relief. It cannot, therefore, in any sense prove of detriment to the credit of the United States.

Let us squarely meet this issue and make provision for the immediate payment of the bonus.

FREEDOM OF PRESS AND SPEECH

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech I delivered before the Press Association of Richmond, Va., last Friday, January 17. It is a good speech.

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would rather have the gentleman make the speech from the floor if it is a good speech.

Mr. MAVERICK. I shall be pleased to if I may have half an hour in which to do so.

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent to extend my remarks, I include herein a speech delivered by me before the Virginia Press Association, at the

John Marshall Hotel, in Richmond, Va., Friday, January 17, 1936:

Gentlemen of the press, gentlemen to whom we entrust our liberties, gentlemen of the fourth estate, gentlemen—and this is all very obvious—of Virginia, I am here to speak to you about the freedom of speech and press. Members of the press are personally the most hopeless and disillusioned people on earth; now, I was about to make a speech way up in Northampton, Mass., among the "cold Yankees", and so I sent up a bulletin to the House Press Gallery requesting those guardians of liberty to list the crucial issues of 1936, so I could tell the people in Massachusetts. After great study, the gentlemen of the press answered as follows: "Ten-cent beer in the House restaurant; a more liberal spending policy for the Democratic Party; and the reelection of MAVERICK for 1936."

You will also note that the press was grossly inaccurate, at least two-thirds wrong, for their first two questions, at least, were wrong. Concerning the one on the reelection of MAVERICK—modesty forbids an expression. So when one addresses members of the press, it is a difficult problem—one involving great dangers—for when you set yourself to swim through a swirling sea of cynical ink—whoever that fellow was, the Greek boy in the Iliad, who traveled around the world—he had all kinds of dangers, like sirens and one-eyed monsters—well, when a man talks before the press, he is twice as brave, and his audience twice as bad as the trials of Aeneus, which is getting my infinitives and grammar mixed up. So I appeal to you to be tolerant, although I know you will not.

NECESSITY FOR PRESERVATION OF FREEDOM OF PRESS OBVIOUS

There's another objection to making a speech like this. In the first place, you know that the freedom of speech and press should be preserved—you know it better than I. Yes; it's pretty obvious. And so, when I come before you, I come more or less as a preacher whose audience well knows that they should not commit sin. That's one of the anomalies of institutional religion—you go to church week after week to hear the preacher tell you each time that you are a sinner. However, a newspaperman has an advantage over the average church audience. He does not have to listen, and if he does, he doesn't have to pay any attention to the speaker.

But let me really talk about the freedom of speech; I intend to do it, even if I am shot. Take the State of Virginia. It is actually, spiritually, geographically, and physically the State which really rendered to the United States the greatest service, and that is the Bill of Rights and the first few amendments to the Constitution—which guarantee human liberties to the people of this country. The intellectual parent of liberty in America and the spiritual forerunner of the Bill of Rights was Thomas Jefferson, whose body the Du Ponts and the Morgans and the Liberty Leaguers would steal. Yes; I speak of Thomas Jefferson, whose body has been dug out of the grave by that little organization of body snatchers, the Liberty League, and whose corpse has been obscenely paraded before the American people in the grotesque livery of the class of people he hated. But the Liberty League has stolen only the body of Thomas Jefferson, for they do not understand his spirit, nor could they steal his spirit, for they have no comprehension of the spirit of that great man. [Applause.]

THE GRAVESTONE OF JEFFERSON TELLS A BRAVE STORY

Thomas Jefferson it was—and you know it better than I—who asked that his gravestone have the following words placed upon it:

HERE WAS BURIED
THOMAS JEFFERSON AUTHOR OF THE DECLARATION OF AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE, OF THE STATUTE OF VIRGINIA,
FOR RELIGIOUS FREEDOM, AND FATHER OF THE UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA.

And so when you speak about liberty in the State of Virginia, you are talking about an honest-to-God subject, a subject which means something and must stir the heart of every Virginian. Let me tell you that liberty is a grand and glorious subject, and that there is such a thing—and Virginians have a direct interest in it—and a duty, I think, to do their part in preserving it.

LIBERTY AS CONCEIVED IN THE AMERICAN BILL OF RIGHTS

Now, when I speak of liberty, I mean to use the first and fourth amendments to the Constitution more or less as a text:

"Amendment I

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

"Amendment IV

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the places to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized."

What is the history of liberty and progress in our country? With the great advance of machinery, with all our technical and scientific achievements, there is a greater need of liberty than ever before, but instead we see more prejudice than ever before. Historically, we came to a virgin continent—we came to Virginia, we came to New York, we traveled southward into Texas, and marched across the prairies of the West. We settled our country, we cut down our forests, we built bridges, roads, set up post offices, set up giant utilities, and now we have built the greatest and most powerful nation on the face of the earth.

Well, now, generally, what do we know? We know, to use an old cliché, that civilization is actually at the crossroads. We have been hearing about civilization being at the crossroads since civilization—whatever that is—started. But now civilization is actually at the crossroads. We know in this country that the talk of the depression being over, and that everything is being solved or is solved, is the bunk. Any man who thinks clearly, who has children who are to follow him, and who really uses his head, knows that those kids haven't got the same chance that we had when we left school. And also, if we read history, if we read of the destruction of civilizations, of races and empires, we find that depressions do not last a few months or a few years, but in periods of from 50 to 500 years. Think of the Dark Ages, of China, of the Thirty Years War in Europe, the Wars of the Roses, hundreds of other conflicts all over the world, which indicate that hard times are no ordinary passing fancy. Considering all the vast problems that are before the American people today, the writing of statutes, the misconceptions and different conceptions of the Constitution, plain unemployment, technological unemployment, machinery—all of those various problems—we know that we are faced with the most supreme test that civilization has ever known. While science has advanced comparatively thousands of years, by "leaps and bounds" government as a science seems to stand still.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH IS BETTER THAN GUNPOWDER AND BAYONETS

All of this directly concerns the freedom of speech and press. For problems cannot be solved with gunpowder or bayonets. So when I talk about civil liberties—freedom of speech and press—I speak of the duty of our people, and of the press, to preserve them. It seems this duty ought to be a sacred one. And when I say "sacred" duty, I am embarrassed by the use of that word. Because every faker, every four-flusher seems to be talking about the sacred duty of this, or the sacred duty of that. But it does seem as though there is something sacred in the world, and certainly freedom ought to be sacred.

But I say that it is sacred for the reason that if we lose the liberty of speech and press—there will be no chance for progress, no chance for rectification of wrongs, no chance for education; to sum up, no chance for truth—and all that we stand for will be lost. Or we will gain nothing in the future of a beneficial nature, either to the mind, the body, or the soul. Or, say we live on without any liberty. We are then dumb, driven cattle who do not mind being slaughtered and do not know when we are being wronged. When I talk about freedom of speech I do it upon the basis of granting freedom of speech to our bitterest enemies, to the people we hate—like the Liberty League, or whatever enemies we have—that they shall have the fullest latitude to make violent statements, to lie, to make false statements, and to say what they please. The right of the freedom of speech is also the legal protection of lying—although no protection against civil libel and damages—and for a definite reason.

Since the Liberty Leaguers are entitled to freedom of speech, of course that means labor is entitled to freedom of speech also. Sometimes newspaper publishers seem to think there is a difference insofar as it involves their property rights. In the Louisiana case, where a punitive tax is placed on newspaper circulation, that is unquestionably an invasion of freedom of speech and press, but concerning the rights of labor, insofar as that concerns the newspaper business, wherein labor has no greater right than its connection with any other business, that is not an invasion of freedom of speech. There is no distinction in the freedom of speech and press; give it to labor, give it to capital, to newspaper publishers and newspaper workers, to the hotel owner, the hotel worker—to everybody. You will understand that I am not making a speech on labor. My views on that subject are pretty well known, and I stated them in another speech here in Richmond sometime ago. I am trying to impress the fact that legally we have the right of freedom of speech and press, and, of course, a newspaper cannot be forced to print anything. But the spirit of the freedom of speech and press is to give everybody an even break in the newspapers, even though the publisher is opposed to the views of those to whom he gives space in his newspaper.

All this is based on the democratic concept of the preservation of society. We know that society cannot be held in concrete forms for all time. Society must and does change, and it is better that we do not let it crack up because of the violence against the rigidity of our forms, but that we let changes come gradually and easily by the freedom of expression with a certain flexibility of our institutions.

WHY "LIARS" SHOULD HAVE RIGHT TO TALK

An honest man makes a statement. He is considered a liar by thousands and even millions of people—yet his statement might be found to be true, either then or much later. I cannot conceive of certain enemies of the public of today of telling the truth, or that history will ever prove them to be truthful; but their right to speak must be respected, or else we lose the right ourselves.

What is the general attitude of the people today?

It is one largely of fear and sometimes of suspicion.

How can this be corrected to a large extent?

By honest newspapers. But we have "red" hunts, though there is no "red" menace; we have persecution and humiliation of the teachers and efforts to make them sign oaths, although there is no question of their loyalty and patriotism and no use in oaths; we have "military-disaffection" bills, although our soldiers and sailors are patriotic and well disciplined; we have sedition bills, although sedition is ineffective and negligible, and already thoroughly covered by existing laws; * * * we have all manner of proposed legislation, and some already enacted, which is of this suppressive type and completely useless. None of it will benefit the perpetuity of our institutions. All this seems to indicate to me that we have a case of national jitters. We are not solving our real problems, so we take it out in suppression. So, in this situation, the press must come forward and do its duty courageously and fairly; it must insist on the preservation of liberty.

I shall mention two bills which will strike directly at the freedom of the press. They are the naval-military gag bill, also known as the military disaffection bill, and the Kramer sedition bill. Both of these bills, in the first place, are wholly unnecessary, both because we have enough laws now to protect the country and because such laws cause and do not prevent violence. The military bill is unnecessary because the Army and the Navy have the Court Martial Manual and all kinds of statutes which can be used by the naval and military authorities to maintain discipline, as they have in the past and as they are doing now. And though the Navy has more laws than the Army to protect itself, strangely enough the Navy is pushing the bill, while the Army doesn't want it. The military gag bill is supposed to punish anyone severely—a thousand-dollar fine and 2 years in the penitentiary for anyone who tries to get a soldier to disobey an officer or who causes military or naval disaffection, and by special language gets the newsboy, the reporter, publisher, even the union printer—everybody. It strikes directly at the freedom of the press, because it would put in the hands of the military, and any part of the military, including the National Guard, a vast power of censorship and persecution which the military has never enjoyed and which the Army, at least, doesn't want. The result would be that the Army or Navy or any excited officer—if they got on a "patriotic" jag or on a jag of wanting more appropriations, or more power—could have people put in jail for anything—for saying that the officers were not perfect, that sanitary conditions were not good in a certain place, or that appropriations should be limited. First having obtained a civil warrant, the soldiers could go along with the Federal officers. Then the soldiers could break in our homes, kick us around the house. And since newspapers are not homes, entry could be made without search warrants; we might get our presses thrown on the city streets and the type spread over the company or battalion streets for souvenirs. The law, if enacted, could be used for anything, if we interpret the bill in the light of the Sedition Act of the war, where people were sent to prison for almost any statement whatsoever. This bill is thoroughly bad, un-American, and contains all the violence of fascism and communism.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE BACKS SEDITION BILLS

The principal backer of the bill is the United States Chamber of Commerce, and I must admit with disappointment and regret that they are seconded by the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Swanson, of your own State of Virginia. I cannot understand this. First, the chamber of commerce is opposed to Government ownership or Government control—and yet they desire to turn over to the Government, which they criticize for attempting certain measures which they regard as socialistic, the right to stop the chamber of commerce from talking any more, with the further right to walk in their place in Washington and bang them over their pious heads. The chamber of commerce wants the press of the Nation under the heel of the Government and under the heel of the military. I cannot understand the attitude of the United States Chamber of Commerce, because they want all business to be free of Government control and Government ownership—except the press. They expect publicity and courtesy out of the press, but they want the press to be under the boot and toe of a military censorship. I don't think they have thought this thing through, and when they do they will probably realize that their liberties are in greater danger than those of almost any other class. They now criticize the President, but they desire to turn over to the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army, the right to transfer these chamber of commerce boys from the civil chamber into the military chamber, to wit, to get them in the hoosegow. As for Secretary Swanson, I cannot understand it at all, except that he has a large number of admirals and naval officers who are simply nuts on the question of the "red" scare. That shows how far behind the times they are, because we now have bigger and better scares. He has certain men whose entire time has been devoted to doing nothing but drawing their pay and hunting "reds."

Yes, the real force behind the "red" bills is the United States Chamber of Commerce, secretly working by propaganda sent to organizations all over America, many of such organizations being used as tools and not suspecting the fact. Secretary Swanson is only being used; however, the Navy has an espionage department, regularly interfering in other people's business, including foreign affairs of all the governmental agencies, the only single bureau, group, or agency now promoting these gag and sedition bills is the Navy, the most handsomely treated part of the United States Government. Personally, I think it is a gross reflection on the ability of naval officers to command troops for their high command to demand such laws.

Now, as to the Kramer bill, it gives you a 5-year rest in a Federal prison, according to its superficial reading, for advocating the "overthrow" of the Government. But the interpretation of the wording is dangerous. It sounds reasonable enough on the face, but it also is unnecessary and, being a suppression of opinion, will cause all manner of persecution and a physical blow-up of the people later on. A proponent of the bill in the hearings before the Judiciary Committee gave as one of his reasons that certain cartoons were printed of the President, out in California during a strike. (Confidentially, all I could see about it was that it was a good cartoon.)

This bill, according to the interpretations of the Sedition Act, would also take away the liberties of the press and of the people and would only cause resentment against the Government to be worse. It has the general defects of the Tydings-McCormack bill, the military disaffection bill, although it is not a military bill.

ADVOCACY AND OVERT ACT EXPLAINED

Now, of course, we all know about Hyde Park in London. We all know that an Englishman can say what he thinks about the Government, the nobility, or things in general. If worth printing, the newspapers will use it. Now, understand me, when I talk about liberty of speech, I believe that a man should blow off his steam and say what he pleases and advocate general violence if he wants to. If any man advocates violence to the extent of really causing violence, or commits violence, or commits an overt act or advocates a specific overt act, then, of course, the laws of the present time meet the situation and that man can be put in jail. A man can advocate the "overthrow" of monarchies, or the "overthrow" of a republican form of government, or any other form of government. The Government of the United States is in no danger now. It will be, if suppressive and oppressive laws are enacted.

These and similar ones in States, teachers' oath bills, and the like have certain fundamental similarities. It is that we will make people patriotic by law and solve economic problems by the use of mass force and violence by the Government. But fair-minded Americans know that if people have the right of full public discussion that they have hope at least of settling their problems.

SEDITION BILLS WOULD GET OUR PALS OF THE LIBERTY LEAGUE IN JAIL—OH!

Let us discuss the Liberty League again. As much as I dislike what they say, I would not in any way approve of limiting their full freedom of speech, propaganda, and misrepresentation. They issued a pamphlet not long ago comparing the President to King George III, and told of events leading to the Revolution which they carefully likened to those of today. According to the military disaffection bill and the Kramer bill, they are guilty of violating both of them—one causing disaffection by slandering the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy and the other by advocating overthrow of the Government. This seems like stretching the point; but according to decisions of the Sedition Act during the war, and interpretation of statements made by proponents of the bills, this Liberty League pamphlet would land them all in jail. In the statement they make insidious suggestions of violence and disorder and disrespect for the Commander in Chief of the Army. In other words, this group, pea in a pod with the chamber of commerce, always yammering about communism, have adopted what they say is the policy of Communists—that is, what amounts to advocacy of violence. I am in favor of protecting the Liberty League in this right of free speech and the newspapers in their right to print it. The result may be that the Liberty League will be exposed, and they may also expose a few fallacies of government; they may show me up, or may conceivably find something wrong with my party. In any event, if 5 or 10 percent of what they say is true, it's worth it; if it's all false, it will do no harm. I favor protecting that organization and all others in what they think is most pious, statesmanlike wisdom, and what I think is selfish, wicked, and villainous talk. And they have the same right as to me, and my party. We both have the same country and Government, and should both have a right to criticize them according to our own lights and opinions.

MISCONCEPTIONS OF SUPREME COURT—LET'S SPEAK FREELY ABOUT IT

Now let us take another serious problem of the whole United States—the A. A. A. decision. It is necessary to have a full and free discussion at the present of the A. A. A. decision. Why? Because the welfare of the Nation depends upon it, and because it involves the Supreme Court of the United States. Why does the Supreme Court necessarily have to be discussed by everybody in the United States? The reason is that there are fundamental misconceptions of the Supreme Court, and only through our courts, or our judiciary, the executive department, and the legislative departments, are we to have a fair Government. Included in the fundamental misconceptions that have arisen about the Supreme Court is the idea that the judges have an actual or expressed or written right to declare a law unconstitutional. And everyone knows that, as far as the Constitution is concerned, there is nothing in the Constitution which says they have such a right. But the people believe the Court has such a right. This, of course, is an expression of my own opinion—but read the Constitution.

In discussing the Supreme Court I am exercising my freedom of speech, not intending to deliver an address on the Constitution, but simply as to the particular phases under the freedom of speech. By a build-up of tradition the Supreme Court has assumed the right of declaring acts of Congress unconstitutional, and I am frank to say that I would approve the Supreme Court making a declaration of the nullity of any act we may enact as a Congress which would violate, for instance, this right of freedom of speech for which I speak. Then my Liberty Leaguers say: "But suppose Congress violates a property right?" That, I admit, is a serious question; but I am trying to mention, in passing, these thoughts. The English "Constitution" is not a written instrument like ours, but by precedent, opinion, and immemorial custom it actually does exist and is never changed except by the long, slow construction of public opinion based on the wisdom of experience; and in that way England gradually changes her fundamental laws. Our Constitution is for the general welfare; and it would seem to me that eventually precedent should show that acts of Congress providing for the general welfare, even though we may act indiscreetly, are its sole province, since we can be voted out by the people; and that the sole province of the Supreme Court is to declare those acts void which violate specific inhibitions, such as freedom of speech, the violation of the rights of search and seizure, and so on, and that otherwise the Supreme Court is to interpret laws rather than to declare acts for the general welfare not in violation of specific inhibitions as void. It must be remembered that our Government is a government of checks and balances, and Representatives get checked every 2 years, Senators every 6 years, but the Supreme Court judges never. Your own Thomas Jefferson said: "In truth, man is not made to be trusted for life if secured to all liability to account."

I am speaking in the John Marshall Hotel. Sometime study the conflict of Marshall and Jefferson; it is not settled yet. Without going into the details, I am for Jefferson on his opinion in that conflict.

At any rate, the Constitution and the Supreme Court should receive the fullest discussion throughout the entire United States of America so the people can understand their own institutions. One of the things that the press can do is to inform the American people that the nine men who compose it are human beings, and the Constitution was written by human beings. This would be a great service for the newspapers to perform—give full, freely expressed ideas and information on the Supreme Court, the Constitution, and Congress.

This full discussion of our institutions may save the Government from eventual destruction, or destruction sooner than we think.

OATHS DO NOT CHANGE ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

Now, let us talk about the matter of teachers' oaths and oaths in general. I don't believe that an oath ever changed any man's attitude. Consider the Revolution. George Washington, Benedict Arnold, Jefferson, all the rest of them, took oaths to the King of England. When they found conditions intolerable they broke those oaths (if we want to express ourselves brutally) and revolted with force and violence against the King of England. Benedict Arnold went a step further. He didn't like the Revolution, so he double-crossed all his friends and went back to the King. Of course, he is not respected by any American and by practically no Englishmen. That's because, after having broken his oath once, he broke it again and double-crossed his friends. He is not respected today, not because he broke his oath but because he did not fight for the principles and ideals for which he revolted in the first place.

Gen. Robert E. Lee, Commodore Matthew Maury, Stonewall Jackson, my two grandfathers, and the grandfathers of most of the people in this audience took oaths to support the Constitution of the United States. When conditions appeared to them to be intolerable they revolted against the Government of the United States. I have in my possession the pardon of my Virginia grandfather from the President, Andrew Johnson, for rebellion. If we should look at this in a very cold-blooded way and in a realistic way, we might say that Robert E. Lee accepted appointment to the Military Academy when he was 17 years of age, and my good cousin, after whom I was named, Matthew Fontaine Maury, accepted appointment to the Naval Academy when he was 18 years of age—and after they both stayed on the pay roll of the Government of the United States for some 40 years they revolted against that Government.

That's a nasty way of saying it; but, of course, we must realize that those are the actual facts. They were called rebels by the northerners. But these men are rightfully the most respected men in the memory of Richmond, and both are universally respected and admired over the Nation. The point is that oaths make no difference whatsoever. Man must follow his own conscience. There is not a man south of the Mason-Dixon's line who would cast any slur upon the officers or the soldiers of the Confederacy. Neither would anybody north of the Mason-Dixon's line—everybody knows that it was a war of principles. Oaths could not have prevented the Civil War. Full and enlightened freedom of discussion and a settlement of the troubles may have done so; but suppression by oaths, gag bills, and a restriction of the press, never. In our troubles ahead let us realize this, and we may save ourselves violence, misery, poverty, and disorder.

So what will be effective? What should we do? Correct the abuses by telling the truth. In this the newspapers have a positive duty. If the newspapers tell the full truth and expose chicanery and fraud, our economic problems will be settled—and oaths and force against our citizens won't appear necessary, for our people will be satisfied.

REVOLUTION OR WAR WOULD UTTERLY DESTROY US

Now, what about liberty of the press and its influence on war or possible disorder or revolution today? We all know that it would be the utter end of civilization if this country should have any bloody revolution or war. How can we avert, ordinarily, revolution, violence, and war? I think I have already shown that the way we can do it is by the utmost full freedom of discussion. We know that if we had a revolution or severe interior disorder in this country today it would destroy the country. In the Civil War we had an agricultural population, and when the armies marched back and forth it didn't destroy great cities as it would now. This very city of Richmond was burned; but Richmond grew up again because of the predominating agricultural population of Virginia, and such was true of other Southern cities. But suppose a revolution should come today. What would happen to the cities of New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, even Richmond, and cities of the size in which I live, like San Antonio, Tex.?

Lines of communication would be broken. Telegraph wires would go down. Highways and railways would be blocked. Foodstuffs could not come to the cities. People would have no work; they would have no way of living; factories would stop; water supplies would be cut off, people would freeze, starve, and die. Disease would wipe out human lives by the hundreds of thousands and millions. And so one of the desperate things that faces the people today is to make it so that we must not have violence in the United States of America, nor in the world, if we can keep from it. And the way to stop violence is by the widespread dissemination of the truth. And if we are to stay out of war, the people must understand the subject.

If the newspapers print the news and the people are allowed to say all they think about world war, about economic conditions, labor, and capital, about any and all the questions of today, then we know that out of the maze of sense and nonsense, out of the maze of misconceptions, foolish, and sensible ideas the truth will emerge triumphant, and we can save our own lives and that of our institutions.

Now it is important for us to understand in conclusion one point: That we cannot give up our liberties, nor deny them to others, in order to protect our liberties. For instance, people say: "Why give Communists and Fascists the right of free speech when they don't have it in Russia and Italy." I answer: "Why turn Communist or Fascist in order to disprove those theories?" Likewise I say the United States of America is a free country. Some others are not. Let us not turn Fascist or Communist and deny freedom of press and speech to stop fascism and communism. We went to war to end war, and it didn't work. We have more wars and danger of wars than ever before. So let's don't go Fascist and Communist to end fascism and communism; let us maintain and nourish democracy and freedom. Whenever our Government needs force we have it all ready, and I favor using it when necessary and when an overt act is committed.

Gentlemen, let me sum it up. There is no "red" menace—tell the people about it. The members of the Supreme Court are human beings and the Constitution is a human document; let the people know that, too. Criticize day in and day out; criticize the President, your own Congressman, and your Texas Congressman; print the news impartially; all of it for which you have space. In this way we may get a little happiness out of life, and guarantee the perpetuity of our institutions, our lives, and our property.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, we have a rather urgent program for the week. I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday may be dispensed with this week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to dispose of bills on the Consent Calendar first. Members having bills on the calendar are here for this purpose. Many of them have other appointments later in the day. Usually we can conclude the call of the calendar in 2 hours. After that these gentlemen who wish to address the House may do so.

Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to object, but I think we should dispose of bills on the calendar first.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I yield.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Will the gentleman object if I modify my request and ask for but 2 minutes?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I hate to object. I will not object to that.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will not object provided I may be granted 10 additional minutes to the 5 granted me last Friday, after the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN] has finished.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the request; it is a matter the House must decide.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONAGHAN. May I ask if the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN] is to be made conditional or predicated upon favorable action on the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

The SPEAKER. No. The Chair will put first the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN] and then the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAVERICK. The request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] was not objected to. Did he object to his own request?

Mr. RICH. No one objected to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN] speaking.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not put the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] until the House first acts on the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN]. We cannot make the requests contingent.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want, if possible, to go ahead with the regular program today. In making this suggestion, I am advised that probably the Consent Calendar will be concluded in a couple of hours, and if it meets with the approval of the Speaker, the House might remain in session a little while if these gentlemen want to make short speeches; but I think we ought first to go ahead with the Consent Calendar, because the Members are here for this purpose.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

MARGARET THOMKIN

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Margaret Thomkin, H. R. 15219, for the relief of Margaret Thomkin, Seventieth Congress, second session, no adverse report having been made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute in order to propound a unanimous-consent request, with a view to expediting the Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, when bills on the Consent Calendar were called 2 weeks ago I objected to certain Indian bills and stated I would get reports from the Comptroller General. I have those reports before me.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bills on the Consent Calendar, No. 351 (H. R. 5442), a bill authorizing an appropriation to carry out the provisions of section 26 of the agreement with the Muskogee or Creek Tribe of Indians, approved March 1, 1901; No. 357 (H. R. 6818), a bill conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claim which the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes; No. 358 (H. R. 6740), a bill to amend an act approved December 17, 1928, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment thereon in claims which the Winnebago Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes"; No. 387 (S. 2510), an act authorizing the western bands of the Shoshone Tribe of Indians, as defined herein, to sue in the Court of Claims; No. 422 (H. R. 5167), a bill to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the attorney general of the State of California to bring suit in the Court of Claims on behalf of the Indians of California", approved May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 602), by amending certain portions of sections 3 and 6 thereof; and No. 493 (S. 2523), an act authorizing payment to the San Carlos Apache Tribe of Indians for the lands ceded by them in the agreement of February 25, 1896, ratified by the act of June 10, 1896, be passed over without prejudice, and that I may be permitted to extend my remarks in the RECORD below the calling of the bills and insert therein letters which I have received from the Comptroller General. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs has no objection to my request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman have in mind one of my bills?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes; I certainly have.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

IMMEDIATE PAYMENT OF ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATE, IMPROPERLY CALLED "BONUS" CERTIFICATE

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bonus in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, one of the major issues before the Congress is the question of the immediate payment of the so-called "soldiers' bonus." There is so much misunderstanding, so much misconception about the bonus that I should lige to explain the facts concerning this very important issue.

At the very outset I want to take exception to the term "bonus". The so-called "soldiers' bonus" is not a bonus at all. It is not a handout. It is a payment for services rendered. Here are the facts:

THE PAY OF SOLDIERS DURING THE WORLD WAR

On April 6, 1917, the United States entered the World War. From that day until his discharge, every enlisted private received a dollar a day—$30 a month—for service at home and $1.10 a day—$33 a month—for service overseas. From these $30 or $33 a month, the soldiers had to pay for repair of clothing and shoes, for laundry, and for many other incidental expenses.

An average of $6.60 a month was deducted from his pay for insurance, and of $15 for his dependents, if he had any. If you add these sums, you will see that when pay day came around, the enlisted man found very little left in his pay envelope.

If you remember the extremely high salaries and wages which were paid in the United States during the war, you will agree that the pay of our enlisted soldiers was incredibly low. It was much lower than the lowest wages paid to unskilled laborers at that time. Therefore, the Congress determined to make an adjustment of the money paid to the soldiers during the war. This was done under the Adjusted Compensation Act of 1924, and certificates were issued to each soldier which were called adjusted-service certificates. These are the certificates with whose payment we are now concerned.

COMPUTATION OF BACK PAY DUE THE SOLDIERS

Let me show you how the amount of each adjusted-service certificate, improperly called a bonus certificate, was arrived at. In 1924, after careful consideration, the Congress found that there was due in back pay to each veteran who had been in the military or naval forces of the United States between April 6, 1917, and July 1, 1919, for back pay $1.25 for each day of overseas service and $1 for each day of home service, with certain limitations as to the maximum amount allowed.

THE MONEY IS 17 YEARS OVERDUE

Now, let us take an average case—the case of a soldier who served 210 days at home and 200 days overseas. For the 210 days at home the veteran was held to be entitled to $210 for back pay, and for the 200 days overseas he was entitled to $1.25 per day, or a total of $250. For his entire period of service that veteran would thus be entitled to $210 plus $250, of a total of $460. From that sum was deducted $60, which was paid to the soldier at the time of his discharge, leaving a net balance of $400. These $400 were actually due the veteran at the time of his discharge on or before July 1919, and should have been paid to him at that time and not today, 17 years later. In 1924 Congress by solemn act admitted that these sums were due to the veteran not as a bonus or a gratuity but as back pay.

This amount was due in 1919. It was admittedly due, but instead of paying it, even in 1924 Congress issued a certificate for it and provided that it should be paid in 1945.

LESS THAN THE LEGAL INTEREST RATE

The amount of the certificate was arrived at in the following way: Taking the average case, which I discussed a few moments ago, we find that the back pay, due in 1919, at the time of discharge was $400. To that $400 was added, under the act of Congress of 1924, 25 percent—$100—as compensation to the veteran for compelling him to wait from the armistice until 1924, instead of paying him in 1919, when it was due. As a matter of fact, figuring at the rate of interest of 6 percent per annum, the veteran should have been paid on the $400 due him, interest amounting to $120. So you see that in May 1924, when the World War Adjusted Compensation Act was passed, there was actually due to the veteran, in the average case, $520, which should have been paid at the time of the passage of that act. Instead of taking this $520 as a basis, the Congress determined that the basic amount should be fixed at only $500.

But again, even this $500 was not paid to the veteran in cash, although it was admitted that he was entitled to it and that it was due. Instead of receiving cash the veteran was given a so-called adjusted-service certificate, payable in 20 years from its date, but in no case before January 1, 1945. The average amount of that certificate was $1,000, and it was arrived at in this way: It was calculated that the $500 admittedly due the veteran would purchase a paid-up endowment insurance policy, payable in 20 years, or in 1945, of $1,000, assuming that the money was invested at a rate of interest of 4 percent.

THE CERTIFICATE IS NOT A BONUS BUT OVERDUE PAY

It is therefore clear to everyone who has looked up the facts that the adjusted-service certificate was not a bonus or gratuity given to the veteran, but was pay which was due him—indeed, which was long overdue. The term "bonus" should never have been applied to the certificate.

The money should have been paid at the time of the discharge of the veteran from active service. It should have been paid to him in 1924, when the act was passed by Congress.

Instead of giving the veteran what was due him in cash, the Government gave him an insurance certificate.

THE TOTAL AMOUNT OF THE CERTIFICATE IS DUE TODAY AND NOT IN 1945

I have just shown that on a $1,000 certificate the sum of $400 was due at the time of the discharge of the veteran from active military service in 1919. If you add to that $400 6-percent interest, compounded annually, you will find that it amounts to $1,000 in October 1931. So that the total amount of the certificate was actually due in October 1931, about 4½ years ago. Let me repeat, the face value of the adjusted-service certificate was really due in October 1931 and not in 1945.

OTHERS RECEIVED ADJUSTMENT OF THEIR WAR CONTRACT

The railroads obtained an adjustment of their war claims against the Federal Government amounting to some $2,000,000,000; the war contractors received adjustments of their claims from the Federal Government to the extent of $3,000,000,000.

Adjustment in their pay was made to all civil employees of the Federal Government.

Is there anyone among my listeners who would want to deny a fair adjustment to the soldiers? Is there anyone willing to say that the soldiers should be denied payment of their back pay, pay which is long overdue? Is it wrong for the Congress to right an injustice which has existed since 1919, when these soldiers were discharged from military service? Is it improper for the Congress to determine that, at last, the soldiers should be paid the money which has been due them for the last 17 years?

I cannot believe that any fair-minded man who knows the facts would criticize the Congress for deciding that this debt, long overdue, should at last be paid. Surely there is no one who would say that the soldiers, the men who suffered in body and spirit, should not receive fair treatment at the hands of their Government.

I VOTED FOR IMMEDIATE PAYMENT OF CERTIFICATES IN CASH

I voted for payment of the adjusted-service certificates because such payment is just and fair. There is no need to speak about those soldiers who died, and those who were injured and wounded. There is no need to speak about the days which they spent in mudholes and on the battlefields. There is no need to arouse sentiment and sympathy for the payment of these certificates. It should be sufficient to show, as I have shown by facts and figures, that this money is due—indeed, overdue.

IS AIR TRAVEL SAFE?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on a resolution which I am now introducing to provide for a certain investigation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objecton.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, the latest tragic air disaster has raised many grave questions in the minds of the American people. Foremost among these is not only the immediate cause of this specific disaster, but also the question of the extent of the precautions which are exercised both by air transportation companies and the United States Department of Commerce, in trying to avoid such accidents.

I feel that a public need will be met if this question is answered to the satisfaction of the American people, and for this purpose I introduced today in the House, and wish to call to the attention of my colleagues House Resolution 399.

The chief provisions of the resolution are:

First. The appointment by the Speaker of the House of a committee of seven members, which is directed to study and investigate the causes of recent disasters in the transportation by aircraft of passengers or property and the safety of the equipment of companies engaged in interstate or foreign air commerce.

Second. To sit and act in the District of Columbia or elsewhere in the United States, to hold such hearings, to employ such experts, counsel, and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to request by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to secure such data and any and all other information, to have such printing and binding done as it deems necessary; an oath or affirmation may be administered by any member of the committee or subcommittee.

Third. To report within 45 days after its appointment and to recommend such legislation or measures as the committee may deem necessary or appropriate to assure safety and security to passengers and crews in the transportation by aircraft of persons or property in interstate or foreign air commerce.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to add here that my resolution in no sense presupposes a lack of responsibility on the part of airline transportation companies, nor do I maintain that they are to be blamed for the recent air tragedies. That is something which we must determine, and if such accidents were beyond human control, it will, I am sure, be to the benefit of the companies themselves to have that fact established. I have no desire to hinder the development of an important and growing branch of transportation. As a matter of fact, I use airplanes for travel very regularly, and have done so for a number of years.

However, this industry will be hindered in its development if the public has doubts as to its efficiency and its provisions. Only public hearings by a congressional committee which will bring out all the facts can restore public confidence and lead to such legislation, as may appear to be necessary.

The resolution to investigate these air disasters deserves the favorable consideration of the House.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, on the 3d of January the Chair laid before the House a document, House Document No. 356, which was a report of the board of directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority. The document was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered printed. That was 17 days ago, but the document has not yet appeared in the document room. Would it be in order for me to now move that the Public Printer be requested to advise the House why the printing has not been completed and when we may expect the report to be submitted to the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that such a motion would be in order at this time, because it is not a privileged motion. The Chair suggests that the gentleman take the matter up with the Joint Committee on Printing. The printing of this document will be carried out as ordered by the House.

This is unanimous-consent day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

CONSENT CALENDAR

IRRIGATION CHANNEL BETWEEN CLEAR LAKE AND LOST RIVER (CALIF.)

The Clerk called the first bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 6773, to deepen the irrigation channel between Clear Lake and Lost River, in the State of California, and for other purposes.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

RICHMOND NATIONAL BATTLEFIELD PARK (VA.)

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1415, to provide for the establishment of the Richmond National Battlefield Park in the State of Virginia, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when title to all such lands, structures, and other property in the military battlefield area or areas in the city of Richmond, Va., or within 5 miles of the city limits of said city or within 5 miles of the boundary of the present Richmond Battlefield State Park, as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Interior in the exercise of his discretion as necessary or desirable for national battlefield park purposes, shall have been vested in the United States, such area or areas shall be, and they are hereby, established, dedicated, and set apart as a public park for the benefit and inspiration of the people and shall be known as the Richmond National Battlefield Park: Provided, That such area or areas shall include, at least, the Richmond Battlefield Parks now belonging to the State of Virginia.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept in behalf of the United States donations of lands, interest in lands, buildings, structures, and other property within the boundaries of the said park as herein authorized and donations of funds for the purchase and/or maintenance thereof, the title and evidence of title to lands purchased or otherwise acquired to be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That he may acquire on behalf of the United States out of any donated funds, by purchase at prices deemed by him reasonable, or by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, such tracts of land within the said national battlefield park as may be necessary for the completion thereof.

SEC. 3. The administration, protection, and development of the aforesaid national battlefield park shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes", as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COLONIAL NATIONAL MONUMENT (VA.)

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5722, to provide for the addition or additions of certain lands to the Colonial National Monument in the State of Virginia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say that two bills on the Consent Calendar, Nos. 303 and 306, have been passed over without prejudice in times gone by. May I ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] if this is his bill?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

THE HOMESTEAD NATIONAL MONUMENT OF AMERICA IN GAGE COUNTY, NEBR.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1307, to establish the Homestead National Monument of America in Gage County, Nebr.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill has been passed over a time or two. I have no objection to this particular bill, but the chairman of the committee is not present at this particular time, and in view of the fact that this bill involves the expenditure of money, I think we ought to be rather careful. We do not want to be arbitrary about these bills, however.

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill does not call for the appropriation of money, being simply an authorization. It is not a monument in the sense of the average statement concerning monuments. This is to memorialize the spirit of the Homestead Act. It is to perpetuate the memory of the heroism, privation, and sacrifice of the early homesteaders who contributed so much to the winning of the West. It is sponsored by the school children of the agricultural Middle West as well as various teachers' organizations, the D. A. R., the various veterans' organizations, and seeks to memorialize the spirit in a concrete and living way of the early pioneers. That is what we need today. We need to get back to that early spirit that could face and overcome hardship and privation. We need such a living object lesson today.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Would the gentleman object to having this bill passed over without prejudice?

Mr. LUCKEY. That will be all right.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

TWENTY-FIRST AMENDMENT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8368, to enforce the twenty-first amendment.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

SARATOGA NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 89, to provide for the creation of the Saratoga National Historical Park in the State of New York, and for other purposes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice as it is in the same class as the other bills that were passed over.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF THE BANKRUPTCY ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1425, to amend section 80 of chapter 9 of an act to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898.

Mr. MILLER and Mr. WOLCOTT rose.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, this bill only affects one or two drainage districts in South Carolina. I think the bill passed in the House on January 6 covers this situation and unless some Member from South Carolina wants to ask for its present consideration, I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

LAW CLERKS FOR JUDGES OF DISTRICT COURTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6376, to amend section 118 of the Judicial Code to provide for the appointment of law clerks to United States district court judges.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection, so that we may explain the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I withhold the objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CELLER. I may say to the gentleman it is proposed to amend the bill to make it conform with the bill which passed the Senate, which provides there can be no assistant or secretary assigned to a district judge unless and until approval has been obtained from the judicial council. The judicial council is composed of the Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court and the senior circuit judge of each circuit; in other words, no judge will be allotted a clerk unless and until Chief Justice Hughes, for example, together with the senior circuit judge of one of the 10 circuits, approves such allotments. I do not think we need worry about any indiscriminate appointments of secretaries or clerks to judges. Certainly Justice Hughes and the senior circuit judges would weigh carefully the needs of each district judge.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman tell the House what the duties of these new clerks will be?

Mr. CELLER. The new clerks would look up the law, prepare memoranda, and do research work for the district judges where there is an avalanche of business, as, for example, in our district of Brooklyn, the eastern district, the adjoining southern district of New York, and in some of the districts in the other large and congested areas. There has been presented to those courts a tremendous number of what are known as reorganization proceedings under section 77B of the Bankruptcy Act. These proceedings entail a tremendous amount of work, because under the statute the judge is a sort of administrative officer in all of these reorganization proceedings, and in some of them almost all the time of the judge is taken up with this work. Little or no time is given the judge for necessary examination of the many cases cited—for example, in the briefs submitted. There are all kinds of ramifications, and it is utterly impossible for the judge also to take care of a criminal term, an equity term, a common-law calendar, and hear and determine patent and admiralty litigation without help of this sort. Decisions are held up for long periods because judges cannot find time to digest the legal decisions cited and the data and material submitted by counsel. In almost every State I know of there has always been allotted to a judge a secretary to enable the judge to get data at first hand and do the research which is so essential to a proper decision in any cumbersome or intricate case. Many bar associations approve this bill, as does the judiciary generally.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think some of the Members may have amendments to offer, and I may have an amendment myself to suggest, and for this reason I would like to go into it further. I wonder if the gentleman would have any objection to passing the bill over for today without prejudice and I shall go into the matter further and possibly many objections will be removed. My reason for objecting to the bill as it now stands is the fact that it would be possible to create a new office for every district court in the United States.

Mr. CELLER. No; that would not be the case, because you have to get the consent of the judicial counsel. It would not create a new job for each judge. That is unthinkable. Most of the judges need no secretary, but many do. This bill creates no new offices without the consent of the council.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Well, we might create them.

Mr. CELLER. That is possible but hardly probable.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It would be rather difficult for the judicial council to turn down the application of any district judge for a law clerk if he wanted one. It seems to me this new clerk will be performing duties which should be performed by the attorneys for the litigants in preparing and submitting their briefs and also work which is now being done by the clerk of the court. So I do not see any particular need for such appointments, but I understand that some Members do see a need for these clerks, and I shall be very pleased to go into the matter further if the gentleman will consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill has already been passed over twice. The gentleman certainly has had all necessary time to prepare any amendments he may wish to offer. I may say to the gentleman there is very great need for this legislation. Less than a month ago I had a talk with one of our Federal judges in Minnesota, who stated that unless they were given assistance of this kind we would have to create an additional judgeship for our State.

They are gradually getting behind. Contrary to the popular belief, the work of the Federal courts is becoming heavier and heavier.

We had an idea that when prohibition was repealed it would materially lighten the work of the Federal courts; but under the New Deal, if I may use that term, the work of the courts is increasing.

I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point, so that we may bring the matter up and dispose of it now. It should be passed.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that in the course of the hearings held in New York we had all of the eight judges in the State before us on the question of what constructive work we could do for their relief. As I recall, the Federal judges were unanimous in the belief that the law clerks would not relieve it. They were unanimous in their belief that the heavy work was caused by the amendments to the Bankruptcy Act. They said that the masters and referees have no power to determine. They have the power to hear but no power to determine and dispose. They thought it would be infinitely better to amend section 77 (b) of the Bankruptcy Act and give masters the power to determine, and that would make it function better than to have a law clerk.

I sympathize with what the gentleman wants to do, but I do not believe that this is the way to do it.

Mr. CELLER. We have before the committee the advisability of the suggestion that the gentleman makes, that the masters and referees be given power, not only to hear but to determine.

Mr. MILLER. I want to say to the gentleman, and I will be perfectly frank with him, that I was opposed to the bill when it was introduced, but upon a rather thorough investigation, as members of that committee will bear me out, I have come to the conclusion that there seems to be a necessity for it, not only in the cities but the so-called rural parts of the country.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think we should approach this subject carefully, and for that reason I wish for a little more time. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AGREEMENT WITH MUSKOGEE TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5442) authorizing an appropriation to carry out the provisions of section 26 of the agreement with the Muskogee or Creek Tribe of Indians, approved March 1, 1901.

The SPEAKER. This bill requires three objectors.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. When this bill was called 2 weeks ago I objected to it and stated that I was getting a report from the Comptroller General. The author of the bill at that time, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS], said that he would be very glad to get the report from the Comptroller General. I have the report this morning. I ask unanimous consent to print it in the RECORD at this point. As far as I am concerned, I am willing to go to bat on this proposition right now, and I can convince the House of Representatives that this is a raid on the Treasury. I guarantee that you will have a roll call on the bill. I ask that the bill go over without prejudice so as to give the gentleman from Oklahoma an opportunity to read the Comptroller's letter. It not only shows that these Indians have been paid, but the Government also paid the attorneys about $90,000. It further shows that this very claim is before the Court of Claims, and that the Comptroller General, while he has not completed his report, has found that under section 2 of the Deficiency Act, 1935, they will be permitted to charge off gratuities. He has located nearly $800,000 in gratuities, which is more than the amount of this bill. The gentleman from Oklahoma wants to be fair. He said that he would get the Comptroller's report. I ask permission now to put the Comptroller's report in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman expect to object to the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. I am going to object to the bill.

Mr. TABER. I object.

Mr. COCHRAN. I object.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The Comptroller's report is as follows:

H. R. 5442—CALENDAR 351

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, January 16, 1936.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
Chairman, Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: There is herewith submitted a report on H. R. 5442 entitled "Authorizing an appropriation to carry out the provisions of section 26 of the agreement with the Muskogee or Creek Tribe of Indians approved March 1, 1901", which provides as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $600,000 to carry out the provisions of section 26 of the act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muskogee or Creek Tribe of Indians, approved March 1, 1901 (31 Stat. 861), and said sum shall be in payment of the balance due on the award made by the Senate of the United States in accordance with said section 26 of said act of March 1, 1901.

"SEC. 2. Upon appropriation being made and available, the Secretary of the Interior shall pay to the Loyal Creek Indians and freedmen, or their heirs, whose names appear in the list of awards made in their behalf by W. B. Hazen and F. A. Field, as commissioners on behalf of the United States to ascertain the losses of said Indians and freedmen, as provided by articles 3 and 4 of the treaty with the Creek Nation of Indians of date June 14, 1866 (14 Stat. 785), and such payment shall be made in proportion to the awards set out in said list, and such payment shall be in full settlement and satisfaction of all claims under said articles 3 and 4.

"SEC. 3. That out of the appropriation hereby authorized the Secretary of the Interior shall pay to the attorneys for said Loyal Creek Indians and freedmen who are now employed under contract with said Indians and freedmen such compensation as he may determine to be fair and reasonable for services rendered and expenses incurred by such attorneys under said contract: Provided, That such payment shall not exceed 10 percent of the amount of each individual claim presented and settled under the authority of this act; and, in addition thereto, the said Secretary shall correspondingly pay William Yarhola and Joseph Bruner for services heretofore rendered and expenses incurred in connection with these claims such compensation as he may determine to be reasonable and just, not to exceed, however, 5 percent of each separate claim presented and settled under the terms of this act."

The award of the Senate referred to in the above bill was in the amount of $1,200,000. By the act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat. 994) there was appropriated $600,000 as an award and final settlement of the Loyal Creek claim. Said amount was set up on the books of the Treasury and $592,696.65 was disbursed as cash payments to Loyal Creeks and freedmen and $90,000 as special attorneys' fees and expenses. The unexpended balance of $7,303.25 was returned to the United States Treasury as surplus by warrant no. 62, dated March 19, 1929.

Pursuant to the jurisdictional act of May 24, 1924 (43 Stat. 139), as amended by joint resolution of May 19, 1926 (44 Stat. 568), and February 19, 1929 (45 Stat. 1229), the Creek Nation of Indians filed in the Court of Claims 17 petitions alleging causes of action upon which reports have been submitted to the court by this office. The jurisdictional act, supra, contains no provision for offsetting gratuities, but since its passage there was enacted section 2 of the Second Deficiency Act for 1935 (49 Stat. 596), directing the Court of Claims to consider and to offset against any sums found due, all sums expended gratuitously by the United States for the benefit of such tribe or band of Indians who may be party plaintiffs. In compliance with request from the Attorney General dated September 6, 1935, there is now being prepared in this office a report, which, when completed, will show disbursements under gratuity appropriations during the period January 1, 1795, to June 30, 1934. The completion of this report will take approximately an additional 6 months. An examination of the work already accomplished thereon indicates that the completed report will reflect gratuity payments of approximately $750,000.

Sincerely yours,

J. R. MCCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

MONUMENT TO SPANISH COLONIAL MISSIONS, ETC.

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 211, to create a commission to study and report on the feasibility of establishing a national monument or monuments in the territory occupied by the Spanish Colonial Missions in the States of Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and California.

The SPEAKER. This bill requires three objections. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that on August 21, 1935, the House of Representatives passed bills H. R. 6734 and 6670, creating a commission to pass on these commissions, and this is a duplication. I object.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlemen withhold their objections long enough for me to make an explanation?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, this concerns the creation of a commission of Representatives and Senators for the study of the Spanish colonial era as it concerns territory in the United States of America, one of the most important parts of American history. This is not for the creation of a new bureau or administrative unit at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. It is a creation of our own. We are continuously complaining about turning everything over to the Department of the Interior and other departments. Here is a chance for Congress to do some of its own work. The States of Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, California, Louisiana, and Florida all have the memory of priceless achievements by the Spaniards in art, architecture, government, and religion, and this vitally concerns the history of the United States. It is an epoch in our history that the American people ought to know. We have established commissions on the Constitution, on George Washington, various celebrations, and everything that concerns the eastern part of the United States. This will be a healthy thing for the study of the history of the great Southwest and of the whole United States. Being controlled entirely by Representatives and Senators, we need not worry about bureaucracy. It permits an appropriation of only $15,000.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Bills H. R. 6734 and 6670, creating that commission, are Maverick bills also, and it is to do away with just such things as we are trying to do now.

Mr. MAVERICK. No; this does not establish a monument or appropriate any money for that purpose. It establishes a commission composed of Representatives and Senators who will assist in the gathering of this information, so that the House can understand it, and so the people will know the subject, and so that part of history will be preserved like any other.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. This commission is to go down there for the purpose of determining upon or ascertaining the method of preserving those landmarks?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Unless you have an architect or a structural engineer in the House or the Senate to serve on that commission, all they can do is to listen to what other architects or structural engineers can tell them, and you might as well get someone who has engineering skill right on the ground, and set forth the result in a monograph or a report. Why is not this properly within the domain of the States, properly a State function?

Mr. MAVERICK. The reason is that when the Spanish colonials came to the United States they just did not go to the State of Texas or a single State. They went all the way from the southern part of the United States, from St. Augustine to San Francisco, and it cannot be done by the State, because the Franciscan friars, or some other order, would go from some place in California all the way to Texas or Louisiana, or vice versa. The same is true of the Spanish Government officials and its military. There are documents in Spain, in Madrid and Seville, and also in Mexico City, and all over the world, and they concern all New Spain—frequently one document concerns several States in our country, and probably other parts of New Spain. It cannot be accomplished by the agency of any one State, because of the reasons outlined.

Mr. DIRKSEN. If we carry out that philosophy, we will be trying to determine what landmarks the Norsemen left out in Minnesota or what the French left in Illinois and Indiana, and we will be expanding the Federal authority to in some way take care of monuments and structures in 48 States of the Union.

Mr. MAVERICK. This is not expanding. This is only authority to act. This is cooperating with authority that we already have.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But it will probably be followed with a request for an appropriation in order to preserve these landmarks later, and therein lies the injustice.

Mr. MAVERICK. It will be a good thing to preserve the Spanish history of America, as well as English, Dutch, and French. We can pass that bridge when we come to it. Possibly we will ask for appropriations.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There is no doubt but that it will.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Does not the gentleman think we have created enough bureaus and commissions in this Congress and the last one?

Mr. MAVERICK. Well, the vague and general criticism of the creation of bureaus and commissions is not of any value. Undoubtedly we have certain administrative inefficiency, as all governments have, and it is likely that many bureaus and commissions ought to be abolished. However, I call to your attention that I have introduced a bill called the national resources board bill. If this bill is passed and this new bureau or commission, whatever you want to call it, is established, and Congress cooperates with it, it might coordinate, unify, and correct existing organizations to the extent that it would abolish some bureaus. Probably we have enough bureaus and commissions, but I suggest that you read a copy of the national resources board bill that I have introduced, and you may be for that one, even if you are not for the one I suggest for Spanish colonial history.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DONDERO, Mr. RICH, and Mr. TABER objected.

CLAIM OF KIOWA, COMANCHE, AND APACHE TRIBES OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6818, conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claim which the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to place in the RECORD a letter from the Comptroller General about these Indian claims.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

H. R. 6818—CALENDAR 357

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, January 16, 1936.

HON. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
Chairman, Committee on Expenditures for Executive Departments,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: There is herewith submitted a report on H. R. 6818, entitled "Conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claim which the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes", which provides as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States, notwithstanding the lapse of time or statutes of limitations, to hear, examine, determine, adjudicate, and render judgment in the matter of any and all claims of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians, for the purpose of compensating said tribes for the taking of lands ceded to them by treaty or treaties with the United States but taken from them by act of Congress without compliance with the terms of the treaty or treaties under which such lands were ceded to such tribes or taken without proper compensation for the value of the lands so taken, or arising under or growing out of any act of Congress in relation to Indian affairs, which claims have not heretofore been determined or adjudicated on their merits by the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court of the United States.

"SEC. 2. Any and all claims against the United States within the purview of this act shall be forever barred unless suit be instituted or petition filed as herein provided in the Court of Claims within 5 years from the date of approval of this act, and such suit shall make the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian Tribes parties plaintiff and the United States party defendant. The petition shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed to prosecute such claim or claims under contract with the said tribes approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior; and said contract shall be executed in their behalf by a committee chosen by them under the direction and approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior. Official letters, papers, documents, and records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said Indian tribes to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys of said Indian tribes.

"SEC. 3. In said suit the court shall also hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate any claims which the United States may have against said Indian tribes, but any payment which may have been made by the United States upon any claim against the United States shall not operate as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as an offset in such suit.

"SEC. 4. That, from the decision of the Court of Claims in any suit prosecuted under the authority of this act, an appeal may be taken by either party, as in other cases, to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the United States shall be allowed credit for any sum or sums, including gratuities, paid or expended for the specific benefit of said Indians, where no other tribes were involved, subsequent to the date of any law, treaty, or agreement under which the claims arise: Provided, That no expenditures made under the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. L. 984), shall be pleaded as offsets.

"SEC. 5. That upon the final determination of any suit instituted under this act, the Court of Claims shall decree such amount or amounts as it may find reasonable to be paid the attorney or attorneys so employed by said Indian tribes for the services and expenses of said attorneys rendered or incurred prior or subsequent to the date of the approval of this act: Provided, That in no case shall the aggregate amounts decreed by said Court of Claims for fees be in excess of the amount or amounts stipulated in the contract of employment, or in excess of a sum equal to 7½ percent of the amount of recovery against the United States: Provided further, That any expenses incurred by the attorney or attorneys and paid out of tribal funds shall be deducted from the amount so awarded by the court for expenses.

"SEC. 6. The Court of Claims shall have full authority by proper orders and process to bring in and make parties to such suit any or all persons deemed by it necessary or proper to the final determination of the matters in controversy.

"A copy of the petition shall in such case be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, and he, or some attorney from the Department of Justice to be designated by him, is hereby directed to appear and defend the interests of the United States in such case.

"SEC. 7. The net amount of any judgment recovered shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the said Indians, and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum and shall be thereafter subject to appropriation by Congress for the benefit of said Indians, and be prorated among entitled enrolled members of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Kiowa Apache Indians to their individual uses, including the purchase of lands and the building of homes."

The proposed bill is similar to many other jurisdictional acts, of which there have been enacted some 35. Whether any payments have been heretofore made upon claims authorized to be presented by this bill is not possible for determination at this time, in view of the indefinite and sweeping provisions of the bill. To ascertain gratuity payments to these Indians would require a complete accounting and would take approximately 1 year. Particular attention is invited to that part of section 4 of that particular bill pertaining to offsets, which reads as follows:

"* * * and the United States shall be allowed credit for any sum or sums, including gratuities, paid or expended for the specific benefit of said Indians, where no other tribes were involved, subsequent to the date of any law, treaty, or agreement under which the claims arise: Provided, That no expenditures made under the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. L. 984), shall be pleaded as offsets."

This provision, if allowed to remain in the bill, would probably have the effect of eliminating practically all disbursements under gratuity appropriations as offsets due to the fact that these Indians were affiliated with other tribes. Furthermore, the proviso is somewhat broader than the offset provisions of section 2 of the Second Deficiency Act of 1935 (49 Stat. 596). It would seem desirable that all jurisdictional acts should be subject to the same provisions for offsetting gratuities, and as section 2 of the Second Deficiency Act of 1935 was apparently enacted for, and it would seem to accomplish, that purpose, it is recommended that the portion of section 4 of the present bill quoted above be stricken out.

Sincerely yours,

J. R. McCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH, Mr. BACON, Mr. WOLCOTT, and Mr. COCHRAN objected.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Will the gentlemen withhold their objections and allow this to go over without prejudice?

Mr. RICH. Why does the gentleman not permit all these Indian bills to go over so that we can have the letter placed in the RECORD?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I am willing to do that.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is what I attempted to do, but the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] objected.

Mr. NICHOLS. I will withdraw my objection. My bill has been killed, anyway.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ROGERS]?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, we intend to object to this bill, anyway, and we might as well get it off the calendar.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. That would give us time to read the report.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will guarantee that after the Members read the report there will be more than three objectors.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER, Mr. BACON, and Mr. RICH objected.

CLAIM OF WINNEBAGO TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6740, to amend an act approved December 17, 1928, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment thereon in claims which the Winnebago Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a statement from the Comptroller General with respect to this bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

H. R. 6740—CALENDAR 358

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, January 16, 1936.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
Chairman, Committee on Expenditures for Executive Departments,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: There is herewith submitted a report on H. R. 6740, entitled "To amend an act approved December 17, 1928, entitled 'An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment thereon in claims which the Winnebago Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes'", which provides as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved December 17, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 1027), entitled 'An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment thereon in claims which the Winnebago Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes', be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

" 'That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims, notwithstanding the lapse of time nor statutes of limitations, to hear, examine, and adjudicate and render judgment in any and all legal and equitable claims arising under or growing out of any treaty or agreement between the United States and the Winnebago Tribe of Indians, or arising under or growing out of any act of Congress in relation to Indian affairs, or arising under or growing out of the misappropriation of any of the funds, lands, or property of said tribe or members thereof, or for the failure of the United States to pay said tribe, or members thereof, any money or other property due, which said Winnebago Tribe of Indians or members thereof may have against the United States, which claims have not heretofore been determined or adjudicated on their merits by the Court of Claims, or the Supreme Court of the United States.

" 'SEC. 2. Any and all claims against the United States within the purview of this act shall be forever barred unless suit or suits be instituted or petitions be filed as herein provided in the Court of Claims within 5 years from the date of the approval of this amendatory act, and such suit or suits shall make the Winnebago Tribe of Indians party plaintiff and the United States party defendant, and the plaintiff shall have the right to amend any suit heretofore or hereafter filed by it in the Court of Claims. The petitions shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys now employed to prosecute such claim or claims under contract with said Winnebago Tribe of Indians, which said contract has been executed and approved in accordance with existing law.

" 'SEC. 3. Official letters, papers, documents, and records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said Winnebago Tribe of Indians to such treaties, papers, correspondence, and records as may be required in the prosecution of any suit instituted under this act.

" 'SEC. 4. In said suit or suits the court shall hear, examine, and adjudicate any claims which the United States may have against said Winnebago Tribe of Indians, and any payment which the United States may have made to said Winnebago Tribe of Indians prior to the date of adjudication, shall not operate as an estoppel, but unless the statute authorizing the payment otherwise provides may be pleaded as an offset in such suit.

" 'SEC. 5. The Court of Claims shall have full authority by proper orders and process to bring in and make parties to any such suit any other tribe or band of Indians deemed by it necessary or proper to the final determination of the matters in controversy.

" 'SEC. 6. A copy of the petition shall, in each case, be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, and he, or some attorney from the Department of Justice to be designated by him, is hereby directed to appear and defend in the interest of the United States in each case.

" 'SEC. 7. That upon the final determination of any suit instituted under this act the Court of Claims shall decree such amount or amounts as it may find reasonable to be paid the attorney or attorneys so employed by said Winnebago Tribe of Indians for the services and expenses of said attorney or attorneys rendered or incurred prior or subsequent to the date of approval of this act: Provided, That in no case shall the aggregate amounts decreed by said Court of Claims for fees be in excess of the amount or amounts stipulated in the contract of employment, or in excess of a sum equal to 10 percent of the amount of recovery against the United States: Provided further, That actual costs necessary to be incurred by or in behalf of the plaintiff in said suit or suits as required by the rules of the Court of Claims in the prosecution of said suit or suits shall be paid out of the funds of the Winnebago Tribe of Indians in the Treasury of the United States.

" 'SEC. 8. The amount of any judgment shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians, and shall immediately be prorated to those entitled.' "

The original jurisdictional act of December 17, 1928 (45 Stat. 1027), authorized the Winnebago Indians to file claims arising out of the treaty of February 27, 1855, and the act of February 21, 1863, or any subsequent act of Congress, Executive order, or treaty, while the present bill would amend that statute and authorize the filing of claims under and growing out of any treaty or agreement between the United States and said Indians or under any act of Congress with reference to Indian affairs. The Winnebago Tribe, pursuant to the jurisdictional act of 1928, supra, filed a petition, M-421, in the Court of Claims December 3, 1931. In response to request from the Attorney General, dated December 22, 1931, there has been prepared a report on said petition showing a complete accounting under all treaties and acts of Congress pertaining to said Indians, involving disbursements aggregating $7,919,296.29, beginning with the treaty of August 11, 1827. The report also shows disbursements made by the United States for the benefit of the Winnebago Tribe under other treaty appropriations during the period January 1, 1928, to June 30, 1932, amounting to $2,359,766.03. This report is not yet in form available for distribution, and it will take approximately 2 months to make it complete.

In the interest of uniformity in the offsetting of prior gratuity payments in accordance with section 2 of the Second Deficiency Act of 1935 (49 Stat. 596), it is recommended that section 4 of the present bill be eliminated.

Sincerely yours, J. R. McCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. TABER, and Mr. BACON objected.

GEORGE WASHINGTON MEMORIAL BRIDGE PUBLIC CORPORATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8025, authorizing the George Washington Memorial Bridge Public Corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Dahlgren, Va.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the bill on the table. I do this for this reason: This identical bill was included in an omnibus bill which was passed in the last session of Congress, and it has become the law. So there is no need for the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

INSPECTION OF MOTOR VESSELS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2001, to amend section 4426 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of Congress approved May 16, 1906.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF SUWANNEE RIVER, FLA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8300, to authorize a preliminary examination of Suwannee River in the State of Florida, from Florida-Georgia State line to the Gulf of Mexico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask what expense is incident to this survey, if any?

Mr. GREEN. I should like to say that it is only a preliminary examination, and it is expected that very little, if any, expense will be attached to it. It has the approval of the Department, the Board of Army Engineers, and the Committee on Flood Control.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman says it has the approval of these organizations. Does that mean that it has the passive approval or are they actively interested in it?

Mr. GREEN. It is only a matter of preliminary examination.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does the gentleman mean it has just the passive approval of those organizations or are they actively interested in its passage?

Mr. GREEN. They have approved it and have no objection to its passage.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Florida if this is connected in any manner with the canal which they propose building across the State of Florida?

Mr. GREEN. No; it is not. It is only a matter of flood control in the Suwannee River Valley.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of Suwannee River in the State of Florida, from the Florida-Georgia State line to the Gulf of Mexico, with a view to the control of its floods in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRAVEL TO AND WITHIN THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5844, to encourage travel to and within the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. McLEAN, Mr. RICH, and Mr. WOLCOTT objected.

NONQUOTA IMMIGRATION VISAS

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 236, to suspend issuance of nonquota immigration visas to persons born in the Republic of Mexico, to suspend issuance of all nonpreference quota immigration visas, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HAMLIN, Mrs. O'DAY, and Mr. PIERCE objected.

DEPORTATION OF CERTAIN ALIEN SEAMEN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5380, to provide for the deportation of certain alien seamen, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HAMLIN, Mr. PIERCE, Mrs. KAHN, and Mrs. O'DAY objected.

WESTERN BANDS OF THE SHOSHONE INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2510, authorizing the Western Bands of the Shoshone Tribe of Indians to sue in the Court of Claims.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this is another Indian claim. I ask unanimous consent that a letter I have here be placed in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

S. 2510—CALENDAR 387

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, January 16, 1936.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
Chairman, Committee on Expenditures for Executive Departments,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: There is herewith submitted a report on S. 2510 entitled "Authorizing the Western Bands of the Shoshone Tribe of Indians to sue in the Court of Claims", which provides as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and the same is hereby, conferred on the United States Court of Claims, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, anything in the Judicial Code of the United States and amendments thereto to the contrary notwithstanding, regardless of the lapse of time and the statute of limitations; to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment for such net amount as may be found due on all legal and equitable claims of the Western Bands of the Shoshone Nation of Indians and the court shall determine as near as may be the boundaries and acreage of the lands described in article 5, under the treaty of October 1, 1863 (18 Stat. L. 689), after deducting the aggregate of any and all payments or expenditures for the benefit of said Indians, including gratuities, between June 26, 1866, and the date of filing petition in the court: Provided, That no expenditures for the benefit of these Indians made out of appropriations authorized by the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. L. 984), shall be considered as offsets.

"SEC. 2. The claims of the said Indians under the provisions of this act shall be presented by petition or petitions setting out fully and distinctly all claims of the Western Shoshone Indians against the United States within 5 years after the passage of this act, or shall be thereafter forever barred. The petition or petitions may be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by said Indians under contract executed in accordance with existing law. The departments of the Government shall give access to the attorneys so employed to the records pertaining to said Indians on file therein.

"SEC. 3. The net proceeds of any judgment recovered shall be placed on deposit in the Treasury to the credit of said Indians at 4-percent interest per annum, and shall be thereafter subject to appropriation by Congress for the benefit of said Indians, including the purchase of lands and building of homes, and no part of said judgment shall be paid out in per-capita payments to said Indians: Provided, That the court, in rendering judgment, shall determine and set apart a reasonable fee for and to the attorney or attorneys of said Indians employed in the prosecution of said claims, not to exceed 10 percent of such judgment, if any, together with all reasonable and proper expenses incurred by the said attorney or attorneys in the prosecution of said claim."

The Shoshone Nation of Indians was divided into four bands—the Eastern, the Goship, the Northwestern, and the Western. A jurisdictional act for the Eastern Band was enacted March 3, 1927 (44 Stat. 1349); and one for the Northwestern Band February 28, 1929 (45 Stat. 1407). Petitions have been filed under these two statutes, and reports thereon have been made to the Department of Justice. In connection with the report on the Northwestern Band there was incorporated disbursements aggregating $1,319,-720.85, made for the benefit of the Western Shoshone Agency during the period July 1, 1878, to June 30, 1931. These disbursements were included due to the fact that a part of the Northwestern Band was removed to and located upon the Western Shoshone Reservation, and thereafter the identity of the Northwestern Band was lost. To furnish a complete accounting of gratuity expenditures for the benefit of the Western Band would require approximately 4 months.

As section 2 of the Second Deficiency Act of 1935 (49 Stat. 596) was enacted for the purpose of authorizing the offsetting of gratuity payments and would apply to all jurisdictional acts heretofore or thereafter enacted, it is recommended in the interest of uniformity that lines 4 to 10, inclusive, of section 1, page 2, of the bill be eliminated.

Sincerely yours,

J. R. McCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. TABER, Mr. BACON, and Mr. WADSWORTH objected.

PALA BAND OF MISSION INDIANS, CALIFORNIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8252, to reimpose and extend the trust period on lands reserved for the Pala Band of Mission Indians, California.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish somebody would explain the bill. If no one is here to explain the bill, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

POST-OFFICE AND COURTHOUSE BUILDING, RUTLAND, VT.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 37, authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to settle and adjust the claims of subcontractors and materialmen for material and labor furnished in the construction of a post-office and courthouse building at Rutland, Vt.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE BETWEEN CEDAR POINT AND DAUPHIN ISLAND, ALA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8768, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a railroad bridge and/or a toll bridge across the water between the mainland at or near Cedar Point and Dauphin Island, Ala.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar Senate bill (S. 3131) will be substituted for the House bill.

There being no objection the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge and causeway between the mainland, at or near Cedar Point, and Dauphin Island, Ala., heretofore authorized to be built by Dauphin Island Railway & Harbor Co., its successors and assigns (Mobile County, Ala., transferee), as last extended by Public Law No. 399, Seventy-second Congress, approved March 1, 1933, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from the date of approval of this act.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider and a similar House bill (H. R. 8768) were laid on the table.

FORT FREDERICA NATIONAL MONUMENT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8431, to provide for the establishment of the Fort Frederica National Monument, at St. Simon Island, Ga., and for other purposes.

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF LAWS RELATING TO THE APPOINTMENT OF POSTMASTERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2793, to amend the provisions of laws relating to appointment of postmasters.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my objection to permit the gentleman to make an explanation.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that was acted on by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. It was not introduced by any member of the committee, but it is a subject that has been before us for years. When the Republicans are in power the Democrats object to this bill; and when the Democrats are in power, of course, the Republicans object to the bill. Now, it occurs to me that in an election year if both parties were sanguine so far as the election results are concerned, we could get together and eliminate a very bad method of procedure in filling offices as terms of postmasters expire. The Post Office Department can now appoint a new postmaster only in the event of the death, resignation, or removal of the incumbent. The law does not automatically give the Department the right to appoint a successor at expiration of a term.

For every postmaster appointed in the Post Office Department his predecessor had been removed or he had resigned or he had been forced to resign. The Department has no serious objection to the present procedure. It may get rid of all the postmasters that a previous administration has named. But this bill would allow the present administration, and the succeeding administrations—and I know that you feel they might be yours—the right to make a new appointment as soon as a postmaster's term expires. It is done now except that the postmaster is called upon to resign or he is removed. This bill accomplishes nothing that is not being accomplished now, and, as I said before, however we may fight and bicker for 3 years, if both parties are confident that this is their year, why I believe it is the opportune time, and therefore the matter ought to be settled by passing this bill.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman state what the causes are that the administration is removing postmasters at the present time?

Mr. MEAD. As I understand it, they are removing these postmasters because their term has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Take a case where the term has not expired.

Mr. MEAD. That occurs so rarely in my district and in my section of the State, where I have knowledge of the matter, that the situation does not rise even to the dignity of complaint.

Mr. SNELL. I may say to the gentleman that they are not looking very far for cause at the present time, and I know of some instances where the cause of removal, which the gentleman says would not rise to the dignity of a complaint, would not be recognized by any fair-minded man.

Mr. MEAD. In my district they are not removed even for cause.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman may have influence with the present administration, but in my district they are removing them and without cause.

Mr. MEAD. If I have any influence it does not do my party any good.

Mr. SNELL. That may be true. Under the circumstances this bill makes it easier for the postmasters to be removed.

Mr. MEAD. I know of no fairer individual than our minority leader, and I think he and I can come to an agreement on this bill so that it may be passed without objection.

Mr. Speaker, if this bill is enacted into law the next Postmaster General may fill vacancies promptly at the expiration of a postmaster's term, designating his successor. The same thing may be done now except that the postmaster must be removed if he refuses to resign. It is an unusual procedure. It is not orderly government, and we ought to change it, especially this year, because next year the minority party will object to the presentation of a similar bill. As I said, we have had this matter before us for years, and every time the Republicans have been in power we have objected, yet every Republican postmaster favors this orderly procedure. Why can we not agree this year?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I think I owe the majority side of the House an explanation for my objection. I seldom object without some reason for so doing, at least in my own mind.

At the present time, when the term of a postmaster expires it is necessary with respect to first-, second-, and third-class offices to hold civil-service examinations. From these examinations an eligible list of three is created. The Democratic county committee or the State central committee makes a recommendation to the Postmaster General, who passes his recommendation on to the President, and the postmaster is appointed. If the postmaster was ipso facto out of office at the termination of his term that would allow the local committee to recommend a temporary appointment. Inasmuch as the Civil Service Commission rates experience 70 percent in these examinations, it would inevitably follow that the man or woman appointed to the temporary office would because of his or her experience always be on the eligible list. You would therefore nullify completely the effect of a civil-service examination. It is purely out of sympathy and for the purpose of maintaining the effectiveness, and I might say the integrity of the Civil Service Commission, that I object.

Mr. MEAD. I may say to the gentleman that the situation which he pictures to the House has nothing whatever to do with this measure, because today we are naming postmasters in some instances after an examination and in other cases as acting postmasters before an examination is held. The existing law which we aim to correct has nothing to do with the method of procedure the gentleman is discussing, because whether this bill passes, or whether we continue to operate under existing law, we may or may not do, according to the choice of the Department, what the gentleman states. The law at present reads that we cannot fill offices of postmasters except in the event of death, resignation, or removal. At the present time, if we want to appoint an acting postmaster and schedule the examination for 6 months later at the instance of the central committee, it may be done under present law, and it may also be done if this bill becomes a law.

Mr. WOLCOTT. But there must be some reason for removal. I understand the situation perfectly. I have had an occasion in my district where a postmaster has been removed because 3 years ago, perhaps under pressure, he contributed $2 to a political campaign.

Mr. MEAD. He should be.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am not upholding the Postmaster General in soliciting funds from postmasters. But I am trying to correct the situation by which the postmasters of this country are cracked down upon by candidates for office and compelled to make contributions to political campaigns. If the gentleman will bring in a bill here putting first-, second-, and third-class postmasters under the Civil Service, then I will be with him and go along with him, because I think it is deplorable that the post offices of this Nation are being run by political henchmen.

Mr. MEAD. I may say to the gentleman that the very bill to which he refers, to put first-, second-, and third-class postmasters under the Civil Service, is now on the calendar, and I hope he will join with me in supporting it. He and I are both for the bill, and both he and I agree again that the postmasters should not be mulcted for contributions. I, however, do recall specific statements made by Assistant Postmasters General Coleman and Glover at postmasters' meetings about 4 years ago wherein the postmasters were told if they did not get on the job and put over their districts their resignations would be welcome as soon as they could get them to Washington.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may call the gentleman's attention to the fact that that may have happened previous to March 4, 1933, but we have evidence of the fact that since that time money has been actually contributed under threat of removal of the postmaster, and this is a deplorable situation.

Mr. MEAD. The same thing has been true, perhaps, for the last 100 years and both of the bills to which I have referred would correct the situation.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to get some information on a matter affecting my district. It is understood that the fourth-class postmasters are under civil service. After charges have been made by persons of the opposite party and such charges are not sustained, the inspectors are sent back and in numerous cases they are digging up what they claim is an overcharge on the part of the postmaster in the matter of cancelation, involving something that happened 5 or 6 years ago or longer. The postmaster has no way of meeting this charge and neither has the Government any way of proving the charge with any exactness. Now, scores of postmasters of the fourth class in my district are being removed on these trumped-up charges, and I want to find out if this situation is general throughout the country.

Mr. MEAD. I may say to the gentleman that the present administration has been easily as fair as its predecessor.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. So it is no use to put these offices under civil service if methods like these are to be pursued in removing postmasters.

Mr. MEAD. I may say to the gentleman from Kentucky that the Inspection Service of the Post Office Department, when created, was supposed to be a bipartisan organization, composed of 50 percent Democrats and 50 percent Republicans. Unfortunately, when Postmaster General Brown left office it was composed of 85 percent Republicans and 15 percent Democrats. Now, whenever there is an investigation in the gentleman's district or in mine of the nature referred to, inspectors of both parties are sent into the particular office to find out what is wrong, and the result of such bipartisan investigation is sent to Washington. It was awfully hard to find enough Democratic inspectors to go around, and in many cases two Republicans were sent out on these investigations.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. It must be that only Democrats are sent to my district. This is a scheme to throw out competent Republican postmasters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

INDIAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7837, to create an Indian Claims Commission, to provide for the powers, duties, and functions thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PACKERS AND STOCKYARDS ACT, 1921

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8851, to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING AT HEMPSTEAD, N. Y.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2647, authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to settle and adjust the claims of subcontractors, material men, and laborers for material and labor furnished in the construction of a post-office building at Hempstead, N. Y.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

CLAIMS OF GRAIN ELEVATORS AND GRAIN FIRMS

The Clerk called the next resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 72, authorizing and directing the Comptroller General of the United States to certify for payment certain claims of grain elevators and grain firms to cover insurance and interest on wheat during the years 1919 and 1920 as per a certain contract authorized by the President.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point on this joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution to pay claims that are so old that there are hardly 75 Members in the House today who were here when it was first brought up. It originated in the minds of two lawyers. You have heard of the ambulance chaser. They were not ambulance chasers but elevator chasers. I have opposed the resolutions from the outset. The lawyers have had their day in court, twice in New York and once before a Federal judge in their own locality. In New York they lost their case, and in Minnesota Judge Sanborn dismissed the test case without requiring the Grain Corporation to present its side after the attorneys for these claimants had submitted their evidence.

They then came to Congress and have had a number of resolutions passed, but in each instance they were unable to get the Government to pay a penny.

Back in 1928 a resolution provided the President was to investigate and determine how much the Government owed the claimants. Two Presidents, Mr. Coolidge and Mr. Hoover, were unable to find where the Government or the Grain Corporation owed the claimants any money.

While that was a remarkable procedure, now comes a resolution unprecedented in the history of Congress, so far as I can find, instructing the Comptroller General to certify the claims for payment if an individual or corporation files an affidavit which simply proves identity. Who has ever heard of a similar proposal?

It is a raid upon the Treasury.

No one has so far been able to advise just how much is involved. The Comptroller General does not know, but what little information he has estimates the amount at over $100,000. One of the lawyers told the committee back in 1928 it was over a million. The Department of Commerce says it is over $2,500,000.

The attorneys, of course, will get not less than 10 percent, and if Congress does not limit the fee it might run up to 50 percent.

In 1928 there was a hearing before the War Claims Committee. John G. Dudley, an attorney for the Department of Commerce, formerly manager of the Washington office of the Grain Corporation, appeared. I am going to quote briefly from the hearings, page 15:

Mr. DUDLEY. I am thoroughly familiar with the basis of the claims if they have the same basis, and are the same claims that Messrs. Donahue and Simpson have been asserting in the courts of Minnesota for several years.

Mr. COHEN. In the Federal courts?

Mr. DUDLEY. Yes.

Mr. PEAVEY. Is it your opinion as a former officer of this Corporation that these claims are not in any manner either legal or moral claims against the Government and not justified?

Mr. DUDLEY. It is my firm conviction that these claims have absolutely no merit; that they possess no basis, either in law or equity.

Pages 19 and 20:

Mr. DUDLEY. So far as I am aware, there was never one of these claims presented to the United States Grain Corporation that I did not myself personally investigate. I went to the files, I found the contract, I found every transaction that took place in connection with that contract so far as that transaction was of record. I know that a large number of those claims were paid after the Grain Corporation offices were closed in the different zones, and you gentlemen doubtless know that in an organization of that magnitude you had to have zone or branch offices in different places, and we had one in Minneapolis, which is a large terminal market, one in Chicago, another in Omaha, another in San Francisco, and so forth.

Those dealings were purely commercial dealings. They were not dealings in which the United States Government was called upon by the terms of this contract to make good anything, not a single, solitary penny. Those claimants first went into the New York State court, about eight of them, and brought actions and were there defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. When?

Mr. DUDLEY. About 3 years ago, if my recollection serves me correctly. They then, I think, attempted to go into the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Why nothing was done there I am not informed. A test case was then brought within the statutory period of time, known as the Farmers Elevator Co. of Waverly, Minn. v. The United States of America, in which every point, so far as I know, that could be asserted was brought up, and that case was tried before Judge Sanborn.

Mr. COHEN. What year?

Mr. DUDLEY. 1927, in Minneapolis, in the fourth division, and Judge Sanborn dismissed the suit.

Mr. COHEN. Did he hear the evidence?

Mr. DUDLEY. He heard the evidence of the claimants. It was not necessary for the defendant to introduce any evidence. Upon motion of the defendant, supposedly the United States of America, the suit was dismissed.

Page 23:

Mr. DUDLEY. While we are on this question of claims having been filed theretofore, when this matter first came up, I made a personal investigation extending over a period of several weeks, in attempting to locate the how and the why and the wherefore of filing those claims and where they arose. If the attorneys here present have any of the records in the cases of any of these claims that are filed there, they have the affidavits of one Joseph Brill, an accountant who is supposed to have gone to the claimant's place of business and to have made an examination of his books and accounts and papers with the United States Grain Corporation to see if there was due him a certain sum on that account. It has been a great many years ago, and I never yet located Mr. Brill. I have made every effort that any man, any attorney experienced in investigating, could possibly have made, and I could not even find the existence of such an individual.

Mr. COHEN. Did you ask the attorney for that?

Mr. DUDLEY. Yes; I asked Mr. Donohue, and Mr. Donohue told me Brill was an accountant that he used to know in Chicago, that he knew him in the law school when he was going to school in Chicago, and his address is given as Mr. Donohue's personal residence in Minneapolis, Minn. I went to Chicago, and I could not find any Mr. Brill. Those are affidavits that were made in support of these claims.

Mr. COHEN. Are those the only affidavits?

Mr. DUDLEY. The only affidavit that was made. In some of the claims, the names of which I do not have before me because there are thousands of them, the claims have been paid and I have the canceled checks and receipts. In one claim sued on in New York City it was discovered after the papers were returned to the Washington office that that claim had been paid in full, and I have even got the canceled check.

Mr. Dudley testified at length. He was a competent witness because he had lived with the records for 10 years and had personally visited every zone office. He showed the Grain Corporation prepared a form when it was ready to close its records and control over elevators over 15 years ago that was for the purpose of filing claims and every claim filed was considered and paid if the record justified payment.

Over 4,000 elevator operators many years after at the request of these attorneys filed claims, and Mr. Dudley said an investigation disclosed that hundreds of them later admitted they did not know what it was all about, some admitting they were paid and others saying they had filed no claim.

The attorneys told of cases where the Grain Corporation revoked the licenses of elevators, specifically mentioning one case. Mr. Dudley produced the record and showed the company, Morris City (Minn.) Mills, made 78 cents per barrel profit, while only allowed 25 cents. The elevator made $13,307.28 more on 24,756 barrels than entitled to make, and the proprietor, S. Stewart, so admitted, which resulted in the revocation of the license.

I repeat, this is a raid on the Treasury, conceived in the minds of lawyers, and the resolution should not be allowed to pass.

What should have been done at the time was to refer this case to the Department of Justice to see if a conspiracy had not been entered into to defraud the Government. If the accountant existed why did not the attorneys bring him in to be questioned by the committee?

I stated several years ago, and my Republican colleagues should take notice, two Republican Presidents said no claims existed, and one of them, Mr. Hoover, was really the head of the Grain Corporation by reason of his position as Food Administrator during the war.

To my Democratic colleagues I say, so far as any legislation we have passed, even though the Supreme Court declared it unconstitutional, we have nothing to fear. We can defend our action before the people, whom we sought to aid, but we cannot defend our action if such bills as this are passed, and this resolution is not going to become a law if I can prevent it.

Feature-story writers in large papers and magazines are still writing of the Minnesota fire claims bill. I read one last week. They likewise are writing feature stories about the Indian claims resolution about which I have had much to say.

I cannot understand how any Member of Congress can support legislation of this character if he will make a thorough investigation of the facts. I realize a Member has little time to give to matters of this kind and, therefore, I hope some attention will be given to my remarks, as I have spent many days looking into the merits of these claims and I can only repeat I have reached the conclusion the passage of this resolution would be a raid on the Treasury, and the attorneys who have forced some of your constituents to appeal to you in behalf of the resolution would be the real beneficiaries in the end.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

STATUS OF CERTAIN ALIENS IN THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7221, to authorize the shortening or termination of the stay in the United States of certain aliens not admitted for permanent residence, to authorize the deportation of certain aliens admitted for permanent residence, and for other purposes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object long enough to say that this is a very important immigration bill and a bill that ought not to be on the Consent Calendar, and for this reason I object.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I also object, Mr. Speaker.

ALIEN WIVES OF AMERICAN CITIZENS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7975) to permit alien wives of American citizens who were married prior to the approval of the Immigration Act of 1924 to enter the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I make the same remarks with reference to this bill that I made to the former bill, and I am compelled to object.

TO EXCLUDE HABITUAL ALIEN COMMUTERS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4340) to restrict habitual commuting of aliens from foreign contiguous territory to engage in skilled or unskilled labor or employment in continental United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. SADOWSKI. I want to say that this is a very necessary bill. There is much interest in this bill by the citizens of Detroit and the cities adjoining Canada and Mexico. It restricts the commuting of aliens into this country who are taking jobs of citizens in this country. It is approved by the American Federation of Labor in my city.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Let me say that at the present time our terminals are sometimes 200 or 300 miles inside the Canadian territory. If I remember the figures correctly, there are about 6,000 trainmen, engineers, and conductors who are making long runs into Canada. We run up against this international question in this matter. We run up against that situation of the fear that Canada would retaliate against these 6,000 trainmen and employees. While we want some restriction along that line, I do not want to do anything to prejudice the trainmen, engineers, and conductors.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Let me say that that is being taken care of by an amendment sponsored by the trainmen, and it has been put into the bill to clarify the bill.

These men come here without any cards of identification, without going through the regular procedure of becoming American citizens, and this privilege is not extended to citizens of the United States by other countries. This does not mean that we have anything against the Canadian Government. We are glad to have Canadians become citizens of this country, and when they do we are glad to give them jobs, but until that happens we should not give them a preferred status over our own people in my city, many of whom are on relief today, looking for jobs. It is not fair to our citizens.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SADOWSKI. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. What is the situation existing when an American undertakes to obtain employment in Canada? Can he go in there without the necessity of registering and obtain employment in Canada as the Canadians can in Detroit?

Mr. SADOWSKI. He cannot get a job on a commutation card or a commuter's pass.

Mr. McCORMACK. I understand that tens of thousands come into Detroit and other border cities daily, while Americans are restricted from obtaining employment over there. It seems to me that this is an entirely different kind of bill from the ordinary alien bill. I respect the viewpoint of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] on the other bills, but this bill, it seems to me, meets an important problem.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The situation is such that the gentleman will appreciate it as well as I do. Our immigration laws are complex, and they mesh and intermesh, and you can hardly offer an amendment to them without throwing some sections out of gear. I am thoroughly in favor of the underlying principles of the bill, but the United States has always been at a disadvantage in these immigration matters because we want to keep friendly relations with everyone. Other countries have a more uniform citizenship racially than we do; we must be more careful with our immigration policy. We never yet have taken an arbitrary stand before somebody else does. In our dealings with foreign people we cannot take as a criterion the policy that they employ toward us. If we did, we would be at wordy war and at outs with them at all times. Our system of dealing with these foreigners has been such that we must exercise the greatest care, because we are the Mecca of all the people of the world, for they all want to come here. We have to maintain a consistent line of reasoning and a consistent policy. We cannot amend the immigration laws by unanimous consent and do it safely. I am not objecting to this bill for any personal reason or because of what it assumes to do. The gentleman knows my position. My position is just exactly as he states his position to be, but I say that you cannot pass this bill with safety here. I am therefore constrained to object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard, and the Clerk will call the next bill.

NEUTRALITY HEARINGS

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Printing I send to the desk a privileged resolution and ask its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 398

Resolved, That, in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act, approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed for its use 3,000 copies of the hearings held during the current session before said committee relative to the resolution (H. J. Res. 422) to maintain the neutrality of the United States in the event of war or threat of war between or among foreign nations.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Foreign Affairs has completed hearings on the neutrality bill. That bill will probably be reported this week and will soon come upon the floor of the House. The hearings consist of about 250 pages. The cost of printing these additional copies will amount to only $376.52, according to the estimate of the Public Printer. Because of the importance of this legislation and because of the extraordinary demand for copies of the hearings, the Committee on Printing has brought forward this resolution. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

AMENDING NATURALIZATION LAWS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4900) to amend the naturalization laws in respect to residence requirements, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I understand that the author of the bill desires that the bill go over without prejudice. Is that correct?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes. I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER, CANNELTON, IND.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2887) authorizing the Perry County Bridge Commission, of Perry County, Ind., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cannelton, Ind.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Perry County Bridge Commission, of Perry County, Ind., be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Cannelton, Ind., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the Perry County Bridge Commission all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, maintenance, and operation of such bridge and its approaches, as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Perry County Bridge Commission is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge, the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible, under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS TENNESSEE RIVER, DAYTON, TENN.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8586) granting the consent of Congress to the State of Tennessee and certain of its political subdivisions to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Tennessee River at or near a point between Dayton and Decatur, Tenn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this bill has already been enacted into law in one of the omnibus bills passed last session.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CLAIMS OF INDIANS OF CALIFORNIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5167, to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the attorney general of the State of California to bring suit in the Court of Claims on behalf of the Indians of California", approved May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 602), by amending certain portions of sections 3 and 6 thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a letter from the Comptroller General with reference to this claim.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

H. R. 5167—CALENDAR 422

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, January 16, 1936.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
Chairman, Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: There is submitted herewith individual report, as requested, on H. R. 5167, providing as follows:

"A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act authorizing the attorney general of the State of California to bring suit in the Court of Claims on behalf of the Indians of California', approved May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 602), by amending certain portions of sections 3 and 6 thereof.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), entitled 'An act authorizing the attorney general of the State of California to bring suit in the Court of Claims on behalf of the Indians of California', as amended by the act of April 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 259), be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

"SEC. 2. That section 1 of the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), be amended to read as follows:

"'SECTION 1. That for the purposes of this act the Indians of California shall be defined to be all Indians who were residing in the State of California on June 1, 1852, and their descendants living on May 18, 1928, who are now on the census roll of the Indians of California under the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), and who may be enrolled in addition thereto under the provisions of this act.'

"SEC. 3. That sections 2 and 3 of the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), be amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 2. That all claims of whatsoever nature the Indians of California as defined in section 1 of this act may have against the United States by reason of lands taken from them in the State of California by the United States without just compensation, or for the failure or refusal of the United States to protect their interests in lands in said State and for the loss of the use of the same, may be submitted to the United States Court of Claims by the attorney general of the State of California or attorneys acting for and on behalf of said Indians; and it is hereby declared that the loss to the said Indians on account of their failure to secure the lands and compensation provided for in the 18 unratified treaties entered into with certain bands of said Indians in 1851 and 1852, and the loss to such Indians who were not parties to said unratified treaties of their lands to which they had title rising from occupancy and use, without just compensation therefor, is sufficient ground for equitable relief, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the said court, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to hear, consider, and determine all such claims submitted to them, and the said courts shall settle the equitable rights therein and decree just compensation therefor, notwithstanding the lapse of time or statutes of limitation or the fact that the same claim or claims have or have not been presented to any other tribunal, including the commission created by the act of March 3, 1851 (9 Stat. L. 631): Provided, That the courts shall determine, as near as may be, the acreage of the lands described in said unratified treaties as lands set apart forever for the occupancy and use of the tribes or bands of Indians, parties to the said unratified treaties, and shall determine, as near as may be, the acreage of the lands to which such tribes or bands of said Indians not parties to the said unratified treaties had title by reason of occupancy and use, and shall compute the value of said acreage at $1.25 per acre, and shall render judgment for such value: And provided further, That the courts shall consider and determine, as near as may be, the value of the personal property, rights, services, facilities, and improvements set out and described in the aforesaid 18 unratified treaties and include just compensation for the value and loss of the benefit of the same in any decree rendered hereunder. Any payment which may have been made by the United States or moneys heretofore expended for the benefit of the Indians of California made under specific appropriations for the support, education, health, and civilization of Indians of California, including purchases of land, shall not be pleaded as an estoppel but may be pleaded by way of set-off; but no such payment or appropriation shall be treated as a set-off unless it shall appear that the same was received by said Indians or that such expenditure was actually beneficial to said Indians.'

"SEC. 4. That the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), be amended by adding a new section, as follows:

" 'SEC. 3. That the Indians of California shall have the right to be represented by an attorney or attorneys of their own selection under contract or contracts approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and the courts are directed to recognize such attorneys as attorneys of record: Provided, That for the purposes of this act the Indians enrolled as Indians of California under the provisions of the act approved May 18, 1928, the Secretary of the Interior shall classify said Indians by counties and determine the number of units threin of 100 each or fraction thereof, and under such regulations as he may prescribe shall provide for the election of Indian delegates to be held at one or more convenient places in each county in the State of California within 90 days after the approval of this act, provided each county shall be entitled to 1 vote for each unit or fraction thereof, and any Indian enrolled under said act shall be eligible for election as a delegate, and said Indians of each county may elect a delegate to represent each vote or one delegate to represent all its votes and any delegate may be elected by more than one county, and said Secretary shall provide for two conventions of such delegates to select and retain attorneys to represent the Indians of California; one convention to convene at Riverside and include all delegates in counties south of the southern boundaries of San Luis Obispo and Kern Counties and the northern boundary of San Bernardino County and the other convention at San Francisco to include all delegates north of said boundaries. Said conventions shall be held within 30 days after said election and shall be conducted in accordance with such rules as are usual for a convention: Provided further, That due and proper notice shall be given of the time, place, and purpose of said election and conventions; and upon final determination of such suit, said court is authorized and directed to fix and determine a reasonable fee for such attorney or attorneys, the aggregate amount of such fees not to exceed 5 percent of the amount recovered on a quantum meruit basis, for services actually rendered, and, in addition thereto, all necessary and proper expenses incurred in the preparation and prosecution of the suit and such fees and expenses shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of the appropriation made by Congress in payment of any decree rendered when such decree has been submitted to and approved by Congress, and the balance of such appropriation shall be placed in the Treasury as provided in section 6 of the enabling act.'

"SEC. 5. That section 7 of the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), as amended by the act of April 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 259), is further amended by adding the following proviso: 'Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to allow 2 years from the date of the approval of this act in which to receive applications for enrollment of Indians residing in the State of California on June 1, 1852, and their descendants living on May 18, 1928, not now on the census roll of the Indians of California under the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), and the Secretary of the Interior shall have 6 months thereafter to approve such supplemental roll, at the expiration of which time the roll shall be forever closed, and thereafter no addtional names shall be added thereto.

" 'The time for filing amendments to the petition is hereby continued and extended to any time prior to entry of judgment.'

"SEC. 6. That the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), be amended by adding a new section as follows:

" 'SEC. 8. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amount as may be necessary to defray the expenses of enrollment herein authorized.'

"Amend the title so as to read: 'A bill to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the attorney general of the State of California to bring suit in the Court of Claims on behalf of the Indians of California", approved May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602).' "

This proposed bill, if enacted, would amend the jurisdictional act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), as amended by the act of April 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 259), as follows:

By section 1 of the act of May 18, 1928, the plaintiffs were defined as being all the Indians residing in California as of June 1, 1852, and their descendants living in said State as of the date of said act, while section 1 of the proposed bill includes those who are now on the census roll of the Indians of California under the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), and who may be enrolled in addition thereto under the provisions of this act.

Section 2 of the proposed bill contains practically the same provisions as sections 2 and 3 of the original jurisdictional act, the only apparent material change being the offset feature, which, after allowing all offsets as set out in the original act, adds thereto "but no such payment or appropriation shall be treated as a set-off unless it shall appear that the same was received by said Indians or that such expenditure was actually beneficial to said Indians." If the quoted portion of this provision is allowed to remain in the bill and is enacted into law, it would have the effect of eliminating practically all disbursements under gratuity appropriations as offsets for the reason that Government records do not generally disclose the actual delivery of goods, etc., to the Indians and reports of the General Accounting Office made to the Congress and to the Court of Claims under laws vesting jurisdiction in that court to determine the gratuities to be offset are based upon disbursements as having been made for the benefit of the Indians, the receipt thereof by the Indians being assumed. Accordingly, such a provision would put upon the Government a burden of proof which it could not possibly sustain and would have the practical effect of nullifying the section. These Indian gratuities extend back a hundred or more years, and the persons who actually delivered the money or the goods have long since died, so that with reference to the great bulk of the gratuities, probably 80 or 90 percent, it would not be possible to obtain direct evidence that the Indians actually received the goods or articles purchased for them gratuitously by the Government. The Government records would show the appropriation and would show that the money was forwarded to the particular Indian agent, and that agent's accounts would show the purchase of the goods or articles—and there the record proof would stop. The agent, who would be the only person who could testify competently to the actual delivery of the goods or articles to the Indians, is now dead, and the Government would be unable to prove the delivery to the Indians.

In view of the foregoing, and as section 2 of the Second Deficiency Act, 1935 (49 Stat. 596) contains a general provision for offset of gratuities allowed Indians in the consideration of suits instituted in the Court of Claims, there would appear no necessity for the inclusion of the offset provision in H. R. 5167 and it is recommended that there be eliminated that part of section 2 of the bill pertaining to offset, beginning middle of line 25, page 5, to and including line 9, page 6. In other words, if the bill with the offset provision eliminated should become a law the Court of Claims would have for consideration the general offset provision in the Second Deficiency Act for 1935, supra, in the settlement of any suit by the Indians of California.

Section 5 of the proposed bill would amend section 7 of the original jurisdictional act, as amended, by extending the date of closing the census roll to 2 years and 6 months from the date of approval of this bill.

Section 8 of the proposed bill is an addition to the original jurisdictional act and would authorize an appropriation of an amount necessary to defray the expenses of the enrollment provided for in this bill. This section appears to be a departure from the usual form of jurisdictional acts.

The Indians of California, pursuant to the jurisdictional act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), as amended by the act of April 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 659), filed Petition No. K-344 in the Court of Claims on March 14, 1932. Said petition was the subject of a report from this office to the Department of Justice on May 31, 1934, aggregating disbursements in the amount of $12,174,231.14, as follows:

1. Disbursements made by the United States for the benefit of the Indians in California under appropriations made specifically for the Indian Service in California during the period July 1, 1852, to June 30, 1932	$5,543,526.10
2. Disbursements made by the United States for the benefit of the Indians in California under appropriations made for the Indian Service generally, but by the appropriation acts certain amounts were apportioned to the Indian Service in California during the period from July 1, 1868, to June 30, 1932	594,021.37
3. Disbursements made by the United States for the maintenance of certain schools in California, under certain appropriations made for the maintenance of said schools, during the period from July 1, 1892, to June 30, 1932	6,036,683.67
	12,174,213.14

If this proposed bill is enacted excluding the offset provision therein appearing, leaving for application by the Court of Claims the general gratuity provision appearing in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1935, and this office is requested to render a report on a petition filed pursuant thereto in the Court of Claims, it would necessitate further search of the records of disbursements under certain gratuity appropriations not included in our report on petition no. K-344, which would require about 6 months to complete.

Sincerely yours,

J. R. MCCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

MINIMUM-WAGE COMPACT RATIFIED BY MASSACHUSETTS AND NEW HAMPSHIRE

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 321, granting the consent of Congress to the minimum-wage compact ratified by the Legislatures of Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House joint resolution?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, for the information of the Members I should like to ask the distinguished gentleman from New Hampshire if it is not a fact that this compact was signed by representatives of all of the New England States except Vermont and also by representatives of the States of New York and Pennsylvania, and that it has already been ratified by both the State of New Hampshire and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts?

Mr. TOBEY. The gentleman is correct. It also includes the State of Connecticut.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. I said all New England States except Vermont.

Mr. TOBEY. I misunderstood the question. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TOBEY. This minimum-wage compact, for which the consent of Congress is asked today, was signed at Concord, N. H., by representatives of the Governors of Maine, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New York, and Pennsylvania.

Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution, which I introduced in the House last year and which was introduced in the Senate by the Honorable DAVID I. WALSH, would grant the consent of Congress to the minimum-wage compact which has been ratified by the Legislatures of New Hampshire and Massachusetts. The Committee on the Judiciary, to which it was referred, has reported the same favorably to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

Let me briefly outline the history of this resolution. To quote from the report—

On May 29, 1934, representatives of the Governors of Maine, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New York, and Pennsylvania, meeting at Concord, N. H., signed a compact or agreement entitled "Compact for establishing uniform standards for conditions of employment, particularly with regard to the minimum wage, in States ratifying the same."

It provides that no employer shall pay a woman, or a minor under 21 years of age, an unfair or oppressive wage. The minimum-wage provisions are to be enforced in each State by an administrative agency of that State. Each State is to make provision for a continuing unpaid commission representing industry, labor, and the public, to deal with other States which are parties concerning questions arising under the respective States. Thus will an effort be made to attain uniform standards in all of the States which are parties to the compact.

This is an effort on the part of the States to reach a solution of problems confronting them, by their own efforts and mutual cooperation, which your committee believes ought to be encouraged in every way possible by the Federal Government.

Under the terms of the resolution, whenever two or more of the signatory States ratify the compact, with the consent of Congress, it becomes effective as to the ratifying States. Massachusetts and New Hampshire already have ratified the compact, the former June 30, 1934, and the latter May 29, 1935. The consent of Congress is required by reason of that part of section 10, article I, of the Constitution, which provides:

"No State shall, without the consent of Congress • • • enter into any agreement or compact with another State."

This minimum-wage compact, which Congress is asked to validate in this resolution, is of the open type; that is, it becomes effective when ratified by two of the signatory States and approved by Congress.

As above stated, Massachusetts and New Hampshire have already ratified the compact, and upon approval of this resolution by the Congress it will then become effective and may be joined by any of the other States signatory to the compact when ratified by them.

Should Congress approve this resolution, this minimum-wage compact would then become the first interstate compact on labor legislation in the country.

One of the many advantages that should accrue from such compact would be the prevention of unfair competition between States having common industrial problems. It would enhance the possibility that States can be brought into closer relation with one another and that a more complete understanding of labor standards will be established.

I am glad to sponsor this resolution here in the House of Representatives, and am grateful to the members of the Judiciary Committee who have so fully and promptly cooperated with me in advancing the status of this bill. I strongly urge that this resolution be given the approval of the House at this time.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the House joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the compact for establishing uniform standards for conditions of employment, particularly with regard to the minimum wage in States ratifying the same, which was signed in Concord, N. H., on May 29, 1934, by representatives of the Governors of Maine, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New York, and Pennsylvania, and which was ratified by the Legislature of Massachusetts on June 30, 1934, and by the Legislature of New Hampshire on May 29, 1935, is hereby approved and declared to be effective in accordance with the terms thereof, which compact is as follows:

COMPACT FOR ESTABLISHING UNIFORM STANDARDS FOR CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT, PARTICULARLY WITH REGARD TO THE MINIMUM WAGE, IN STATES RATIFYING THE SAME

TITLE I—POLICY AND INTENT

Whereas enforcement among the industrial States of the Union of reasonably uniform standards for labor in industry, determined in accordance with the general welfare, would not only benefit labor but would be of real advantage to employers, removing the pressure toward low wages, long hours of work, exploitation of minors and women, and similar action commonly admitted to be injurious to all concerned; and

Whereas the advantages of such uniform standards have already been indicated by the operation of the National Industrial Recovery Act and the codes of fair competition adopted thereunder; and

Whereas such operation points to the desirability of continued uniform legislation affecting labor standards, by Federal action or otherwise, and of joint action by the States to establish such uniform standards; and

Whereas the establishment of reasonably uniform standards in States concerned with the same general fields of industry and competitors in the same markets will afford the advantages of stability in labor legislation to all concerned, with disadvantage to none: Now therefore

The States whose commissioners have signed this compact and which have, by their legislature, ratified the same, acting to promote the general welfare of the people, do hereby join in establishing the said compact to provide uniform minimum standards affecting labor and industry in the said States: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as abrogating, repealing, modifying, or interfering with the operation of laws already in effect in any State party hereto which establish standards equivalent to or above those herein specified, nor to prevent or discourage the enactment of additional laws establishing similar or higher standards; nor shall anything herein contained repeal or affect any laws concerning conditions of employment that are not in conflict herewith or that deal with subjects not included herein: And provided further, That no part of any title of this compact nor of any legislation adopted in pursuance thereof, except as may be expressly specified in such title or in such legislation, shall be in effect in any State party hereto until this compact shall have been approved as provided in section 6 of title II, but whenever title I and II hereof and any other title included herein are so approved and ratified, such titles shall be in full force and effect as laws of the States so approving and ratifying the same.

TITLE II—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SECTION 1. Each State party to this compact shall require its administrative agency or agencies charged with the administration and enforcement of this compact and of State laws relating thereto, to make comprehensive and detailed reports concerning the operation and administration of said compact and laws. Such agency shall report at least once each year and shall send copies of such report to the interstate commission established under the following section, to the Governors of the several ratifying States, and to the appropriate administrative agencies in such States.

SEC. 2. Each State party hereto shall make provision for a continuing unpaid commission representing industry, labor, and the public, and appointed by the Governor of said State, to deal with the other ratifying States concerning questions arising under this compact and the operation of the same within the limits of their respective States. The chairman of such State commission shall be designated by the Governor and shall be the representative of his State on an interstate commission which shall be composed of the representatives so designated by the several States parties to this compact. The Governors of the signatory States shall request the President of the United States to appoint a representative of the Federal Government to the interstate commission. The expenses of the interstate commission shall be shared equally by the States ratifying this compact. The interstate commission shall annually make a report of its activities and shall furnish copies to the Governors of the ratifying States and to the permanent commissions of such States.

SEC. 3. Should any question arise on the part of one or more of the States ratifying this compact, concerning a matter involved in said compact or in any State law adopted in pursuance thereof, then such question shall be brought before the said interstate commission for consideration. Said interstate commission shall make any necessary investigations, shall publish its findings and any recommendations, and shall furnish copies of such findings and recommendations to the State commissions in each State party to this compact.

SEC. 4. If any ratifying State should desire a modification of any provision or provisions of this compact, or a revision of the entire compact, or if for any reason it should become desirable to extend the scope of said compact, the aforesaid interstate commission shall, upon the application of one or more of the ratifying States, and after 30 days' notice to the governors and State commissions of the other States, proceed to consider such application and the reasons advanced for the proposed modification or revision and shall make such recommendations to the ratifying States concerning the same as may seem fitting and proper. Whenever said modification, revision, or extension is ratified in the manner prescribed in section 6 of this title for the ratification of this original compact and the Congress of the United States has consented thereto, then such modification, revision, or extension shall be in full force and effect in the States ratifying the same.

SEC. 5. Each State party to this compact agrees that it will not withdraw therefrom until it has reported to the interstate commission the reasons for its desire to withdraw. The interstate commission shall, upon receipt of such report, investigate the situation and shall, within 6 months, submit its recommendations. If the State still desires to withdraw from the compact, it shall defer such action for 2 years from the date of the findings of the interstate commission.

SEC. 6. Upon ratification by the legislative act of the requisite number of States as specified in subsequent titles of this compact, and with the consent of the Congress of the United States, this compact shall be in full force and effect in the States ratifying the same. Each State so ratifying shall forthwith enact necessary and suitable legislation to establish and maintain the minimum standards set forth in the following title or titles and shall make provision for the continuing State commission required by section 2 of this title. The appropriate administrative agencies of each State shall thereafter enforce and supervise the operation of the laws relating to this compact and the laws enacted to make the provisions of said compact effective.

SEC. 7. Any State may at any time become a party to this compact by taking the action required by the preceding section of this title to ratify the same, subject to the consent of the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 8. If any part of this compact or the application thereof to any person or circumstance should be held to be contrary to the constitution of any ratifying State or of the United States, all other separable parts of said compact and the application of such parts to other persons or circumstances shall continue to be in full force and effect.

TITLE III—MINIMUM WAGE

SECTION 1. No employer shall pay a woman, or a minor under 21 years of age, an unfair or oppressive wage.

SEC. 2. The State agency administering the minimum-wage law enacted in conformity with this compact shall have authority to investigate the wages of women and minors; to appoint wage boards, upon which employers, employees, and the public shall have equal representation, for the purpose of recommending minimum fair-wage rates for women and minors; and, after a public hearing, to enter directory orders based on the determinations of the wage boards, together with such administrative rulings as are appropriate to make the determinations effective; and may have further authority, without the agency of a wage board, to enter such orders in the case of occupations with less than a specified number of employees.

SEC. 3. The State administrative agency and the wage boards appointed by such agency shall have authority to administer oaths and to require by subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of records relative to the wages of women and minors.

SEC. 4. The State administrative agency shall have further authority to inspect to determine compliance with its orders; to publish the names of employers violating a directory order; and, after a directory order has been in effect for a specified period, to make such order mandatory after a public hearing thereon. Such mandatory order shall carry a penalty of fine, imprisonment, or both. Said agency shall have authority to reconvene wage boards or to form new wage boards for the purpose of modifying wage orders. It shall have authority at any time on its own motion to modify administrative regulations after a public hearing thereon.

SEC. 5. The State administrative agency shall have authority to issue special licenses to employees who, by reason of physical or mental condition, are incapable of earning the minimum fair-wage rate established for the occupation in which they are employed. Said agency shall have authority to take assignment of wage claims at the request of women or minor employees paid less than the minimum wage to which they are entitled under a mandatory order, and to bring legal action necessary to collect such claims. Such employees shall be authorized, under the statute, to recover by civil action the full amount to which they are entitled under a mandatory fair-wage order.

SEC. 6. Employers subject to the minimum-wage law enacted in conformity herewith shall be required to keep specified records, including the names, addresses, occupations, hours, and wages of the women and minors in their employ; to permit the inspection and transcript of such records by the State administrative agency and its authorized representatives; and, upon request, to furnish said agency with a sworn statement of the same. Employers shall further be required to post and maintain the notices regarding wage orders issued by the State administrative agency.

SEC. 7. Each minimum-wage law so enacted shall contain provisions for appeal to the courts on questions of law by persons aggrieved by the decisions of said agency. Said law shall also contain a provision to the effect that in no case shall wage orders or decrees entered under a previously existing law be nullified until the provisions of the law enacted in conformity herewith have become operative and until new wage orders covering the same occupations have been entered and made effective.

SEC. 8. Each minimum-wage law enacted in conformity herewith shall contain a saving clause to the effect that if any provisions of such law or its application be held invalid, the remainder of the law and its application elsewhere shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 9. Mandatory fair-wage legislation now in effect in any of the signatory States, and such legislation in course of passage in any of such States as is in conformity with the provisions of this compact, is hereby declared to meet the minimum standards required by this compact.

SEC. 10. This compact as applied to minimum wage shall, when ratified by two or more States in accordance with the provisions of section 6 of title II, be in full force and effect in the States so ratifying the same.

In witness whereof the commissioners of the States of Connecticut, Maine, New Hampshire, New York, Rhode Island, and of the Commonwealths of Massachusetts and Pennsylvania have signed this compact in a single original which shall be deposited in the archives of the Department of State of the United States of America at Washington, D. C., and of which a duly certified copy shall be forwarded to the Governor of each of the signatory States.

Done at Concord, N. H., this 29th day of May, A. D. 1934.

(Signed by members of commissions and by delegates of the States of Connecticut, Maine, New Hampshire, New York, Rhode Island, and the Commonwealths of Massachusetts and Pennsylvania.)

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SOLICITATION OF PROCUREMENT OF DIVORCES IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8180, to prohibit the use of the mails for the solicitation of the procurement of divorces in foreign countries.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every written or printed card, letter, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement, or notice of any kind, giving information, or inviting inquiry, directly or indirectly, where or how or from whom or by what means a divorce may be secured in any foreign country, and every description calculated to induce or incite a person to use or apply for any further information on the subject, is hereby declared to be nonmailable matter and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post office or by any letter carrier. Whoever shall knowingly deposit, or cause to be deposited, for mailing or delivery, anything declared by this section to be nonmailable, or shall knowingly take or cause the same to be taken from the mails for the purpose of circulating or disposing thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

SEC. 2. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to preclude criminal prosecution under the provisions of section 338, title 18, United States Code (Criminal Code, sec. 215), in any case in which the mails are used by any person in furtherance of any scheme or artifice to defraud, or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "kind", strike out the word "giving" and insert "which has for its purpose the giving of".

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXCHANGE OF CERTAIN RIGHTS-OF-WAY IN HAWAII

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3565, to authorize the Secretary of War to effect exchange of certain rights-of-way in Hawaii.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey to the trustees under the will and of the estate of S. M. Damon, deceased, all right, title, and interest in a 70-foot right-of-way situate on the Island of Oahu, Territory of Hawaii, and described as follows:

Beginning at station no. 1 close to the fence on the north side of the Government road, said station bearing true azimuth 221°51′ distant 184.4 feet from triangulation station no. 231 established by Company I, Engineers, United States Army, marked by a 3-inch iron pipe, said Engineer triangulation station bearing by true azimuth 251°3′40″ distant 1,770.1 feet from Salt Lake Territorial Triangulation Station; thence north 41°51′ east 148.4 feet to station no. 2; thence south 55°17′ east 242.6 feet to station no. 3; thence north 55°2′ east 284.9 feet to station

no. 4; thence north 86°50′ east 364.1 feet to station no. 5; thence north 82°56′ east 315.1 feet to station no. 6; thence north 77°44′ east 241.1 feet to station no. 7; thence north 47°50′ east 228.3 feet to station no. 8; thence north 1°19′ east 419.2 feet to station no. 9; thence north 3°5′ west 493 feet to station no. 10; thence south 85°15′ east 213.7 feet to station no. 11; thence south 39°50′ east 350.7 feet to station no. 12; thence south 82°13′ east 78 feet to station no. 13; thence north 53°20′ east 125.8 feet to station no. 14; thence north 21°19′ east 229 feet to station no. 15; thence north 6°28′ west 293.8 feet to station no. 16; thence north 29°31′ east 296.4 feet to station no. 17; thence north 83° east 330 feet to station no. 18; thence south 51°20′ east 131 feet to station no. 19; thence south 73°19′ east 127.9 feet to station no. 20; thence north 51°38′ east 88 feet to station no. 21; thence north 27°30′ east 607.7 feet to station no. 22; thence north 60°10′ east 421.2 feet to station no. 23; thence south 87°29′ east 306.1 feet to station no. 24; thence north 40°30′ east 218 feet to station no. 25; thence north 55° east 312 feet to station no. 26; thence south 55°40′ east 270 feet to station no. 27; thence north 78°56′ east 124 feet to station no. 28; thence north 37°2′ east 208.1 feet to station no. 29; thence north 7°52′ east 195.5 feet to station no. 30; thence north 46°11′ east 206.1 feet to station no. 31; of this right-of-way, said station no. 31 being known as station no. 4 of a certain tract of land situate in Moanalua and owned by the United States. The above-described station no. 31, or no. 4, bearing by true azimuth 63°55′ is distant 476.77 feet from triangulation station no. 209, established by Company I, Engineers, United States Army, said Engineer triangulation station being on Red Hill Ridge distant 8,379.4 feet, azimuth 239°53′40″ from Salt Lake Territorial Triangulation Station; containing an area of 12.64 acres, more or less; being the same right-of-way granted to the United States of America by S. M. Damon and wife under the title "Red Hill Tract" in deed dated November 20, 1914, in exchange for the conveyance by said trustees to the United States of America of a perpetual easement for a road over and across a strip of land 80 feet wide being a portion of L. C. A. 7715, Apana 2, R. P. 7858, situate at Moanalua, Honolulu, aforesaid, bounded and described as follows:

Beginning at a point where eastern boundary of 50-foot Kamehameha Highway right-of-way intersects the boundary of Halawa-Moanalua land section, from which the azimuth (measured clockwise from true south) and distance to United States Coast and Geodetic Survey triangulation station "Salt Lake" is 33°3′42″, 1,975.10 feet, thence from said point of beginning by metes and bounds 246°22′30″, 6,200.20 feet along land-court application no. 966 to concrete monument no. 6; 344°44′0″, 135.10 feet along Red Hill Military Reservation to concrete monument no. 5; 310°6′30″, 34.86 feet along the same to concrete monument no. 4; 310°6′30″, 34.86 feet along the same to concrete monument no. 3; 99°1′2″, 215.41 feet along Moanalua land; 66°22′30″, 6,018.25 feet along the same; 148°0′0″, 80.86 feet along Kamehameha Highway right-of-way to the point of beginning; containing an area of 11.55 acres.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 6, line 18, at the end of the bill insert "Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized to make such deviations in the descriptions of the lands involved as may be necessary to carry out the purposes and intent of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISPOSAL OF MATERIAL NOT NEEDED BY THE ARMY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8024, to authorize the Secretary of War to dispose of material no longer needed by the Army.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to dispose of, without charge, except for transportation and delivery, to properly accredited schools, colleges, and universities for use in courses of vocational training and instruction, such machinery, mechanical equipment, and tools as may be obsolete or no longer needed by the Army.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the language "transportation and delivery, to properly accredited schools, colleges, and universities" and insert "costs of transportation, handling and packing, to such schools as he may select."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FUNDS ALLOCABLE TO PUERTO RICO UNDER EMERGENCY RELIEF APPROPRIATION ACT, 1935

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8621, to provide that funds allocated to Puerto Rico under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 may be expended for permanent rehabilitation, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FULLER). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

H. R. 8621, "TO PROVIDE THAT FUNDS ALLOCATED TO PUERTO RICO UNDER THE EMERGENCY RELIEF APPROPRIATION ACT OF 1935 MAY BE EXPENDED FOR PERMANENT REHABILITATION, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES"

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, a declaration was made sometime ago that "the administration of President Roosevelt is determined that, as far as possible, the interests of the American citizens in Puerto Rico shall be safeguarded and furthered no less vigilantly than those of any and all citizens dwelling within the continental United States."

Puerto Rico has at present an absentee economy in agriculture, industry, and commerce. A large percentage of the benefits accruing to the island every year and the money spent there leave the island on the first turn-over. As a result, it reverts right back to the United States. A short time after the last million dollars was spent in Puerto Rico, two-thirds of it was in the hands of individuals residing in the mainland. It therefore resolves itself into this: To prevent a social collapse, a practical readjustment and reconstruction program is imperative.

The funds being assigned to Puerto Rico for reconstruction and rehabilitation constitute practically the only means whereby the national administration has so far endeavored to help the acute situation of the masses of workers and other classes there. In the light of sound reason and sober judgment, the assignment of such funds really constitute a compensation for the load directly or indirectly imposed upon the people for many years. Said compensation has been extended in such a manner that it may, and is, being disposed of through an organization over which the insular administration has no control.

Under the Triple A, flour and processing taxes alone cost Puerto Rico in the neighborhood of $5,000,000 per annum. It is a well-known fact that the island produces only one of the basic commodities covered by that act, namely, tobacco. Hence, it is this one case that the Island has received direct compensation. The other basic commodities not being produced in Puerto Rico are a burden for which we cannot be directly compensated. The consequence of the rise in the price of commodities in the United States resulting from the operation of laws represents an indirect taxation estimated to approximate $12,000,000 a year.

This has created a most serious situation which the administration intends to remedy with a reconstruction program set forth in H. R. 8621.

The island is now suffering the consequences of a load which has been growing for years, and we have endeavored for the last 2 years to secure action on the part of the national administration to effectively extend to Puerto Rico all those measures of the national recovery program capable of providing compensation for the burden imposed upon the island. In this connection, the program set up by H. R. 8621 is intended to execute projects calling for reconstruction there. In this bill is included a plan for the complete carrying out of the project for the utilization of water resources of the island which, it is expected, will have the greatest importance in the development of local industries, as it will provide electric power at low rates.

Also production credits, fertilizer, reforestation, development of seed beds, provision whereby laborers will receive use and title of home and small acreage paid from reconstruction funds. Educational campaign to increase output and reduce costs should be undertaken.

It also is the hope of the people that the administration will carry out a substantial project for cleaning up slum areas of San Juan and other towns. The manner in which the recovery program has affected the economic situation in Puerto Rico is a matter of deepest concern. Indeed, the burden imposed upon the island was so onerous that unless effective steps are taken to provide adequate and permanent remedies, the consequences will continue to be really tragic. For the last 2 years the island has strenuously endeavored to have the national administration understand and appreciate the seriousness of the situation and pressing need for prompt and energetic action.

So far, very little time has been devoted to these problems, and meanwhile conditions have been getting worse. It seems to me, therefore, that to perfect H. R. 8621 for the reconstruction administration of Puerto Rico it should contain the following amendment:

AMENDMENT TO H. R. 8621

On page 2, line 11, after the word "expenditure", add: "Provided further, That in the administration of this act no overlapping or interference with the normal duties and functions of the insular government shall be permitted and that the coordinating committee headed by the Governor, as chairman, and the members selected by him from the executive and legislative branches of the insular government with the equal number designated by the reconstruction administrator shall have the duty, authority, and power to consider, study, and pass on all projects proposed by the Puerto Rico reconstruction administration of the island."

The thoughts contained in the above amendment will be beneficial to Puerto Rico, where Dr. Ernest Gruening has been appointed administrator by Executive order. On the occasion of his appointment, the White House gave out the following press release:

The President today signed an Executive order establishing the Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration to carry out in a coordinated way all reconstruction work in Puerto Rico under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935. He designated Ernest H. Gruening as administrator. The Reconstruction Administration approved projects for Puerto Rico on the basis of a program that has been formulated.

To avoid overlapping of the activities of the Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration and the normal duties of the insular government and to coordinate their respective functions, members of the Reconstruction Administration and of the insular government will form a coordinating committee. This committee will be headed by the Governor of Puerto Rico and will consist of the Governor as chairman, members selected by him from the executive and legislative branches of the insular government, and an equal number designated by the Reconstruction Administration.

REFORESTATION OF THE ISLAND

Puerto Rico also is badly in need of trees. Millions of trees should be planted there. The Reconstruction Administration might begin this great work under a tropical forest experiment station, which should be organized.

A TROPICAL FOREST EXPERIMENT STATION

Purpose: Forest research aims to determine the scientific basis for growing, tending, protecting, and utilizing forests to obtain the fullest use and greatest social and economic benefits from forest lands.

Character of research: Congress has recognized this need and provided for forest research of wide scope in the Department of Agriculture. Investigations are under way in such varied phases as reforestation, growth, fire protection, influence of forests on stream flow, effect of shelter belts on climate, management, and the utilization of timber, forage, and other forest products.

Regional basis: This research, concentrated in the Forest Service, is conducted on a regional basis, a process favored because of the close relationship between natural forest conditions and the climate, soil and topography, and the general similarity of pertinent social and economic problems in compact geographical units.

Congressional authorization: This obligation is recognized in the McNary-McSweeney Forest Research Act, approved May 22, 1928 (Public, No. 466, 70th Cong.), which sets up a comprehensive forest-research program on a 10-year basis and authorizes expenditures in a number of allied fields. Twelve regional forest experiment stations have now been provided for in the continental United States. No station has been established as yet for outlying Territories or possessions, although the act specifically provides for a station "in the tropical possessions of the United States in the West Indies." All the money so far appropriated goes to the continental United States.

What a regional forest experiment station is: A forest experiment station is composed of a group of technicians working on the forestry problems of a whole region. Such a region encompasses from several to many States in which the forest types and economic conditions are related. Such a group has a central headquarters, often in cooperation with a university or an agricultural experiment station, where is maintained the administrative office of the station.

Most of the research is done in the field at a series of branch stations. These may be on public land or on private lands under cooperative agreement with the owner. Laboratories may be at the central headquarters or at a branch station.

Major fields of work: In addition to decentralizing the work along regional lines, forest research is making a coordinated attack along five major lines of activity:

First. Forest management investigations, designed to work out the best methods of reforesting and protecting forest lands and of securing the maximum quality and quantity growth of forest products. Essentially they are to provide the basis for growing the best possible forest of desirable species in the shortest time and at the lowest cost.

Second. Forest economic investigations on a wide range of problems to aid in forest land use planning to the end that forests contribute in the most effective way to social and economic welfare. Included with this is a comprehensive national survey of our forest resources.

Third. Forest-products investigations to determine new and better forms of wood utilization, especially for little-used and neglected species, and to develop byproducts and methods of preserving timber.

Fourth. Forest-influence investigations to measure the effect of forest and other natural-cover characteristics of wild lands on climate and on stream flow.

Fifth. Range-management investigations to secure the maximum production and proper utilization of forage crops available for the grazing of domestic livestock.

Need for a tropical station in Puerto Rico: There is no question as to the desirability and need of a forest experiment station for Puerto Rico and nearby tropical possessions. The resources of the island are hard-pressed under present conditions to sustain the dense population. The original flourishing forests, potentially very productive because of favorable soil and climatic conditions, have been reduced by overcutting and fire to a badly depleted, understocked forest which is now producing only a fraction of its potential capacity. These forests now furnish only one-fourth of the wood material actually used on the island and neither add to the island's export trade nor provide raw material for local industries. The rehabilitation of these forest lands and the proper coordination of their use with agriculture should go far toward raising the general standards of living.

Most of these forest lands are in private ownership. Of late the Forest Service has been expanding the area of public timber by buying additional lands. However, there is no information available either to the private timberland owner, whether farmer or large company, or to the public foresters as to how best to grow, protect, and manage the forest crop.

In view of the critical economic situation and in view of the lack of information on American tropical forests there is urgent need for research. This research should lay the basis for the proper management and protection of some 1,100,000 acres of potential forest land, including the revegetation and restoration to full productivity of waste lands. The economic possibilities in continuous production under systematic management of valuable crops of such species as mahogany, rosewood, Spanish cedar, satinwood, and fustic are too obvious to need elaboration. Increased timber production will also go far to relieve a critical local wood situation.

What this station would do: A tropical forest experiment station in Puerto Rico would supply the technical information necessary for the successful undertaking of this badly needed forest land use program. Growth and management of Puerto Rican tree species, native and introduced, present practically a virgin field for investigation. Until the basic knowledge required can be made available through the facilities of a well-organized forest experiment station, any progress in either public or private forestry will be slow. Furthermore, such a station will be of value not only to Puerto Rico but it should be the clearing house for information on all matters pertaining to the American tropics. As such, its influence should be felt throughout the West Indies and in tropical America.

REAL-PROPERTY TAX, VIRGIN ISLANDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8287, to establish an assessed-valuation real-property tax in the Virgin Islands of the United States.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it is the policy of Congress to equalize and more equitably to distribute existing taxes on real property in the Virgin Islands of the United States and to reduce the burden of taxation now imposed on land in productive use in such islands.

SEC. 2. For the calendar year 1936 and for all succeeding years all taxes on real property in the Virgin Islands shall be computed on the basis of the actual value of such property, and the rate in each municipality of such islands shall be the same for all real property subject to taxation in such municipality, whether or not such property is in cultivation and regardless of the use to which such property is put.

SEC. 3. Until local tax laws conforming to the requirements of this act are in effect in a municipality the tax on real property in such municipality for any such calendar year shall be at the rate of 1.25 percent of the assessed value. Until the President shall determine that adequate administrative authority and organization exist in a municipality under local law for levying, assessing, and collecting taxes imposed or authorized under this act, such taxes shall be levied, assessed, and collected under regulations prescribed by the President.

SEC. 4. All taxes so levied and collected shall be deposited in the colonial treasury of the municipality in which such taxes are collected.

SEC. 5. The Virgin Islands Co. is authorized to pay annually into the colonial treasuries of the Virgin Islands on account of lands in the Virgin Islands owned by the United States and in the possession of the Virgin Islands Co. sums which the corporation shall determine to be equivalent to the real-property taxes payable on such lands if they were in private ownership. The Virgin Islands Co. is authorized to pay annually into the colonial treasuries of the Virgin Islands such sums as the corporation shall determine to be equivalent to the several taxes which a private corporation similarly situated would be required to pay into the said treasuries.

SEC. 6. Nothing in this act shall be construed as altering, amending, or repealing the existing exemptions from taxation of property used for educational, charitable, or religious purposes. Subject to the provisions of this act, the legislative authority of the respective municipalities is hereby empowered to alter, amend, or repeal, subject to the approval of the Governor, any law now imposing taxes on real property.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REFUND OF COUNTERVAILING CUSTOMS DUTIES ON LOGS FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3998, for the refunding of certain countervailing customs duties collected upon logs imported from British Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, an identical Senate bill, S. 1626, is on the Speaker's table. I ask unanimous consent that it be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill S. 1626 will be substituted for the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That claims for the refunding of any customs duties erroneously or illegally assessed or collected upon fir, spruce, cedar, or western hemlock, under the provisions of paragraph 401 of the Tariff Act of 1922, approved September 21, 1922 (42 Stat. L. 858, 889), because of the existence of the so-called timber tax embodied in subdivision 2 of section 58 of the land and forest act of the Province of British Columbia may be presented to the Commissioner of Customs not later than 6 months after the passage of this act; and the Commissioner of Customs is hereby authorized and directed to receive, consider, and determine in accordance with law but without regard to any statute requiring protest, appeal, and the like such claims as may have been presented, heretofore by way of protest to the collectors of customs and not allowed, and such claims as may hereafter be presented within the period above named, where and when and only when it be found and determined that such duties were collected upon the erroneous interpretation of law passed upon and condemned by the United States Customs Court, first division, in decisions rendered in the cases of George S. Bush & Co., Inc., and others, against United States, and Siemons Lumber Co. against United States, on March 12, 1931, and reported at page 590 in Fifty-ninth Treasury Decisions: Provided, That no interest shall be allowed on any of these claims.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to such claimants as have presented or shall hereafter so present their claims, any amount allowed in the determination of any claims so defined and which shall have been presented in accordance with this act.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table, and a similar House bill was laid on the table.

DEPOSIT AND INVESTMENT OF INDIAN FUNDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8588, to authorize the deposit and investment of Indian funds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8787, to amend section 3 of the act approved May 10, 1928, entitled "An act to extend the period of restriction in lands of certain members of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes", as amended February 14, 1931.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I call attention to the fact that among the rules of the House is one known as the Ramseyer rule, which provides that not only must the amendment be set forth but also that the existing law shall be set forth in brackets. This has not been done in this particular case. I have not had time to look up the existing law on the subject, nor do I feel inclined to take the time to delve into it and find out what change is involved. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice to enable the committee to comply with the Ramseyer rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to file a supplemental report in connection with this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

LAC DU FLAMBEAU BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS, WISCONSIN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7225, authorizing a revolving reimbursable fund for the Lac Du Flambeau Band of Chippewa Indians in Wisconsin.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Wisconsin explain the bill? Will he tell us who puts up the money?

Mr. GEHRMANN. The money comes out of their own funds. This is provided in the bill. The bill asks that this tribe of Indians be allowed to use the $20,000, it to be reimbursed by either labor or material furnished to the Department. A favorable report accompanies the bill. It was first claimed that enactment of this bill would not be necessary because they had the authority to do this under present law. I have tried to get them to do it, but when they looked for the authority they found it referred only to certain tribes of Indians and that this tribe of Chippewas was not included. Therefore this authority becomes necessary. There is no objection to the bill so far as I can learn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Lac Du Flambeau Band of Chippewa Indians in Wisconsin, for the purpose of establishing a revolving reimbursable fund from which loans may be made to members of the said Lac Du Flambeau Band of Chippewa Indians in Wisconsin, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That all repayments on such loans shall become available for further loans to said Indians until June 30, 1945: And provided further, That no expenditure of this fund shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior without the consent of the Lac Du Flambeau Band of Chippewa Indians.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8940, to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill seems somewhat complicated. I do not understand all of its implications. I wish some member of the committee would explain the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, the bill has two main objects. The first object is to prevent rackets under section 77B. At the present time three creditors, if their claims amount to $1,000, may file a petition for reorganization. The first main object of the bill is to provide that three creditors may do this if their claims amount to 5 percent of the total obligations of the debtor.

The second main object of the bill is to take care of a situation disclosed by the committee's investigation. Investigation by the committee disclosed the fact that in some cases the management and also the trustees were paid out of the funds of the company in receivership, making duplicate payments for practically the same work. The second provision of the bill prevents the appointment of trustees except in cases of proved incompetency, mismanagement, or fraud on the part of the management, and authorizes the judge, by the method described in the bill, to ascertain whether the management has been corrupt or incompetent.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. When the gentleman speaks of the management of the company, does the gentleman mean the old management?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; the old management.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. In my opinion this should prove to be a pretty good bill. I know of an instance in my own section recently where a perfectly solvent man was thrown into bankruptcy and ruined by a practice of the abuse this bill seeks to correct.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. Could one creditor force a reorganization if he held 5 percent of the claims against the debtor?

Mr. PERKINS. No; it must be three creditors under the act.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman could very well state that this bill received unanimous support from every member of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I call the gentleman's attention to the language appearing on page 8 of the bill:

That if the debtor is continued in possession, or if the management of the debtor is appointed trustee. * * *

I am wondering whether this language shows unmistakably that if the debtor is continued in possession he must give a bond just the same as an outside person appointed trustee.

Mr. PERKINS. I think the requirement to which the gentleman refers is a part of the present law. The language in the bill does not change that requirement in any respect.

Mr. DIRKSEN. This question came up in the New York courts in the matter of continuing the debtor in possession, in order that he could not dissipate the assets during the time of his possession under court order he must give the bond, for cases had been found where assets of estates actually were dissipated while in possession of the management under the sanction of the court. The judges at that time made the point that if the debtor was to be continued in possession he ought to be required to give bond just as though he were an outsider designated trustee by the court.

Mr. PERKINS. That would require an amendment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The bond requirement is not affected by the present bill?

Mr. PERKINS. No. I think the court now has the power to require anybody undertaking to handle the estate to give a bond.

Mr. CELLER. I may say to the gentleman there is no doubt the court has the right to demand a bond in all instances, and particularly in the instance mentioned by the gentleman.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (a) of section 77B of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", as amended, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 77B. CORPORATE REORGANIZATIONS.—(a) Any corporation which could become a bankrupt under section 4 of this act, and any railroad or other transportation corporation, except a railroad corporation authorized to file a petition or answer under the provisions of section 77 of this act, and except as hereinafter provided, may file an original petition, or, before adjudication in an involuntary proceeding, an answer, or in any proceeding pending in bankruptcy, whether filed before or after this section becomes effective, provided the present operations of such corporation do not exclude it hereunder, and whether or not the corporation has been adjudicated a bankrupt, a petition stating the requisite jurisdictional facts under this section; the nature of the business of the debtor; in brief description, the assets, liabilities, capital stock, and financial condition of the debtor; if a prior proceeding is pending, the name of the court in which it is pending and the nature of such proceeding; facts showing the need for relief under this section; and that the corporation is insolvent or unable to meet its debts as they mature and that it desires to effect a plan of reorganization. The petition shall be filed with the court in whose territorial jurisdiction the corporation, during the preceding 6 months or the greater portion thereof, has had its principal place of business or its principal assets, or in any territorial jurisdiction in the State in which it was incorporated. The court shall, upon petition, transfer such proceedings to the territorial jurisdiction where the interests of all the parties will be best subserved. The petition or answer shall be accompanied by payment to the clerk of a filing fee of $100, which shall be in addition to the fees required to be collected by the clerk under other sections of this act. Upon the filing of such petition or answer the judge shall enter an order either approving it as properly filed under this section if satisfied that such petition or answer complies with this section and has been filed in good faith, or dismissing it. If the petition or answer is so approved, an order of adjudication in bankruptcy shall not be entered and the court in which such order approving the petition or answer is entered shall, during the pendency of the proceedings under this section, have exclusive jurisdiction of the debtor and its property wherever located for the purposes of this section, and shall have and may exercise all the powers, not inconsistent with this section, which a Federal court would have had it appointed a receiver in equity of the property of the debtor by reason of its inability to pay its debts as they mature. The corporation shall be referred to in the proceedings as a 'debtor'. Any corporation the majority of the capital stock of which having power to vote for the election of directors is owned, either directly or indirectly through an intervening medium, by any debtor, or substantially all of whose properties are operated by such debtor under lease or operating agreement, may file, with the court in which such debtor had filed its petition or answer, and in the same proceeding, a petition stating that it is insolvent or unable to meet its debts as they mature and that it desires to effect a plan of reorganization in connection with, or as a part of, the plan of reorganization of such other debtor; and thereupon such court, if it approves such petition, shall have the same jurisdiction with respect to such corporation, its property, and its creditors and stockholders as the court has with respect to such other debtor. Three or more creditors who have provable claims against any corporation which amount in the aggregate to not less than 5 percent of the total amount of all indebtedness of such corporation as shown by a balance sheet, as of a date within the preceding 12 months, of the corporation or by its latest annual report or by its books and which amount in the aggregate, in excess of the value of secured debts held by them, if any, to $1,000 or over may, if such corporation has not filed a petition or answer under this section, file with the court in which such corporation might file a petition under this section, a petition stating the requisite jurisdictional facts under this section, the nature of the business of such corporation, a general description of its assets, liabilities, capital stock, and financial condition, if a prior proceeding in bankruptcy or equity receivership is pending, the name of the court in which it is pending and the nature of such proceedings, facts showing the need of relief under this section, that such corporation is insolvent or unable to meet its debts as they mature, and if the corporation has not been adjudicated a bankrupt or a receiver of the corporation has not been appointed by any court of competent jurisdiction, that it has committed an act of bankruptcy within 4 months preceding the date of the filing of the petition, and that such creditors propose that it shall effect a reorganization; and such corporation shall, within 10 days after the service of a copy of such petition upon it, answer such petition. If such answer shall admit (a) the jurisdiction of the court, and (b) the material allegations of the petition, the court shall enter an order approving the petition as properly filed under this section if satisfied that it complies with this section and has been filed in good faith, or dismiss it if not so satisfied. If such answer shall deny any material allegation of the petition, the judge shall determine summarily the issues presented by the pleadings, without the intervention of a jury, and if the material allegations of the petition are sustained by the proofs and the court is satisfied that the petition complies with this section and has been filed in good faith it shall approve the petition; otherwise the court shall dismiss the petition; and if any such petition shall be so approved, the proceedings thereon shall continue with like effect as if the corporation had itself filed a petition or answer under this section. In case any such petition or answer or proceedings shall be dismissed in the manner provided in this subdivision (a) or in subdivision (c), clause (8), of this section, the same shall not constitute an act of bankruptcy or an admission of insolvency or be admissible in evidence, without the consent of the debtor, in any proceedings then or thereafter pending or commenced under this act or in any Federal or State court. If three or more creditors who have provable claims which amount in the aggregate in excess of the value of securities held by them, if any, to $1,000 or over, or if stockholders holding 5 percent in number of all shares of stock of any class of the debtor outstanding shall, prior to the hearing provided for in subdivision (c), clause (1), of this section appear and controvert the facts alleged in the petition or answer, the judge shall determine as soon as may be the issues presented by the pleadings, without the intervention of a jury, and unless the material allegations of the petition or answer are sustained by the proofs, the proceedings shall be dismissed."

SEC. 2. Subdivision (c) of section 77B of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(c) Upon approving the petition or answer or at any time thereafter, the judge, in addition to the jurisdiction and powers elsewhere in this section conferred upon him, (1) may, after hearing upon notice to the debtor and to such others as the judge may determine temporarily continue the debtor in possession or appoint a trustee or trustees of the debtor's estate, and shall require the debtor, or such trustee or trustees, if appointed, to give such notice as the order may direct to creditors and stockholders and to cause publication thereof to be made at least once a week for 2 successive weeks of a hearing to be held within 30 days after such appointment, or, if no such appointment, within 30 days after the approval of the petition or answer, at which hearing or any adjournment thereof, or at any subsequent hearing after notice, the judge may make permanent any such appointment, or terminate it and restore the debtor to possession, or, if no trustee has been appointed, may appoint a trustee or trustees, and may remove any such trustee or trustees and continue the debtor in possession or appoint a substitute trustee or trustees and may appoint an additional trustee or trustees: Provided, however, That no trustee shall be appointed or continued, except in cases of proved incompetency, mismanagement, or fraud on the part of the management of the debtor; and in determining whether or not there has been such incompetency, mismanagement, or fraud, the judge may employ auditors and accountants at the expense of the estate; and appeals, as in equity cases, may be taken as a matter of right, and as to matters of both law and fact, to the circuit courts of appeals and to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, from orders appointing a trustee, within 30 days after the entry of the order and shall be heard summarily, and if notice of intention of taking an appeal is given to the judge at the time of the entry of the order, the order shall be stayed pending the determination of the appeal: And provided further, That if the debtor is continued in possession, or if the management of the debtor is appointed trustee, no compensation shall be allowed the management as trustee in addition to the compensation of the management as salary, which salary shall not be in an amount greater than the salary of which the management was in receipt at the time of the approval of the petition or answer; (2) shall fix the amount of the bond of every such trustee, and every such trustee, upon filing such bond, shall have all the title and shall exercise, subject to the control of the judge and consistently with the provisions of this section, all the powers of a trustee appointed pursuant to section 44 of this act, and if authorized by the judge, the same powers as those exercised by a receiver in equity to the extent consistent with this section, and, subject to the authorization and control of the judge, the power to operate the business of the debtor during such period, fixed or indefinite, as the judge may from time to time prescribe; (3) may, for cause shown, authorize the debtor or the trustee or trustees, if appointed, to issue certificates for cash, property, or other consideration approved by the judge for such lawful purposes, and upon such terms and conditions and with such security and such priority in payments over existing obligations, secured or unsecured, as may be lawful in the particular case; (4) shall require the debtor, or the trustee or trustees if appointed, at such time or times as the judge may direct, and in lieu of the schedules required by section 7 of this act, to file such schedules and submit such other information as may be necessary to disclose the conduct of the debtor's affairs and the fairness of any proposed plan; and may direct the debtor, or the trustee or trustees if appointed, to prepare (a) a list of all known bondholders and creditors of, or claimants against, the debtor or its property, and the amounts and character of their debts, claims, and securities, and the last known post-office address or place of business of each creditor or claimant, and (b) a list of the stockholders of each class of the debtor, with the last known post-office address or place of business of each, which lists shall be open to the inspection of any creditor or stockholder of the debtor, during reasonable business hours, upon application to the debtor, or to the trustee or trustees, if appointed, and the contents of such lists shall not constitute admissions by the debtor or the trustees in a proceeding under this section or otherwise; (5) may direct the rejection of contracts of the debtor executory in whole or in part; (6) shall determine a reasonable time within which the claims and interests of creditors and stockholders may be filed or evidenced and after which no such claim or interest may participate in any plan, except on order for cause shown, the manner in which such claims and interest may be filed or evidenced and allowed, and, for the purposes of the plan and its acceptance, the division of creditors and stockholders into classes according to the nature of their respective claims and interests; and may, for the purposes of such classification, classify as an unsecured claim, the amount of any secured claim in excess of the value of the security therefor, such value to be determined in accordance with the provisions of section 57, clause (h), of this act; (7) shall cause reasonable notice of such determination and of all hearings for the consideration of any proposed plan, or of the dismissal of the proceedings, or the liquidation of the estate, or the allowance of fees or expenses, to be given creditors and stockholders by publication or otherwise; (8) if a plan of reorganization is not proposed or accepted within such reasonable period as the judge may fix, or, if proposed and accepted, is not confirmed, may, after hearing, whether the proceeding be voluntary or involuntary, either extend such period or dismiss the proceeding under this section or, except in the case of a railroad or other public utility or of a debtor which has not been found by the judge to be insolvent, direct the estate to be liquidated, or direct the trustee or trustees to liquidate the estate, appointing a trustee or trustees if none shall previously have been appointed, as the interests of the creditors and stockholders may equitably require; (9) may allow a reasonable compensation for the services rendered and reimbursement for the actual and necessary expenses incurred in connection with the proceeding and the plan by officers, parties in interest, depositaries, reorganization managers and committees or other representatives of creditors or stockholders, and the attorneys or agents of any of the foregoing and of the debtor, but appeals from orders fixing such allowances may be taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals independently of other appeals in the proceeding and shall be heard summarily; (10) in addition to the provisions of section 11 of this act for the staying of pending suits against the debtor, may enjoin or stay the commencement or continuation of suits against the debtor until after final decree; and may, upon notice and for cause shown, enjoin or stay the commencement or continuance of any judicial proceeding to enforce any lien upon the estate until after final decree; and (11) may refer any matters to a special master, who may be one of the referees in bankruptcy, for consideration and report, either generally or upon specified issues, and allow such master a reasonable compensation and reimbursement for his services and actual and necessary expenses. The debtor shall have the right to be heard on all questions. Any creditor or stockholder shall have the right to be heard on the question of the permanent appointment of any trustee or trustees, and on the proposed confirmation of any reorganization plan, and upon filing a petition for leave to intervene, on such other questions arising in the proceeding as the judge shall determine. In case a trustee is not appointed, the debtor shall continue in the possession of its property, and, if authorized by the judge, shall operate the business thereof during such period, fixed or indefinite, as the judges may from time to time prescribe, and shall have all the title to and shall exercise, consistently with the provisions of this section, all the powers of a trustee appointed pursuant to this section, subject at all times to the control of the judge, and to such limitations, restrictions, terms, and conditions as the judge may from time to time impose and prescribe. While the debtor is in possession (a) its officers shall be entitled to receive only such reasonable compensation as the judge shall from time to time approve, and (b) no person shall be elected or appointed to any office, to fill a vacancy or otherwise, without the prior approval of the judge."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 4, line 23, strike out the words "in brief description" and insert in lieu thereof "a general description of."

Page 7, line 22, strike out all of the language after the word "however" down to and including the word "further", line 12, page 8.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EMPLOYMENT OF SKILLED SHORTHAND REPORTERS IN EXECUTIVE BRANCH OF THE GOVERNMENT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4886, providing for the employment of skilled shorthand reporters in the Executive branch of the Government.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over temporarily without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

BOARD OF SHORTHAND REPORTING

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4887, to create a Board of Shorthand Reporting, and for other purposes.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over temporarily without prejudice.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman asks that this bill be passed over temporarily. Does he intend to call it up for consideration later in the day?

Mr. EAGLE. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. We have not been following that practice unless there was some special reason. I will not object, because I know how fair and sincere the gentleman is and has been in times gone by. However, we never indulge in that practice. Has the gentleman some special reason for making the request?

Mr. EAGLE. I do not see any reason why I should not have a few minutes to confer with one gentleman on the Republican side who is almost in agreement with me in reference to this matter.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman understands that if we adopt the practice of going back in connection with the consideration of these bills we would never know where we were, and Members on the floor would never know when their bills are coming up for consideration.

Mr. EAGLE. Nobody ever knows anyhow.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. In view of the gentleman's good nature, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENDING CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE TO POSTMASTERS OF THE FIRST, SECOND, AND THIRD CLASSES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3251, extending the classified civil service to include postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman withhold his objection to permit a brief observation?

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my objection for the time being.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the Members of the House, in connection with what I said a few minutes ago, that this measure will place all the postmasters of the country, including the first, second, and third classes, squarely under the civil service. Any fault that might have been directed at the previous bill certainly cannot be directed to this bill, and if there was any fault to find with that measure it could be corrected by the passage of this bill.

The President of the United States recommends this bill. Mr. Farley, the Postmaster General, recommends this bill. Senator O'MAHONEY and I introduced the original bill, which was approved by the Post Office Department and sent to us. The present Civil Service Commission recommends the bill, and the House Committee on the Civil Service, to which the bill was referred, has also recommended it.

I may say that this puts the present Democratic administration squarely and affirmatively in favor of the civil service, so far as first-, second-, and third-class postmasters are concerned. It is in keeping with the historic traditions of our party, because civil service in the post office came into being under President Cleveland, when the city clerks and carriers were put under the civil service. Prior to that time they were appointed by political leaders and Representatives in Congress, and it was more necessary that they carry their precincts than that they carry the mail.

Under President Cleveland the civil service was extended to clerks and carriers. Under President Roosevelt the fourth-class postmasters in seven States were blanketed into the civil service. That was just before he retired from office. Under President Taft the fourth-class postmasters in the remaining States were blanketed under the civil service before he retired from office. But under President Woodrow Wilson all fourth-class postmasters of America were placed affirmatively under the civil service, where they have been ever since. Also under President Wilson the first-, second-, and third-class postmasters were placed under the civil service, and it was required that the top man on the list be given the appointment. The Executive order of President Wilson was weakened under President Harding, who in an Executive order allowed the politicians or the Congressmen to pick the first, second, or third man. This practice is in vogue today.

The adoption of this bill at the present time will give to the country a personnel in the Post Office Department more efficient than it has ever been in the past. I want to leave just one thought for the RECORD. The Democratic administration favors this bill, and it is in keeping with the traditions of our party. It is the one party that is friendly to the civil service. Now the gentleman may object. But I am in hopes we can all agree on a bill of this kind before very long.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I renew my objection.

RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES IN THE CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3044, to amend the act of May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 349), for retirement of employees in the classified civil service and in certain positions in the legislative branch of the Government, to include all other employees in the legislative branch.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, this bill is not a mandatory proposition. It permits those who may elect to do so to come under the provisions of the present retirement act.

Mr. COSTELLO. Is not the difficulty with this legislation that there is being created a special group who are allowed to say whether they should or should not come under the retirement act? A precedent is being created thereby, and as a result if this bill does pass we are going to have other groups come in and ask that similar privileges be granted to them. We will ultimately not be able to say who may be included in the retirement act and who may not be included.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I may say to the gentleman that I think the difference between this group of employees and others to whom reference is made is that there is not a permanent tenure of office involved. That is the reason why the committee felt they could make an exception and make it optional in the case of legislative employees.

There are a few people serving on the Hill here who have been here for many, many years who would benefit by this legislation. They have served from time to time different Members of Congress as secretary, and they would like to take advantage of the retirement act. This bill was put in this form after consultation with the Clerk of the House and other officials who have approved the form of the bill. It is purely optional and does not entail any hardship on anybody, but if an employee has been here long enough to receive any benefit under the bill by paying up the back deductions and continuing to pay as long as he may serve, he can take advantage of the legislation and can leave here with some income for the remainder of his life, which he cannot do under present circumstances.

Mr. COSTELLO. Is it not a fact that the Civil Service Commission has not approved this proposed legislation?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I understand that is true. They would rather make it mandatory, but we cannot always follow the advice of the administrative body. We have to do a little legislating ourselves.

Mr. COSTELLO. Is it not also a fact that it would be rather difficult to determine what the Government's liability will be under this act?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Not at all, because under the bill they have to make the election within 6 months, and if they do not elect to come under the bill within that time, they cannot come in later.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the gentleman will permit, I may say to the gentleman from California that I came here over 25 years ago. I came here first as an employee. There are men and women here today who were working here when I came. You have men working in your Appropriations Committee today that it will be mighty hard for you ever to replace, and some of these men are serving at a financial sacrifice to themselves. They are getting along in years, and they have just as much right to receive recognition as a civil-service employee who is working uptown. You are now denying this right to the people who work in the legislative branch that you are extending to those working in the executive and judicial branches. It is only fair that you be just to the employees of the legislative branch of the Government by granting them this privilege, and, of course, the gentleman understands that it is optional whether they shall come under the retirement fund or not.

Mr. COSTELLO. If you are going to include the employees of the legislative branch, should you not make it mandatory for them all to come in rather than leave it optional with them to elect whether they shall come in or be left out.

Mr. COCHRAN. I think it would be far better if you left it optional, and if they do not want to come in it is their loss, but if they desire to come in, it seems to me they should have the opportunity to do so.

Mr. COSTELLO. If you are going to grant this privilege to one class, you are going to have to grant it to other classes; in other words, similar bills will be brought in for employees in other branches of the Government giving them the right to choose whether they shall come in under the retirement law or not, and when you do that you are going to destroy the entire effect of your retirement legislation.

Mr. COCHRAN. Would the gentleman want to deny to the employees of the legislative branch of the Government the same right he extends to the employees of the executive and judicial branches? I cannot see how the gentleman can take such a view of the matter.

Mr. COSTELLO. I am not questioning the right to extend this to the legislative branch, but I am questioning your making it optional for them to choose whether they shall come in or not; in other words, each individual employee of the legislative branch under this bill is allowed personally to elect whether he shall come under the provisions of the legislation, which is a right that is not granted to any other group of employees now entitled to civil-service retirement privileges, and this is due to the fact that a number of them only come here for 4 or 5 months.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I may call the gentleman's attention to the fact that section 2 of the bill provides that the election must be made, in the case of an employee now on the roll, within 6 months after the act is passed, and in the case of new employees, within 6 months from the date of their employment. Once they have made their election, they cannot change it. I think the reason and the logic for this provision is that we have a lot of employees here who are purely temporary employees—a Member brings them here and keeps them for, perhaps, a year and then lets them go and replaces them—and we thought it would be better to let it be optional and those who are permanent employees and who stay here as long as the Member stays can come under the act and get the benefits of it; but we would not have a lot of people who are here just for a year included in the system. I do not think the committee would ever give this option to any regular branch of the Government where there is permanent employment.

Mr. COSTELLO. Does not the gentleman think that pressure will be brought upon the committee to bring out legislation of this sort in favor of other employees of the Government?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not think so, because the employees generally want a permanent system.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentlelady from California.

Mrs. KAHN. I do not think this would be much of a burden on the Government, because, as I understand it, they pay into the Treasury as from 1921 a certain percentage of what they have received, just as though they had come in under the act when it was passed in 1921.

Mr. DONDERO. If the gentleman will yield, so that I may ask the author of the bill a question: How much would it cost the Government of the United States to pay its share to the fund to cover the people brought within the scope of the bill?

Mr. RAMSPECK. It would depend upon the length of service of the employee when he retired, and it would cost exactly the same in this case as in the case of other employees now under the Retirement Act.

Mr. DONDERO. Has any estimate been made of what it might cost the Government to provide the money for these employees if they choose to come under the bill?

Mr. RAMSPECK. There is no way to tell how many would choose to come under the bill.

Mr. MEAD. If the gentleman will yield, I believe the employee who elects to come under the bill pays the same percentage as any other employee now under the retirement fund. Actuarially the bill is sound, and I think it should be passed.

Mr. DONDERO. I am in sympathy with the purpose of the bill.

Mr. MEAD. I think the employees here should be given this recognition.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I hope the gentleman from California will not object. This bill has been under consideration for a number of years.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me this is another effort of the civil service to reach out and grab more power, and after a while they will be asking for power to appoint a Congressman's secretary for him.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I renew my objection.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

MARRIED PERSONS IN THE GOVERNMENT SERVICE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5051) to amend the Civil Service Act approved January 16, 1883 (22 Stat. 403), and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN. Reserving the right to object, the title of this bill is very misleading. The bill seeks to amend the married woman's clause in the Economy Act. By reading the title a Member would not see that. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I am opposed to taking that clause out; on the contrary, I would put teeth in it. I object to the bill.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection that I may explain the nature of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. I will withhold the objection and let the gentleman explain how he originated and introduced a bill that came to the committee of which I am chairman. I asked the gentleman if he wanted a hearing, and he said he did not. In about 4 months he rewrites the bill, and it goes to another committee that has jurisdiction over civil-service legislation. They had a hearing, and people who came before the committee insulted the employees of the Government. I will reserve the objection, but I am going to have a roll call on this bill if you ever attempt to pass it.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully take exception to the gentleman's remarks. I care nothing about his threats for a roll call.

I want to address myself to the merits of this bill. I have the highest regard for the gentleman's opinion, but I do think his remarks are uncalled for with reference to the discussion of this bill. Let us stick to the bill and not to personal differences. His statement about the hearing upon the bill and some witnesses allegedly insulting civil-service employees is utterly ridiculous. Since when is he the self-styled custodian for benefits for the civil-service employees?

All the bill does is to attempt to take out the provision in the economy bill, which was temporary, a restriction which provided that if there were two spouses in a family employed by the Government one would have to resign.

Mr. COCHRAN. Oh, the gentleman is wrong. The meaning of the provision adopted in the economy law was if there were a reduction, a man or woman, where both husband and wife are employed by the Government, were to be furloughed before an employee was discharged whose wife or husband was not employed by the Government.

Mr. CELLER. I differ with the gentleman. Let him acquaint himself with the facts before he speaks. My original bill provided that the marital restriction should be repealed. The fundamental principles of civil service are guaranteed tenure of office, fitness, and merit. Such extraneous condition as marriage has not the remotest connection to fitness and qualification of the employee. My original bill—H. R. 9240, Seventy-third Congress, second session—read as follows:

A bill repealing section 213 of the Legislative Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, relating to the dismissal and appointment of married persons

Be it enacted, etc., That section 213 of the Legislative Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, is repealed.

I then changed it at the suggestion of the many organizations interested in it as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States" (act of Jan. 16, 1883, 22 Stat. 403), is hereby amended by adding at the end of the sixth paragraph of section 2 of the act a new paragraph, as follows:

"And no person shall be discriminated against in any case because of his or her marital status in examination, appointment, reappointment, reinstatement, reemployment, promotion, transfer, retransfer, demotion, removal, or retirement. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed."

It became H. R. 5051, introduced January 30, 1935.

The Civil Service Committee further amended my bill by substituting the following:

That section 213 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 406), is hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. Section 9 of the Civil Service Act of January 16, 1883 (22 Stat. 403), is amended by the insertion of a semicolon and the following proviso after the word "grades", which concludes the present section:

"Provided, That no original appointment to one of said grades may hereafter be approved in any case where the combined salaries of the members of a family after such appointment would equal or exceed $4,000."

I am not totally satisfied. But a half a loaf is better than none at all. I accept this substitute and hope it will pass.

Of course the gentleman from Missouri may object on this Consent Calendar call, but I warn him the bill will pass later in the session.

This particular act, the Economy Act, of which I speak, has caused a great deal of discrimination, and it is falling heaviest upon the low-salaried employees. I shall put into the RECORD the tremendous number of low-salaried employees who have been affected. It does not affect those who are especially fit, who are the so-called experts. In truth and in fact some of the heads of the various bureaus refuse to carry into effect the Economy Act, particularly section 213, because they need these people in the service. It may be that a man or his wife have been long in the service and the service cannot well get along without their expertness. The act does not apply to the unclassified service. There are probably 150,000 employees in the unclassified service, where these discriminations do not apply. Why? Furthermore, how many men in this Chamber have their wives on the pay roll? Why should not the act apply to the members of the legislative branch just as well? It does not. If we are going to be fair about it, let us go the entire length and say that no man's wife or daughter or son shall be on the pay roll in this Chamber. Many men would not go forward with that project. If one is sound, the other is sound.

Mr. COCHRAN. I say to the gentleman that such a bill is pending, and I shall vote for it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Why does not the married-person clause apply to the other divisions?

Mr. CELLER. Because section 213 of the Economy Act in this particular section simply provided that this discrimination should apply only to those in the classified service. Therefore, it does not apply to those in the unclassified service. It does not apply to all these alphabetical bureaus, these emergency bureaus.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Then it ought to apply there.

Mr. CELLER. It applies to some of them. It should apply to no service. Marriage should never be a bar.

Mr. O'MALLEY. It ought to apply to every branch of the Government service. It ought to apply not only to the classified service but to the unclassified.

Mr. RICH. And when the alphabetical organizations were formed by the Democratic Party they ought to have put that clause into effect.

If we allow such an extraneous condition as marriage to be a test for retention in the civil service, some will conjure up as an additional condition, race, color, religion, or nationality. Section 213 is but an entering wedge. We will develop real and cruel discriminations against marriage even when the other spouse is employed outside of Government service.

Many hardships have been inflicted by this section. Pension and retirement rights have been destroyed when either spouse had to retire from the service. I am informed, but have not investigated the fact, that numerous couples are on the pay rolls and are actually living together as man and wife but refuse marriage because of the ban of section 213.

Many important organizations are in favor of this bill. Amongst them are the National League of Women Voters, the American Federation of Teachers, the Medical Women's National Association, the National Education Association, the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, and the National Women's Trade Union League, as well as many other national organizations of note and consequence.

The application of the so-called section 213, according to one personnel officer has operated at times to defeat the purpose of reduction, in that it left on the administrative roles the person whose services were not required further, and at the same time took from another branch of service the spouse whose services may have been in demand.

Some establishments took the view that regardless of their employees' status they were emergency agencies and need not consider their employees subject to section 213.

There were 685,975 employees in the service of the Federal Government in the District of Columbia as of December 31, 1934. Of this vast number only 1,603 employees are reported to have been separated from these services through the application of section 213. Many of these 1,603 jobs were declared unnecessary or surplus. No others filled them. There was not the slightest dent made into unemployment.

It has been argued that the application of this section will create many new jobs. It is discernible that that argument is ridiculous.

This is highly important: Information gathered proves that only 6 percent of the separations occurred amongst employees earning $2,500 per annum, whereas over 80 percent of dismissals occurred amongst employees who earned less than $2,000 per annum.

This preponderance of separations from the service occurring in the lower-paid groups is explained by the fact that personnel officers desire to retain for the efficient conduct of Government business those employees who occupy executive and administrative positions requiring a high degree of skill and experience, so that whatever reductions under the act are necessary are made, as far as possible, from the classes of employees, such as stenographers and clerks, where the work of any one person may be easily done by a substitute without a great amount of experience on the job.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDINGS FOR POST-OFFICE STATIONS, ETC.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4672) to provide for the purchase or construction of buildings for post-office stations, branches, and garages, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and I am constrained to object because the Ramseyer rule has not been followed in the report. Inasmuch as we have no present knowledge of existing law, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice to enable the committee to file a supplementary report.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, this bill came from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and perhaps I should have furnished them with that information. It is not necessary that the bill should be hurriedly passed, but in my judgment it is necessary that we pass such a bill before the present emergency appropriations used for the construction of garages and substations become exhausted. If the Department has this authority, we find that in negotiating leases for annexes, garages, or postal substations they can obtain more reasonable rates than if the Government has not the authority to construct such buildings of its own. The originator of this idea was the late Representative Hon. Clyde Kelly, of Pennsylvania. He introduced such a bill in the House. When the bill reached the Senate it was made the subject of an investigation by Senator Blaine. In concluding his investigation, the Senate committee recommended this legislation. Eventually we hope to have permanent legislation that will permit the Post Office to construct substations, garages, and annexes, because it will be a great saving to the Department.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I might have no objection to the bill after studying it.

Mr. RICH. The statement in reference to the great saving to the Department may be all right, and after the Government constructs a building, the Post Office Department gets the building rent free, but it will cost the taxpayers a lot more money to rent such a building from individuals. If the gentleman makes an investigation he will find that that is the case. If you are going to protect the taxpayers of the country, the bill should not become a law.

Mr. MEAD. Both the House committee, with the assistance of the Honorable Clyde Kelly, who sponsored the original measure, and the Senate, under the guidance of Senator Blaine, who conducted a special investigation, came to the conclusion that having this authority, whether it is exercised or not, would result in a saving. In a number of instances we were paying for leased buildings every 5 years. We were paying for a leased building in Chicago every 5 years, and then had nothing but a lease to renew. In my judgment the Government was mulcted out of millions of dollars by racketeering leaseholders, who will be legislated out of office by this bill.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman will find that because of the fact that buildings can be rented in particular towns for much less money, every time we build a post-office building in that particular locality it will cost three or four or five hundred percent more to the taxpayers of this country than it does to rent such buildings.

Mr. MEAD. I shall not find that, and it is not the record so far as substations, garages, and postal annexes are concerned.

Mr. RICH. It is in the report of the Post Office Department.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think I can agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] in some respects.

Mr. MEAD. It is difficult to agree with him in every respect, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. WOLCOTT. As I understand, this does not prohibit the Department from entering into a lease, even though they find they can get a better bargain than by building a building.

Mr. MEAD. That is correct. They have both authorities. Having both authorities, they may build if a saving is effected.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request that this bill be passed over.

Mr. MILLARD. Reserving the right to object, this bill originally contained the power to purchase. Has that been stricken out?

Mr. MEAD. The legislation originally intended to purchase abandoned bank buildings, but there was objection to that from the Treasury and the Post Office and it was taken out. There are many meritorious cases existing all over the country, and I favored such a bill.

Mr. MILLARD. That is quite correct. I have one in my own district.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]?

There was no objection.

LANDS IN MOHAVE, ARIZ., FOR PARK AND RECREATIONAL PURPOSES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8172, to authorize the sale by the United States to the county of Mohave, Ariz., of all public lands in sections 20, 28, and 30, township 20 north, range 15 west, Gila and Salt River meridian, for park, recreational, and other municipal purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, will the lady from Arizona explain the specific nature of this bill and why it is necessary that it should be passed by the Congress?

Mrs. GREENWAY. Because the county of Mohave wishes to develop up in the mountains, nearby their principal town, Kingman, a recreational area, and the Arizona laws do not permit them to spend county money on Federal-owned lands. They already own a parcel of land adjoining this. The Department has approved this bill and if it is passed it will enable the county to develop a recreational area in the mountains where it is cool, nearby their town.

Mr. WOLCOTT. As I understand it, there is no expense involved as far as the Federal Government is concerned? It is simply deeding this property to the county for recreational purposes?

Mrs. GREENWAY. Transferring it, and the expense involved will be a survey expense, to be paid by the county of Mohave.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is it the intention of the lady from Arizona that if the land for any purpose is not for that purpose, it will revert to the Federal Government?

Mrs. GREENWAY. The bill so provides.

Mr. DONDERO. May I ask the lady a question?

Mrs. GREENWAY. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Is this land of any particular value to the United States Government at the present time?

Mrs. GREENWAY. It is public domain at the present time, and the only value it has is in connection with some mining claims, which hold their present status under this bill, as recommended by the Department of the Interior.

Mr. DONDERO. And they will not be relinquished?

Mrs. GREENWAY. They will not.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Further reserving the right to object, I notice the Secretary of the Interior has made an adverse report in regard to this bill. When the lady was here a while ago asking me about it, I agreed I would not object, but I am afraid that I must object.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Will the gentleman allow me to explain?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; I shall be glad to have the lady explain it.

Mrs. GREENWAY. The Secretary of the Interior made an adverse report because he said he would prefer to have this accomplished by the larger bill, S. 738, which has not yet come before the Senate. However, a companion bill to that Senate bill was introduced in the House, H. R. 6594, and that bill was objected to. In other words, what this little bill accomplishes for one county would, in the bill which the Secretary recommended, be accomplished for the whole United States.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It strikes me that the lady's argument is against her case.

Mrs. GREENWAY. It is not, if the gentleman will listen attentively.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If the bill has been before this House and objected to, involving the same thing as the Secretary of the Interior wishes to be objected to, then it strikes me that his objection would be stronger. It would have the additional strength of having been sanctioned by the House.

Mrs. GREENWAY. May I say this? I think the bill was properly objected to because it was a major bill pertaining to the whole United States, all recreational areas, and was up for consideration on the Consent Calendar. This is a very small bill, having to do with one county, and our State laws. Our State laws do not allow this county to spend money on land that is owned by the Federal Government. This acreage simply is supplementary to the land already owned by the county.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does the gentlewoman wish to assure the House that if this bill were presented to the Secretary of the Interior by itself he would have no objection to it?

Mrs. GREENWAY. He already has approved the principle of developing such areas for recreational purposes in his report on S. 738, and my interpretation of his disapproval of this local bill is that he feels it unnecessary and that the matter could be handled under the broader bills, S. 738 and H. R. 6594, if and when they are enacted into law.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. GREENWAY. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I am afraid that the Secretary of the Interior is desirous of keeping all the land in this country in the hands of the Interior Department. I think it is a fine thing if we can turn some of this land back to the States and let them have the benefit of it. I think we should permit this bill to go through.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I will withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker, with the assurance that the bill, when passed, will not be objectionable to the Secretary of the Interior.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to patent to the county of Mohave, Ariz., upon payment by such county of a purchase price of $1, and upon further payment by such county of any expense or fee of any segregational surveys as may be necessary, all the land in sections 20, 28, and 30, township 20 north, range 15 west, Gila and Salt River meridian, the ownership of which rests in the United States, and subject to all existing and valid rights of every description that may have been filed and established thereon, for the purpose of enabling such county to establish a permanent park and recreational site and for such similar and related municipal purposes. Such conveyance shall contain the express condition that if such county shall at any time cease to use such property for such purposes, or shall alienate or attempt to alienate such property, title thereto shall revert to the United States.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "upon", strike out "payment by such county of a purchase price of $1, and upon further"; page 2, line 5, strike out the word "permanent" and insert the word "public"; page 2, line 11, after the word "States", insert "and further that all mineral rights shall be reserved to the United States."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to authorize the transfer by the United States to the county of Mohave, Ariz., of all public lands in sections 20, 28, and 30, township 20 north, range 15 west, Gila and Salt River meridian, for public park, recreational, and other municipal purposes."

AMENDMENT OF PUBLIC ACT NO. 435, SEVENTY-SECOND CONGRESS

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 215, to amend Public Act No. 435, Seventy-second Congress.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the last proviso in that Public Act No. 435 of the Seventy-second Congress entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to modify the terms of existing contracts for the sale of timber on Indian land when it is in the interest of the Indians so to do", as amended, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows: "And provided further, That the authority granted herein shall terminate on the 4th day of September 1935."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike all after the word "of" in line 10, page 1, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "March 1936."

Add a new proviso at the end of the bill as follows:

": Provided further, That all such modified contracts shall have the approval of the tribal general council for tribal lands and of the allottee for allotted lands."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER, ARROW ROCK, MO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8644, granting the consent of Congress to J. L. Jones, Tyre W. Burton, and H. R. Turley, trustees, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Missouri River at or near Arrow Rock, Mo.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object, in view of the fact that this is to be a private toll bridge.

BRIDGE ACROSS COLUMBIA RIVER AT ASTORIA, OREG.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8770, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at Astoria, Clatsop County, Oreg.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that an identical Senate bill (S. 3245) be substituted for the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at Astoria, Clatsop County, Oreg., authorized to be built by the Oregon-Washington Bridge Board of Trustees by an act of Congress approved June 13, 1934, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from June 13, 1935.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOTT: Page 1, line 8, after the words "June 13", strike out "1935" and insert in lieu thereof "1936."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider and a similar House bill (H. R. 8770) were laid on the table.

NEUTRALITY

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a radio speech by my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address of Hon. ARTHUR D. HEALEY, from station WRC, National Broadcasting Co., January 17, 1936:

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience, in addition to the many complex domestic problems before the Congress today we are faced with the acute problem of our foreign policy, caused by the strained conditions existing in Europe.

War clouds are hovering ominously over all of Europe, and the present conflict may well envelop world powers in another deadly struggle.

American sentiment, cognizant of that contingency and desirous of avoiding any of the pitfalls which drew us into the last World War, is overwhelmingly opposed to any entanglements which may serve to involve us in such a conflict. It is incumbent upon this Congress to reenact neutrality legislation which will meet the views of the American people and will effectively preserve our peace and security.

It would be impossible in the time allotted to me to comprehensively discuss such an important subject. I shall therefore restrict myself to a few aspects of the problem which I believe to be of paramount importance and, in view of existing conditions, are of widespread interest today.

There is now in force neutrality legislation which will expire next month. Briefly, this legislation has placed an embargo on the shipment of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent nations. It also provides for the licensing and supervision of munitions makers and that, upon proclamation by the President, persons traveling on ships of belligerent nations or dealing in trade or commerce with belligerent nations shall do so at their own risk and without the protection of the United States flag.

During the last session of Congress, at the time when the neutrality legislation was under consideration, there were proposals to include in the embargoes certain articles or materials used in the manufacture of arms, ammunition, or implements of war or in the conduct of war—and also loans and credits to countries engaged in war. However, these proposals were not included in the neutrality legislation finally enacted.

Now, in the interim between the adjournment of the last session of Congress and the convening of the second session there have been a number of bills introduced by various Members of Congress which seek to amplify the provisions of our neutrality legislation by the inclusion of materials, commodities, loans, and credits.

One of these bills has been introduced by Mr. MCREYNOLDS, chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, and another by Senator PITTMAN, Chairman of the Senate Committee. Both of these bills are now being considered in the respective committees of the House and Senate.

Realizing the seriousness and importance of this legislation, both the House and Senate committees are having protracted hearings and are calling before them recognized experts in international affairs and international law, as well as many Members of Congress who have devoted study to this very perplexing problem.

In the brief time allotted to me I propose to discuss section 4 of the McReynolds bill, which is generally recognized as the House administration bill on neutrality. Briefly, it provides that after a proclamation by the President that the embargoing to belligerent countries of certain articles or materials used in the manufacture of arms, ammunition, or implements of war or in the conduct of war in excess of normal peacetime shipments will serve to promote the security and preserve the neutrality of the United States or to protect the lives and commerce of the nationals of the United States or that to refrain from placing such restrictions would contribute to the prolongation or expansion of the war, then it shall be unlawful to export the said materials and commodities.

I call particular attention to the phrase "will serve to promote the security and neutrality of the United States and to protect the lives and commerce of nationals of the United States" in contrast to the phrase "or that to refrain from placing such restrictions would contribute to a prolongation or expansion of the war." If either or both of these conditions should exist, then the commodities stated might be embargoed—in accordance with the terms of this bill.

I conceive it to be the duty of Congress to so frame the neutrality legislation that it will effectively carry out the first stated objective—namely to maintain the peace and neutrality of the United States. But—however idealistic and commendable our activities to prevent a prolongation or expansion of a foreign war might be, unfortunately this language, in my opinion, would impose upon us a duty which might well, under present circumstances, obligate us to join with the League of Nations in punitive action toward one of the belligerents now at war.

I submit to you that these two purposes are incompatible. It seems perfectly obvious that we cannot promote our first and foremost objective—to secure our own safety and neutrality—if we are to take it upon ourselves to meddle into the affairs of other nations under the guise of the high-sounding phrase of embargoing commodities which may contribute to a prolongation or expansion of the war. The logic seems compelling that, if we attempt the latter objective, we shall endanger our purpose of accomplishing the former. We should be offending the very meaning of neutrality, which, of course, connotes strict impartiality toward all belligerents.

Moreover, even to change our neutrality legislation so as to include commodities and articles which may be used in the preparation of implements of war, etc., would endanger our present neutral position. For it has always been considered that neutrality follows the principles of international law. For a neutral to alter or change its policies, once a war is in progress, so as to affect unequally one belligerent or another, is contrary to the accepted practices and precedents of international law and may constitute a hostile or unneutral act toward a belligerent so affected.

In this connection, I quote from a letter of our Government to Germany, written by President Wilson in 1915. "This Government holds—and is constrained to hold in view of the present indisputable doctrines of accepted international law—that any change in its own laws of neutrality during the progress of a war which would unequally affect the relations of the United States with the nations at war would be an unjustifiable departure from the principle of strict neutrality by which it has consistently sought to direct its actions. The placing of an embargo on the trade in arms at the present time would constitute such a change and be a direct violation of the neutrality of the United States."

It must seem perfectly clear to everyone that the banning of shipments of these articles will, under present circumstances, more adversely affect Italy than Ethiopia and it seems equally clear that if this section is enacted, we would violate our neutrality toward Italy in the present conflict.

Had we included these articles in our neutrality laws now in force, there perhaps could be no justifiable complaint. But it is my opinion that, however well intentioned, if these provisions should be enacted at this time, we shall not have accomplished our aim of strict neutrality, but may very well effectuate the result that we are attempting to avert.

During the Seventy-third Congress, a resolution was introduced which would have had the effect of placing discretion in the President to determine the aggressor nation, and would have given him the power to embargo contraband articles of war against the aggressor. This bill closely followed certain articles of the League of Nations Covenant. Our action under that bill, if Congress had passed it, would have been punitive, and it is likely that by now we would have been joined with other nations comprising the League of Nations in applying sanctions. However, the Seventy-third Congress refused to pass this measure, undoubtedly recognizing that such action would have the effect of joining us with the League of Nations in its punitive measures toward Italy.

Congress, however, did consider that it was essential, in view of our past experience and in the light of the revelations brought out in the munitions inquiry, that we take some positive action before the outbreak of any war to assure our neutrality and our own peace and security. In voting for the present neutrality legislation I believe the Congress were actuated only by their desire and intention to maintain peace and security and not to make us part of a general scheme to punish one belligerent.

Now, apparently, the League of Nations is waiting for us to take the lead in the application of sanctions toward Italy. For the application of an embargo on shipments of oil and cotton in particular would undoubtedly be the strongest measures put into effect by any nation to date. The League has not indicated that it would even follow suit in sanctioning oil and cotton. It is, however, ready to let us be the scapegoats, and members of the League may well continue to trade with Italy along these lines.

The greatly preponderant sentiment in this country, in my judgment, is impelled by one underlying motive only—that we keep out of war and avoid all entanglements which may lead us into war. Therefore our neutrality legislation should be drafted in accordance with that sentiment and we should avoid every pitfall which may lead to the opposite result.

It seems to me, therefore, that the safest thing for Congress to do in passing a neutrality bill is to confine the embargo to arms, ammunitions, and implements of war—at least with respect to wars now in progress—and not include articles not embraced by the legislation now in force. It might be proper and fitting for provision to be made for the embargoing of such other articles on the outbreak of wars not already in progress. However, as I have indicated, to do so with respect to wars already in progress would be an unneutral and hostile act toward such nation as is adversely affected.

The repudiation by European nations of the high motives and ideals which led us to participate in the last war and the attendant train of social and economic ills which have pursued us since that time, have brought about such a revulsion of feeling here that it is the almost universal demand of the American people that we adhere more strictly than ever to the principles enunciated by Washington and refrain from all European entanglements in whatever guise they may appear.

Europe is a maelstrom of intrigue and dubious diplomacy. We must approach this problem with honesty and realism and not be misled by an ingenuous idealism which may precipitate us into the very heart of another great war. For Americans remains the paramount purpose of maintaining our own peace and neutrality. I feel that any effort by the United States to act as an arbiter of the disputes of the world might be fatal to that great purpose.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Democratic members of the committee how far they expect to proceed on the calendar this afternoon?

Mr. COSTELLO. We are planning to go down to no. 471 on the calendar.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May we have a tentative agreement that we will stop after the consideration of Calendar No. 471?

Mr. COSTELLO. Yes.

RURAL POST ROADS, PUERTO RICO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1392, to extend the provisions of certain laws to the Island of Puerto Rico.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a complicated law. From its title, I think it might be very general. I am not prepared to pass on it unless my colleagues are ready to O. K. it.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. IGLESIAS. This is a very short bill. Its purpose is to extend the operation of laws respecting Federal aid for highways to Puerto Rico. Puerto Rico has already expended over $14,000,000 in the construction of roads. This bill has been approved by all the bureaus and departments interested. All it authorizes is matching with Federal funds the expenditures made by Puerto Rico on its roads.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill should be passed over without prejudice until the next call of the calendar. Will this be satisfactory to the Delegate from Puerto Rico?

Mr. IGLESIAS. I should prefer that the bill be considered and passed today.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER, LOUISVILLE, KY.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8661, supplementing the act of Congress approved February 25, 1928, entitled "An act authorizing the city of Louisville, Ky., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Ohio River at or near said city."

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the event that the Louisville Bridge Commission shall issue bridge revenue refunding bonds for the purpose of refunding or renewing the outstanding city of Louisville bridge revenue 4½-percent bonds, dated May 1, 1928, which were issued to provide funds for the construction of the bridge authorized by the act of Congress approved February 25, 1928, entitled "An act authorizing the city of Louisville, Ky., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Ohio River at or near said city", the rates of toll to be charged for the use of said bridge shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a fund sufficient to pay the principal and interest and the redemption premium, if any, of such bridge revenue refunding bonds, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period not exceeding the ultimate maturity of such bridge revenue refunding bonds, and such tolls shall be continued until such payment shall have been made. After a fund sufficient for such payment shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was passed over without prejudice.

TOLL BRIDGE ACROSS THE ST. CLAIR RIVER AT PORT HURON, MICH.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1788, authorizing the State of Michigan to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the St. Clair River at or near Port Huron, Mich., and to acquire other transportation facilities between said State and Canada.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate international commerce, the State of Michigan, by and through its State bridge commission or the successors of said commission, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the St. Clair River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the city of Port Huron, Mich., and the city of Sarnia, Canada, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act, and subject to the approval of the proper authorities in the Dominion of Canada. For like purposes the State of Michigan, by and through its State bridge commission or the successors of said commission, is hereby authorized to purchase, maintain, and operate all or any ferries across the St. Clair River within 5 miles of the location which shall be selected for said bridge, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act, and subject to the approval of the proper authorities in the Dominion of Canada.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the State of Michigan and its State bridge commission, or the successors of said commission, the right and power to enter upon such lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use such real estate and other property in the State of Michigan as may be needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of said bridge and its approaches, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of said State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation of private property for public purposes in said State. And the State of Michigan and its State bridge commission, or the successors of said commission, may exercise in the Dominion of Canada all rights, powers, and authority which shall be granted or permitted to it or them by the proper authorities of the Dominion of Canada or the Province of Ontario, including the entering upon lands and acquiring, condemning, occupying, possessing, and using such real estate and other property in the Dominion of Canada as may be needed for such location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge.

SEC. 3. Notwithstanding any restriction or limitation imposed by the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes", approved July 11, 1916, or by the Federal Highway Act, or by any act amendatory of or supplemental to either thereof, the Secretary of Agriculture may extend Federal aid under such acts, for the construction of said bridge, out of any moneys allocated to the State of Michigan with the consent of the State highway department of said State.

SEC. 4. The said State of Michigan, by and through its State bridge commission, or the successors of said commission, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge and such ferry or ferries in accordance with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund which shall be sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 40 years from the completion thereof. If revenue bonds or other obligations of the State shall be issued to provide for the payment of the cost of such bridge and its approaches and of any such ferry or ferries and the necessary lands, easements, and appurtenances thereto, such sinking fund shall be sufficient to pay the principal and interest of such bonds or obligations as such principal and interest shall fall due, and the redemption or repurchase price of all or any of such bonds or other obligations redeemed or repurchased before maturity. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization or for such payment shall have been so provided such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. Nothing herein contained shall require said State bridge commission or the successors of said commission to maintain or operate any ferry or ferries purchased hereunder, but in the discretion of said commission or its successors any ferry or ferries so purchased, with the appurtenances and property thereto connected and belonging, may be sold or otherwise disposed of or may be abandoned and dismantled whenever in the judgment of said commission or its successors it may seem expedient so to do. The commission and its successors may fix such rates of toll for the use of such ferry or ferries as it may deem proper, subject to the same conditions as are hereinabove required as to tolls for traffic over the bridge.

SEC. 7. The State of Michigan, by and through its State bridge commission, or the successors of said commission, be, and is hereby, authorized to acquire by purchase or by condemnation any existing bridge, tunnel, or ferry (each of which is hereinafter termed a "transportation facility" and shall be deemed to include all property, rights, easements, and franchises relating thereto and deemed necessary or convenient for its operation) between the State of Michigan and the Dominion of Canada. The method of condemnation and of ascertaining and making payment of just compensation shall be in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of this act. Said State of Michigan, by and through said commission or its successors, may unite or group into one or more separate projects for financing purposes such transportation facilities so acquired as shall be deemed practicable by said commission or its successors. Said State of Michigan, by and through said commission or its successors, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for the use of such transportation facilities. In fixing the rates of tolls to be charged for the use of such transportation facilities in a single project, the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating all such transportation facilities included in the particular project under economical management, and an amount sufficient in addition to the foregoing to provide a sinking fund which shall be sufficient to amortize the aggregate cost of the transportation facilities embraced in the particular project, including reasonable interest and financing costs, as soon as practicable under reasonable charges, but within a period not exceeding 40 years from the date of acquiring such transportation facilities. If revenue bonds or other obligations of the State shall be issued to provide for the payment of the cost of such transportation facilities, such sinking fund shall be sufficient to pay the principal and interest of such bonds or obligations as such principal and interest shall fall due, and the redemption or repurchase price of all or any of such bonds or other obligations redeemed or repurchased before maturity.

SEC. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That in order to facilitate international commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the State of Michigan, by and through its State bridge commission, or the successors of said commission, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the St. Clair River, so far as the United States has jurisdiction over the waters of such river, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Port Huron, Mich., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters', approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act, and subject to the approval of the proper authorities in the Dominion of Canada.

"SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the State of Michigan and its State bridge commission, or the successors of such commission, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property in the State of Michigan needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches, as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State of Michigan, upon making just compensation therefor to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

"SEC. 3. The State of Michigan, by and through its State bridge commission, or the successors of said commission, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge in accordance with any laws of the State of Michigan applicable thereto, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

"SEC. 4. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible, under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 30 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches; the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same; and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

"SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, the newspapers of the last few days carried the story that in the event it is necessary to impose additional taxes for the purpose of carrying out a new farm program, as a result of the Supreme Court decision, resort might be had again to the processing tax. My purpose is in the nature of a constructive suggestion to those whose recommendations might be conveyed to the Congress, and to the farmers of the country, that we of the industrial section are in favor of farm legislation, but the opposition to farm legislation that has arisen is to the processing tax that had been imposed.

As we look back two and a half years, in the light of conditions that then existed, we realize that almost any kind of legislation was necessary and expedient at that time to meet the then existing situation, and that a quick and effective dose of drug was necessary to deaden the pain, to be followed by more permanent legislation. Processing taxes might have been the best thing available at that time, although I did not think they were, but the experience of the past two and a half years has shown that permanent farm legislation cannot exist without extreme controversy so long as processing taxes are used as a means of obtaining the revenue.

Mr. Speaker, I want to support farm legislation, although I have not a farm located in my entire district. I spoke on behalf of the Smith bill, which passed this House by six votes. I am not undertaking to speak for my colleagues from Massachusetts of the opposite party, but I think their general sentiment, as well as the Democrats, is in favor of farm legislation. The opposition is to the kind of taxes that may be imposed, to wit, the processing taxes. I hope that in whatever legislation is recommended, if additional taxes are necessary, the processing tax will not be resorted to.

The main objection to that is not only the fact that it is a high sales tax, and I am not afraid of a general manufacturers' excise tax, but its direct effect upon the law of supply and demand; having a tendency to lift the price level out of proportion to the other two interdependent factors which make up the law of supply and demand, namely, production and distribution. While I have no reverence for the law of supply and demand, yet I have a profound respect for it, and any legislation which tends to disturb the law of supply and demand is unwise. It can only be tolerated for a short period of time, and then only as an extreme emergency or expediency.

The effect of the processing tax directly upon the law of supply and demand is to artificially lift the price level, leaving production and distribution to operate in the normal way. The result is that the whole law of supply and demand is seriously affected.

Somewhere in this great country of ours there is a road that we can all travel—north, east, south, or west. Our differences can be adjusted and a legislative road can be built upon which we can all walk along for the welfare of the Nation as a whole. That road can represent the national policy and the national viewpoint on any great national question, and sectional problems and differences can be adjusted by the establishment of such a road. We can all walk along it, no matter what part of the country we come from, if we are honest and fair with each other.

As long as processing taxes are continued there is going to be opposition to farm legislation; not to the fact there should be such legislation, but to the fact that it has an adverse effect upon business and industry as well as the worker of the industrial area. Massachusetts has a population of 4,300,000, about 200,000 of whom live on the soil, the rest being dependent upon business. In order for them to have money in their pockets they have to have employment, and in order to have employment business must exist.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, other States are in the same position. There has to be business for the workers of those States to have employment, there has to be employment in order to have wages and purchasing power. I recognize that the farmer has a problem and that it is a national one. We are willing to cooperate with the farmer; and you who represent the farming districts, we ask that in any tax program in connection with farm legislation there be a regard for the workers of the industrial sections. Impose taxes that will not seriously affect the law of supply and demand, which does not affect business and the worker, and there will be very little opposition to farm legislation. Such opposition will be reduced to a minimum.

Put through a tax program in which everybody bears their just share instead of taking from one class to pay to another class. Put through a program and bring the money into the Treasury of the United States and appropriate it out in the usual way. Put through a tax program that will not have a serious effect upon the law of supply and demand. No matter what people may say about the law of supply and demand, we cannot disregard it. A million factors and a million influences make it up. As I stated before, I have no reverence for the law of supply and demand, but I have a profound respect for it. It, with farming, is the basis of all business prosperity in this or any other country. I hope that whatever program comes up, if new taxes are necessary, it will not carry with it the recommendation of a continuance of the processing taxes. I hope that the farmers and their representatives will look at it from the angle of the interest of all sections of the country and realize that we want to help you. We want to go along with you. There is no opposition to proper farm legislation. The opposition is to the processing taxes that have resulted so harmfully to our business and our workers. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The gentleman from Massachusetts has been expressing his opinion with reference to the processing tax and making recommendations with regard to keeping it out of future legislation.

I sympathize with the gentleman's position on that matter but I should like to call attention to one other thing which I hope this administration will cease doing also.

It has come to my attention recently that in connection with a State project of the State of Massachusetts, the State of the gentleman who has just left the floor, the State prison colony at Norfolk, Mass., is asking an allotment out of WPA funds for an industrial building to house machinery for shoe, metal, and brush manufacturing; that bids have been opened for machinery and it has developed that included in the bids is a proposal for the purchase of machinery to manufacture furniture and for other woodworking purposes in an amount between $40,000 and $50,000.

Mr. Speaker, this proposition to put the Government into competition with the furniture industry seems hard to down. It has been coming forward from time to time for the last 3 years. The furniture industry has been about as badly hit by this depression as any other industry in the country. It is having trouble enough to get back on its feet without having to meet the competition of Government manufacturing, and it is certainly to be hoped that the administrator of the WPA funds will not make any allotment to this State prison colony at Norfolk, or to any other institution for the purpose of putting up machinery or establishing a factory to manufacture furniture.

In order that there may be no uncertainty as to my position in the matter, I have today filed with the Administrator, along with other protests which, I understand, have been made, a protest against the allotment of funds for any such purpose.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman believe that under present conditions it is detrimental for the Government to enter into any kind of manufacturing business, and does not the gentleman believe that all these organizations should cease going into business in competition with private enterprise?

Mr. MAPES. I certainly do, but this is particularly true of the furniture industry.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Speaker, I agree heartily with the sentiments of my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] in reference to the processing tax. We in Massachusetts and in New England want to help the farmer. I voted for the A. A. A. in company with many of my colleagues. They said to us in our campaigns, "You voted for the A. A. A. for the farmer and raised the price of food." We said, "No; we did not, but we know that if the farmer in Kansas is not prosperous you do not work here in Massachusetts."

This is our attitude, and we want to help out; but we hope this will not be done by processing taxes, which only make our workers and manufacturers bitter against farm legislation.

In reference to the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], we had a bill brought out from the Judiciary Committee which passed the House and Senate in reference to prison machinery and the manufacture of shoes, brooms, and brushes, and the various other things made in the penitentiaries. As chairman of the Committee on Labor, naturally, I would be against prison labor competing with private industry, but that is not the situation today. Under the law we have today, they make a little of this and a little of that, whether it is your furniture or my shoes or my textiles or somebody else's brooms or brushes, and Sanford Bates, the Prison Commissioner, as well as all the wardens who appeared before the Committee on Labor when we brought in that prison-made-labor-goods bill, which was known as the Hawes-Cooper bill, to prevent prison-made goods from competing with free labor, agreed that unless you give the men in these prisons something to do you have riots, you have insanity, and you have all sorts of evils growing out of such a condition.

Now, I do not want to see them competing with private industry, but I do not object to their making a few shoes or a few brushes, or a small amount of furniture if it will not interfere with private industry, and at the same time keep the prisoners at work.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. I should like to ask for information. My information is that the State project in connection with the State prison colony at Norfolk was for an industrial building to house machinery for shoe, metal, and brush manufacture.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; Norfolk is the prison colony in the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. MAPES. But when the bids were opened they included not only machinery for shoe, metal, and brush manufacture but for the purchase of machinery to manufacture furniture as well. What I want to ask is, Why were the bids broader than the State project?

Mr. CONNERY. For the very reason, I suppose, to give them something else to manufacture, anything to keep the prisoners at work. I want to say that the manufacture of furniture at this colony will not interfere with you manufacturers at Grand Rapids.

Mr. MAPES. Yes; but why were the bids broadened?

Mr. CONNERY. Because they wanted to keep it more diversified, and that is what we are in favor of.

Mr. MAPES. Is it a proposal of the manufacturers of machinery or of the State authorities?

Mr. CONNERY. I presume the State colony authorities.

Mr. MAPES. Why did the State allow the bidders to go further than the project required or proposed?

Mr. CONNERY. I presume on the recommendation of the warden. They have to do these things; they have to give these men work or they will go insane.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. RICH. It was said when we repealed the eighteenth amendment that it would reduce the number of people in the State prisons. Now, they say there are twice as many people in the State prisons in 1935 than there were in 1934. After awhile you will have everybody in State prisons.

Mr. CONNERY. I do not think that everybody will go to prison; at least I hope not. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLARD. Why not manufacture these things by hand and quit putting in machinery?

Mr. CONNERY. I agree to that; I should like to have that done. But the goods manufactured in prisons now do not interfere with private industry to any appreciable extent. So I think my friend from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] is needlessly disturbed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended.

USE OF NET WEIGHTS IN INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8631) to provide for the use of net weights in interstate and foreign commerce transactions in cotton, to provide for the standardization of bale covering for cotton, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. GRANFIELD. I object.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, will these gentlemen withhold their objection?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. GRANFIELD. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. I object for this reason: For 75 years factories in my city, where my constituents are employed, have been engaged in the manufacturing of coverings for cotton, and if this bill should pass, my constituents will be out of jobs. I am going to try to protect them. I shall continue to object.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the gentlemen from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK and Mr. CONNERY], who a while ago expressed their deep interest in agriculture. I appreciate the fact that the Representatives from New England are interested in agriculture. Here is a real farmers' bill. For all these years that we have been producing cotton we have been putting on heavy jute bagging and selling in this country on a gross-weight basis, while every other cotton country on the face of the earth sells on a net-weight basis. In selling on a gross-weight basis we are wasting millions annually in freight, insurance, and many other items. This bill is endorsed by the Department of Agriculture and by every farm organization, by the Cotton Merchants Association, by the agricultural commissioners in every cotton State, unless it be the Georgia commissioners. Sometime ago, when a committee was appointed to investigate the complaints from New England about the processing tax, that committee came back with a strong endorsement for net weights, which would mean the saving, as stated, of millions of dollars annually.

Cotton is now being covered with jute which is imported from India, the second largest cotton-growing country in the world, where you gentlemen declare today they are taking the market from the South by increasing their production of cotton. It is perfectly all right to plow under 4,000,000 bales of perfectly good American cotton, but, according to those who represent New England, it is all wrong to cover cotton with cotton, thereby consuming 200,000 bales, mostly low-grade cotton.

New England is strong for a tariff to protect the industries in New England, but perfectly willing for India to flood this country with duty-free jute, taking the home materials from the cotton farmer. I appreciate what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] states about his employees, but unless we take care of agriculture and gentleman's employees will be forced to join the unemployed. How about the unemployed in the textile mills that would be put to work manufacturing cotton bagging? The mails of this country should be tied with cotton twine but jute twine is being used, all of which is helping India at the expense of cotton farmers, cotton mills, and textile employees.

I expect to continue my fight for the people and for the utilization of products grown in this country.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. GRANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MALHEUR NATIONAL FOREST, OREG.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 464) to add certain lands to the Malheur National Forest in the State of Oregon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MONUMENT TO GENERAL LAFAYETTE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4989) for the erection of a monument to Gen. Marquis de Lafayette.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MEMORIAL TO EARLY SETTLERS

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 307, authorizing the erection of a memorial to the early settlers whose land grants embrace the site of the Federal City.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant permission for the erection on public grounds of the United States in the city of Washington, other than those of the Capitol, the Library of Congress, and the White House, of a memorial of simple and artistic form and design to those early settlers whose land grants embrace the site of the Federal City, by the National Society of the Daughters of the American Colonists, a corporation, one of whose objects is the erection of memorials to commemorate historic persons, sites, or events of the colonial period of this country in the several States and the District of Columbia: Provided, That the site chosen and the design of the memorial shall have the approval of the National Commission of Fine Arts, and that the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of the said memorial.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

TRANSPORTATION OF KIDNAPED PERSONS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2421, to amend the act entitled "An act forbidding the transportation of any person in interstate or foreign commerce, kidnaped, or otherwise unlawfully detained, and making such act a felony", as amended.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act forbidding the transportation of any person in interstate or foreign commerce, kidnaped, or otherwise unlawfully detained, and making such act a felony", as amended (48 Stat. 781; U. S. C., title 18, secs. 408a, 408b, and 408c), be, and it is hereby, amended by the addition of the following section:

"SEC. 4. Whoever receives, possesses, or disposes of any money or other property, or any portion thereof, which has at any time been delivered as ransom or reward in connection with a violation of section 1 of this act, knowing the same to be money or property which has been at any time delivered as such ransom or reward, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment in the penitentiary for not more than 10 years, or both."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FUNDS OF FEDERAL PRISONERS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3120, to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to transfer certain moneys to "Funds of Federal prisoners."

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the trust fund in the United States Treasury entitled "Funds of Federal prisoners", the sum of $685.62, which amount represents the loss sustained by said fund as a result of the failure of the State Savings Bank, of Leavenworth, Kans., in which part of said fund was formerly deposited. W. I. Biddle, formerly warden and special disbursing officer of the United States Penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., and the sureties on his bonds as warden and special disbursing officer are hereby released from all liability on account of the loss sustained by the said fund.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OFFICIAL SEAL FOR UNITED STATES VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3328, to provide an official seal for the United States Veterans' Administration, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, empowered and directed to cause a seal, which shall be judicially noticed, to be made and provided for the Veterans' Administration, with such device as in his judgment shall seem proper. Copies of any public documents, records, or papers belonging to or in the files of the Veterans' Administration, when authenticated by the seal and certified by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, or employee of the Veterans' Administration to whom proper authority shall have been delegated in writing by the Administrator, shall be evidenced equal with the originals thereof.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 3, strike out the word "evidenced" and insert the word "evidence."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BOUNDARY WATERS, WASHINGTON, OREGON, AND IDAHO

The Clerk called the next business, Senate Joint Resolution 23, giving consent of the Congress of the United States to the States of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho, or any two of said States, to agree upon the jurisdiction to be exercised by said States over boundary waters between any two or more of said States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. As I understand it, there was a tentative agreement between this side and the other side that when we reached the next bill we would conclude the calling of the calendar. That was done in deference to the Speaker's wishes in the matter, however, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows nothing about the agreement. The Chair has been informed that Calendar No. 474 was to be called.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That agreement was entered into in deference to the Speaker's wishes in the matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no wishes about the matter, of course; but that was the information which the Chair had. Of course, it is up to the House how far we shall proceed.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I might advise the gentleman from Michigan that it has been further agreed that the former agreement be withdrawn and we conclude with Calendar No. 477.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to call up a bill which in that case will not be reached. I have discussed the matter with both sides, and I do not think there is any objection to it. It is Calendar No. 500.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Well, let us pass on that when we come to it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next bill on the calendar.

CLAIMS FOR DAMAGE TO NORWEGIAN STEAMER "TAMPEN"

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8629, authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Government of Norway in settlement of all claims for reimbursement on account of losses sustained by the owner and crew of the Norwegian steamer Tampen.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill, S. 3425, be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not overwise appropriated, for payment to the Government of Norway in full and final settlement of all claims for reimbursement on account of losses sustained by the owner and crew of the Norwegian steamer Tampen by reason of the detention of the vessel by the United States Coast Guard during June 1925, the sum of $8,765.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table, and a similar House bill was laid on the table.

LEASE OF AGUA CALIENTE OR PALM SPRINGS BAND OF MISSION INDIANS OF CALIFORNIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8600, to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to make a lease for the Agua Caliente or Palm Springs Band of Mission Indians of California.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be rereferred to the committee. I am the author of the bill, and the chairman of the committee desires that action also.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to recommitting the bill to the committee?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Would it be possible now for us to put into effect the agreement, or has the Speaker any objection to that? We are not prepared on our side of the aisle to go any further on this calendar, and we will be constrained to object to every bill that is called if we must proceed further.

SITE FOR NAVAL AIR STATION, MIAMI, FLA.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up Calendar No. 500, H. R. 8372, to authorize the acquisition of lands in the vicinity of Miami, Fla., as a site for a naval air station and to authorize the construction and installation of a naval air station thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, of course we on this side do not presume to be bossing this Consent Calendar, but there is one bill further along on the calendar which, I am advised, if it is ever going to be passed, should be passed now. If this bill which has just been called requires its immediate passage, we shall be glad to have the gentleman explain it.

Mr. WILCOX. I shall be glad to explain my reason for asking that this bill be called out of order. The bill proposes to convey to the United States Government a very valuable tract of land, without cost to the Government, to be used for a naval reserve aviation unit. The Navy and the Coast Guard have expressed a desire for this tract of land. The city of Miami proposes to buy the land and give it to the Government. It now has the land under an option, which expires shortly. The owners of the property have served notice on the city that the option will not be renewed at the present price, but that a greatly increased price will be asked. For that reason it is very important that the bill be passed at this time to authorize the city to buy the land at its present price, because otherwise we would not be able to raise the money to buy the land at the advanced price, and the Government will lose the property.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Can the gentleman verify that by a statement from the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. WILCOX. I do not know whether the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs is acquainted with the increase in price or not. The bill was reported out after full discussion. The Assistant Secretary of the Navy addressed a communication to the committee expressing his desire for the property. I can state in my own place as a Member of this House that the facts which I have just narrated are true; that there is a demand for an increase in the price. I can also state in my place that unless the city is able to buy it at the present price named in the option, it is very probable that the Government will not be able to secure the property.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. With this explanation I will withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to this bill being called up now, but if it is called up, I shall ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Right at present I do have objection to the bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, at this time, then, I object to its consideration.

CALIFORNIA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9871), to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the participation of the United States in the California-Pacific International Exposition to be held at San Diego, Calif., in 1935 and 1936; authorizing an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes", approved March 7, 1935, to provide for participation in the California-Pacific International Exposition to be held at San Diego, Calif., in 1936, to authorize an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman give the House any reason why this proposition is imminent?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Yes. The San Diego Fair reopens on the 15th of February. The Government has built a building there at the cost of $150,000. The Government departments will have to withdraw their exhibits by the 15th of February and send them back to Washington unless this authorization bill passes this House. Even if it is passed today, it will leave us only 2 weeks to get the bill passed in the Senate.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, this bill calls for an appropriation of money.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. It does not.

Mr. LAMNECK. We have made one appropriation for this fair. So far as I am concerned, I am through making such appropriations. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. This is only an authorization. It will be up to the Appropriations Committee as to whether it will make the appropriation.

Mr. LAMNECK. I understand that; but the usual custom is that, if we pass a bill authorizing an appropriation, the appropriation is subsequently made. I object.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection to permit me to make a statement?

Mr. LAMNECK. Yes; I withhold my objection for that purpose.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. The San Diego fair is going to continue whether the Government exhibit does or not. Last year the Federal Government built a building at a cost of $150,000. Does the gentleman want this building to remain vacant? One million five hundred and eighty-eight thousand people attended the Government's exhibit in the first 5½ months of the fair last year. There is going to be a fair in Texas. People going from the gentleman's State and from the East can just as well go through Texas and into San Diego and see both these exhibits.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may say this matter was started last year by the Rules Committee bringing out a rule to grant this amount. The Government erected this building, as the gentleman from California has said. It is a very beautiful building. I saw it myself. There was a real demand for the continuation of the fair. It is a beautiful fair. To leave this building unoccupied in that fair for this small amount to continue it, would be almost a disgrace to the Government.

What would happen if objection is made here? The Rules Committee will be overwhelmed to bring out a rule to accomplish the same purpose. We do not like to work much in the committee. I suggest this as an easy way to dispose of the matter.

Mr. LAMNECK. I should like to know how much money it will take to carry on this program.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I have asked for an authorization of $75,000. As soon as this bill is passed the Budget Director will contact the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of State, which officers are the commissioners in charge of the Government's exhibit, to see what amount will be required. Not all of the $75,000 may be used. When the estimate comes before the Committee on Appropriations, that committee will act.

Mr. LAMNECK. How much money was spent on the exhibit last year?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. We do not know. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars was appropriated. Out of this was taken the $150,000 for the building. I understand a balance still remains in this fund. I do not know how large it is. It will, of course, be covered into the Treasury. I am not asking for that balance and this additional amount too.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Can the gentleman tell us where we are going to get the money?

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States continue its participation in the California-Pacific International Exposition at San Diego, Calif., in 1936.

SEC. 2. For this purpose the act entitled "An act providing for the participation of the United States in the California-Pacific International Exposition to be held at San Diego, Calif., in 1935 and 1936; authorizing an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes", approved March 7, 1935, as hereby amended, is extended and made applicable to the continuance of the participation of the United States in the said exposition in 1936 in the same manner and to the same extent and for the same purposes as originally provided in said act, except insofar as the provisions of that act specify the erection of a building or group of buildings.

SEC. 3. In addition to the sum of $350,000 authorized by the aforesaid act to be appropriated for the participation of the United States in the California Pacific International Exposition to be held at San Diego, Calif., in 1935 and 1936, and appropriated under the section entitled "California-Pacific International Exposition" of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes", otherwise known as Public Law No. 21, Seventy-fourth Congress, and approved March 21, 1935, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $75,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INTERNATIONAL MANUFACTURERS' SALES CO. OF AMERICA, INC.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4178) for the relief of the International Manufacturers' Sales Co. of America, Inc., A. S. Postnikoff, trustee, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland, Mr. RAMSPECK, and Mr. PITTENGER.

OTTO MISCH CO.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6137) for the relief of the Otto Misch Co., with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Otto Misch Co., the sum of $28,000, in payment for work done by the said company in repairing damages to the United States marine hospital at Norfolk, Va., caused by hurricane and flood on August 22 and 23 and September 15 and 16, 1933: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us the difference between these two bills?

Mr. DONDERO. I shall be glad to answer the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment provides that not more than 10 percent of the claim shall be paid to any attorney having any interest in the matter.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have no objection to that feature.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A. A. A. RULING

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for a sufficient time to read an article which I hold in my hand on the A. A. A.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONAGHAN (reading):

CLAPPER SEES A. A. A. RULING AS BLOW AT DEMOCRATIC GOVERNMENT—SUPREME COURT, HE SAYS, IS IN POLITICS UP TO ITS NECK AND DAINTY PHRASES ARE NO LONGER NECESSARY IN DISCUSSING ITS ACTIONS; ISSUE PUT SQUARELY TO ROOSEVELT AND HE CAN ACCEPT IT OR SEEK RADICAL CHANGE

By Raymond Clapper

The Supreme Court gave plain warning in its high-handed scrapping of A. A. A. that other New Deal measures are to be mowed down as soon as it can get around to the grim business. That is, as soon as it can find the technical legal pretexts to support its political opinions.

This leaves President Roosevelt free to do one of two things. He can resign himself to the Court's verdict as the final word of divine inspiration. He can accept the Court as the governing oligarchy of the country. He can yield to its political philosophy which would confine the Federal Government largely to running the Army, the Navy, and municipal affairs in the District of Columbia.

Or he can accept the challenge as a political one, which it is, and go to the country to determine whether the people want to be governed by their elected President and their elected Congress or by a "lame duck" judicial dictatorship.

There is no use being dainty any longer in discussing the Court. It is in politics up to its neck. It can no longer claim the immunity from political discussion which a purely judicial body properly enjoys. Since it is vetoing acts of Congress right and left it is no more immune from discussion than the President is immune when he vetoes an act of Congress.

That this country, which presumably believes in the democratic form of government, will permit itself to be governed by a judicial oligarchy is incredible. We have protested against Roosevelt's tendencies toward dictatorship. More dangerous is judicial dictatorship, because the Supreme Court doesn't have to come up for reelection.

Look at the six men who have just undone the A. A. A., which has operated for 2½ years and made itself an integral part in the recovery of the country.

The youngest is Roberts, a Philadelphia corporation lawyer, appointed by Hoover. Comparatively young, a man who has been out in the world of big affairs until very recently, you would think he would still be too practical minded to have made this retreat back almost to the days of the Confederation.

The senior is Van Devanter, 76 years old, who was placed on the throne by Taft in 1910 after a small career as a lawyer in Wyoming where he also doubled in Republican State politics.

The Chief Justice is one of the ablest men in the country, and has breadth of statesmanship. Yet he was rejected by the country when he ran as a Republican candidate for President in 1916.

McReynolds was a small-time Tennessee lawyer, whose friends got him into the Wilson Cabinet and then on the Supreme Bench, a man whose decisions have shown the most narrow legalistic conception of American problems.

Butler was a Minnesota corporation lawyer, known as an extreme reactionary before Harding put him on the bench.

Sutherland was a Utah lawyer who became a Republican Senator for one term, when he was retired by the voters and later rescued and put on the bench by Harding.

These are the mighty men who have scrapped A. A. A. They are the men who have made themselves the supreme custodians of the Nation and who have assumed the right to dictate what the Nation shall do to save itself from distress. They are the men who have said that the Government, after failing in every other attempt to restore the equilibrium of farm prices, shall not continue with the one method which in a trial of 2½ years has greatly alleviated the situation.

These six men tell us we can't do it. They get away with it because John Marshall, while engaged in a desperate political battle with Jefferson, did. Nothing in the Constitution says they can.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes and probably less.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] asks permission to proceed for 10 minutes and probably less. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, last week when we were considerating the independent offices appropriation bill the subchairman, Mr. WOODRUM, of Virginia, made the statement on the floor of the House "Estimates are one thing and what Congress appropriates is another."

I want to call attention of the Members of the House to the fact that the majority party is responsible for what Congress appropriates. You are in the saddle and any legislation that is enacted is charged to the Democratic Party—surely to no other. I wish to say this to you, the majority party, that what Congress appropriates is one thing—and where are you going to get the money is another. Where are you going to get the money to pay the bills you have contracted in the past 3 years? It is one of the most serious questions confronting us today. We are building up the greatest national deficit in the history of any nation in the world, and you are responsible for it.

The President, in his address on the state of the Union, says, "I am pointing out the way." And I want to say to you instead of approaching a balanced Budget you are getting farther away from it every day during this session of Congress. Now, I want to point out to you how you can make a start to secure more funds. In the first place, the Sherman antitrust laws should be enforced. Big business, great consolidations have been one reason for unemployment, and I am only going to cite today the contemplated mergers in the steel industry. I am in favor of more small business enterprises rather than a few large unwieldly corporations.

I want to pay my respects first to the businessmen of this country who are honest and honorable and obey the laws. As long as they do that they cannot be criticized, because statesmen will make laws to prohibit things that are detrimental to the country. Politicians make laws that will tear down the structure of our country.

Let us enforce the Sherman antitrust laws and prohibit any further consolidation. Your attention is called to the contemplated merger of the Sharon Steel Hoop Co., of Sharon, Pa., and the Pittsburgh Steel Co., of Pittsburgh. They are about ready to consolidate. The Sharon Steel Co. owns its own ore lands, blast furnaces, and steel works. This is one of the 12 largest in quantity production in this country. I understand the president of the Sharon Steel Co. was just elected president of the Pittsburgh Steel Co., and it looks as if everything was just ready for them to consolidate the two companies.

Let me also call your attention to the Republic Steel Corporation, which lately acquired the Corrigan McKinney Steel Co. They also acquired the Truscon Steel Co., as well as the Gulf State Steel Co. The ingot capacity on January 1, 1935, of the Republic Steel Corporation was 4,900,000 tons. On January 1, 1936, the capacity of this corporation was 6,550,000 tons. The Republic owns vast iron and coal deposits and blast furnaces in Alabama, and the acquiring of the Gulf State Steel adds to its ore and coal reserves and a property that is susceptible of easy and profitable expansion.

Now, I am not going to burden you with listing all the contemplated consolidations, but I certainly wish to call your attention to the notices that were sent out by the Bethlehem Steel Corporation of New Jersey—the second largest steel company in this land of ours—calling a meeting of the stockholders on February 26, 1936. They have a contemplated move on hand to throw off the holding-company cloak and become an operating company. This would mean a great, large corporation with hundreds of millions of dollars capital. They are putting out a sop to the stockholders to pay off the preferred dividends on the preferred stock, which is past due, by issuing $20 par preferred stock in order that they can pay the back dividends on preferred stock by issuing one share to each stockholder of preferred and $1 cash, which is still further going to increase their capital structure.

Now, where is Congress going to get the money? That is the question that I want to bring to the attention of this Congress.

The object of this merger is to defeat the income-tax laws as amended in 1934 under which each subsidiary should file a return and pay a tax on its separate net taxable income—and where also dividends are paid from one corporation owned by another there was assessed 10 percent on the dividends to be received.

The Bethlehem Steel Corporation is going to propose to the stockholders to drop or reduce the bonus that is paid to the executive officers of 8 percent and make it 5 percent, when the officers are receiving as high as $250,000 a year in salary. Now, they are not going to evade the law. Legally they can do this very thing, but we as statesmen should make laws prohibiting these consolidations; or, in other words, we should enforce the laws we now have on the statute books, and this is up to the United States Attorney General to enforce the laws.

If this stockholders' meeting permits this consolidation it will mean the Bethlehem Steel Corporation of New Jersey, the Bethlehem Steel Corporation of Delaware, the Kalman Steel Corporation, the Bethlehem Mines Corporation, and the Union Iron Works with all of their subsidiaries will be merged into one great corporation known as the Bethlehem Steel Corporation of New Jersey.

I have nothing against the officers of these corporations; they are only trying to do things in a large business way. They may be thoroughly honest men who are only trying to make the greatest amount of money for the corporations. This helps to kill small business. Let me call your attention also to the fact that this great corporation is now putting its hands out to take over smaller corporations where they can get them for "10 cents on the dollar." At this very moment they are trying to take over the Williamsport Wire Rope Co., a corporation located in Williamsport, Pa., by paying $700 for each $1,000 bond.

Let me show you what this is going to mean to the common-stock holders of that corporation—the Williamsport Wire Rope Co. They have outstanding as of November 30, 1935, $1,221,000 of first-mortgage 6-percent gold bonds that the bondholders' committee recommended be sold to Bethlehem at $700 per $1,000 bond. They have liabilities under the receivership of $54,190.65. Notes payable to bank and accounts payable for merchandise, $1,321,259.38. That is all the liabilities of this corporation except for preferred and common stock.

Now, let us see what assets they possess. They have cash on hand of $569,718.85; accounts receivable, $186,032.41; inventory (raw material, goods in process, finished goods), inventoried at $1,037,427.36; or a total of quick assets of $1,793,178.62. They have other convertible assets of $66,590.34. Then they have lands, buildings, machinery, and equipment valued at $2,462,342.08; prepaid expenses of $15,471.25; and deferred charges of $70,684.01.

Figure out for yourself just what this corporation—the Bethlehem Steel Co.—is going to receive for the amount of money expended. The preferred-stock holders and the common-stock holders will get nothing under the original proposal made by the Bethlehem Steel Co. You men in Congress know that the Bethlehem Steel Co. has been operating less than 35 percent in the last 4 years. But the Williamsport Wire Rope Co. has been operating fairly well. Bethlehem makes more wire rope than any corporation in America, and they want to absorb another plant to further control the market for wire rope.

Why should these big corporations take over these small plants that are in operation, giving employment to the people in certain localities, just because the Attorney General and Congress sit idly by and permit them to do so?

I have written a letter to the Attorney General, and I hope that he will take action to prohibit further consolidations of these great corporations and that he will enforce the Sherman antitrust laws. I ask the majority party in power to use their best efforts to prohibit further great consolidations for the purpose of evading the tax laws that are now on the statute books that were intended to bring in revenue to the Federal Treasury.

This is one way you can get the money to help pay for these enormous expenditures you are making.

But, I say to you now in all good faith, Congress, stop this orgy of spending; enforce the Sherman antitrust laws; and, Members of Congress, let us try to balance the Budget.

Let us raise the money before we spend it. That is the common-sense way of running the Government. That, in my judgment, is statesmanship. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman speaks not particularly favorable of the Bethlehem Steel Co., which has to do with my constituent and friend, Charles Schwab. I wonder if the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows or has ever heard that Mr. Schwab has never indicated any sympathy for the present administration?

Mr. RICH. I do not know anything about that. Mr. Schwab may be the finest man in the world. I know nothing detrimental to him, but I object to these great corporations ruining this country. We want the small units in the manufacturing business. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes or less.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes or less. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Speaker, last week we passed the so-called soldiers' "bonus" bill, which is this afternoon being considered by the Senate. It is not my purpose to bore you with a long speech upon the bonus, but inasmuch as this is probably its last journey through the Congress—or at least we hope so—there are one or two things I have in mind to which I should like to call the attention of the Members.

In the first instance, an impression has been attempted to be given out by the opponents of the veterans and the opponents of this measure, that this is the first time the American soldiers and veterans have ever made any request or demand upon the Government. The fact is that in the very inception of this Government it was necessary for the soldiers of the Revolutionary Army to make certain requests upon Congress so that they would get fair treatment and justice for their services. They had a meeting, and resolutions were drawn up, and it is to these resolutions to which I direct your attention. A part of these resolutions, I think, expresses the sentiment of the veterans of this country. It is to their credit that they drew such a resolution, and I believe the sentiment expressed therein is present among our soldiers and veterans today and always has been. Here is the particular resolution to which I desire to direct your attention:

Resolved unanimously, That at the commencement of the present war, the officers of the American Army engaged in the service of their country from the purest love and attachment to the rights and privileges of human nature; which motives still exist in the highest degree; and that no circumstances of distress or danger shall induce a conduct that may tend to sully the reputation and glory which they have acquired at the price of their blood and 8 years of faithful services.

As a result of these resolutions, Gen. George Washington petitioned the Congress in behalf of the veterans, and this is what he said to the Congress of the United States in his petition:

For if, besides the simple payment of their wages, a further compensation is not due to the sufferings and sacrifices of the officers, then have I been mistaken indeed. If the whole Army have not merited whatever a grateful people can bestow, then have I been beguiled by prejudice and built opinion on the basis of error. If this country should not in the event perform everything which has been requested in the late memorial to Congress, then will my belief become vain and the hope that has been excited void of foundation. And if, as has been suggested for the purpose of inflaming their passions, the officers of the Army are to be the only sufferers by this revolution; if, retiring from the field, they are to grow old in poverty, wretchedness, and contempt; if they are to wade through the vile mire of dependency and owe the miserable remnant of that life to charity, which has hitherto been spent in honor; then shall I have learned what ingratitude is; then shall I have realized a tale which will embitter every moment of my future life.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARPENTER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. I suggest that the gentleman take the statement of George Washington, which he has just read, and send it to General Pershing, General Harbord, and Admiral Byrd, who are members of the Economy League, and who did not send any such document to this Congress.

Mr. CARPENTER. I will say in reply to my colleague from Massachusetts, if this is not the sentiment of these gentlemen whom he has just named, that it should be.

When I came out for the payment of the bonus, 4 years ago, the question of the manner of payment, of course, came up, because that is a question that is always raised. They say, "We think the soldiers ought to be paid, but how about the enormous expense involved?"

I took the position 4 years ago we could pay it, and, of course, I was in favor of paying it with currency. The fact that the bill now being passed provides for payment by a bond issue and not by an expansion of the currency, I maintain if I vote for such a measure I am on firm ground, because 4 years ago, when I advocated such a measure, we had not expended all the money that the Government has spent since that time. We could have afforded to have paid it then, because it only required something like $2,000,000,000 to pay it, and the expenditure of many billions of dollars since that time is ample proof of the fact that we could have paid it then; and if we could have paid it then, I was right at that time in my support of the measure, regardless of the method of payment. I made my obligation then, and when I support the measure at this time I am doing nothing more than carrying out an obligation that I made with my constituents at that time.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARPENTER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman stated we are on "firm ground." I should like to call his attention——

Mr. CARPENTER. I said the advocates of paying this bonus are on firm ground.

Mr. RICH. I thought the gentleman said we are on firm ground, and I wanted to call his attention to the Federal Treasury statement of January 15, and see whether he considers that to be firm ground or not.

Mr. CARPENTER. There is one other thing I want to call to the attention of the House. The veterans' organizations, as such, attempted to win public favor for the payment of the bonus. They have done a lot of work, and they are entitled to a lot of credit for sticking by their buddies. But they are not the only ones who have supported this legislation. Of course, the politicians and many other people in this country were for it and gave it a lot of lip service, but they did not really get behind it sufficiently to put it over.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARPENTER. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. I just want to put in the gentleman's remarks the statement, which I am quite sure he would like to have in his statement, that the veterans' organizations originally never asked for any bonus, but such bills were offered by Members of Congress.

Mr. CARPENTER. And the veteran merely took what was given him without having anything to say about it.

There is one group of people that should be given credit because credit is due them, and they are the members of the farm organizations, especially the Farmers Union. This, perhaps, was because of the expansion feature of the bill, and, perhaps, there were other groups in this country who favored the bill because of expansion primarily. They came forward and popularized the payment of the bonus in this country, regardless of the method of payment, and without their interest in the legislation I doubt whether there would have been the popular demand to back up Congress and the veterans' organizations such as exists today.

In accordance with the permission of the House that has been granted to me, I am herewith setting forth the approximate amounts that will be paid to the holders of adjusted-service certificates in the 14 counties of my district, based upon the tabulations figured upon H. R. 1:

Chase	$129,098.64
Clay	270,304.92
Coffey	253,536.21
Dickinson	480,405.90
Geary	266,776.62
Greenwood	357,193.95
Lyon	542,986.80
Marion	385,123.23
Morris	220,221.63
Osage	325,680.66
Pottawatomie	294,557.34
Riley	369,208.74
Wabaunsee	201,113.10
Woodson	158,327.82
Total	4,254,535.56
Total for Kansas	34,930,151.43

[Here the gavel fell.]

THE TOWNSEND PLAN

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, in every period of financial distress the country has been flooded with schemes and plans for short cuts to prosperity. These plans have included every conceivable idea from the simple process of printing enough paper money to make everybody rich, to plans for dividing up the wealth of the Nation into equal shares and giving every individual an equal amount. Most of these Utopian plans have been sponsored by well meaning but misguided dreamers who have been prompted by the highest and noblest of motives—that of relieving the suffering and distress of the poor. Some of them have been used by demagogues as a means for elevating themselves into high political office, by making political capital of human suffering. But whatever may have been or may now be the motives and purposes of those who sponsor them, they are all based upon the mistaken idea that the immutable laws of nature and of economics may be ignored; that there is an easy road to wealth and that something may be had for nothing.

The period of suffering and distress through which we have recently been passing has produced many of these schemes and plans. Most of them have as their basic idea some plan for taking from those who have and giving to those who do not have. And, when we contemplate the present unequal distribution of wealth and power, when we observe the lust and greed that appear to be the motivating influence behind the accumulation of many large fortunes, when we see on every hand those who for lack of opportunity find it impossible to provide themselves with the barest necessities of life, we sympathize with the objects and purposes of these planners, though we may not agree with their methods. Whatever may be said of these "share the wealth" ideas, they at least seek to relieve misery by taking from those who have and giving to those who have not.

It is not my purpose to discuss the merits of these distribution or redistribution schemes but rather to call attention to the so-called Townsend plan: A scheme which would take from "those who have not even that which they have" and distribute it among those of a certain age group, regardless of the needs or financial condition of those who are to receive it; a taxation scheme which would levy tribute upon the food and clothing of the poor, the medicine of the sick, and the wages and salaries of those who work for a living; a tax which would add to the wealth of the rich and take from the poor; a scheme which would enable one class to live in idleness at the expense of the remainder of the public; a plan which would place a premium upon wastefulness and penalize the industrious and the thrifty; a plan which, if made effective, would place an unbearable burden of taxation upon those who can least afford it but which would permit those who could afford to pay taxes to escape its burdens; a scheme which reverses every principle of American life by discouraging those who through work and self-denial, through frugality and thrift, have provided against the lean years when they are no longer productive; a tax which would fall most heavily upon those whom it professes to assist—a tax which would drive capital out of the United States, encourage fraud and deception, and bankrupt the Nation.

This taxation scheme parades under the misnomer of an "old-age-pension plan." It seeks to capitalize upon the desire of every right-thinking, decent American citizen to make adequate provision for the aged and the indigent. It holds out to millions of old people the alluring promise of $200 a month, and to millions of young people the prospect of being able to live in idleness at the expense of elderly relatives who may be the beneficiaries of the blood money squeezed from the bread and wages of the poor.

Every decent American citizen believes in old-age pensions. The old folks' home and the poorhouse constitute blots upon our Christian civilization. These institutions must go and in their stead must be set up some sane and practical provision for those who by reason of advancing years are no longer able to care for themselves—provision whereby they will be permitted to still enjoy some of the joys and comforts and freedom of home life and not be herded together like cattle in their declining days.

But in our desire to deal fairly with the aged we must not permit ourselves to be swept off our feet and stampeded into adopting some unfair, unreasonable, unjust, and impractical measure just because it is labeled an "old-age-pension plan." We must not be bluffed or coerced into unwise action by the threats of political extinction by organized groups nor misled by false prophets, many of whom seek only to further their own political or pecuniary interests.

Let us look at this so-called Townsend old-age-pension plan, which should be called the Townsend taxation plan. Let us examine its terms and see just what its effects will be if, as its advocates claim, they shall succeed in electing a Congress which will put it into effect.

What is the Townsend plan? According to Dr. F. E. Townsend, its author, in his testimony before the Senate Finance Committee on February 16, 1935, it is a plan "obligating the Government of the United States to pay every citizen of said Government whose record is free from habitual criminality and who has attained the age of 60 years a monthly pension of $200 until the end of his or her life, upon the sole condition that he or she retire from all future business or profession for gain and guarantees to spend the entire amount of the pension within the confines of the United States during the current month in which it is received."

The gentleman from California [Mr. McGROARTY] introduced on April 1, 1935, the bill H. R. 7154, known as the McGroarty bill, which Dr. Townsend and his collaborators have approved as the bill to put the Townsend plan into effect. The McGroarty bill does not guarantee $200 per month to every individual who has attained the age of 60 years, but it proposes a 2-percent transaction tax upon every transaction within the United States or its territories, the proceeds of which shall be divided equally among all persons who have reached the age of 60 years. In other words, the bill does not guarantee $200 per month. It simply levies a tax and guarantees to divide it among the pensioners, giving them whatever the tax produces. The sponsors of the measure say that this is immaterial, however, as they contend that the 2-percent transaction tax will produce sufficient money to pay all expenses of collection and distribution and yield more than enough to give every person who has reached the age of 60 years the full sum of $200 per month.

The Townsend plan and the McGroarty bill, which seeks to enact it into law, have two essential features, and only two. First, the plan provides for a pension of $200 per month, or $2,400 per year, for every person who has reached the age of 60 years and who refrains from gainful occupation. There is no other qualification except that if a person has an income, his pension will be reduced by the amount of his income. Every person, rich or poor, high or low, black or white, 60 years old or over in the United States, would be entitled to $2,400 per annum, regardless of the amount of property he may own, regardless of the state of his health or his station in life. A man 60 years old, in full possession of all his faculties, owning $100,000 worth of property and in perfect health would receive the same amount as a person 75 years old who had no property and who might be blind or crippled or otherwise dependent.

The second essential feature of this plan is that it proposes to raise the funds with which to pay this $200 per month by a 2-percent transaction tax. Now, a transaction tax is quite different from the simple, ordinary sales tax. Many of the advocates of this plan assert that a 2-percent sales tax would not prove burdensome to anyone. If the plan proposed a simple 2-percent sales tax this, of course, would not be so burdensome as a transaction tax.

The tax proposed in his plan is a tax of 2 percent on every transaction of any sort which takes place in the United States. It not only includes the purchase and sale of articles but it also includes "barter and exchange", and it specifically levies a tax upon salaries, wages, and other income. A transaction tax on purchases and sales of articles means that for every time that the article changes hands it must pay a tax. To illustrate this, let us take, for example, this cotton shirt which I have on and which cost me $1. A simple 2-percent sales tax would amount to only 2 cents. But the transaction tax of the Townsend plan is a much more far-reaching plan of taxation. When the farmer planted the cotton which was afterward made up into this shirt he would have to pay 2 percent on the cottonseed and 2 percent on the fertilizer and 2 percent on the wages of the man who planted and cultivated the cotton. He must then pay 2 percent of the price of picking the cotton; 2 percent of the cost of ginning it; 2 percent of the sale price to the cutton buyer; 2 percent on the sale price from the cotton buyer to the manufacturer; 2 percent on the sale price from the manufacturer to the wholesaler; 2 percent on the sale price from the wholesaler to the retailer; 2 percent on the sale price from the retailer to me when I bought the shirt, plus 2 percent on all of the railroad, steamship, and other transportation charges, plus 2 percent of the wages and salaries of every person who handled the cotton, the cloth, or the shirt from its inception to its delivery to me.

Now everyone knows that the ultimate consumer pays all of the taxes which have accumulated on the article from its inception to its final delivery. Everybody adds his tax to the sale price of the article and passes it on to the next fellow. Not only are the actual taxes added but the manufacturer, the wholesalers, the retailer, and everyone else would use this tax as an excuse for further increasing the sale price of the article, so that it would ultimately amount to 50- or 75-percent increase in the final sale price. But if everyone who handled it dealt perfectly fairly and added nothing except the actual transaction tax, it would amount to at least an increase of 25 percent in the ultimate sale price of every article bought and sold in the United States.

Under this plan this tax is also made specifically applicable to barter and sale so that the value of property or articles swapped or exchanged would be taxed. It specifically taxes also wages, salaries, rents, and all other transactions of whatever character.

Now what is the sum of money which is to be raised by this method of taxation?

According to the 1930 census there were in the United States more than 10,000,000 people who had reached the age of 60 years. With the normal increase in population it is now conservatively estimated that there are a minimum of 11,000,000 people in the United States of this age group. If all of these people should be paid $200 per month, or $2,400 per year, regardless of their needs or financial condition, it would take more than $26,000,000,000 per year to carry the burden. Now a billion is a thousand million, and a million is a thousand thousand. So that it would take twenty-six thousand million dollars a year to pay $200 per month to every person who has reached the age of 60 years. And this, remember, is the net amount required. In addition to this sum must also be raised the cost of collection and administration of this tremendous sum.

The sponsors of the Townsend plan say that for one reason or another there will be a large group of people who will not qualify to receive this pension. If such a pension should be made available, reason and human experience indicate that every person of that age group who did not have an income of more than the amount of the pension would qualify as a pensioner. But let us say that the sponsors of the plan are right in their assertion that not all people will qualify, and that instead of more than $26,000,000,000, it will only take $20,000,000,000 every year. Let us see just what this amounts to when applied to the average citizen in this country. There are approximately 125,000,000 people in the United States. If it should take only $20,000,000,000 to carry this taxation scheme, this would cost an average of $160 per annum for every man, woman, and child in the United States. Every family of four would pay on the average of $640 per year to carry this scheme. And this, mind you, is in addition to the cost of government and in addition to all taxes—Federal, State, county, District, and municipal. It would cost on the average $160 per year for every person in the United States in order that people who have reached the age of 60 years, hundreds of thousands of whom are not only in no need of financial assistance but actually wealthy, might receive $200 per month for doing absolutely nothing.

A transaction tax is the most vicious and iniquitous of all forms of taxation which have yet been conceived, for the reason that they apply with more crushing effect upon the poor than upon the rich. The poor man, the man of small means, the wage earner, and the small-salaried man, who, after all, constitutes the great bulk of our population, must spend his entire income for the absolute necessities of life. He has no discretion. The necessity for food, clothing, and shelter for himself and his family is so pressing that he must expend his entire income for these things. A transaction tax which covers these items therefore strikes a terrific blow at this great bulk of our population. The rich, on the other hand, may make their purchases abroad, and thereby escape taxation of this character. When they spend their summers in Europe and their winters on the Riviera they would not be subject to this tax, but the poor, who must remain at home and spend their income for food and clothing and rent and fuel, cannot escape the burden of this tax.

In recent months we have heard a great deal about high taxes and the effect of taxes on living costs. Everyone knows that living costs go up as taxes go up, for the reason, which I have already pointed out, that taxes are added to the sale price of articles and passed on to the ultimate consumer. This tax would add to the already overburdened and tax-ridden people of this country this enormous burden, ranging from twenty to twenty-six thousand million dollars for every year. And this money would be wrested from the poor and the wage earner and the salaried man in greater proportion to his ability to pay than from the rich who can afford to pay the taxes.

We have heard much also in recent months about the national debt. We have been told that this debt is so enormous that it is likely to endanger the very credit of the country. We have been told that this great debt mortgages the future welfare of our great-grandchildren. And yet it is not expected that this debt will be paid off in 1 year or 5 years or 10 years. It is expected that we shall take 30 or 40 or maybe 50 years to pay this debt. Now comes along the Townsend plan, which proposes a scheme which will require this country to raise every year an amount in excess of the total national debt of the country. And this is not for 1 year. If this plan is put into effect, we shall have to raise every year, from now on until the end of time, an amount of money as great as the present national debt. In 50 years we shall have to raise by taxation 50 times as much as the national debt.

I am sure that I will be pardoned if I make a direct application of these figures to certain counties in my own congressional district. On the basis of the $20,000,000,000 per annum and on the basis of an average cost of $160 per capita, the amount of money which would have to be raised every year by the people in eight counties of my congressional district would be as follows:

Okeechobee County	$660,640
Martin County	817,760
Indian River County	1,075,840
St. Lucie County	1,129,120
Monroe County	2,179,840
Broward County	3,215,040
Palm Beach County	8,284,960
Dade County	22,872,800

In other words, in these eight counties of my congressional district, it would be necessary to raise every year more than $40,000,000, which would be in addition to the already staggering figures for taxation which are now being imposed upon them for the expenses of the Federal, State, county, municipal, and district governments. The people of my little home city would have to dig up about $400,000 every month, or nearly $5,000,000 every year, to carry their share of the burden of this thing.

My people are already finding it impossible in many instances to pay the enormous taxes which are being levied upon them for the operation of their government. But, if this thing should by any chance become operative, it would be necessary for these people in my district every year to raise more than $40,000,000 to provide these incomes for people, many of whom are actually in better circumstances than some of those who would be called upon to carry the burden.

This is no time to talk about more taxes. This is no time to suggest an increase in our tax burden and corresponding increases in living costs. Taxes must be reduced and not increased. Thousands of families are losing their homes every year because they are unable to pay the enormous taxes levied upon them. If they are unable to carry their present burden, then how, pray tell, are they going to assume an additional burden of $640 per average family per year for this thing?

Of course, the Townsend planners answer this by saying that by exacting this fantastic tax they will make everybody rich. They are going to make us all rich by taxing us to death. They contend that by the circulation of this money everybody will become wealthy.

Be not deceived. Taxes destroy. Wealth cannot be created by taxation. The money which they propose to circulate is to be first exacted from the people of the United States. If this money were to be raised from some outside source it would undoubtedly make us indeed a rich people. But this plan would impoverish every man and woman and bankrupt every business in the country to raise the money which they propose to circulate.

When a man is sick he can sometimes be saved by a blood transfusion. By giving him an additional blood supply to circulate in his veins he is given renewed strength and energy. But this blood must come from some outside source. It certainly would do him no good to pump his own blood out of one arm into the other. This would not give him any new blood but the shock of the operation would probably kill him. And so it is with this scheme. The Townsend planners propose to give us a blood transfusion, but they propose to give us our own blood—just pump it out of us and then back in again. Even this might do us no great harm if it all got back into our system without loss and if the whole system would benefit. But the trouble with the scheme is that most of the money collected would go to pay the salaries and expenses of the tens of thousands of tax collectors, snoopers, inspectors, auditors, and bookkeepers which would be required to collect and administer the fund.

The arguments of the sponsors of this scheme seek to leave the impression that in some mysterious way the money will come from Wall Street, or the big bankers, or from big business. There never has been a tax devised which was not added into the cost of living and passed on to the ultimate consumer and paid by the public. Every tax which has ever been suggested is paid "in the sweat of every man who toils."

Some industrious Member of the House recently inserted in the RECORD a tabulation in support of the Townsend taxation plan. His figures proved that the minimum requirements for each individual in the United States is a little more than $103 per month, or more than $1,200 per year.

I am not disputing his figures but it is my impression that a recent survey has shown that the annual income of the average family in the United States is less than $700. In other words the average American family is living on considerably less than the "minimum requirements" for one individual.

Now, in order that $2,400 per annum may be paid to each individual, or $4,800 can be paid to each couple who has reached the age of 60 years the Townsend plan proposes to tax the food, the clothing, the fuel, the rent, and even the medicine of these average families who make less than $700 per year. Let us see what happens to these "average families" if the Townsend plan is enacted into law. And let us say that the family receives a hundred dollars per month, or $1,200 per annum instead of the $700 which they actually receive. I think that everybody will concede that a man with a family who doesn't receive more than a hundred dollars per month must spend his entire income for necessities of life.

A 2-percent transaction tax will increase the cost of these necessities by 25 percent at least. Therefore, instead of a hundred dollars, it will cost him a hundred and twenty-five dollars per month to live. And does he get any increase in salary? He does not. On the contrary, the tax on his salary takes $2 out of his check every month, thereby leaving him $98 with which to pay a hundred and twenty-five dollars for what he now buys for $100.

He must pay taxes on the food and the clothes he buys for his children. If one of them gets sick there is a tax on the medicine and the doctor's bill. The fuel to cook his food and warm his home is taxed. Nothing escapes. If he swaps horses with his neighbor, he pays a tax. If he trades a load of potatoes for a load of oranges, he pays a tax. If he gets his hair cut, or rides on the street car, or buys a lead pencil, he pays a tax. If he paints his house, or digs a well, or has the plumbing repaired, he pays a tax. There is a tax on the rent, a tax on his lights, a tax on the water he drinks, a tax on his life insurance, and if he dies, he still does not escape—there is a tax on his coffin. And all of these taxes are levied upon him in order that men and women in perfect health, many of them in excellent financial condition, may receive almost $5,000 per couple per annum to live in idleness. Verily, "from him that hath not shall be taken even that which he has."

I have already said that this taxation scheme is flying the false banner of an "old-age-pension plan." It is not an old-age pension plan. It is a scheme for further increasing the burdens of the poor.

A man is not old when he reaches the age of 60 years. Some of the greatest men in history have accomplished their finest work after they passed the age of 60. Youth with its enthusiasm, its energy, and its ambition is fine. But with age and experience comes wisdom. There are tens of thousands of men and women in this country between the ages of 60 and 70 who are in the full vigor of manhood and womanhood, who are just as productive today as they were at 40. There are thousands of these people who have accumulated great property holdings. And yet this plan would set aside every one of these people and force them into idleness for the balance of their natural days and deprive the world of the benefit of their services.

This scheme would require every person receiving the money under it to spend the entire amount of his so-called pension within the current month in which it is received in order that he might receive another similar sum in the succeeding month. There is no limitation upon the character of expenditure. It may be spent in any manner which the so-called pensioner may desire. And here is where "the steam hits the wheel" with many of the supporters of this plan. There is practically no family in the United States that does not have at least one and sometimes two and three persons over the age of 60 years. Either grandpa or grandma or uncle Bill or aunt Sara has reached this age. What is to hinder the younger members of the family from taking grandpa and grandma to board and charging them $200 a piece per month for their board and clothes? One young man recently expressed it to me like this: He said, "My father and mother are both eligible for this pension. I have never been able to do anything for them, but if this plan is put into effect and they receive $400 per month, I could take care of them in excellent shape."

Of course, you and I know that this plan, if enacted, would be held to be thoroughly and completely unconstitutional. The recent decisions of the Supreme Court have laid down pronouncements which would condemn this plan before it is passed. The pitiful part of the whole thing, however, is that efforts toward the enactment of this impractical and unworkable scheme will greatly impede the progress toward the enactment of sane and proper old-age-pension legislation. At the last session of this Congress we enacted a law which permits the Federal Government to make contributions to the States for the purpose of matching State funds for old-age pensions. This law undoubtedly is imperfect and must be amended from time to time to make it accomplish the purposes which we have in mind. It is, however, a step toward the accomplishment of an end which you and I have in mind and that is to make adequate provision for those persons who by reason of advancing years are no longer able to take care of themselves. This Townsend taxation plan would destroy all of our efforts in that direction and leave the aged and indigent without any means of assistance from their Government.

Every right-thinking American citizen, I believe, favors old-age pensions in such amounts and under such conditions as will provide adequately for those who have passed their productive years and cannot provide for themselves. In this enlightened age we are rapidly recognizing the obligation of society toward the individual who, by misfortune, advancing years, or other cause, is made to suffer. It is my hope and my belief that we shall soon see the perfection of our social-security laws along lines which will supply this adequate provision for the aged, the indigent, and the unfortunate. It is certain, however, that we cannot accomplish it by means such as are proposed in the Townsend taxation plan, which seeks to place an unbearable burden upon the backs of those who are least able to carry it.

The most pitiful thing about this entire fiasco is the fact that tens of thousands of old people have been led to believe that $200 per month can and will be paid to them. Many of them have been deceived; thousands of them have been buoyed up by the false hope engendered by false prophets.

I think the most unfair and despicable conduct is that of a man or a group of men who would elevate themselves into high public office by capitalizing upon the suffering and the credulity of old people who are in need. And yet unfortunately, there are those in this country who for the sake of temporary applause and immediate gain would deceive these thousands of old people into believing that this Utopian dream can be made to come true. This hysteria will pass as all such schemes have passed, but the unfortunate part of the whole performance is that a large group of these old people will feel that there has been some terrible injustice done to them by the failure of Congress to do the impossible. In the meantime we must keep our feet on solid ground and, refusing to be deviated from our charted course, proceed with the perfection of social-security legislation which will provide for those who can no longer provide for themselves.

ALL WILL BE WELL

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, there has been a good deal said today about the agricultural program. I did not wish to prolong the discussion, and I therefore ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting at this point a short article by our former colleague, Gov. Edgar Howard, of Nebraska, whom we all love and admire, and who is still keenly interested in our problems here.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOXEY. The article I have referred to, Mr. Speaker, is under date of January 16, 1936, and is as follows:

ALL WILL BE WELL

Millions of men, particularly in the farm States, did not hesitate in expressing fear for the future of agriculture when the Supreme Court of the United States declared unconstitutional the act of the Congress known as the Agricultural Adjustment Act, popularly termed the "A. A. A."

While it is true that the great cause of agriculture was dealt a cruel blow by that decision, there is good reason for the belief that ultimate good will follow that unfortunate decree. Immediately following that decision President Roosevelt and the friends of agriculture in the Congress set themselves to the task of offsetting the effects of that ruling by new legislation. Down there in Washington, holding the post of chairman of the Committee on Agriculture in the House of Representatives, is one of the brave and able men of the Nation in his capacity as a Representative in Congress. He is first among his equals in the ranks of lawyers. The A. A. A. was in large measure the child of his brain. He believed it was a step in the direction of giving to agriculture a measure of that same Federal fostering care which our Government has for long years bestowed upon manufacturing and financial interests. The decision of the High Court was a crushing blow to his hopes in behalf of agriculture, but in no sense has it chilled his zeal in effort to provide a square deal for agriculture. Of course, he felt the full force of the blow administered by the Court in almost as large measure as President Roosevelt felt it, but quickly he was back on the firing line. Quickly he began planning for new legislation which might work for the welfare of agriculture without at the same time distressing the august magistrates who have denied to agriculture that same helping hand which the Government through the years has held out to manufacturing and financial groups. The name of that friend of agriculture is MARVIN JONES. For a quarter century he has represented in the Congress of the Nation a Texas district whose one great industry prior to discovery of its oil fields has been agriculture. He was distressed by the decision of the high Court, but he is not discouraged. For the benefit of any and all friends of agriculture in Nebraska let me quote from a letter received today from Chairman JONES, as follows:

"I cannot believe the Supreme Court means to say that a national tariff is legal, and that a national farm program which merely restores the price balance cannot be made legal.

"I cannot believe it is meant that grain and cotton farmers and the producers of other world-market crops must purchase their supplies in a higher-priced protected market, and that there is no constitutional means by which they may be given an even break.

"The greatest fundamental in our system of government is equality in the operation of its laws.

"I am sure a constitutional method of putting all our citizens on an equal footing can be found. Certainly in the interest of simple justice, the effort should be made."

I believe MARVIN JONES and his colleagues in the Congress will find a way to enact legislation to replace the murdered A. A. A. with something just as good, or even better, in behalf of agriculture. I believe there is room for hope, and no room for despair. The foundation which supports the house of our Republic will not be allowed to remain in its present state. That foundation is the American farm. Its impairment by the decision of the high Court will be repaired by the Congress, which is the speaking voice of the people, and in the end that voice will prevail.

EDGAR HOWARD.

PUERTO RICO'S LOTTERY

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a short editorial from the Times Star of Bridgeport, Conn., under date of January 4, 1936, for the purpose of disclosing to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] and the Congress where we can get money from a source which the Federal Government has not yet taxed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I understand the request is to insert the matter at this point in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is a rather unusual request, but I shall not object to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEY. The article referred to is as follows:

PUERTO RICO'S LOTTERY

Only legally operated lottery on American soil, the lottery of Puerto Rico, will hold its third extraordinary drawing this month.

Established under a bill passed by the Puerto Rican Legislature and signed by Governor Winship in May 1934, the lottery held its first extraordinary drawing on December 22, 1934, and its second extraordinary drawing on July 4, 1935. According to the last report of the treasurer, covering the period ended June 30, last, and thus including only the first extraordinary drawing, the lottery's gross income in its first year was $743,264, operating expenses were $57,490, and prize distributions $324,889. Of the net proceeds, 60 percent goes to the department of health for use in its fight against tuberculosis, and 40 percent is distributed among the municipalities for relief purposes.

The Puerto Rican lottery is operated by a bureau in the department of finance. Salaries of the director and 21 officers and clerks are paid from the lottery's receipts. Tickets are sold at $4 each through sales agents, who receive for themselves and their peddlers $1 out of each ticket. The chance represented by a full ticket may be divided into twentieths. At the first extraordinary drawing a year ago, 20 persons shared the $20,000 first prize.

In Puerto Rico there was neither constitutional nor statutory prohibition of lotteries. When the old insular lottery was abolished in 1898, it was an order of the United States military governor that destroyed it. The law forbidding the use of the United States mails to promote lotteries applies in Puerto Rico as it does throughout all American territory. The lottery bureau transacts its business, including the reporting of the winning numbers, over the insular government-owned telegraph system.

It has been estimated that between the time of the abolishment of the old lottery and the establishment of the new one last year, Puerto Ricans annually sent out of their country a million dollars to purchase lottery tickets in Spain and other foreign countries. Advocates of lotteries in the United States have estimated that Americans annually spend a billion dollars on tickets of chance from Great Britain and elsewhere in Europe.

PARKS, PARKWAYS, AND RECREATIONAL FACILITIES

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10104) to aid in providing the people of the United States with adequate facilities for park, parkway, and recreational-area purposes, and to provide for the transfer of certain lands chiefly valuable for such purposes to States and political subdivisions thereof.

I may say to the House that this is a bill that has been unanimously reported by the Public Lands Committee and has been agreed to by both the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior and I think there is no objection to it from any source whatever.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the request?

The SPEAKER. For the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Let the bill be reported.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior (herein called the Secretary) is authorized and directed to cause the National Park Service to make a comprehensive study, other than on lands under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture, of the public park, parkway, and recreational-area programs of the United States, and of the several States and political subdivisions thereof, and of the lands throughout the United States which are or may be chiefly valuable as such areas. The said study shall be such as, in the judgment of the Secretary, will provide data helpful in developing a plan for coordinated and adequate public park, parkway, and recreational-area facilities for the people of the United States. In making the said study and in accomplishing any of the purposes of this act, the Secretary is authorized and directed, through the National Park Service, to seek and accept the cooperation and assistance of Federal departments or agencies having jurisdiction of lands belonging to the United States and may cooperate and make agreements with and seek and accept the assistance of other Federal agencies and instrumentalities, and of States, political subdivisions thereof, and the agencies and instrumentalities of either of them, and may accept unconditional donations and gifts from private agencies, instrumentalities, and individuals.

SEC. 2. For the purpose of developing coordinated and adequate public park, parkway, and recreational-area facilities for the people of the United States, the Secretary is authorized to aid the several States and political subdivisions thereof in planning, establishing, improving, and maintaining such areas therein, and in cooperating with one another to accomplish these ends. Such aid shall be made available through the National Park Service acting in cooperation with such appropriate regional interstate or State agencies or the agencies of subdivisions thereof as the Secretary deems best.

SEC. 3. That for the purposes of this act and subject to the approval of the President of the United States, the Secretary is authorized to transfer to any State or political subdivision thereof by lease, for such terms as he may deem best, or by patent, such right, title, or interest in or to the land described in section 4 hereof as he may deem advisable: Provided, That all minerals in the land patented or leased shall be reserved to the United States. No lands shall be transferred, however, except with the approval of the head of the department having jurisdiction thereof. In the event that title to any land eligible for transfer is held in the name of any Federal agency or instrumentality, the Secretary is authorized to accept transfer thereof on behalf of the United States. All right, title, or interest in or to the said land shall revert to and revest in the United States upon a finding by the Secretary, subject to review by local Federal courts, that for a period of 5 consecutive years the land has not been used by the patentee, lessee, or successor, transferee, or assignee thereof for such purposes.

SEC. 4. The following land shall be subject to be patented or leased under section 3 hereof:

(1) Any land heretofore or hereafter acquired by the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof, if in the judgment of the Secretary the land is chiefly valuable for park, parkway, or recreational-area use by States or political subdivisions thereof, and the head of the agency having administrative jurisdiction thereof finds that transfer of the land will not adversely affect the management of adjoining or related public properties or otherwise diminish the public value and service of such properties.

(2) Such land donated or devised to be devoted to the purposes of this act as the Secretary in the exercise of authority hereby granted may accept in behalf of the United States.

SEC. 5. Whenever the Secretary makes a transfer of lands embraced in subsection (1) of section 4, such transfer shall be submitted to Congress while in session and shall not become effective until after the expiration of 60 calendar days after such transmission, unless Congress shall by law provide for an earlier effective date of such transfer: Provided, That if Congress shall adjourn before the expiration of 60 calendar days from the date of such transmission such Executive order shall not become effective until after the expiration of 60 calendar days from the opening of the next succeeding regular or special session.

SEC. 6. The Secretary shall obtain from the patentee or lessee of any land such contracts and agreements and such information pertaining to the park, parkway, and recreational-area program of the patentee or lessee as in his judgment may be necessary to assure administration of the said land in the public interest.

SEC. 7. The Secretary is hereby authorized to accept, on behalf of the United States, deposit in a special fund in the Treasury, and expend for the purposes of this act, private funds donated or bequeathed for such purposes.

SEC. 8. Consent of Congress is hereby given to each of the several States to negotiate and enter into any compact or agreement with one another with reference to planning, establishing, developing, improving, and maintaining any park, parkway, or recreational area. Such consent is given upon condition that a representative of the United States from the National Park Service and a representative from each of the several Federal departments and agencies having jurisdiction of lands involved in any such compact or agreement, shall be appointed by the President to participate in any negotiations and shall make report to Congress of the proceeding and of any compact or agreement entered into. No compact or agreement shall be effective until approved by the legislatures of the several States which are parties thereto, and by the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 9. As used in this act the terms "State" shall be deemed to include Hawaii, Alaska, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the District of Columbia.

SEC. 10. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as Congress may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 11. The Secretary is authorized from time to time to make and publish such rules and regulations, and to do such acts as may be necessary, for carrying out the provisions of this act.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Yes; it is a unanimous report.

Mr. MILLARD. That is all I want to know.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] were both present.

Mr. MOTT. I was not able to be at the meeting at which this bill was considered. I did look the bill over and it seems to me it is just another one of those departmental bills prepared by the Secretary of the Interior or some underling in his Department, giving more discretionary jurisdiction to the Secretary of the Interior in the matter of the public domain.

If the House wants to consider the bill at the present time, I have no particular objection. Personally, I did not vote for the bill to come out of the committee, and I am going to vote against it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, this bill (H. R. 10104) has been reported out of the Committee on Public Lands unanimously, with a recommendation that it pass and become a law.

A similar bill (H. R. 6594) was reported out of the same committee during the last session of Congress. However, due to the fact that certain objections were made to the bill, it was not passed. It was feared that this bill (H. R. 6594) did not exclude definitely enough the lands under the National Forest Service; and, therefore, in order to reach this objection, the bill was redrafted and has been introduced as H. R. 10104.

As the bill now stands, it is acceptable to the Department of Agriculture and also to the Department of the Interior. You will observe on page 1, line 6, that lands under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture are omitted, so that there is no attempt under the present act to include lands which are now under the jurisdiction of the National Forest Service.

The purpose of the bill is to authorize a study to be made by the National Park Service of the public parks, parkway, and recreational areas; first, those that are at the present time used for this purpose; and second, lands throughout the United States which may be chiefly valuable for such purposes. This study is to provide helpful data in developing a plan for the coordination of park, parkway, and recreational-area facilities in the United States and in the various States.

In order to make this study the Secretary of the Interior, through the National Park Service, is authorized to seek and accept the cooperation and assistance of the Federal departments or agencies which have jurisdiction over lands belonging to the United States, and also to accept and help cooperate with the various States and political subdivisions thereof and the agencies or instrumentalities of either of them. He is authorized to accept unconditional donations and gifts from private agencies or individuals. The bill provides that, subject to the approval of the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to transfer to any State or political subdivision thereof, by lease or by patent, any lands that in his judgment are chiefly valuable for park, parkway, or recreational use. However, no lands shall be transferred without the approval of the Department having jurisdiction over it, and all transfers must be submitted to Congress. Congress shall have 60 days during the time that it is in session to either approve or reject such a transfer. If, however, in this 60 days Congress does not act, then the transfer is valid.

All minerals in the lands patented or leased are reserved to the United States.

If the lands conveyed shall not be used for the purpose for which conveyance is made for 5 consecutive years, then, subject to a review by a local Federal court, the land shall revert to the United States.

The act gives the several States authority to enter into compacts or agreements with one another with reference to planning, establishing, developing, improving, and maintaining any park, parkway, or recreational area. Such agreement, however, shall be made by a representative from the National Park Service and a representative from the Federal department or agency having jurisdiction over the lands involved, who shall be appointed by the President, and shall make a report to Congress of the proceedings of any compact or agreement entered into.

No agreement is to become effective until it is approved by the legislatures of the several States which are parties thereunto, and by the Congress of the United States.

Congress is authorized to make such appropriation as it may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of the bill.

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make and publish such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the carrying out of the provisons of the act.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Probably the Democratic Whip has notified all Members on this side about the program in relation to passing the so-called "bonus" bill. I have had so many inquiries about it that I think this is the proper time for me to say that if the Senate passes the bill in time for it to get over here we expect to take it up the first thing on Wednesday after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WHICH SHALL PREVAIL—DEMOCRACY OR ROOSEVELTIAN MONARCHISM?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address by my colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] at the banquet of the Young Republicans of Connecticut, in Hartford, on Saturday evening, January 18, 1936.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of Hon. JESSE P. WOLCOTT, Representative in Congress from the Seventh District of Michigan, at the banquet of the Young Republicans of Connecticut, held at the Hotel Bond, in Hartford, Conn., on Saturday evening, January 18, 1936:

I am indeed grateful for this opportunity to address the young Republicans of Connecticut. Many and complex are the present problems of government. Issues are crystallizing which, when they take their final form, will have greater influence on posterity than any others that have preceded them. They can be brought within two classifications: Those having to do with the perpetuation or destruction of constitutional government and those maintaining or undermining our economic structure. It is in respect to these that I wish to talk tonight.

It may appear somewhat sophomoric to again call attention to the fact that the founders of our Republic, in drafting our Constitution, were attempting a compromise between an integrated monarchial form of government and one in which there would be created a loose confederation of sovereign states in the nature of pure democracies.

The result was the present republican, representative form of government, which has withstood the ravages of time, internal strife, and the onslaught of demagogs for nearly 150 years. It was purposely made a government of three distinct but nevertheless integrated branches: The legislative, the executive, and the judicial—a government of checks and balances, to forestall the ambitions of any perverted class of men who may hope to aggrandize themselves by the confusion of their country.

Such aggrandizement is apparent in the despotic attempts of the President and his satellites to substitute autocracy for democracy. The New Deal party has promulgated policies the adoption of which has convinced us of its belief that democracy is too unjust to endure. By thus stating the belief of the party in power at Washington, I am perhaps more charitable than the facts justify, because many honest-minded, sincere citizens are of the opinion that the accomplishments of the administration in centralizing all government under one political head at Washington do not fall short of an attempt at dictatorship. We can be assured, regardless of how we try to explain its actions, that the New Deal party has no abiding faith in a republican form of government and little confidence in the ability of the American people to govern themselves. There can be no stability of policy or confidence in the administration of our Government so long as the President doubts "whether societies of men are really capable of establishing good government from reflection and choice, or whether they are forever destined to depend, for their political constitution, on accidents and force."

Our Government is now dependent upon accident, the accident that somewhere, somehow, some action of the administration perchance, might be found to be in keeping with the Constitution.

It is consoling to Republicans to realize that throughout the last year and a half, while the New Deal party has been on the defensive, and has been denouncing the Republican Party for its attempt to return the Government to the people, no charge has been successfully substantiated that the Republicans ever found it difficult to run the Government and provide welfare for our needy, under and by virtue of the Constitution.

In connection with this general subject, let me refer briefly to the recent attacks on the Supreme Court by those who bend the knee to Rooseveltian monarchism.

During this political crisis, it is becoming more apparent than ever, that the three branches of the Government should be kept as distinct as possible. Why is this true? To weaken the effective status of any one or two of these relatively important constituent parts of the Government will result in the destruction of the equilibrium of an otherwise well balanced whole. Whether this be done by subterfuge, or by directly depriving a branch of the Government of constitutionally created powers and prerogatives, does not matter—the effect is the same. This administration is now exerting every possible means to remove the obstacle of the Supreme Court. To accomplish its purpose by subterfuge it is advocating the enactment of so-called agricultural relief legislation embodying the unsound policy of restricted production in the face of the proven fallacy that by producing less we should have more. Some such scheme, to temporarily circumvent the explicit ruling of the Supreme Court against the constitutionality of such attempts, will undoubtedly be enacted before this Congress adjourns. As a more direct method of minimizing the effect of increasing public sentiment in favor of the Supreme Court and decreasing confidence in the ability of the President and his New Deal Congress to properly function as units of constitutional Government, resolutions have been introduced and hearings are now being conducted before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives to amend the Constitution. This issue is welcomed by Republicans and Democrats all over the United States who believe in constitutional government.

Piqued by their failure to make of the President a dictator or of the Congress an oligarchy, Mr. Roosevelt and his anti-Constitution party no longer confine their irritation to hurling epithets and making wisecracks. They have come to the definite conclusion that the people no longer react favorably to references to "horse-and-buggy days", or charges that all New Deal critics are Tories and "whiners." Newspaper and magazine polls are frightening them to the belief that the American people are taking this issue of the perpetuation of the Constitution as serious business. They are learning from bitter experience that there is a prevalence of alarm in business, agricultural, and industrial circles, which is a distinct shock to them. As a consequence, like the proverbial grasping at the straw, they talk of a plebiscite by which they hope to effectuate their purpose to remove any obstacle which they might otherwise have to hurdle in the race for political power. We challenge them to make the Supreme Court the issue in this coming campaign. New Deal spokesmen have warned our people that the campaign ahead of us is to be one of mud slinging and vituperation. We as Republicans do not approach such a campaign with any degree of pleasure, but if the issue is to be framed with a gilded effort to vindicate New Deal autocracy, by constitutional amendment, then we will not be fooled by a glittering covering of regard for the forgotten man, because we have been taught by Hamilton that "a dangerous ambition more often lurks behind the specious mask of zeal for the rights of the people than under the forbidding appearances of zeal for the firmness and efficiency of government."

We will not be confounded by the loudness of the declamations or by the bitterness of the invectives of those heralds of destruction who will accompany the movement throughout the land—no; we will take their resolution to amend the Constitution and drag it through and tramp it into the political mire of every State of this Union, after which it may appear in its true form, clothed in communism, nurtured by fascism, and by the aid of a few blood transfusions of New Deal socialism will ultimately emerge from the mire as Rooseveltian monarchism.

There are those who have been drugged by the prescriptions of the quack doctors of the administration. It is not to be wondered at that so many of our people who were in the depths of despondency—a condition which resulted from a costly war which threw the whole world into chaos, from which we are but now emerging—should have swallowed these sugar-coated palliatives with some degree of hope and confidence in the results. They have had a rude awakening from a delusive sleep, with a terribly bad headache. With the dawning of the inevitable "morning after" they want no more stimulants of that nature, and are returning to the old family doctor for succor.

Well, the old family doctor is expecting them. He knew from the history of the case that the new medicine would not give them permanent relief. He is going to diagnose their case all over again in the light of new developments and will prescribe for them. Whether the headache takes the form of a delusion, whether it takes the form of communism, fascism, nazi-ism, or just a plain abandonment of common sense, the prescription will be the same. The old doctor will not aggravate the ailment by trying to cure communism with communism, fascism with facism, nazi-ism with nazi-ism, socialism with socialism, fear with lack of confidence, but will give them a great big dose of the medicine which has always cured them of all of their economic and social ailments—a great big dose of constitutionalism and Americanism as promulgated by the ideals and principles of the Republican Party. You can't compel the American people to adopt fascism with the threat of communism; you can't compel the American people to adopt nazi-ism with the threat of fascism; you can't compel us to accept socialism or monarchism by the claim that the American Constitution has outlived its usefulness.

You will notice that throughout my remarks I have referred to the opposition party in power as the New Deal Party. I have done this deliberately, having in mind that the majority of Democrats who have earnestly and faithfully followed the doctrines of Thomas Jefferson and the New Deal Democrats are as far apart in their advocacies as Republicans are from Communists. Senator CARTER GLASS, of Virginia, is one of the old-line Democrats whom we all respect, and whose judgment is as sound as the Rock of Gibraltar. At the banquet of the National Association of Newspaper Editors in Washington, Senator GLASS hit the nail on the head when he said:

"There are only a few of us Democrats left."

It has been said that "confidence is the keystone of the arch of government." Without confidence, and at least a show of integrity, no government can endure. There is a harsh inference in this statement which I think is justified by the record. In order that my remarks may not be misunderstood, I charge, without any equivocation or fear of successful contradiction, that the Roosevelt administration has broken faith with the American people. Because it has seen fit to treat so lightly its assertions of policy, disrespect for government and lack of confidence is prevalent throughout the land. This situation would not be serious if it was confined to the personnel of the administration, but many people do not distinguish between the administration and the Government. Reflections on the integrity and purpose of one is bound to effect confidence in the other. Lack of confidence in the integrity and stability of the Government naturally results in timidity on the part of investors so that there is a freezing of credit resources. Money and credit no longer flow through natural channels into business, agricultural, and industrial enterprise, and there is an attending decrease in employment and purchasing power. So fear of the next move of the President and his New Dealers seems to be the root of all our economic ills. Remove this fear and America will experience one of the greatest natural booms in its history.

Why are business, industry, and agriculture apprehensive of the future? The answer, of course, is that they have been taught to doubt the altruism of the motives of the administration. The allegations of concern for the rights of our citizens appear to them now in their true light—mere smoke screens behind which are being built political air castles to house the experimentations of inexperienced theorists.

On January 3 the President said, in his alleged message to Congress, that "By their fruits ye shall know them." He also said, "And their weapon is the weapon of fear. I have said: 'The only thing we have to fear is fear itself.' That is as true today as it was in 1933. But such fear as they instill today is not a natural fear, a normal fear; it is a synthetic, manufactured, poisonous fear that is being spread subtly, expensively, and cleverly by the same people who cried in those other days, 'Save us, else we perish.'" He and his party have said other things at other times which are not quite so consistent with their actions. For example, let us refer a moment to some of the paradoxes of this administration that have resulted in this prevailing fear. It is interesting to read the platform of the party now in power, in the light of what has happened since the inauguration of 3 years ago. In that platform the Democratic Party solemnly state:

"We believe that a party platform is a covenant with the people to be faithfully kept by the party when entrusted with power, and that the people are entitled to know in plain words the terms of the contract to which they are asked to subscribe."

And then follows:

"We advocate an immediate and drastic reduction of Government expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus, and eliminating extravagance, to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent in the cost of Federal Government * * *."

In his acceptance speech at Chicago, following his nomination, President Roosevelt said that he stood foursquare on the Democratic platform in this and all other respects. In further confirmation of his stand with respect to this particular part of the Democratic platform, President Roosevelt, at Topeka, Kans., on September 14, 1932, said, as follows:

"I propose to exert through the Presidency, as I have done through the governorship, every bit of influence I can in favor of a national movement to reorganize local government in the direction of eliminating a large part of the tax burden that now bears so heavily on the farmers of the Nation."

In the light of what has transpired since these remarks were made it is apparent that the President was not sincere in making them. And again, in the same respect, he is quoted by the press as saying:

"By our example at Washington itself we shall have the opportunity of pointing the way of economy to local government * * *."

He then goes on to distribute tax dollars between the local, State, and Federal Governments, and concludes by saying:

"I propose to you, my friends, and through you, that government of all kinds, big and little, be made solvent, and that the example be set by the President of the United States and his Cabinet."

Instead of this the costs of government have arisen to the extent that we find ourselves in the position where there are only two alternatives, that of liquidation of our debt by pernicious and destructive inflation of the currency or by confiscatory taxation, which is equally destructive of business and property.

In his speeches before the election Mr. Roosevelt laments the fact that the tax burden is equivalent to $125 per year per person. The per capita burden of Federal taxes has increased during the 3 years of his administration from about $170 to about $265. Using Mr. Roosevelt's own words:

"This is an impossible economic condition. Quite apart from every man's own tax assessment, that burden is a brake on any return to normal business activity. Taxes are paid in the sweat of every man who labors, because they are a burden on production and can be paid only by production. If excessive, they are reflected in idle factories, tax-sold farms, and hence in hordes of the hungry tramping the streets and seeking jobs in vain."

And again:

"Let us have the courage to stop borrowing to meet continued deficits. Stop the deficits. And let us also have the courage to reverse the policies of Republican leaders and insist on a sound currency."

What has happened is that during the 3 years of Roosevelt's administration the national debt of the United States has increased from about twenty-one and a half billion dollars to a sum of $30,526,830,316.94. It is estimated that the net operating deficit of the Roosevelt administration at the close of the fiscal year, July 1, 1936, will amount to about $15,000,000,000, which will bring the total national debt to a sum of $35,000,000,000, which with contingent liabilities of over four and one-half billions, will bring the gross debt up to nearly $40,000,000,000. In the face of this, can Mr. Roosevelt say truthfully that the fear of having to liquidate this debt by either inflation or confiscatory taxes is not a natural fear? Can he truthfully say, as he said in his political message to Congress, that this fear is synthetic, manufactured, and poisonous? May we recall also at this point that when the Federal emergency relief bill was before the House Banking and Currency Committee in 1933, at a time when the national debt was about $22,000,000,000, a New Deal Senator, appearing before the committee, in answer to the question, "How far do you think we can go in bonding the Government of the United States before Government credit will be seriously jeopardized?" responded that experts had testified that we could go up to about $35,000,000,000.

To show the lightness with which Government indebtedness is considered by the administration, let me compare this statement with that made by Marriner Eccles, Mr. Roosevelt's Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, before the House Banking and Currency Committee, when testifying on the subject of the Banking Act of 1935. Mr. Eccles, who now heads the politicalized Federal Reserve Board, which establishes the monetary and credit policies of the Government as the fiscal agent of the Government, said that he had no fear whatsoever of a $40,000,000,000 Government debt, which, together with an internal municipal debt of about $20,000,000,000, which is the bonded indebtedness of our States, counties, and municipalities, would make the total public debt, which Mr. Eccles does not fear, to the astronomical figure of $60,000,000,000.

With men in public office who regard their promises so lightly and the Government credit of so little importance, how can Mr. Roosevelt with honesty charge that the fear of the people in these respects is synthetic? When he says that "the only thing we have to fear is fear itself", let him be reminded that the American people honestly and sincerely fear inflation. They fear a condition in America comparable to that which contributed to the French Revolution and to the devastating policies of currency manipulation in Germany and Austria, within the memory of all of us, which broke both of those countries.

Let him be reminded also that what the American people fear, in addition to inflation or confiscatory taxation, is Government control of business, Government control of agriculture, the delegation by Congress to him, the President, of its constitutional powers and prerogatives to coin money and regulate the value thereof. Let him be reminded that in addition to fear itself, they fear that if all of these other attempts to socialize America fail, but that the control of credit through the operation of the Banking Act of 1935 is maintained, then a single individual, namely, the President himself, acting through the medium of a politicalized Federal Reserve Board, may, by the manipulation of credit, regulate the flow of the lifeblood of business, industry, and agriculture, and control the very destiny of our people. Truly, as Mr. Roosevelt says, "This is an impossible economic condition."

Let him again be reminded that increasing deficits can be pyramided into a larger public debt and that an ever-increasing public debt means excessive taxation and that money which would otherwise be used to purchase goods and agricultural products must be used to pay taxes to carry these burdensome obligations; and let him be warned in his own words that if taxes are excessive "they are reflected in idle factories, tax-sold farms, and hence in hordes of the hungry tramping the streets and seeking jobs in vain." In truth, as he says, "let us have courage to stop borrowing to meet continued deficits—stop the deficits."

The only way we will be able to stop the deficits and to stop borrowing to meet continued deficits is to return a party to power which has kept faith with the American people and will make an honest endeavor to balance outgo and income in its administration of Government functions. I have called attention to only a few of the paradoxes of this administration, merely to prove my assertion that it has broken faith with the American people. These breaches of faith and demagogeries on the part of the New Deal party may be justified by the advocates of socialism, fascism, Hitlerism, or communism. There is no place for them in Americanism.

The present New Deal administration is indicted at the bar of popular opinion because it has not kept the covenant; because it has broken faith; because of its manipulation of the currency; because by a sectional attitude it has given to some sections of the country the advantages of cheap power not enjoyed by others; because it has launched upon a continuing program of experimentation and trial-and-error prescription for our economic ills; because it has not established a definite policy with respect to its attitude toward business and agriculture and maintained it long enough for business and agriculture to readjust itself to the new order of things; because of its failure to make an honest endeavor to approach a balancing of the Budget; because of its attempts at the centralization of governmental power and functions, reaching out, as it does, to control agriculture, business, industry, finance, and credit.

It is charged with impairing the confidence of our people not only in the policies of the administration but in government itself. The New Dealers cannot answer the charge that this lack of confidence is the result of difficulties except of their own making. "Lack of confidence is not the result of difficulties; difficulties come from lack of confidence." Our difficulties now take the form of a disintegration of our economic structure to the extent that to bolster it up many are ready to embrace any of the many prevalent economic panaceas for our economic ills. With the return of sound government under Republican leadership, these problems will solve themselves.

Do the people want to get rid of the New Deal? Did you note the increase in factory production and employment following the announcement by the administration that business was to have a "breathing spell"? A breathing spell from what? From Government interference and restriction, of course. And the announcement of a "breathing spell" was an implied recognition that all that had gone before was unjust, unwarranted, and unsound.

Did you notice the favorable reaction in the stock market, which is the barometer of business conditions, following the demise of the N. R. A.? Did you notice the raise in the commodity price index of agricultural products when the A. A. A. decision was rendered by the Supreme Court? In these tangible evidences of relief from restraint lies the answer of the American people to whether they want a continuance of New Deal policies. Most economists including Irving Fisher of Yale, are of the belief that we were coming out of the depression in the summer of 1932. The elections of that year and the resultant confusion concerning the policies of the incoming administration set back our approach to prosperity 4 years. The Republican Party has been called back into power to rebuild the Nation upon the ruins resulting from the devastating and destructive experiments of a party which has proven itself incapable, in at least three administrations, of maintaining a government "of the people, by the people, and for the people." It will not shirk its duty to do so again next year.

We have repeatedly condemned our opponents for their destructive criticism when we were in power. Let us not make the same mistake. For that reason we should probably give more attention to the formulation of our own platform of policies than to criticism of the mistakes and motives of the New Dealers. People of the United States from experience have a right to expect intelligent leadership by the Republican Party. Intelligent leadership contemplates an understanding of the people's problems. This the Republicans of the Nation have. We can assure the people that the Republican Party stands foremost for constitutional government, which in practice now means a return of the Government to the people, a turn from autocracy to democracy.

We do not believe that every businessman, every industrialist, and every successful farmer is a parasite on the body politic, obtaining their livelihood by making others miserable; but we do believe that under our form of government, business, industry, and agriculture should be allowed and encouraged to expand proportionately with the expansion of the market for their products. We do believe that there should be a revivification of the truism that wealth can be created only through the exercise of man's talents, that the social security of our people is dependent upon the ability of our manufacturers and farmers to sell the products of their farms and factories, which contemplates a protected American market which consumes 93 percent of the products which we grow and make.

We believe further that the domestic market may be expanded by a restoration of purchasing power and that to increase purchasing power every safeguard should be thrown around American business, industry, and agriculture as an inducement to expand and employ men and women. This embraces the belief that we must stabilize our currency in order that our people may know from month to month the purchasing power of our money, that we must stabilize the policies of government in order that our business men and women may be able to adjust their businesses without fear of constant change and unwarranted interference.

We believe that we should balance the Federal Budget; that we should do away with all unnecessary bureaus, because an unbalanced budget is a constant threat to our economic prosperity. We believe that this involves balancing outgo with income and as Republicans we should pledge to the people of the United States that upon the return to power of the Republican Party in January 1937 one of the first acts of the new administration will be to purge the Government of every unconstitutional, unnecessary agency which is now preventing the balancing of the Federal Budget.

We must and will give assurance that in conformity with the Constitution, striving under and with patriotic regard for that Constitution, we will remove the uncertainty and lack of confidence in government which now exists by enunciating and adhering to definite and honest-intentioned policies—such policies as will give assurance of cooperation rather than destruction.

With these ideals we welcome the coming campaign and the issues which are involved. We know that the American people, having created a civilization higher than that in any other country in the world, have no desire to relinquish that enviable position. We are going forward—ever forward. The people of America know the heart and the purpose of the Republican Party. "We will not retreat."

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a compilation made by the Library of Congress in relation to the League of Nations. It would take about four pages.

The SPEAKER. If it takes over two pages the gentleman would have to get an estimate of cost.

Mr. TINKHAM. I have that estimate, and it is $192.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following public statements of Franklin Delano Roosevelt relative to the League of Nations, 1919 to March 3, 1933, inclusive, prepared by Legislative Reference Service, Library of Congress:

ADDRESS AT LUNCHEON OF LEAGUE OF FREE NATIONS ASSOCIATION IN NEW YORK CITY, MARCH 1, 1919 (LARGELY INDIRECT QUOTATION)

Unless the United States entered the League of Nations, said Mr. Roosevelt, it would become a new form of the Holy Alliance of Europe. As for the argument of those who declared the Covenant would bind the United States to take part in every Balkan squabble, Mr. Roosevelt pointed out that the League's representative would have "a certain amount of common sense" and would not ask the American people to do anything they did not want to do or that was inconsistent.

Regarding the allegation that the Covenant was in direct violation of the American Constitution, Mr. Roosevelt averred that the Constitution was a document "through which a team and horses can be driven on every page."

He pointed out that the success of the League of Nations depended not so much on the Covenant as on the spirit with which it was accepted by the nations. To those who affirmed that the League was a step in the dark and "would lead to internationalism", Mr. Roosevelt retorted that " there were different conceptions of internationalism; that while the League would lead to an internationalism of good will, honor, and service among nations, which would prevent a repetition of the horrors of war, it would not lead to the internationalism of the red flag or the black flag." (New York Times, Mar. 2, 1919, sec. 2, p. 1.)

ADDRESS AT CITY CLUB IN BALTIMORE, MARCH 29, 1919

It would be well if the League constitution could be amended so that Europe would be called on to deal with its own problems, such as those that may arise in the Balkans, and the United States be called in only as a last resort and to settle problems that could not be settled by European nations without the effort itself bringing about graver problems than those which it is sought to settle. * * *

But I am willing to give faith to the common sense of the membership of the League, faith in the same sort of common sense that prevented this Nation, a group of States loosely bound together by a Constitution that was not generally approved, from going on the rocks during the administration of our first President. I have faith that under the present draft of the constitution of the League of Nations, even if it is not amended, any trouble in the Balkans, for instance, will be given to the European nations for settlement, only calling on us if our participation should become necessary to avert a general European war, such as we have just had, and in the same way if trouble should arise on this side of the water, we would be given the mandate to settle it.

But if the amendments cannot go in, if for any reason they are not thought advisable by the associated nations, then I am willing to make a try on the thing as it is at present planned. It gives an answer—perhaps an imperfect answer, perhaps not the best answer, but an answer to the great cry, the deep appeal that is heard in this country, and which rises from all over Europe, that out of this war must come something newer, something higher, something of more lofty ideals than that which has gone before. This is the great yearning of the world.

And if no answer shall be given, many people, not only on this side of the world but all over the world, are going to be sorely disappointed. They are going to throw up their hands and say: "Well, if the forms of government that exist now cannot procure for us some kind of answer to the problems of the world, we are not so sure that we had not better try some other sort of government." People are saying that out loud now on the streets of Paris and London, and those who are talking like that here are not far away.

We want study, we want honest deliberation on the question of whether this answer which is being proposed is not sufficiently good to make it worth while for us of the United States to give up something that we have prized, to give up this or that or the other that we like, or whether we will be giving away too much of our American heritage in order to join in with the rest of the world to avert the likelihood of future wars.

I believe the League of Nations proposition will go through. I believe it will go through with the general consent of the people of the United States to the unutterable delight of millions of downtrodden people of Europe. (Baltimore Sun, Mar. 30, 1919, pt. 1, p. 16.)

INTERVIEW IN COLUMBUS, OHIO, JULY 12, 1920

Mr. Roosevelt was asked—

"Do you regard the League of Nations as the dominant issue of the campaign?" * * *

"Yes," Mr. Roosevelt said, with quiet emphasis.

"And you will treat it as such in your campaign speeches?"

"Undoubtedly", he replied.

"Do you believe that the Democratic Party's stand on that issue will take more strongly in the West than in the East?"

"I am not in a position to speak of the relative popularity of our attitude in the West and in the East", he replied. "I know that it will make a big hit in the West." (New York Times, July 13, 1920, p. 2.)

STATEMENT IN HYDE PARK, N. Y., JULY 15, 1920

* * * quite willing, as I know Governor Cox is, to let the American people decide whether they will go back to the conditions of 1914, or whether they will join with civilization and humanity in this great step forward. * * *

It is, of course, well known that seven-eighths of the opposition of these Senators is not to the League of Nations but to the person of the President of the United States himself.

* * * The Democratic Party enters the campaign with the clear-cut purpose of proving that the World War has not been fought in vain. Senator Harding says, "Should the Democrats win, the treaty and the League will be ratified." He is right. * * *

One of the prominent issues is thus becoming early and clearly drawn. A Democratic victory means ratification of the treaty and the League of Nations, which, as the world knows, is already constituted. A Republican victory means that the United States * * * shall remain outside. The election of Harding means that in case of future war the United States will enter the war after the conflict has begun. The election of Cox means that the United States, in participation with the other civilized nations of the world, will, through the League of Nations, solve international difficulties and prevent a recurrence of the holocaust of 1914–18. (New York Times, July 15, 1920, p. 2.)

ADDRESS DURING PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN IN MILWAUKEE, WIS., AUGUST 12, 1920

I am not afraid of the League of Nations. I believe it is the old guard of reactionary Republican leaders who are trying to befuddle this issue. * * *

As a result of the Great War * * * international law seems to be catching up to the law of the individual or of the separate state.

The League of Nations is but an expression of the new law of nations.

Under the League of Nations the presumption of neutrality is completely reversed, and the nation which plans to attack another can assume with far greater probability that all the other nations will be against it. Not neutral as in the old days but, on the contrary, hostile. The other nations will now demand that the attacking nation shall show cause why it did not observe the law of nations, the law of decency, the law of twentieth-century morality.

* * * * * * *

The old policy has broken down. The world is crying for an extension of the law of the individual and of the state to the law of international relations. * * *

The heart of America goes out to the Polish Nation. Our hands are tied. Because of the obstructionist methods of Senator Harding's group of Senators, the United States is still technically at war. It is not a member of the League of Nations. All it can do is from time to time to offer its advice and sympathy. Action is impossible while our hands are tied.

If America had been a member of the League of Nations, the Polish Nation would not be today fighting bolshevism with its back to the wall.

Do not let us forget the moral force of the United States in such an undertaking. It would not have been necessary for a single American soldier to cross the seas. It would not have been necessary for America to become entangled in any way in European politics. Ours would have been the quieting and steadying hand in a league which without America is incomplete.

* * * A little handful of narrow men are trying to force us to fight this campaign on little, narrow issues.

There are many sincere people who are honest in their belief. My quarrel is with the men who oppose the League of Nations dishonestly, who try to befuddle this country by dragging in technicalities. They talk about "America first." Is that a proper campaign argument to float in the face of one-half—yes; three-fourths—of the people of this Nation who want America to enter the League of Nations?

We pray it is not too late. (New York Times, Aug. 13, 1920, p. 3.)

ADDRESS DURING PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN IN ST. PAUL, MINN., AUGUST 13, 1920

The distinguished Senator from Ohio is one who is careful to wait until the last minute before committing himself to any definite policy. This is borne out by his stand on the League of Nations question during the past year and a half. He was supposed to be in favor of mild reservations. He was then supposed to be in favor of the Lodge reservations. He was later supposed to be in favor of the Republican platform as adopted at Chicago, but no one knew what this meant until his speech of acceptance. The result of that speech is shown by the absolute divergence of opinion as to what it meant by Republicans and others all over the country. (New York Times, Aug. 14, 1920, p. 3.)

ADDRESS DURING PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN IN JAMESTOWN, N. DAK., AUGUST 16, 1920—INDIRECTLY QUOTED

Franklin D. Roosevelt, Democratic Vice-Presidential candidate, in a campaign address here tonight declared that if Gov. James M. Cox was elected President in November, the Peace Treaty would be ratified within 60 days. (New York Times, Aug. 17, 1920, p. 3.)

ADDRESS DURING PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN IN BUTTE, MONT., AUGUST 18, 1920—PRINCIPALLY INDIRECT QUOTATION

President Wilson "put one over" on Premier Lloyd George, of Great Britain, in the distribution of voting strength in the League of Nations, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Democratic Vice-Presidential nominee, declared in an address here today.

"As a matter of fact, the United States has about 12 votes in the Assembly.

"Until last week I had two of them myself and now Secretary Daniels has them. You know, I have had something to do with the running of a couple of little republics * * *."

Mr. Roosevelt said that Haiti, Santo Domingo, Panama, Cuba, and Central American countries, which had at least 12 votes in the League's Assembly, all regarded Uncle Sam as a guardian and big brother and that this country practically would have their votes in the League. (New York Times, Aug. 19, 1920, p. 15.)

INTERVIEW WITH CORNELIUS VANDERBILT, JR., IN PORTLAND, OREG., AUGUST 22, 1920

The League of Nations is decidedly the paramount issue. Everybody wants to hear about it. These westerners do not wish to take any more chances about war.

I am trying to explain it to them in plain terms. I am trying to show them that the dispute in the Senate was merely one of words. The people of the great West are thoroughly certain as to their wish for a league and I am trying to impress upon them that the Constitution is supreme, league or no league, and that with reservations American constitutional rights could never be infringed by any league whatsoever. (New York Times, Aug. 23, 1920, p. 3.)

ADDRESS DURING PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN IN PORTLAND, OREG., AUGUST 21, 1920

During the last week I have been demolishing a silly argument about England being able to outvote us six to one in the League of Nations. I have shown first of all that it is the Council of the League which is the true governing body, and that in that Council the whole British Empire has but one vote, just the same as the United States. And I have shown that while in the assembly, a very large body, which has primarily only recommendatory powers, five of Great Britain's dominions, like Canada, South Africa, and Australia, each has a vote, the United States of America will undoubtedly have the support of twice as many of our neighboring and friendly republics in the West Indies and South America.

* * * * * * * *

I reiterate exactly what I said before, that the United States will have voting side by side with it in the League of Nations not six states but at least twice that number, and this because of the simple fact that these little republics have the same kind of interests that we have, and that it is even more certain that we will all be voting the same way than that Canada, Australia, and South Africa will be found voting with England. (New York Times, Aug. 23, 1920, p. 3.)

STATEMENT IN CHICAGO, AUGUST 29, 1920

In reviewing the results of his tour through the West, Franklin D. Roosevelt said:

"Everywhere I found the keenest interest manifested in the League of Nations. There is no question that the citizenship of the States I have visited is overwhelmingly in favor of the League. Many told me that the interest today is deeper than 6 months ago. Particularly is this true of the attitude of the women." (New York Times, Aug. 30, 1920, p. 3.)

STATEMENT ISSUED DURING PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN IN BANGOR, MAINE, SEPTEMBER 11, 1920

Even Switzerland, most jealous of independence and wary of alliances, has voted by popular referendum to join the League.

Long before 1914, American statesmen advocated a league of nations. Some, like President Taft, favored one that frankly called itself a league to enforce peace. Yet he was not called a traitor or follower of internationalism.

We had seen the failure of the Hague Tribunal to prevent wars.

* * * * * * *

The great war came and America at last became a party to the struggle * * *. We fought for something constructive, in addition to the fight against something destructive. Men and women of all parties united in demanding in 1917 that the evil in the previous relationship between nations should be in the future removed. Mere good will would not remove the danger, mere international courts had been proved a failure. A definite, businesslike concrete association was demanded, something that would prevent the cause of trouble and not wait until trouble itself had come to a head.

In all of this the Nation was united. With this spirit and purpose our flag was carried across the seas * * *.

When the war ended, the promise of the American flag seemed to have come true. International law, the relations between nations, was to be put on a new basis * * *. No voice was heard in opposition to America's proposal that a new order should supersede the old. We were proud that we could have the opportunity to point the way to world peace, not mere cessation of conflict, but the peace of permanence.

An organization to that end was drawn up by the assembled nations, and through it all America's part was the clearest, the cleanest, and the highest-minded of all. In every nation men and women rejoiced that the spirit of America's flag was being translated into actual accomplishment, and in that rejoicing we shared. Today the accomplishment of the League of Nations has been made. We, the Nation whose ideals made it possible, remain without. The flag which carried the hope and the promise is beginning to be viewed with different eyes abroad.

Not only in France, not only in Europe, but in all the peoples of the world lies that hope in our flag. They ask us to go in. They ask not for a new peace commission, not for a new theory, not for a new conference to draw up a new set of rules. They ask for a fair trial for what we have undertaken. They ask that America help in the name of humanity. They ask that they be given again the inspiration of our flag.

Shall we refuse? Shall we for partisanship stand aloof? Shall we forget our history and the history of our flag? America will not fail in the crisis. America will not turn back. America will not forget. (New York Times, Sept. 11, 1920.)

ADDRESS IN VICE-PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN IN TROY, N. Y., SEPTEMBER 20, 1920

The attitude of Republican speakers in many parts of the country is one of lies. In dealing with the League of Nations issue, they make every attempt to mislead the public.

In parts of the country where there is a so-called German vote, Republican campaign speakers try to get votes by warning that the League is calculated to strengthen France and condemn Germany to servitude. In districts such as northern New England they tell French-Americans that the League, on the contrary, would fortify Germany, make her a greater power than ever, and ruin France. (New York Times, Sept. 21, 1920, p. 6.)

ADDRESS DURING PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN IN CHARLESTON, W. VA., SEPTEMBER 30, 1920

A few days ago I asked Senator Harding where he stood on the League of Nations. I did not say "a league" or "an association", but "the League."

He answered in Wheeling * * * and it is not an answer to my question. * * * I asked him once more the question, and I will make it so clear that every school child can understand. Here it is:

"If the United States can enter the existing League of Nations in such a way that the will of the League cannot be imposed on us against our will, and if it is made clear that our constitutional and congressional rights regarding war are in every way preserved, would you then, Senator Harding, favor our going in? * * *"

I fear that if Mr. Harding replies at all, he will again avoid a direct answer, but my question is so definite that I look for a dignified silence only. (New York Times, Oct. 1, 1920, p. 3.)

ADDRESS DURING PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN IN LIMON, COLO., OCTOBER 6, 1920

After referring to the conflicting views of Republican leaders on the subject of the League, Mr. Roosevelt said:

"All of this proves the contention I have repeatedly made that the voters have the choice this year, not between a policy of going into the League of Nations with all other civilized nations or of approving, on the other hand, some different definite policy, but they must choose between going into this League or accepting leaders so widely split apart in their views that they have no policy. They are riding a plow to which four horses are attached, none pulling together." (New York Times, Oct. 7, 1920, p. 2.)

ADDRESS DURING PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN IN MARION, IND., OCTOBER 15, 1920

Repeatedly the Republican charge has been made that Governor Cox and I are demanding the acceptance of the League as fashioned at Versailles without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i", and repeatedly we have branded this as untrue. In almost every speech I have made in the last 2 months I have stated that we are not willing, but prefer to put in black and white in our ratification of the treaty a provision that nothing contained therein shall be in any way superior to our Constitution or in any way interfere with the rights of Congress to declare war or send our soldiers overseas.

These gentlemen all have brains enough to know that it is the present League or none at all, for it is unthinkable, almost idiotic, to prate about tossing aside the great working association of 41 civilized nations for a nebulous scheme that has an existence only in the mind of Senator Harding. (New York Times, Oct. 16, 1920, p. 16.)

ADDRESS DURING PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN IN LIMA, OHIO, OCTOBER 19, 1920

It will take far more than misleading statements by Senator Harding to prove to Americans that 41 nations, now members of the League, desire to tear down the structure and the machinery of the already successful working League and to substitute for it some other kind of an association which has not yet taken form, even in the mind of the Republican nominee for the Presidency. (New York Times, Oct. 20, 1920, p. 3.)

ADDRESS DURING PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN IN CLEVELAND, OHIO, OCTOBER 20, 1920

I want to make a few remarks in regard to the position taken by the eminent legalist, Mr. Elihu Root, on the subject of the League of Nations. * * *

I have read his statement with great interest. It is based on two major objections. First, to article X; and, secondly, the allegation that President Wilson was by his attitude responsible for our failure to ratify during the last session of the Senate. * * *

Mr. Root says that article X undertakes to guarantee and maintain by force of arms the territorial boundaries adopted by the chief representatives of four nations in Paris in 1919. * * *

Article X does not guarantee to maintain by force of arms. It guarantees to maintain the territorial integrity of nations against outside aggression, and in case of a threat against this territorial integrity the Council of the League shall recommend what steps shall be taken to prevent the execution of the threat. Mr. Root knows that the question of force of arms would not be raised unless various other measures, such as international ostracism of the nation making the threat, had first wholly failed.

In other words, force of arms, which Mr. Root drags up as a bogey, would only be recommended in case of a world conflagration such as that through which we have just passed. Every sane man knows that in case of another World War America would be drawn in anyway, whether we were in the League or not. * * *

The whole treaty proceeded on the assumption that by creating the League of Nations errors made at the Paris Conference could later be corrected or amended through the instrumentality of the League without causing a complete upsetting of international relations, with wars resulting therefrom. Dozens of paragraphs of the treaty prove this contention. They refer many undefined matters to the future action of the League of Nations. * * *

* * * the issue of the League at the present time is between Governor Cox and Senator Harding. One of these gentlemen will take up the question with the next Senate, of whom one-third will be new Members. * * *

* * * Mr. Root has undoubtedly had an opportunity to read the statements made by Governor Cox and by me for several months, the gist of them being that we do not oppose reservations which would clarify doubts existing in the minds of any citizens as to any conflict between the Covenant of the League and the Constitution of the United States. We have made it clear that we wish every citizen to be reassured that the Constitution of the United States and the powers of our Congress shall in every way be preserved.

The voters of the United States understand perfectly clearly the time-worn misrepresentations which have been handed to them.

They appreciate the fact that 41 nations have entered the League of Nations without in any way giving up any of their constitutional or national rights. They appreciate that the League is a going concern. They understand that Governor Cox and I want the United States to join with all these nations and in joining to make it perfectly clear that we give up no rights. (New York Times, Oct. 21, 1920, p. 2.)

ADDRESS DURING PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN IN ELMIRA, N. Y., OCTOBER 22, 1920

American voters everywhere are heartily sick of the continued discussion by men like Mr. Root of the details of words and phrases in connection with the covenant of the League of Nations. * * * They know that Mr. Harding has said that he wants the League rejected. They know that Mr. Cox wants us to join the League with every American right preserved.

In regard to article X, the average voter knows that there is a great difference of opinion among experts as to the exact amount of the obligation by which the United States Congress would be bound in case we entered the League without any reservations or amendments. The average man and woman will accept Mr. Cox's declaration that he wants it made clear before we go in that our constitutional and congressional rights shall remain just what they are today.

* * * * * * *

It is time all of this study of grammar and rhetoric should cease and give way to old-fashioned American common sense. The election will be decided by those who are sick of endless discussions and who have made up their minds that the United States must and shall carry out great purposes in common with other nations.

* * * * * * *

Speaking before the students of Elmira College this morning, Mr. Roosevelt declared that the best argument in favor of the League is the fact that 41 civilized nations are already members, that it is a going concern, and it has the support of a large majority of the clergymen and educators of the country—men and women of intelligence who have had an opportunity to make a careful study of it. (New York Times, Oct. 23, 1920, p. 3.)

TELEGRAM TO GOVERNOR COX, OCTOBER 23, 1920

After visiting districts around Buffalo and in the southern part of New York State, Mr. Roosevelt telegraphed:

"Almost without exception * * * local committeemen * * * tell me that Republican after Republican in their territory is aligning himself in support of you, almost invariably on account of their conviction that the League of Nations must be sustained and that your election is the only possible way in which this can be done." (New York Times, Oct. 24, 1920, sec. 1, p. 4.)

ADDRESS DURING PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN IN PORT JERVIS, N. Y., OCTOBER 23, 1920

Mr. Roosevelt charged that Republican managers had carried on a campaign of "deceit and misrepresentation" against the League, "in which such eminent men as Elihu Root have taken part."

"The issue is now more clearly defined than at any time during the campaign. It is either the League of Nations with reservations acceptable to the new Senate and the American people or it is a flat rejection of the League. In the final analysis there can be no other construction placed upon the election." (New York Times, Oct. 24, 1920, sec. 1, p. 4.)

ADDRESS DURING PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN IN NEWBURGH, N. Y., OCTOBER 23, 1920

Because a man's or a nation's soul is more important than a bank account, we have emphasized almost to the exclusion of the many other arguments in its favor the necessity from a moral point of view of our entering with the civilized nations of the world into the League of Nations.

There are two ways of securing our just share in the development of the world's resources. One is the policy of brute force of such tremendous standing navies and standing armies as will permit us to stretch out and grasp whatever we may need because no other nation or combination of nations is strong enough to gainsay us. The other way is by establishing such close intimacy and friendly agreements with the rest of the world powers as to establish our place with them by mutual concern in the world's progress.

Is anyone foolish enough to imagine that with the United States holding aloof from the Council board, maintaining a position of complete isolation, we will be seriously considered in the agreements which will be reached in the near future? Unless we enter, unless we become a partner in this great partnership of nations, we need expect few benefits from the trade of the world; and as for the other way, the way of brute force, even though we are willing to break the backs of the people with taxation we could not create the armaments fast enough to overawe the confederated nations of the League. (New York Times, Oct. 24, 1920, sec. 1, p. 4.)

ADDRESS BEFORE NATIONAL COLLEGE MEN'S CLUB, HOTEL COMMODORE, NEW YORK CITY, OCTOBER 25, 1920

I cannot state too clearly that Governor Cox and I do not wish a matter of such vital importance to the Nation as our entrance into the League of Nations to be a mere matter between Republican and Democratic Senators. We have repeatedly said that the result of the election should be and will be regarded by the people of the United States as an expression of opinion as to whether they wish to join the League of Nations or not. Furthermore, we have expressed the conviction that if Governor Cox is elected, Republicans in the Senate of the United States will join with Democrats in carrying out the desire of the majority of voters. Every vote for the Democratic ticket will be a vote for the League. The Senate cannot fail to obey that mandate. (New York Times, Oct. 26, 1920, p. 2.)

ADDRESS BEFORE WOMEN'S COX-ROOSEVELT-SMITH LEAGUE, NEW YORK CITY, OCTOBER 25, 1920

Because of their stand on the League of Nations issue the people of the United States have a lower regard for Mr. Taft and Mr. Root than they have ever had. (New York Times, Oct. 26, 1920, p. 2.)

ADDRESS BEFORE POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE, BROOKLYN, N. Y., OCTOBER 25, 1920

The League of Nations is a going concern. It now has 30 members and soon there will be more—Germany and Austria—making 41 in all. Besides this country there are three other countries of the world outside the League—Russia, Turkey, and Mexico. Isn't that a charming company to be with?

I am a much younger lawyer than Mr. Root, but I am willing to stake my legal reputation on my statement that under article X, we do not give up our constitutional rights as to the sending of troops across the water, nor do we give up any other of our rights. (New York Times, Oct. 26, 1920, p. 2.)

ADDRESS DURING PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN IN BROOKLYN, N. Y., OCTOBER 26, 1920

* * * If a crash in foreign parts should occur, the United States would be seriously affected. If for no other reason than a selfish one, the United States must immediately resume her place at the table with other nations in order that economic and financial difficulties resulting from the war may be straightened out and placed in a safe position. It is, of course, reasonable to add that if a collapse occurs because of the United States not taking part in world affairs, it is not merely Americans who are connected with foreign commerce who will suffer. Every other American will feel the blow indirectly even those who live in the middle of the country or on the farms. (New York Times, Oct. 27, 1920, p. 6.)

ADDRESS DURING PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN IN BALTIMORE, OCTOBER 27, 1920—LARGELY INDIRECT QUOTATION

After his speech was delivered he invited questions. None was asked immediately, so he took occasion to answer the charge that Great Britain has 6 votes in the League to America's 1. He said that charge was false, and that in the governing body of the League, the Council, this country and Great Britain each has 1 vote. Then an elderly woman in the gallery inquired about Ireland, and Mr. Roosevelt said that if he and Governor Cox are elected and this country joins the League they will lay before it the Irish question under the terms of article 11.

"Why", asked a man in the audience, "were the Lodge reservations so objectionable?"

"The chief objection", replied Mr. Roosevelt, "was the tone in which they were drawn. To have adopted them in the language in which they were written would have been going back on all the splendid records of our relations with the other nations of the world."

"One of the afternoon papers * * *", a man * * * told Mr. Roosevelt, "yesterday said that Governor Cox had gone back on the President with respect to the League. Is that true?"

"Absolutely not", said Mr. Roosevelt, emphatically.

Mr. Roosevelt * * * told of Senator New * * * sending instructions throughout the country to speak, not of the League of Nations but of "Wilson's League." Mr. Roosevelt said that he had been abroad when the Peace Conference was in session and knew that many nations shared in framing the League. "But", he added, slowly, "history is going to say—is going to say proudly—that America's President, Woodrow Wilson, had a part in framing the League." (Baltimore Sun, Oct. 28, 1920, p. 22.)

(NOTE.—No pertinent statements were found for the years 1921 and 1922.)

STATEMENT IN WASHINGTON AFTER TALK WITH EX-PRESIDENT WILSON APRIL 7, 1923

"Mr. Clark left the Supreme Bench to give his whole time and effort to fostering the League idea. He is at the head of a nonpartisan organization working in the interest of having this country join the League of Nations. There are men in the Republican Party and in the Democratic Party who believe strongly that this country should enter the League."

Asked whether he believed the United States should go into the League, Mr. Roosevelt said:

"That depends upon what you mean by the League. There have been great changes in the world since the Covenant of the League of Nations was written. Much water has run over the mill.

"Conditions have changed. I believe that everyone who thinks the United States should join a league believes that it must be a revised league. It has been said, and I think correctly, that the Versailles Treaty no longer exists as it was written. Conditions have changed vitally in Europe since those days. It was originally contemplated that the United States should ratify the treaty and become a member of the League of Nations."

Mr. Roosevelt further indicated that if the United States had joined the League of Nations a vastly different situation might now exist in the world. When asked how the League was to be changed so that the United States might enter, "the former candidate for Vice President laughingly declined to specify." (Washington Star, Apr. 8, 1923, pt. 1, p. 2.)

INTERVIEW WITH NEWSPAPER CORRESPONDENT IN WASHINGTON, APRIL 8, 1923—INDIRECTLY QUOTED

Mr. Roosevelt pointed out that under the present system of voting it was practically impossible to ascertain the real desires of the majority. In political campaigns issues become confused, and this, with a multiplicity of issues, makes it difficult or impossible to interpret the verdict rendered at the polls. Mr. Roosevelt feels that this was particularly true in the campaign of 1920, which involved the League of Nations with all its ramifications. It has been asserted that the result of the election was a repudiation of the League, but there never has been any means of proving this. (New York Times, Apr. 9, 1923, pp. 1–2.)

LECTURE AT MILTON ACADEMY, MAY 1926

Every trend of modern science is toward the greater unification of mankind. * * *

Isolation of individual nations will be as difficult in this future as would be the isolation of New England or the South today. The same laws of the history of progress apply. First, the self-sufficient small community, then the grouping of several communities, then the small state, then the nation, then alliances between nations, and now a permanent congress of nations. (Whither bound? (Franklin D. Roosevelt, Boston and New York) 1926, p. 28.)

ADDRESS IN MANCHESTER, GA., OCTOBER 2, 1928

Ten years ago we held a position of leadership among all the nations of the world. This was because we were seeking an ideal, the ideal of bringing about such an organization among the peoples of the world that there never again would be another war such as the one which had just been concluded. * * *

In those days we were looked to for leadership * * * and the President of the United States advanced a plan which was accepted by all the nations except Mexico. It has its faults, but it has brought about improvement in a great many things. (New York Times, Oct. 3, 1928, p. 12.)

ADDRESS BEFORE THE NEW YORK STATE GRANGE IN ALBANY, FEBRUARY 2, 1932

In common with millions of my fellow countrymen, I worked and spoke in 1920 in behalf of American participation in a league of nations, conceived in the highest spirit of world friendship for the great object of preventing a return of world war. For that course I have no apology to make.

If today I believed that the same or even similar factors entered into the argument, I would still favor America's entry into the League, and I would go so far as to seek to win over the overwhelming opposition which exists in this country today.

But the League of Nations today is not the League conceived by Woodrow Wilson. It might have been had the United States joined. Too often, through these years, its major function has been not the broad, overwhelming purpose of world peace but rather a mere meeting place for the political discussion of strictly European political difficulties. In these the United States should have no part.

The fact remains that we did not join the League. The League has not developed through these years along the course contemplated by its founder, nor have the principal members shown a disposition to divert the huge sums spent on armaments into the channels of legitimate trade, balanced budgets, and payment of obligations.

American participation in the League would not serve the highest purpose of the prevention of war and a settlement of international difficulties in accordance with fundamental American ideals. Because of these facts, I do not favor American participation. (New York Times, Feb. 3, 1932, p. 4.)

See also the book, Looking Forward, Franklin D. Roosevelt, New York, 1933, pages 254–255.

THE REAL COST OF THE TOWNSEND PLAN

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point on the Townsend plan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, there are many reasons why one should not vote for the Townsend plan. They have been published at various times. If the plan were sound, if it would work, can you think of any reason why any of us past 60 should not be for it? Probably one is just as selfish as another, and $2,400 a year without work looks just as attractive to me as to anyone else and, if I knew of any possible way to carry out Dr. Townsend's idea without putting an undue burden upon the rest of the people of my country, I would be out shouting from the housetops in favor of this plan.

THE COST

Here is one objection to the plan, the soundness of which you can verify for yourself. What will this plan cost and who will pay that cost?

Let us use as our basic figures those which are unquestioned or given us by Dr. Townsend himself. Our computation, as here made, will not quite prove itself, because the figures are not carried out more than one point beyond the decimal, but they are accurate for all practical purposes.

(For accuracy I shall refer to the sworn testimony of Dr. Townsend given before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives in January and February of 1935, the numbers in parentheses being the pages of that record.)

Dr. Townsend (pp. 697 and 698), under oath, gave it as his opinion that, based on the 1930 census, there were 10,365,000 people eligible to receive the pension; that some would not apply, but that 8,000,000 probably would; and that it would require $19,200,000,000 per year to pay the pension to that number.

The total population, as given in the 1930 United States census, was 122,775,046. This count includes men, women, and children. Many, including those in State prisons, in charitable institutions, and children, would not pay anything. But assuming that each—which, of course, he does not—including the children, paid his share, the raising of the $19,200,000,000 a year would require that each pay $156.38 per year, although this figure does not include either the expense of collection or distribution; that is, the pay of all the office-holders who would be required to administer the plan, and many have estimated this would be at least $10,000,000,000 more.

We shall, to give the plan a favorable construction, disregard the administrative cost of carrying out the plan, although we have no right to do so, if we are to be either fair or accurate.

To see for yourself just how the plan would work, apply it to your own community, village, township, county, or State. This you do by determining the number of persons eligible for the $200 pension in that particular community, and multiplying that number by $2,400 per year. You will thus get the total amount which that community must raise.

Then take the total number of people in that community and determine how much each must be charged, to find what it costs each. If you desire to be accurate, do not count the children nor those who may be in jail or in other institutions, that is, all who are not spending money, hence would not be taxed or contribute to the cost of the pension, and divide the total cost among those who are spending and who must necessarily pay the 2-percent transaction tax.

Let me give you an illustration or two. Using Dr. Townsend's figures of there being 8,000,000 who would apply and be eligible for the pension, and a total population figure of 122,775,046, the result is that one out of approximately every 15.3 persons would receive $200 per month. These figures apply the Nation over.

AN ILLUSTRATION FROM THE FOURTH DISTRICT OF MICHIGAN

The population of Van Buren County in 1930 was 32,637. Applying the ratio given by Dr. Townsend it means, disregarding ultimate fractions, that there are 2,133.1 persons in Van Buren County who would be eligible and who would receive $200 a month—$2,400 per year; that is, the Townsend plan would cost the people of Van Buren County $5,119,440 per year. If you spread this total cost on all of the people and if each, including the children, paid his share, it would amount to approximately $156.38 for each person, including children. That is, 32,637 people must each pay $156.38 per year—a family of five, $781.90—so that 2,133.1 people may receive a pension of $200 per month.

Just how much it would cost those spending money no one knows, for the number of children, the number of those who have nothing to spend, the number in jail, is an uncertain quantity. Your guess is as good as anyone's.

But certainly the amount which each one spending money would be required to contribute is in excess of $156.38 per year.

Using the Michigan Manual of 1935 for figures, we find that Allegan city has a population of 3,941. If one in 15.3 is eligible, that gives us 257.5 pensioners in Allegan city and, multiplied by $2,400 a year, gives us $618,000 which Allegan city must raise each year, in addition to all other taxes, if it be an average community.

Take the city of Benton Harbor, with a population of 15,434. If one in 15.3 is eligible, that would give Benton Harbor 1,008.7 pensioners, which, multiplied by $2,400 a year, makes $2,420,880, which the city of Benton Harbor must raise during a year.

Selecting the fourth named township in each county, the result is as follows:

Name of county	Name of township	Population	Number of pensioners	Cost per year to township
Allegan	Clyde	1,083	70.7	$169,680
Barry	Carlton	1,021	66.7	160,080
Berrien	Berrien	1,864	121.6	292,320
Cass	La Grange	2,163	141.3	339,120
St. Joseph	Fabius	747	48.8	117,120
Van Buren	Bangor	2,124	138.8	333,120

Here is another good way to illustrate the working of the plan. The figures demonstrate that out of every 15.3 persons in the country one is eligible to the pension. Just take a group of 15.3 persons—call it 16. Pick out the one who is to receive the $200 per month—the $2,400 per year—and ask the other 15 whether each wants to pay in not less than $156.38 per year to give the pension to the one.

Get the figures as to your own township. Your local editor will have the Michigan manual. Figure it out for your own village, township, city, or county. Then no one can fool you. If I am in error, correct me. We all make mistakes.

The best estimates obtainable show that the total national income for 1935 will be approximately $55,000,000,000. Dr. Townsend's figures show that, to give the pension to 8,000,000 people, $19,200,000,000 of this $55,000,000,000 must be taken. He advocates a plan whereby 34⅞ percent of the total income of the Nation shall be given to 6½ percent of the people. Eight million are to receive $19,200,000,000, while 122,775,046 are to pay it to them, if you include everyone as paying. If you include only wage earners, given by the United States Census of 1930 as 46,400,858, and who, so many argue, ultimately pay all taxes, you will find that every six wage earners will be supporting one pensioner. Where is the justice in this?

Some Townsend lecturers try to make the people believe that the funds for the pension will be raised from the wealthy, and they repeat the old, shop-worn misstatement that 2 percent of the people own between 80 and 95 percent of the wealth, when, as a matter of fact, 72 percent of the wealth and 68 percent of the income are owned by people who have less than $5,000 a year.

Every time the poor man spends a dollar and the total dollars spent by the wage earner many, many times outnumber those spent by the rich, the millionaire—the wage earner not only pays the 2-percent tax on that particular transaction, but he also pays, in every purchase he makes, in addition, the accumulated transaction taxes which have been added as the raw product went from the grower to the merchant.

To illustrate: If you buy a dollar's worth of bread, you not only pay the 2-cent tax on that particular transaction, but the cost of the bread has been increased by the tax which was added to the wheat, to the labor which produced it, to the transportation of it, to the flour, to the labor which produced it, to its transportation, to the baking, until it came to the man from whom you purchase, so that, instead of getting the same amount of bread you now do, you would get much less bread, a substantial part of the dollar having been used to pay previous transaction taxes.

Another silly illustration given by this gentleman is this: He says that the laborer, earning $20 a week, will pay a 40-cent transaction tax, while the millionaire will pay a $20,000 transaction tax. The laboring man is forced to spend practically all of his $20 per week. His tax on his wages would be 40 cents, but I have just pointed out the additional tax which he would pay. How many millionaires would spend a million dollars and so be required to pay a $20,000 tax?

And right here let me call attention to the situation of the independent merchant in his competition with the chain stores and the mail-order houses. The chain stores, which buy direct from the producer or buy direct from the manufacturer, or which manufacture their own products and sell direct to the consumer, will be able to sell for from 2 to 20 percent, yes, sometimes 30 percent, lower than the independent merchant, whose product has gone through many hands, has been involved in many financial transactions, each time paying the 2-cent tax, while the chain store has had but one or two transaction taxes to pay and pass on. What do you think of the plan, you independent merchants?

WHAT IS THE TOWNSEND PLAN?

Before gentlemen criticize opponents of the Townsend plan they should tell us what the plan is. The Townsend Weekly says that it is $200 per month. Dr. Townsend, in his sworn testimony—pages 684 and 685—said it went to everyone, rich and poor, who qualified. The McGroarty bill does not call for $200 a month and it limits those eligible to persons with an income of $2,400 or less per year.

Dr. Townsend would extend the plan to those 45 or 50 years of age.

On page 751 of the doctor's sworn testimony I find this:

So let us start with the age of 60. It will not be 5 years until we will reduce it to the age of 45 or 50, because machine production is going to increase infinitely from this time on.

It is understood that our critics are lecturing in favor of the plan which provides $200 a month, to be spent within 30 days. There is a great difference between what the Townsend Weekly prints, the Townsend lecturers say, Dr. Townsend's testimony and the McGroarty bill. Does the gentleman intend to follow Dr. Townsend with a pension of $200 for those 45 or 50?

The gentleman is telling his audiences that they will get $200 a month. Does he not know that the McGroarty bill does not provide for any such sum? Were he in Congress, would he represent all the people of the district, or would he take the orders of Dr. Townsend?

In the Townsend Weekly of December 30, 1935, under the heading "A warning to Congress", beginning on the first page, is an article which concludes on the third page with this statement:

Now, you take our orders or—get out.

This gentleman, undoubtedly a candidate for Congress at the next election, tells you, if he tells you anything, that he will take his orders from the Townsend organization "or get out." That is his privilege. For myself, I can only repeat: True service to the district and its people will not permit me to take orders from Dr. Townsend, whose newspaper, one of his former associates says, is paying him $2,000 a week and whose organizations are collecting from his followers hundreds of thousands of dollars a month, a man who lives in California, and serve him, rather than all the people of the district.

This gentleman cites the World War, saying that the removal of 3,000,000 men raised salaries to unknown levels. He forgets that during the war there was an extraordinary market for materials produced in America and sold abroad, and it was the demand, as well as the scarcity, which raised the price of labor.

The old dodge of asking the critics of the Townsend plan to produce something better carries its own answer. If the theory be correct, and if a 2-percent transaction tax will produce a pension of $200 for those 60 or over; if, by taxing all for the benefit of a class will bring prosperity to all, why not make the tax 10 percent or more, make everybody eligible, everyone happy, and enjoy the benefit of the added prosperity which the greater tax would give?

DR. TOWNSEND BLEEDING THE AGED OF THEIR LIFEBLOOD TO ENRICH HIMSELF

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Townsend plan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection (p. 72, Jan. 6, 1936).

* * * * * * *

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I obtained permission to extend my remarks on the Townsend plan. I desire to incorporate some excerpts and data that I think would be enlightening to my colleagues, and I ask that permission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection (p. 132, Jan. 7, 1936).

* * * * * * *

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I got permission the other day to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Townsend plan. I ask that that be extended to be dated on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection (p. 590, Jan. 17, 1936).

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, being pressed for time, I was unable to finish my speech on the Townsend plan, hence will conclude it now.

I beseech every Townsend follower to read with an unbiased open mind the facts I have collated, and they will be forced to the conclusion that they have been misled, and are being robbed, and they will get no returns whatever for their hard-earned money they are expending.

INEVITABLE DISAPPOINTMENT AWAITS THEM

If all 435 Congressmen and all 96 Senators today were to pass unanimously the Townsend plan, and the President were to sign it, they would never get any money. The Supreme Court immediately would annul it and set it aside, because clearly it is unconstitutional.

IN PERFORMING DUTY, BECAME TARGET FOR ATTACKS

It will be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that as soon as the Townsend plan was proposed, I spoke against it, first because the proposed transactions tax is unconstitutional, in that it proposes to tax all of the 120,000,000 people to pay a $24,000,000,000 gratuity to a particular class of 10,000,000 people 60 years old, and second, because our annual revenues from every possible source being less than $4,000,000,000, it would be absolutely impossible to raise an additional $24,000,000,000 needed to pay this pension.

I knew my speech would bring wrath upon my head. I knew it would make me a central target for attacks. But I was willing to make the sacrifice if I could save 10,000,000 aged people from sure and certain disappointment. I knew absolutely beyond all doubt that they would never be paid this proposed $200 per month, and I did not want them to be exploited out of money they could not afford to waste on propagandists.

THEN THE DELUGE CAME

Last January, in his Record Ledger, at Tujunga, Calif., our beloved new colleague from California, JOHN STEPHEN MCGROARTY, who is now my personal friend, and for whom I have the highest respect and regard, who is the author of and introduced the bill in the House for the Townsend plan, published a statement about my speech, and then admonished Californians as follows:

> However, it remains to be seen whether or not the Honorable BLANTON may change his mind. One way to cause him to change his mind is for all Texans residing in California to go after him in the mail and by telegraph. The thing to do is to get the people of BLANTON'S district to organize Townsend Clubs in numbers and strength on a parallel with our clubs at home.
>
> BLANTON might have a change of heart and of mind if made aware that he might stand no more chance than a jack rabbit to come back to Congress.
>
> Let the order of the day in the Townsend Clubs be to contact all Texans.

You will note that he told Californians that the thing for them to do was for Californians "to get the people of BLANTON'S district to organize Townsend Clubs in numbers and strength on a parallel with our clubs at home."

PAID ORGANIZERS SENT THROUGHOUT MY DISTRICT

Paid organizers were sent into the counties of my district. I was simply deluged each day with threatening letters and telegrams, which at first came mostly from California and the Western States, and then after the organizing in my district had gotten under way, some came from the counties of my district.

SHACKELFORD COUNTY

The press reported that Drexal Chapman, a paid organizer from Dallas, appeared at the courthouse in Albany on Wednesday, January 16, 1935, to organize Shackelford County Townsend Club, and that any person under 60 years could become a member by paying $1 per year.

PALO PINTO COUNTY

I mentioned Friday the letter Townsend Club officials at Mineral Wells sent me January 21, 1935, stating they represent 1,500 voters in Mineral Wells, and have the signatures of 2,000 voters in Palo Pinto County, and of 40,000 of the best people in my congressional district, who demand that I support the Townsend plan or resign my position. I will shortly explain just how these voters have been misled in gaining their signatures.

TAYLOR COUNTY

In the Abilene Times, April 19, 1935, Mr. I. M. Bennett published a double-column attack against me, disclosing that Mr. D. J. McNamara, of 2501 Jennings Avenue, Fort Worth, on behalf of the Towsendites had been to Mineral Wells and made a speech in the Carlsbad Pavilion attacking me, and claimed there were 100,000 Townsend supporters in my district and 30,000,000 of them in the United States and were rapidly increasing, Bennett stating, "We are going to have a man groomed and ready to take care of you and he will turn your political toes up to the daisies." Bennett also stated he had just spent 3 months in Dallas, speaking to the 48 Townsend clubs in Dallas. On November 8, 1935, Mr. Bennett published another statement that he had just returned from the Townsend club meeting in Chicago, and that the 6,078 delegates there had pledged themselves to return to their congressional districts to push the organization of Townsend clubs in every voting precinct, preparatory to electing Congressmen and Senators in 1936. United Press Staff Correspondent Gordon K. Shearer last Tuesday reported Representative Fred Harris as saying that there are now 50 Townsend clubs in the city of Dallas.

MAKING GOOD THEIR THREATS

A Dallas item last Tuesday stated that State Senator Claud C. Westerfeld, as a Townsend candidate, had announced against Congressman HATTON W. SUMNERS. Another item stated that Joseph H. Price, of Fort Worth, a Townsend candidate, had announced against Senator MORRIS SHEPPARD, and that Julien Hyer, of Fort Worth, a Townsend candidate, had announced against Congressman FRITZ LANHAM.

COMANCHE COUNTY

Last January the Comanche Chief announced that Joseph B. Worthington, of Fort Worth, Townsend organizer for the Townsend Clubs in the Seventeenth Congressional District of Texas, would speak in Comanche, and quoted Mr. L. H. Creamer, chairman of the county club, as saying:

> We have got to get the number of every candidate for Congress.

The Comanche Chief, February 15, 1935, reported that "Ex-Congressman Oscar Callaway made the address for the Townsend mass meeting", and said:

> Callaway told the group that he was opposed to pensions and Government aid for individuals of all kinds, but since the Government was dishing out money he advised the group to organize and get the money while it is flowing freely. L. H. Creamer said it was his intention to draft a resolution to send TOM BLANTON and Roosevelt, but as they wouldn't read the names, he thought it best to wire them, as that bunch of brainless wonders don't know anything but play politics.

The De Leon Free Press, March 22, 1935, reported that on Monday Oscar Callaway addressed the Townsend plan advocates in De Leon.

The Dublin Progress reported that Oscar Callaway would speak for the Townsend Club on the night of March 22, 1935, in Dublin.

On December 16, 1935, Mr. W. G. West, route 3, Comanche, Tex., wrote me that he was secretary of the Comanche County Townsend Club, which embraced 90 percent of the Comanche County voters, and that they authorized him to request me to attend their mass meeting on January 6, 1936, to advise them of my intention to support the Townsend O. A. R. P. bill. As I was forced to come to Washington in December to help hold hearings on the War Department Appropriation bill, I was deprived of attending such meeting, but this speech will give them a clear idea of my position. The Townsend literature he enclosed me carried a subscription blank to the Official Townsend Weekly, with blank for enclosing $2 for 1 year, with this urgent admonition:

Do your part in helping to accomplish our great objective and subscribe for the Official Townsend Weekly. Read and pass on to a friend.

Dr. Townsend's former close friend and business associate, Mr. Frank Peterson, states that these subscriptions are now netting Dr. Townsend and R. E. Clements $2,000 per month, which goes into their own pockets, and that this Townsend Weekly, owned by Dr. Townsend and Clements, has a circulation of 150,000 copies weekly, sold either 5 cents per copy, or $2 per year by subscrption.

TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS PER MONTH DONATIONS

The Washington Times, for Thursday, January 16, 1936, carried a statement from Dr. Townsend denying that donations to his national headquarters were as much as $100,000 per month, but he admitted that donations received were as much as $25,000 per month, and that up to last October, $600,000 had been contributed, and that receipts have been increasing. The Times further quoted Dr. Townsend as stating that while the convention turned down a proposal that club members should pay 10 cents dues each month, "many clubs have voluntarily placed themselves on that basis, and are paying 10 cents per member dues each month."

QUALIFICATIONS AND WORTHINESS NOT THE ISSUE

When friend McGROARTY, author of the Townsend bill, urged Californians to organize my district, he intended only that they should force me to change my views but did not want me defeated. He says so himself:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 3, 1935.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: I learn with deep regret indeed that rumors have reached you to the effect that I am engaged in efforts to undermine you in your district, with the avowed purpose of defeating you in the next election.

The rumors are utterly without foundation. I have never made such efforts and would not be guilty of them. In the first place, it would be an impertinence on my part and certainly it would not be to my credit.

From my observation of you in the House of Representatives since I became a Member of that historic body, I am free to say that your district is most effectively represented by you. All of your colleagues and mine whom I have met regard you as one of the most useful men in the Congress of the United States, which is my own opinion of you.

I do not hesitate to say that, in my judgment, your defeat in your district at the next election, or any succeeding election, would be a serious loss, not only to your constituents but to the Nation itself.

Please accept the expression of my high esteem and good will.

Faithfully yours,

JOHN STEPHEN McGROARTY.

If, in spite of my opposition to his Townsend bill, Author McGROARTY says my defeat "would be a serious loss, not only to your constituents but to the Nation itself", why are his Townsend followers so determined to get me out of Congress?

OUTSIDE ORGANIZERS DO THE ORGANIZING

Their modus operandi is to send a paid organizer to a county, have him make Townsend speeches, and then arrange to have some county official help him to get petitions circulated and signed by citizens advocating the proposal, and then have that county official send the signed petitions to Members of Congress. And then they claim every person who signed the petition as a member of the Townsend Club. The following letter will illustrate their plan of operation:

C. L. (CLYDE) GARRETT.
COUNTY JUDGE, EASTLAND COUNTY,
Eastland, Tex., January 21, 1935.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JUDGE: Sometime during the month of November an attorney from Fort Worth came to this county and made several talks favoring the Townsend old-age-pension plan and urged our people to secure all signatures possible to petitions urging you, Senators CONNALLY and SHEPPARD, to support the plan. I drew up a dozen or more petitions, and they were circulated over the county, and some 3,000 signatures were secured on them, and at the request of this attorney I mailed them on January 9 to Senator CONNALLY and requested him to call your attention to receipt of them.

As I stated to Senator CONNALLY in writing him, I cannot say that I am altogether sold on the Townsend plan, for there are several features about it which I do not like. * * *

With best wishes and kind personal regards, I am,

Yours very sincerely,

C. L. GARRETT, County Judge.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 24, 1935.

Hon. C. L. GARRETT,
County Judge, Eastland, Tex.

DEAR CLYDE: Replying to your letter, I am enclosing a copy of my remarks made on the Townsend plan.

We will pass in this session a proper old-age pension, but the Townsend plan is an utter impossibility.

With kindest regards, I am,

Your friend,

THOMAS L. BLANTON.

You will note that it was an attorney from Fort Worth, which is not in my district, who went to Eastland and did the organizing, making the Townsend speeches, and urging the people to secure all the signatures possible to petitions urging SHEPPARD, CONNALLY, and myself to support the plan. Even though Judge Garrett says, "I cannot say that I am altogether sold on the Townsend plan, for there are several features about it I do not like", yet, nevertheless, he "drew up a dozen or more petitions and they were circulated over the county and some 3,000 signatures were secured." And you will note that Judge Garrett says, "At the request of this attorney, I mailed them on January 9 to Senator CONNALLY and requested him to call your attention to the receipt of them." Hence if Judge Garrett had not allowed this outside Fort Worth attorney to come to his county and use him as a go-between with Congressmen there would probably have been no petitions for the Townsend plan sent from Eastland County.

THREE THOUSAND TOWNSEND MEMBERS A MYTH

Many of these splendid people of Eastland County who signed these "dozen or more petitions Judge Garrett prepared", although he did not believe in it, have written me that as they were in favor of an old-age pension, they signed the petition without favoring one plan over another, but believing that Congress would provide a lawful plan.

THE "WEAKLY" RECORD

At Eastland Mr. V. O. Hatcher publishes the Weekly Record. When last August we were trying to amend the Texas Constitution so that the aged people of Texas, as others were to do in the other 47 States, could receive the $30-per-month old-age pension provided for by Congress, Editor Hatcher knocked the proposed amendment with the following editorial:

Those who pay taxes may perhaps remember that it will ultimately mean an additional taxation of about 40 million dollars per year. Where is it coming from? We hate to contemplate where we are drifting. Let's cut a watermelon and go to the show.

But Editor Hatcher and his "Weakly" Record did not defeat the old-age pension with his knocks and sarcasm. The amendment passed August 24 by a tremendous majority in every county in my district. I feel that I had some part in it, as I sent to every voter in my 12 counties an urgent appeal to support the amendment.

TOWNSEND MAKES THE WHEELS GO ROUND

In his "Weakly" Record, on January 10, 1936, Editor Hatcher, in an editorial about the Townsend plan, said:

We note that the more the plan is explained the more friends it has. No candidate, as yet, who has espoused the plan has ever gone down in defeat. As we understand Dr. Townsend's plan, every person over the age of 60 years, who does not have an income equal to $200 per month, is to receive a pension of $200 per month. The money must be spent, not hoarded. In Eastland there are about 500 men and women who would be eligible for the pension. That amount of money spent monthly in our city will make the wheels go round.

When it is a matter of the Government raising and spending $24,000,000,000 per year, which must be raised by an unconstitutional 2-cent transaction tax "on every bottle of milk and loaf of bread", Editor Hatcher and his "Weakly" Record say, "That's not bad", and it "will make the wheels go round." But when it comes to the great State of Texas raising its part to pay its $15 so that with the $15 paid by the Government each needy person in Texas 65 years old may receive a deserved pension of $30 per month, which is constitutional, and can be raised and paid, Hatcher cries out, "It means an additional taxation of about $40,000,000 per year to Texans." "Where is it coming from?" "How can we do it?" "We hate to contemplate where we are drifting."

GROOMING TOWNSEND CANDIDATES

In his editorial July 19, 1935, Editor Hatcher said in his "Weakly" Record:

The many friends of County Judge Clyde L. Garrett are insisting that he be a candidate (for Congress). Cylde has worn out two courthouses in Eastland County.

On December 13, 1935, Editor Hatcher, in his "Weakly" Record, said:

No word has been received stating whether Mr. BLANTON expects to make the race. It is reported that Judge Garrett has had strong solicitation from every county in the district to make the race. This county would give him 90 percent of the votes over an out-of-county man.

Upon observing the above, my secretary, on January 10, 1936, wrote Editor Hatcher:

Eastland friends advise that for months you and an Austin propagandist have been trying to incite opposition there against Congressman BLANTON. You have this right, and no one objects to your exercising it, provided you do not misrepresent and deceive.

And then my secretary called his attention to his many deceiving misrepresentations, and asked him to correct same by publishing her letter. He refused to do it, but again deceived and misrepresented by saying editorially in his paper last Friday:

The Record has been highly honored with a letter from Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON, in which he takes us severely to task. The letter reminded us that Judge Garrett is in for a decisive licking.

He received no letter from me. The letter he got was from my secretary, who has been my secretary for 20 years, and who watches such misrepresentations and replies to them and rarely ever bothers me with such routine matters. And nowhere in my secretary's letter can Editor Hatcher find any statement that "Judge Garrett is in for a decisive licking." Hatcher made that up and fabricated it.

But to show the country what kind of humans these professional Townsend propagandists are, I quote the following from Editor Hatcher's editorial of January 17, 1936:

Our United States Supreme Court, ever the servile minion of wealth. * * * If American people cannot run their Government except when it pleases nine old fossils, formerly corporation lawyers, steeped in the ancient and hallowed doctrine of "The sacred rights of capital", then we are no longer a free people.

PITILESS PUBLICITY

The only way to checkmate Dr. Townsend in his "bleeding of the aged" is pitiless publicity. We must let the people in our districts know exactly what is going on around them. I intend to keep my constituents informed about it. The following letter received from Eastland is quite interesting:

EASTLAND, TEX., December 16, 1935.

Congressman THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR JUDGE BLANTON: The same bunch who for years have tried to get you out of Congress are still after you. Recently Raymond Brooks, of Austin, tried to sound out whether Collie could beat you in Eastland County. He got no encouragement. Brooks is the one who in 1934 sent articles from Abilene and Cisco to the newspapers of your district predicting your defeat, and asserted that Chastain would carry Eastland County solidly, and would beat you in Taylor County. Just the reverse happened. In the primary you carried every voting precinct in Taylor County with a majority over both opponents, and beat Chastain in every voting precinct of Eastland County.

Your enemies now are trying to use Clyde Garrett as their catspaw to pull their chestnuts out of the fire. They have whispered to him that he might defeat you. They have led him to believe that they will finance his campaign. He has been contacting people in several counties to see if he can hope for their support. He will probably run for your enemies have filled his ears with glowing prospects.

I have talked with many people. It is my candid opinion that Clyde can't beat you in Eastland County, though naturally he will get a fair vote complimentary to any home man. You will swamp him in all the other counties. He is counting on much support from Towsendites, as he has been playing into their hands, but they are beginning to realize that such a Utopian dream is impossible. Eventually they will turn against the man who fools them with idle promises. Don't have any uneasiness. Your friends in Eastland County will look after your interests. We all wish you a happy Christmas.

Your friend,
(Name withheld.)

I realize, of course, that inevitably I will have opposition. I have never taken "the path of least resistance." I never keep silent when it is my duty to speak. I fight either on one side or the other of every issue that confronts Congress. And I always put my whole soul into the fight. Naturally, I will have opposition. I had just as soon have Clyde Garrett as any other opponent. We have been friends for years.

"GANGING-UP" ON ME

I have just received the enclosed letter from a good friend in Erath County:

STEPHENVILLE, TEX., January 15, 1936.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Your friends here now have a proper opportunity to administer a deserved rebuke to Sam Russell. He is preparing to run against you, as he is being nosed out of his own job. Tam Chandler has announced against Russell for district judge, and Wallace Scott may announce, and Sam realizes that one of them will down him; hence to save his scalp he thinks he would have a better chance in a big district where the people are unacquainted with his antics and depend on the disgruntled postoffice applicants and the Townsend converts helping him to defeat you.

None of us liked it when Sam left his bench during the last race and campaigned the district against you. He covered it from Hamilton to Sweetwater. Every time you attended a picnic he would follow you there and speak after you, attacking you in a mean way. He would show people an old CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and tried to make them believe you and Garner are enemies, when we knew that you and Garner had become good friends and that several times Garner had you to preside for him as Speaker of the House.

Although Sam thinks he runs this county, and is Chastain's nephew, and they have kinfolks scattered around, you got 347 more votes in Erath County than Chastain did, and at Bluff Dale, where Chastain was born, you got 22 more votes than he did in that small box. In Hamilton County, where Sam Russell campaigned so vigorously against you, and begged the people if they couldn't vote for Chastain to vote for Hamlin, you received 1,234 more votes than Chastain did. It was Sam Russell you defeated in 1934, and he is still sore about it.

Sam also did everything he could against our county judge, but Wallace Scott won out by a handsome majority in the second primary. At the time Russell was wasting his time meddling in yours and Scott's campaigns, there were a number of untried suits pending on his dockets here, and in a careful check-up I made, I found that on July 1, 1934, in his court at Granbury, there were 13 criminal cases, 22 civil cases, and 4 divorce cases untried, and in his court at Palo Pinto there were then 49 criminal cases, 40 civil cases, 40 tax suits, and 30 divorce cases on the dockets there untried. The people don't like for a judge thus to neglect his business.

You need not waste any time worrying about this section, as your friends will attend to Sam's case for him, and take good care of you on election day. Please send me the daily RECORD.

Yours sincerely,
(Name withheld.)

"THE LORD TEMPERS THE WIND TO THE SHORN LAMB"

One of the greatest statesmen who ever served in this House, after faithfully devoting 40 years of service to the public, was defeated because he conscientiously voted against entering the World War. He once said to me: "Tom, I do not believe there is an ounce of gratitude in the whole public breast for good service." But he was mistaken. Once in a while the public is swayed by spasmodic impulse, but generally you can depend upon it to do justice. While apparently we are encompassed roundabout by Townsend organizers, our friends, too, are busy back home. I quote the following from one of my good friends in Sweetwater, who, without mentioning to me his intentions, has done much for me:

I am mailing you signatures of members joining the "BLANTON for Congress" clubs being organized over your district. I trust you will not think we have overstepped ourselves, but your friends felt that you were entitled to reelection without being bothered with an active campaign, so we are organizing a campaign committee, and are going to have your district so thoroughly organized that opposition will be eliminated. You will note numerous signatures from every town and community in your district.

I feel confident that you will receive a larger vote in Sweetwater this next election than ever before, due to the fact that Sweetwater has made so many requests of you this past year and you have responded in every instance. You gave us a C. C. C. camp, extensions of rural routes out of Sweetwater, and especially are we grateful to you for extended city delivery service and for getting the W. P. A. approval for our South Ward school-building project. I do not know of a single instance wherein you have failed to be of service to any of your constituents if within your power to do so, and it is this outstanding service that has created in the hearts of these people a determination to so thoroughly organize your district that it will not be necessary for you to make an active campaign.

Sincerely, your friend,

JOE BOWEN.

A FAIR CROSS SECTION OF CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE

In order to show Dr. Townsend, and my good friend MCGROARTY, and my colleagues in Congress the kind of citizens who, in spite of Townsend influence, will voluntarily stand behind their Congressmen, I want to print the names of a part of this committee for Taylor and Shackelford Counties, and for Cisco, Gorman, and Rising Star, in Eastland County, and Anson and Hamlin, in Jones County. This will show a fair cross section for my district. In addition to the names sent me, I have letters from many friends who did not know of the organization who assure me of active support:

ORGANIZATION OF FRIENDS

To Citizens of the Seventeenth Congressional District:

We, the undersigned, who are voluntarily organizing together as a campaign committee, without the knowledge of Congressman THOMAS L. BLANTON, present the following important facts regarding his most valuable service:

In Congress, ripe experience, intimate familiarity with the history of legislation and of Government departments, bureaus, and commissions, and thorough knowledge of parliamentary rules and procedure, and use and application of same in committees and on the House floor, are highly important and vitally necessary for a district to be properly represented. Congressman BLANTON has ripe experience. He is an expert on parliamentary rules and procedure. He is intimately familiar with precedents of Congress, and their application. He has intimate knowledge of the history of legislation, and of all Government bureaus.

But, above all in Congress, seniority is most important. The Members who head and control important committees are the influential Congressmen, whose prestige means everything to their constituents. Seniority is acquired only through long, uninterrupted service. The longer the service, the greater is the influence of the Member.

JOE BYRNS, of Tennessee, is now Speaker of the House by reason of his seniority, which likewise made WILL BANKHEAD, of Alabama, Democratic leader, and placed ED TAYLOR, of Colorado, in charge of the House floor.

Texas people have shown great wisdom in returning their faithful Members each election, for through long service they have acquired prestige and seniority. It caused John Garner to become Vice President now presiding over the Senate. It made Senator SHEPPARD the dean of Congress. It has given Texas the chairmanship of such important committees as the great Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the Judiciary Committee, the Committee on Agriculture, the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It has given Texas strategic places on the Committee on Rules, the Ways and Means Committee, the Banking and Currency Committee, the World War Veterans Committee, and on every other important committee of Congress.

The experience, seniority, and prestige of Congressman THOMAS L. BLANTON, and the influential committee position he now holds respecting all supply bills and appropriations, are of inestimable value and of most vital importance to his constituents and the State of Texas, and it behooves every county in his district to retain him in Congress. More than at any other time in our history it is important that our Congressman should be able to devote all of his time and attention to imperative legislative matters constantly arising, and he should not be bothered or diverted by a campaign for reelection. In the last primary he carried all of the 30 voting precincts of his home county by a clear majority over both opponents, and likewise carried all voting precincts of his old home county of Shackelford, and he defeated Legislator Chastain in every one of the 27 voting precincts of Eastland County where Mr. Chastain lived, demonstrating that the people are backing him.

Therefore, fully realizing the above, we, the undersigned friends and constituents, without BLANTON'S request or knowledge, do hereby voluntarily form ourselves into a Blanton campaign committee, pledged to look after his interests in the 1936 primary, and while we do not believe any opposition will announce against him, if it does we pledge ourselves to do everything within our power to overcome it, and to look after his political interests in our respective counties, so that he may remain at his post of duty in Washington and not be diverted:

Taylor County—Abilene: R. W. Haynie; Fred Cockrell; Jas. P. Stinson (Democratic county chairman); C. L. Johnson (mayor of Abilene); Frank Grimes (editor, Abilene Reporter-News); Tom K. Eplen (president, Chamber of Commerce); E. N. Kirby (former mayor of Abilene); Rev. Willis P. Gerhart; D. D. Parramore; Rev. T. S. Knox; W. R. Sibley (chief of police); C. W. Barnes; Rupert Harkrider; J. J. Hollinquist; H. J. Bradshaw; D. M. Oldham, Jr.; C. O. Savage; W. E. Hiatt; E. J. Sharp; W. Victor Womack; Henry Dennington; W. R. Davis; J. O. Middlebrooks; Guy Pope; R. L. Muston; W. E. Beasley; Earl Hughes; Hugh P. Simmons; Dr. Scott W. Hollis; C. E. Adams; C. W. Gill; J. M. Hardie; W. H. Free; Joe Smith; W. J. Bryan; H. J. Bass; John B. Ray; Dr. T. B. Bass; George L. Minter; W. D. Minter; J. G. Davis; J. W. Clements; George Minter, Jr.; W. Coke Mingus; Ross G. Hall, Jr.; Lyman C. Bartee; Mrs. Earl Bradley; Miss Lena Ries; Lillie Bell Scott; Eva Dee Allen; M. Adams; Ruth Mullins; J. W. Bogar; Mrs. Floyd Bogar; Maude Taylor; Faye C. Wiggins; Nina Roberts; Mrs. Alma Jones; Mrs. E. Flesher; Mrs. H. C. Anderson; Mrs. H. P. Bounds; Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Roberts; Mrs. Chloe Fariss; Mrs. L. D. Boyd; Kittie Powell; Mrs. E. A. Cazaux; L. M. Buchanan; S. H. Leach; Ruth Pierce; Mrs. O. A. Hale; Emmogene Hall; Lester L. Higgs; Lloyd B. McCarty; John W. Thomas; M. E. Mayfield; Henry K. Bass; C. C. Sellers; Mrs. J. M. Radford; Mrs. J. W. Wooters; J. W. Wooters; T. N. Carswell; Myrtle Sublett; G. O. McDonald; N. C. Bennett; H. O. Wooten; Sterling Wooten; Gus J. King; C. L. Starr; J. Pink Wooten; Anne Moore; Tom W. Pearce; Gray Browne; D. S. Kirk; C. D. Cox; Dr. L. H. Magee; Henry James; B. L. Ellis; Paul Jones; K. Walls; D. G. Barrow; J. E. Grissom; J. H. Culwell; T. C. Campbell; Claude Young; T. C. Campbell, Jr.; Dallas W. Murphy; Floyd Hendrix; Mrs. O. E. Radford; Mrs. Eunice H. Lee; Mrs. T. L. Fagg; Mrs. Jack Simmons; Zelma Markum; Mrs. R. L. Oden; Pat Campbell; George W. Midland; Kirby Williams; Gus Motz, Jr.; E. V. Compere; C. R. Pennington; Dr. R. A. Maddox; M. Shaw; John Bowyer; W. P. Gilbreth; J. T. Handy; O. E. Radford; H. N. Harrison; George R. Morris; R. G. Cogdell; W. P. Bounds; J. D. Moore; Jesse F. Winters; R. D. Batjer; Caleb Reed; O. A. Hale; Lila Fern Martin; Mrs. Clyde Stayton; Vivial Fryar; Clyde Beasley; E. T. Brooks; J. W. Turner; D. H. Jefferies; Jack Linton; Emmette Chandler; Mrs. Emmette Chandler; D. T. Laughter; J. L. Warren; W. Henry Haney; F. E. Behrens; J. P. Hendricks; R. C. Brown; C. S. Brown; John A. White; Holland C. Cogdell; E. E. Cogdell; C. M. Presley; B. D. Bryan; J. M. Stevenson; Jim Hefley; Will Watson; Mrs. C. W. Barnes; W. B. Lewis; Lee F. Signor; A. D. Whisenant; J. A. Barnes; W. J. Behrens; B. Holley; Merkel: R. E. McCleary; Dent Gibson; Lynn Shelton; W. P. Lanham; Herbert Patterson; N. M. Campbell; Lester Patterson; Max Mellinger; Robert N. Campbell; Mrs. W. P. Lanham; Mrs. Lorinda Campbell; Mrs. R. I. Grimes; Mrs. J. A. Milliken; Tom Sargent; C. M. Sargent; Louis Curb; W. A. Sheppard; Lee Harrell; W. H. West; Claud Perry; D. H. Vaughn; J. Parker Sharp; D. Grimes; Mrs. H. H. Teaff; O. N. Buford; M. B. Bell; W. O. Boney; T. L. Grimes; Chas. Davis; Byron Patterson; O. B. Patterson; W. F. Patterson; Weldon Coats; Bill Harris; O. C. Vick; O. B. Leach; L. J. Renfro; Fred A. Baker, Jr.; F. M. Allday; W. C. Black; W. A. Whatley, Jr.; Byron Curb; Mrs. F. R. McFarland; Eli Case; Milton Case; E. M. McDonald; C. B. Williams; G. W. Blake; Mrs. G. W. Blake; C. V. Shelton; H. E. West; J. A. Buford; R. O. Pearson, Jr.; Max E. Swafford; S. L. Grayson; W. S. Hickman; Jim Burns; S. A. Coates; F. A. London; W. D. Williams; J. S. Stalls; Thos. Durham; E. O. Carson; Geo. Woodrum; J. T. Kiny; J. P. Sharp; Mrs. Thomas Durham; J. S. Thomas; N. Wrenn Durham; Roger A. Burgess; S. P. Nesmith; Warren C. Smith; Clark Meindix.

Tuscola: Sam Carter; J. W. Vickrey; W. C. Holloway; G. C. Oliver; M. G. Jenkins; Mrs. M. G. Jenkins; Guy M. Williamson; Curtis Travis; O. E. Blackwood; Ernest McIntyre; Max Standard; Elmore Akerby; Sam Pierson; Carrol A. Dickenson; Mrs. C. A. Dickenson; A. R. Christopher; Lloyd Johnson; A. Rann Reddell; H. H. Lofland; Leslie McCormick; M. A. Jones; W. E. Beard; Mrs. Leslie McCormick; J. P. Townsen; Walter J. Taylor; Mrs. L. H. Vaughn.

Shackelford County committee—Albany: Richard H. McCarty; John F. Sedwick; A. W. Reynolds; T. E. Dodge; W. L. Hatcher; Charles A. Fryar (editor, Albany News); J. C. Miller; A. M. Howsley; Dr. D. C. McCord; O. D.

Williams; L. A. Sanders; W. P. Key; F. B. Cloud; Dr. J. J. Hunchman; John H. Sedwick; R. L. Robinson; J. T. Lowry; Joe M. Lowry; Burney Davis; J. L. Castleberry; W. E. Dawson; W. R. Biggs; Mack Hays; F. C. Posey; J. H. Nail, Jr.; J. Carter King; W. L. Burrows; L. C. McKelvy; S. K. Plummer; Proctor K. Clarke; W. L. Hill; W. H. Green; I. E. Burham; S. Z. Freeman; J. O. Gordon; Perry Fite; H. Herron; B. H. Ezell; Jay Davis; M. A. Stewart; Berry Brown; Clem McCracken; J. N. George; Richard Dyess; R. S. Long; Ross Tuggle; G. B. King; George Callihan; W. G. Davis; Merrick Davis; W. R. Hammer; A. C. Bumpers; W. R. Nail; Roy Matthews; Wyatt W. Lipscomb; Moode Burnett; Arthur Adams; O. L. McClure; Aubrey Adams; Joe M. Overton; Carl L. Lieb; Jesse A. Pate; Ed Greer; B. M. Elick; B. G. Reynolds; Joe M. Clarke; Ollie C. Clarke; L. R. Rodriquez; John A. Hallman; W. W. Fox; Earl D. Lieb; A. H. Thurman; M. Pash; Jack Dunford; P. H. Williams; Harry J. King; A. M. Russ; Charles W. Zug, Jr.; R. J. Dick Moberly.

Moran: W. E. Raymond; Mrs. C. Harper; W. A. Lummis; Mrs. W. O. Hunt; Bob Taylor; A. J. Taylor; Avis J. Waters; W. R. Jackson; Mrs. W. R. Jackson; O. F. Etheredge; P. L. Kelley; Mrs. O. F. Etheredge; Pearl Donaway; Ova Milling Brown; Mrs. W. D. Lummus; A. L. Black; Mrs. A. L. Black; Mrs. Delia Bumpus; Mrs. Ida Leftwich; N. J. Brewster; J. A. Clement; Floyd C. Pool; L. L. Walker; S. M. Gardner; R. B. Pool; Mrs. S. M. Gardner; W. V. H. Brewster; Fay Brewster; Mrs. E. J. Brewster; Mattabel Downing; Laura Snyder; Irma Lee Midkiff; Yates Clayton; Mrs. Yates Clayton; E. M. Raymond; Bert Brooks; Mildred Smith; Mrs. J. C. Smith; C. A. Waters; Mrs. C. A. Waters; Ray McKelvain; Mrs. Carl Lummis; Carl Lummis; Mrs. W. P. Grace; Mrs. Will Townsend; Mrs. Gertie Greer; Lou Marion Grace; LaVerne Grace; Mary E. Townsend; C. B. Snyder; Eugene Oyler; Glenn Luttrell; John H. McGaughey; W. L. Stapp; Ben Waters; Lee Dunn; B. B. Brewster; W. E. Cannon; F. E. Bratton; Mrs. F. E. Bratton; Sidney Brooks; Cole Jackson; J. V. Roberts; H. E. Roberts; J. E. Linton; P. W. Walthall; S. H. Sherman; Ernest Willis; T. H. Sherman; H. N. Sherman; Theodore Henry; Mrs. Ernest Willis; J. D. Allen; H. W. Grisham; J. G. Terry; Mrs. J. G. Terry; E. M. Scott; H. E. Butler; Mrs. H. E. Butler; E. C. Robinson; Mrs. J. G. Rice; Tropal Brooks; N. M. Freeman; Mrs. Tropal Brooks; J. R. Thomas; Fisher Burton; Mrs. Fisher Burton; Mrs. Oscar Parish; Mrs. Marcus H. Ward; Mrs. W. T. Stapp; Mrs. Fred Pool; Mrs. H. S. Coats; H. A. Coats; Robert L. Martin; Fred Pool; Mrs. Clyde Pettit.

Cisco: J. M. Flournoy; Mrs. J. M. Flournoy; Glenn Little; J. J. Little; A. V. Clark; Blair Clark; C. J. Qualls; F. M. Hooks; Mrs. F. M. Hooks; James T. Moore; W. J. Donovens; J. V. Heyser; James Floyd; Richard Lewis; V. L. Donoven; J. B. Coats; W. W. Donohoe; J. P. McCanliss; J. R. Harper; W. D. Forham; Mrs. H. D. Gorham; Mrs. J. E. Chesley; Yancey J. McCrea; Mrs. Yancey McCrea; Willie Lee Baylor; L. C. Moore; N. C. Fowler; J. E. Burman; J. G. Rupe; C. L. Kimmel; H. L. Dyer; J. D. Franklin; Johnny Cox; Mrs. Johnny Cox; J. N. Bearman; A. R. Daniel; Mrs. A. R. Daniel; Mrs. T. Hunter Foley; W. Hubert Seale; Will St. John; Mrs. Will St. John; L. F. Mendenhall; Mrs. L. F. Mendenhall; L. C. Heltzel; Tom Foley; C. B. Foley; Mrs. Nettie Heltzel; Mrs. P. R. Warwick; N. D. Gallagher; Mrs. N. D. Gallagher; W. J. Armstey; Harry Donica; Mrs. Harry Donica; J. C. Donica; Mrs. Jessie Donica; Carl Baird; Mrs. Carl Baird; G. N. Mahoney; Lee Mahoney; Mrs. Etta Judia; Mrs. M. E. Mahoney; C. R. Cogswell; B. W. Martin; Mrs. B. W. Martin; Celia A. McCrea; Ella B. McCrea; H. A. Bibb; V. W. Penn; J. H. James; M. A. Koenig; Jack Montgomery; Clark Webster; Fred B. Jennings; Lewis E. Starr; J. L. Dill; Mrs. Lewis E. Starr; Hawood Cabaness; E. J. Clements; Mrs. R. A. Ledbetter; Mrs. Dennis Moore; Oscar Cliett; C. S. Karkalets, Jr.; C. J. Collins; Ruth Willhelm; Mrs. W. E. McWhorter; H. O. Bourland; P. O. Brown; D. A. Pelfreys; O. E. Candless; Doyl Campbell; G. R. Nance; W. M. Statham; Mrs. C. H. McCall; Jay Richardson, F. C. Hutton; Jack Elkins; Mrs. Hubert Seale; F. W. Dill; Muriel Whitaker; Mrs. R. R. Bradshaw; Mrs. J. G. Bean; Mrs. John D. Roach; Mrs. Henry Morris; Mrs. S. R. Wood; J. H. Hyatt; Marie Winston; E. F. Johnson; L. E. Vaughan; A. D. Estes, Jr.; Clifford Estes; Martha J. Coleman; Mrs. Floyd Cooper, Jr.; Floyd Cooper, Jr.; R. E. Kizer; Mrs. Charles S. Sandle; Mrs. M. E. Goldberg; Edmund Sumner; W. E. Brown; M. E. Goldberg; A. L. Starling; C. O. Ross; C. H. Parish; T. H. Purvis; B. I. Stanley; J. A. Smith.

Gorman: Mrs. R. E. Boucher; W. S. Wood; T. S. Ross; R. E. Boucher; J. Frank Dean; Mrs. J. Frank Dean; Miss LaRue Dean; Mrs. S. S. Alsabrook; Shelley Hill Alsabrook; Ozella Pulley; B. N. Ross; Dr. E. C. Blackwell; O. D. Brogdon; Mrs. O. D. Brogdon; Homer R. Nason; M. F. Allen; Mrs. Katherine (Love) Allen; Willie Clark; Grace Jones Clark; Mrs. M. S. Wood; W. C. Smith; Mrs. W. C. Smith; R. E. L. Smith; W. B. Hooker; Mrs. W. B. Hooker; L. L. Hooker; Miss L. M. Boucher; L. A. Greer; W. M. Jemison; Mrs. L. A. Greer; G. L. Smith; Minnie Lee Smith.

Rising Star: J. E. Smith; C. H. Bowden; L. T. Allen; O. R. Shutts; C. L. Smith; Raymond Gray; C. G. Shults; Charles D. Ballew; A. T. Shults; T. W. Cunningham; Claud Hammett; Lucy Hammett; R. A. Horton; L. L. Culwell; Mrs. Love Shults; C. K. Lee; J. S. Belvin; Frank Gattis; J. King; C. D. Trice; Roy Allen; A. Snead; F. E. Adams; Nick Higginbotham; O. C. Crownover; J. W. Smith; H. Burnes; T. M. Goodwin; J. W. Carley; Mrs. Nick Higginbotham; R. O. Burns; T. W. Martin; W. N. Nunnally; T. S. Goss; George L. Goss; Lawrence Roach; W. H. Duggan; B. W. Hobbs; O. E. Davis; Cecil G. Shultz, Jr.; L. B. Bishop; M. D. Gibson; Mrs. C. G. Schults; J. T. Poe; Mrs. Ruby Shults Ballew; Mrs. Dan G. Johnson; Dan G. Johnson; Buy Brogdon; Zonita Brogdon; D. M. Jacobs; H. L. Carter; Jim Bolding; H. J. Whitehall; J. H. Nunnally; W. A. Bucy; J. J. Deens; Dr. J. R. Hill; H. S. Childress; W. M. Roscoe; J. W. Thornton; C. P. Bearden.

Anson: E. E. Farnsworth; E. G. Bartlett; H. R. McCowan; Lee Garrett; C. B. Edwards; G. V. Rosser; R. J. Day; Sid L. Gentry; A. S. Reaves, Jr.; Mrs. A. S. Reaves, Jr.; Bishop Van Ness; Mark Melson; Mrs. Mark Melson; Bessie Dean; T. P. Hudson; J. D. Pickens; Jap Spraberry; Dew Womack; Mrs. Dew Womack; Neal C. Hartwich; C. C. Scott; T. M. Knox; R. J. Barrett; Mrs. R. J. Barrett; Mrs. F. T. Knox; Bill Neville; Mrs. Bill Neville; Jeff E. Taylor; Don Hymer; R. M. Myers; J. H. Graves; Mrs. N. A. Blackstick; E. M. Spraberry; Mrs. E. M. Spraberry; Johnnie M. Colbert; F. C. Prichard; Mrs. F. C. Prichard; Mrs. George Baker; Miss Edith Baker; F. A. Arnold; Mrs. F. A. Arnold; Rosser Purifoy; Mrs. Rosser Purifoy; Miss Jessie Rodgers; R. L. Propst; Mrs. F. A. Gardner; C. W. Bartlett; Mrs. C. W. Bartlett; Mrs. W. H. Boyd; Mrs. George Harrell; Mrs. Mattie Fisher; Rose Fisher; G. C. Russell; Mrs. G. C. Russell; S. J. Isbell; C. D. Hudson; Frank B. Holmes; C. Y. Holmes; Virg Griffith; J. J. Cass; Oran A. Dean; Mrs. Oran A. Dean; Frank Wilson; S. W. Wilson; E. J. McClung; S. H. Mays; Roy H. Mays; Emery Mays; Sam Rosser; W. C. Baker; D. L. Fenter; Homer Gipson; Viola Ward; Mildred Fry; G. A. Rainwater; Mattie McCarty; D. T. Norman; Mr. and Mrs. Lee Hauk; Harry London; Mrs. Harry London; A. Heidenheimer; H. M. Graves; Mrs. E. S. Simmons; Mrs. W. T. Lindsey; J. A. Arwood; George Putnam; L. R. Reid; M. B. Ball; J. W. McCarty; Hub M. Holland; Dr. J. McK. James; T. B. Rogers.

Hamlin: W. K. Boyd; John F. Green; T. J. Nall; Paul Bryan; N. V. Wright; R. B. Belyen; Ross Jones; T. C. Farrow; T. E. Shelburne; J. J. Waggoner; J. Frank Johnson; Frank G. Waggoner; W. C. Russell; L. E. Griffin; Mrs. L. E. Griffin; Mrs. J. V. Harrell; E. Saunders; Oscar Owen; Oscar Owen, Jr.; Mrs. Paul Cain; Mrs. Oscar Owen; S. D. McMahon; Mrs. E. M. Wilson; Mrs. W. J. Reynolds; Mrs. J. F. Tally; J. F. Talley; Mrs. R D. Moore; Sallie Joiner; G. H. Joiner; Mrs. J. E. Bury; J. R Reynolds; Mrs. J. R. Reynolds; Mrs. W. R. Carter; Mrs. F. L. Reynolds; Jess Young; W. A. Albritton; E. M. Thompson; Ruby Thompson; W. M. Rankin; F. Y. Wilson; L. G. Fletcher; Mrs. W. C. Russell; Mrs. N. Haines; C. R. Reynolds; Lennie Greenway; H. W. Carter; Everett Tormley; John May; M. P. May; L. A. Sanford; Iris V. Pribble; Mrs. Frank Waggoner; J. P. Morris; W. Henry Allbretton; W. J. Reynolds; Mrs. W. Henry Allbritton; Pearl Hudson; J. O. Hopper; Mrs. M. P. May; J. B. Hopper; L. H. Hopper; W. W. Fletcher; Ruth Fletcher; Mrs. W. L. Fletcher, Jr.; W. L. Fletcher, Sr.; Mrs. W. L. Fletcher, Sr.

WHEN MONEY MAKERS FUSS, WE LEARN THE FACTS

The first 2 months Dr. Townsend spent in Washington his inseparable companion and associate was Frank Peterson. One of their main disciples from Colorado was Joe Gross. They finally became disgusted with the money-making scheme and denounced it. When Frank Peterson made his speech in Denver Joe Gross introduced him. I quote the following from their speeches:

FROM JOE GROSS' INTRODUCTORY SPEECH

A year ago the old people of America had their hearts made glad by a project which originated with Dr. F. E. Townsend in California. He would have the Government pay to every citizen 60 years old $200 per month.

Very eagerly the old people of the country—and hundreds of thousands of young people as well—took Dr. Townsend at his word and enlisted under his banner. They bravely trudged from door to door getting signatures to the Townsend petitions. They organized themselves into thousands of Townsend Clubs. Freely did the people of the country subscribe of their moneys—they did not stint in their donations to the Townsend treasury.

At last the time came for battle. Dr. Townsend girded his loins and announced he would lick the life out of Congress.

The Townsend Clubs of Colorado were so anxious to be of service; to see that Dr. Townsend was properly aided that in addition to sending thousands of dollars to the national treasury of the Townsend organizations, they also raised hundreds of dollars to send three Colorado delegates to Washington to see that Dr. Townsend had proper help.

First, Mr. Oliver McIntosh came back with a wretched tale. He said Dr. Townsend and Mr. Clements were not making a sincere fight for an old-age pension in Congress. He said they were more interested in the money-making possibilities of the Townsend organization than anything else; that they preferred not to have a pension bill enacted by this Congress in order that they might continue in their money-making activities from the public for another year at least.

A few weeks later I returned from Washington and gave a report similar to Mr. McIntosh's. I, too, had seen the evidence of graft and corruption in Washington. I told the people of Denver the truth about the Townsend situation.

Last of all, Mr. Otto Moore, one of the most highly respected members of the Denver bar, came back from Washington. He repeated what McIntosh and I had said.

Dr. Townsend said he would show no mercy on Denver rebels; and, after his spellbinder sent here proved ineffective, Dr. Townsend spoke in Denver 2 nights ago. He appealed for loyalty. He admitted that none of the persons who handled the money were bonded. Four Clements and two Townsends handle the money at Los Angeles; and no company would bond where so many in one family handle all the money. Even now Dr. Townsend is hurrying to Riverside, Calif., where an investigation of graft has been demanded. Townsend clubs in Texas have already broken away and formed an independent organization.

The man I introduce tonight is fresh from the Washington scene. For 2 months he lived with Dr. Townsend in a three-room suite in a Washington hotel. Often he put Dr. Townsend to bed; often he rubbed the circulation back into the tired old legs of Dr. Townsend. His official title was national publicity director of the Townsend movement, and Washington newspapermen say that he made a national figure of Dr. Townsend. I present Mr. Frank Peterson, of Los Angeles.

QUOTATIONS FROM FRANK PETERSON'S SPEECH

I am fresh from Washington. I left there last Tuesday, the last of the Townsend delegation to depart, and I had been the first to arrive in Washington.

For 2 months Dr. Townsend and I were the only representatives of the Townsend organization in Washington. I was the committee mentioned in the official Townsend bulletin.

During these 2 months Dr. Townsend and I shared a three-room suite in a Washington hotel. We lived together, ate together, played cribbage together, planned together. I contacted the press men and the magazine writers and coaxed them to come and visit Dr. Townsend and write him up for their papers. I spent 3 weeks in a vain attempt at the White House to arrange an interview with President Roosevelt for Dr. Townsend. I chiseled the Columbia Broadcasting Co. and other chains into letting Dr. Townsend speak over their networks on a gratis basis. If Dr. Townsend had had to pay for this broadcast, it would have cost him $15,000 a talk. I took Dr. Townsend to New York and there, too, acted as his birddog. I crashed Frank Vanderlip's office and had him meet Dr. Townsend, and through him we obtained the services of the famous economist, Mr. Doane. I got Dr. Townsend into a radio debate with the famous Socialist, Norman Thomas. I wrote the speech Dr. Townsend delivered. It was necessary for me immodestly to mention my activities to show that I speak with authority. Dr. Townsend told me, "Pete, I would have been lost here without you."

Now, why did the Townsend plan receive only 55 votes in Congress? I propose to act as coroner tonight over the dead body of the Townsend plan. Why did it die so quickly? Congress still has 2 months to run before adjournment, and yet Dr. Townsend has withdrawn everyone of his representatives from Washington.

More than any other individual, Mr. Robert E. Clements caused it. This national treasurer of the Townsend organization formerly worked as a real-estate speculator in California. The acquisitive instinct is strongly ingrained in him. There is no room in a humanitarian movement for the greedy acquisitive instinct. He began to see the Townsend plan as a beautiful money-making scheme for himself and Dr. Townsend. A year ago he was broke. He and Dr. Townsend got down on their hands and knees in the first Townsend headquarters and painted the floor, so poor were they. Today Mr. Clements possesses a beautiful Lincoln car back in California, his clothes are of the finest weave, he lives at the finest hotels and uses airplanes almost exclusively for travel purposes. All of this from pennies and nickels and dimes of the poor old people of California. Early in January Mrs. Clements went on a shopping tour on Fifth Avenue, New York. Her overcoat is really a beautiful thing.

In addition to this Mr. Clements is now a 50-percent owner of the official Townsend weekly. This newspaper has a circulation in excess of 150,000.

It is truly a valuable piece of property created by the pennies and nickels and dimes of the poor old people of this land. When the third issue of this paper came off the press, Mr. Clements told Congressman MCGROARTY that the paper was already showing a profit of $300 a week. Lately Mr. MCGROARTY learned from what he considers reliable authority that the paper is netting Dr. Townsend and Mr. Clements $2,000 a week. This is truly a wonderful gift offering by the poor old people of America to Brother Clements. At first Messrs. Clements and Townsend tried to hide their ownership of the paper from the people. In the third issue of the paper is a signed statement by Dr. Townsend telling the people that "not one nickel they spend on other pension papers finds its way into the national treasury at Los Angeles"—thereby implying that every nickel spent on the official Townsend weekly found its way into the Townsend treasury instead of into the pockets of Messrs. Clements and Townsend. But lately when ownership of the paper could no longer be hidden Dr. Townsend and Mr. Clements have brazenly admitted owning the paper and stated "What of it?" In a letter to a prominent Denver citizen Dr. Townsend wrote that if the prominent Denver citizen didn't like it he could go jump in the lake!

By delaying the passage of the old-age pension bill for another year, many hundred thousand dollars more could be collected from the anxious and eager old folks and their relatives.

The one thing Congressman MCGROARTY needed during the week the revised McGroarty bill was up for vote was to have Dr. Townsend on the radio appealing to the American people to bury the Congressmen under a snowstorm of telegrams.

At this time I wrote to Dr. Townsend that I had obtained three free coast-to-coast radio hook-ups for him. This letter was intercepted by Mr. Clements, and the result was that Dr. Townsend never utilized this opportunity at this crucial time.

Just as Mr. Clements is guilty of using the Townsend movement through the means of the official Townsend Weekly as a means of personally enriching himself, so, too, is Dr. Townsend guilty, for he has a 50-percent interest in the paper. Just as he has persisted in allowing Mr. Clements to remain as his right-hand advisor despite the protests of Townsend organizations in practically every State in the Union, so much is he responsible for the havoc brought on by Mr. Clements.

Despite an assertion of personal honesty made here in Denver two nights ago, I know, and can prove, that Dr. Townsend pocketed many hundreds of dollars which were handed to him as a speaker's fee by Townsend clubs in Buffalo, Rochester, Grand Rapids, Syracuse, Lima, and many other cities. I booked these speaking dates for Dr. Townsend and wrote the letters asking the Townsend clubs in these communities to guarantee stated sums ranging from $150 to $400 for a speech by Dr. Townsend. I know, too, that these sums were never turned in to the national Townsend treasury by Dr. Townsend. They were kept in a private safe deposit box in our Washington hotel by Dr. Townsend in the form of cash.

There are many other things which could be raised against this witness, but the time does not permit. Neither does the time permit of the calling of other witnesses who played a prominent part in the wrecking of the hopes of old people at Washington, such as Mrs. Clements, whose main function it was to sow seeds of * * *.

Congressman MCGROARTY gave me the key to that problem last Sunday when I spent several hours in his office. He pointed out that Lincoln had to experiment with several leaders before he finally found Grant, and under Grant won the Civil War.

Last night the directors of the Colorado Townsend Clubs, Inc., sent a message to Congressman JOHN STEVEN MCGROARTY asking him to assume the leadership in this fight. I am positive Congressman MCGROARTY will accept the bill of the Colorado Townsend leaders. I am sure that with him at the head of our movement we will be invincible and victorious in Congress in January 1936.

The Townsend plan is dead; yes. It will remain forever pigeonholed in the Ways and Means Committee. But the revised McGroarty bill—the handiwork of Otto Moore, of Denver, and of Glen Hudson and of Daniel Carmichael and of a dozen Congressmen, including Mr. MCGROARTY—is not dead.

In conclusion let me read to you from a telegram I received an hour ago from Congressman MCGROARTY. His message says: "Success can only be attained through an intensive and wide-spread national organization in which all shall have a voice and in which every dollar contributed or otherwise raised shall be strictly and publicly accounted for. Regards and best wishes. Signed, JOHN MCGROARTY."

ANCIENT AND ACCEPTED SCOTTISH RITE OF FREEMASONRY

The Scottish Rite News is published under the direct supervision of Grand Commander John H. Cowles, 33°, by the Supreme Council, 33°—Mother Council of the World—of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry, office at 1735 Sixteenth Street, NW., Washington, D. C. I quote from its issue of December 30, 1935, the following:

THE TOWNSEND PLAN

This plan appeals to the imagination as no other proposal does. It immediately stirs the sympathies, for few there are who begrudge those in declining years comfort and ease. It arouses hope of relief in those who are heavily laden and upon whom the care of the aged falls. There are also millions to whose avarice the plan silently appeals—to children and grandchildren who would welcome an opportunity to help "Pa" and "Ma", or "Grandma" and "Grandpa" dispense of their $200, each, monthly pensions. Perhaps the greatest applause for the plan comes from this group, for among the older generation there is yet that sense of thrift and independence of character which would revolt from such an unnecessary orgy of taxing and spending as the Townsend plan would entail for their ostensible sakes.

While it is probably true that a considerable proportion of the taxes needed to cover the $1,500,000,000 monthly pension fund would come from those who could afford it, the bulk of it would be likely to come out of those whose salaries and incomes were much lower than those of the pensioners. In other words, the load of carrying the pensions would be on the backs of the people who work for small incomes, and according to the law governing the pyramiding of taxes the system would shortly break down, leaving the whole of society bankrupt and demoralized.

The higher the prices of things, the fewer the transactions by the poor; the fewer the transactions, the lower the standard of living; the lower the standard of living, the lower our civilization will fall. In other words, the way analysts and publicists see it, the weight of the plan falls on the workers—not on the well-to-do capitalistic groups who make the prices and profits. This would result in the country's becoming more enslaved to vested interests on the one hand, and to old people, on the other hand—if the whole scheme did not blow up with a sickening inflationary explosion.

The Rotan Advance, ably edited by Mr. H. C. Shelton, in Fisher County, Tex., recently stated that "the Texas Weekly has compiled statistics that show how utterly impractical and impossible the Townsend plan is", and I quote from it the following:

THE TEXAS WEEKLY SAYS

The year 1929 witnessed the greatest production of wealth in the United States, in dollar value, in the country's history. And yet the amount Dr. Townsend proposes to distribute among the aged people the first year of the operation of his plan is equal to more than the combined value of all the wheat, corn, rye, oats, and all other grains, plus the value of all the fruits and nuts, all of the vegetables, all the cotton and cottonseed, all the cattle and calves, all the hogs, all the sheep and wool, all the poultry and eggs, all the milk and dairy products, all the automobiles and motor trucks, all the women's clothing, all the men's clothing, all the perfumes and cosmetics, all the beverages and all the moving pictures produced in this country in 1929, and yet all of the above is still $118,000,000 short of the needed sum Dr. Townsend requires to pay his proposed pension the first year.

There is not the remotest danger of a serious threat to put the Townsend plan into effect, but the ill effects of the propaganda is in holding out this hope to those who do not and will not see its impossibility. There have been cases where the aged have been so sure of getting this pension that they have deeded their property away so as to be eligible.

If the plan was in effect, it would take practically all the wages being paid to employees in the United States. It would pauperize practically all except those drawing the pensions, and there would be nobody able to pay any kind of a tax to raise the pension money. It would be a tax of $48 per month on every family in the United States, and since there are many families that cannot pay a tax, it would take all the earnings of practically all the wage earners of the Nation.

It is sad to see our old people deluded with such a dream, and to see them contribute of their meager wealth to support the Townsend Clubs.

DR. TOWNSEND STILL AFTER POOR'S MONEY

After Congress adjourned last year Dr. Townsend issued a printed pamphlet, which he distributed all over the United States, begging money from people least able to contribute. It is headed:

THIS WAY TO VICTORY

By Dr. Francis E. Townsend

I quote from Dr. Townsend's pamphlet the following:

There are scores of congressional districts still unorganized. I feel sure that when our people fully realize the urgent necessity for every club meeting its quota there will follow an immediate and full-hearted response. Organize every congressional district in the United States; we can then confidently look forward to enacting our plan into law.

No one knows better than I; thousands of our people are impoverished; other thousands are unemployed; many of our people are poor in pocketbook; think of a solution and meet the quota on a 100-percent basis. The club quota is the road over which we must pass to the verdant land of lasting prosperity.

Organizers are being sent into all congressional districts as rapidly as quota funds become available, but this expense of organizers is small in comparison to other organization expenditures.

The fact that we propose building a national organization with a quota of 10 cents per member per month, or $1.20 a year, is causing astonishment everywhere.

We found some months ago that we could not enact the Townsend plan into law with a financial structure based on 25-cent membership dues. Added to the quota, the monthly average eventually will be 12 cents per member per month. I will not be satisfied until we have organized every congressional district. If we hold the balance of power when Congress convenes in 1936, we will enact the Townsend plan into law. Otherwise we shall fail, as we failed in the spring of 1935. If all clubs meet the quota, we will cover the distance rapidly. But whether we travel rapidly or slowly, let us each say with General Grant, "I propose to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer."

Meeting the club quota in full is the collective way of achieving ultimate victory. Our future happiness hinges on four words: Meeting the club quota.

I am advised, Mr. Speaker, that the foregoing "appeal for more money" was prepared for Dr. Townsend by the "acquisitive" Mr. George E. Clements, who, Mr. "Old-Man-Friday" Peterson says was broke when he hooked up with Dr. Townsend, but is now rolling in money.

While in the Washington Times last Thursday Dr. Townsend admitted that although his Townsend convention turned down for all of his club members to pay 10 cents dues each per month, many clubs nevertheless have voluntarily placed themselves on that basis and paying dues of 10 cents per member each month, and that his present receipts are $25,000 per month, and that the last audit when the convention met in October showed that they had received contributions of $600,000. The Times last Thursday also reported Dr. Townsend as saying:

The present program, he said, is to delay the Townsend national convention until after both the Democratic and Republican Conventions are held. We do not expect anything from them. They are alike. There is no hope from parties controlled from the same source. There is little hope of action in the present session of Congress.

The Washington News, December 27, 1935, reported that on the preceding night Dr. Townsend addressed several thousand followers in El Centro, Calif., and quoted him as follows:

Unless one of the major political parties endorses the Townsend old-age-pension plan, a third-party candidate for President will be ejected into the 1936 race.

The third party is organized and ready to move into the field with a candidate if we know Republicans and Democrats do not intend to endorse our plan.

We are organizing in every State and have all the legal data necessary to put a new party into operation. We will go on every State primary ticket, if necessary.

We are apprehensive that Dr. Townsend has not all the legal data necessary. He took the stump in the congressional campaign in the Third District of Michigan last year and made impassioned speeches for Candidate MAIN. He did this as the national chairman of his national political organization, which he asserts will run a candidate for President this year and will go on every State primary ticket. Yet, in accordance with the requirements of law, he has wholly failed to file any account whatsoever with the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

FEDERAL CORRUPT PRACTICES ACT

The term "political committee" includes any committee, association, or organization which accepts contributions or makes expenditures for the purpose of influencing or attempting to influence the election of candidates or Presidential and Vice Presidential electors (1) in two or more States, or (2) whether or not in more than one State if such committee, association, or organization (other than a duly organized State or local committee of a political party) is a branch or subsidiary of a national committee, association, or organization;

The term "contribution" includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit, of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution;

The term "expenditure" includes a payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift, of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make an expenditure.

The term "person" includes an individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, and any other organization or group of persons.

Every political committee shall have a chairman and a treasurer. No contribution shall be accepted, and no expenditure made, by or on behalf of a political committee for the purpose of influencing an election until such chairman and treasurer have been chosen.

It shall be the duty of the treasurer of a political committee to keep a detailed and exact account of—

(1) All contributions made to or for such committee;

(2) The name and address of every person making any such contribution and the date thereof;

(3) All expenditures made by or on behalf of such committee; and

(4) The name and address of every person to whom any such expenditure is made and the date thereof.

It shall be the duty of the treasurer to obtain and keep a receipted bill, stating the particulars, for every expenditure by or on behalf of a political committee exceeding $10 in amount. The treasurer shall preserve all receipted bills and accounts required to be kept by this section for a period of at least 2 years from the date of the filing of the statement containing such items.

The treasurer of a political committee shall file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives on the 1st day of January a statement containing, complete as of the date next preceding the date of filing—

(1) The name and address of each person who has made a contribution to or for such committee in one or more items of the aggregate amount or value, within the calendar year, of $100 or more, together with the amount and date of such contribution.

(2) The total sum of the contributions made to or for such committee during the calendar year and not stated under paragraph (1).

(3) The total sum of all contributions made to or for such committee during the calendar year.

(4) The name and address of each person to whom an expenditure in one or more items of the aggregate amount or value within the calendar year, of $10 or more has been made by or on behalf of such committee, and the amount, date, and purpose of such expenditure.

(5) The total sum of all expenditures made by or on behalf of such committee during the calendar year and not stated under paragraph (4).

(6) The total sum of expenditures made by or on behalf of such committee during the calendar year.

The statement filed on the 1st day of January shall cover the preceding calendar year.

PUNISHMENT

Any person who violates any of the foregoing provisions of this title shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

Any person who willfully violates any of the foregoing provisions of this title shall be fined not more than $10,000 and imprisoned not more than 2 years.

You will note that the law makes the penalty much more severe where the violation is willful than if it were inadvertently done. If the officers of a national political organization, which engages itself in making and breaking Congressmen, Senators, and Presidents has acquired "all the legal data necessary" to attempt to control the primary ticket in every State and to "put a new party into operation", and it ignores and violates the law, then its violation is "willful", but where it did not have any legal data, and knew nothing about the law, only the lesser punishment would be inflicted.

Since Dr. Townsend brags about having all the legal data necessary, and has been organizing congressional districts in various States, and has collected at least $600,000 in contributions, besides the $2,000 per month he and Clements pocket each month from subscriptions, why is not his violation willful, when he has wholly failed and refused to file the itemized expense account with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, which the law required him to file on January 1, 1936?

URGING THE AGED TO GET EXEMPTIONS

In the recent issue of the Mineral Wells Index appears an urgent appeal from Mr. D. C. Dove, secretary of the Townsend forces, stating, "Our country has broken down morally and economically", and urging all people 60 years of age to secure their exemption certificates before February 1 so they may vote.

From an editorial in the Daily Monitor, of Concord, N. H., December 3, 1935, I quote the following:

STILL BEING BORN

Dr. Townsend in his recent Nashua speech gave New Hampshire notice that the Townsend plan is still alive. That is, it is still seeking converts or members of Townsend clubs, at so much per, on the promise that every citizen aged 60 or more is to obtain $200 a month on the single condition that it be spent during the month. For New Hampshire alone the plan would cost the Government $150,000,000 a year, which is about one-quarter of the total assessed valuation of all real property in the State.

New England should recall the amiable Mr. Ponzi, who had a plan for getting rich quick. It worked for a while but when it collapsed there was a fearful thud. And so would the Townsend plan, if it ever came into being. The world's wealth cannot be increased at the rate which the Townsend plan would require. The transaction taxes which the plan calls for would very shortly destroy the farming, manufacturing, and mining activities upon which all earthly wealth is based.

Dr. Townsend and his enthusiasts simply have another racket in the promotion of which they are basking in the glamour of the great American "fall guy" population and bleeding their admirers for a comfortable living while the plan remains a mirage. Americans are particularly susceptible to rackets, it would seem. Sometimes they are sentimental and harmless, like the Dr. Coue fad. But more often they cost Americans real coin, like the gambling rage of the past few years, the stock-market rampage of the preceding years, or the land booms of Florida, the Carolinas, and in Western farm lands.

Over and over again it has been demonstrated by sad experiences that something cannot be had for nothing. Yet each generation still convinces itself that this cannot be so, not once but repeatedly. The Townsendites are merely proving once more that Barnum was right and that suckers are still being born every minute.

Dr. Walter E. Spahr is chairman of the department of economics, school of commerce, in the New York University. From his speech he made January 3, 1936, I quote the following:

When the Townsend plan first appeared, its complete and utter ridiculousness was so obvious that no economist felt it necessary to pay the slightest attention to it. The scheme was looked upon as just another part of the froth which the seething of a depression brings to the surface. No economist wished to waste time pointing out the economic fallacies of the thing. No economist wished to dignify the movement with so much as an answer. It was supposed that in due time the followers would come to their senses and that the movement would die as have others of the same type.

When the followers of this fantastic delusion finally wake up, as they must in time, there doubtless will be some bitter people in this country, because few things sting human beings more deeply than the discovery that their sacred religion has been violated and has been used as the means of leading them astray. Such people usually become especially bitter when they realize that, in addition, they have paid out their good money for the privilege of being thus imposed upon.

The good Dr. Townsend, his aides, and organizers, and those Congressmen who subscribe to the plan are carving out for themselves a most unenviable and uncomfortable place in the history of this country.

According to the census of 1930 there are 10,479,028 persons in the United States 60 years of age or over. Thus the cost, if all were pensioned, would be $2,096,000,000 per month, or $25,152,000,000 per year. This is about eight times the present normal revenue of the Federal Government.

The Townsendites claim only 8,000,000 persons would qualify, thus costing only $20,000,000,000. To be conservative we will accept their estimate.

Townsendites propose to give 6 percent of the population 40 percent of the national income, leaving the other 60 percent of the income for distribution among the 94 percent of the population.

If the national income of fifty billion were distributed evenly among the 127,000,000 population, each person would receive $394. Since the Townsend plan proposes to take 40 percent of it, each person would have left $236. Thus 94 percent of the citizens of this country would have their income cut to an average of $236 per year so that 6 percent of the citizens may enjoy net incomes of $1,440 per year ($2,400 less the 40 percent tax) or more than 6 times as much.

For every individual pensioned it would require the complete annual income of more than two and one-half laborers to pay the bill, using $900 as the income per average laborer in the United States—another conservative estimate, according to the most reliable data. If 8,000,000 persons are pensioned in the manner proposed, it would require the entire annual income of over 22,000,000 average laborers to pay the cost.

The great mass of people, who would have to pay this bill, simply could not exist with such a load on their backs. There would be revolution, and our economic and social system would collapse.

The very best estimates indicate that about 67 percent of our national income is paid to laborers in the form of wages and salaries, hence laborers would pay $13,400,000,000 per year of this tax money going to the aged.

Thus Dr. Townsend would give to the aged man and wife a sum five times as great as he would leave in the hands of the average wage and salary earner with a family to support.

THE TRANSACTIONS TAX WOULD TURN US INTO A NATION OF LIARS AND LAWBREAKERS

A tax on every transaction is an appalling thing to contemplate and it would be an amazing thing to witness. The bookkeeping involved would be tremendous. Evasions would be practiced daily, and our country, of necessity, would be turned into a Nation of liars and lawbreakers. This would be the only alternative to complete ruin. People would not endure such a situation. The old Whisky Rebellion would be as nothing compared with the rebellion that probably would sweep this country if Congress should be so foolish as to enact into law this fantastic and impossible plan of the misguided Dr. Townsend.

Is there anyone who cannot imagine the state of affairs that would exist if all businesses were to be licensed by the Federal Government? Is there anyone who cannot imagine the swarm of Government agents and inspectors that would be let loose upon the people of this country? Every person who would attempt to sell anything would be brought under the arbitrary authority of the Secretary of the Treasury. Our conventional and constitutional rights in property, our right to make a living, would disappear. The czars of Russia never had a power over their subjects equal to the power that this Townsend plan would place in the hands of the Federal Government.

Of course, such a scheme would be unconstitutional; but that fact apparently has no significance in the minds of Dr. Townsend or of his aides.

THIS IS WHAT MUST BE SAID ABOUT THE ECONOMICS OF THE TOWNSEND PLAN

It would wreck the country. It would tax people beyond their capacity to endure the burdens. It would fall most heavily upon the wage earner and the poor. It reveals the Townsend plan as the Nation's greatest single enemy of the poor. It provides for an unconstitutional licensing plan. It confuses money with wealth. It would destroy the American standard of living. It would penalize thrift, saving, investment, insurance, and prudent living. It assumes that the world owes this selected class of people a living. It reveals a harsh and inhuman attitude toward others equally deserving. It shows the extent to which the unhealthy reasoning of some of the country's "reformers" have gone. It reveals how far those groups of persons, who would like to be supported by others, have bored their way into the vitals of this country.

CHANGES HIS PLAN

When Dr. Townsend testified before our Ways and Means Committee, he was then enthusiastically in favor of paying his $200 per month to everybody, and stated he favored paying it to such multimillionaires as John D. Rockefeller, J. P. Morgan, Henry Ford, and Andrew W. Mellon. When his followers rebelled, he has now changed it to those whose annual income, outside of their salaries or wages, is less than $2,400 per annum.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, if the facts I have collated are helpful to the aged in realizing that they will never receive $200 from the Townsend plan, and will save them from being bled further by Dr. Townsend and his real-estate partner, Mr. Clements, so that they will stop contributing to his continually swelling exchequer, then my trouble will not have been in vain. The $30 pension provided by Congress will be a godsend to our needy aged people, and I know that they will appreciate it and will not want to take from every laborer in the United States one-half of his earnings that should go to the support of his wife and little children.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. KEE (at the request of Mr. EDMISTON), on account of illness.

To Mr. GEHRMANN for Tuesday and Wednesday, on account of urgent business.

To Mr. MONTET (at the request of Mr. MILLER) for 10 days, on account of important business.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 1162. An act to regulate the business of making small loans in the District of Columbia, and to amend an act to regulate the business of loaning money, etc., approved February 4, 1913; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 2804. An act to authorize the payment of retired pay to William Mitchell; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2953. An act to provide for the inspection, control, and regulation of steam boilers and unfired pressure vessels in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 3284. An act to provide for the issuance of a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. Dexter P. Reynolds; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 3467. An act amending the Shipping Act, 1916, as amended; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

S. 3268. An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to make a lease for the Agua Caliente or Palm Springs Band of Mission Indians of California; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on January 18, 1936, present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 1299. An act giving jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the Cherokee Fuel Co.;

H. R. 1550. An act for the relief of Douglas B. Espy;

H. R. 4436. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of Alta Melvin and Tommy Melvin; and

H. R. 4799. An act to provide for the reimbursement of certain officers and enlisted men or former officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps for personal property lost, damaged, or destroyed as a result of the earthquake which occurred at Managua, Nicaragua, on March 31, 1931.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, January 21, 1936, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

605. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of withdrawals of public lands by the President in certain cases; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

606. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of the extension of leases in accordance with the act approved March 4, 1931 (46 Stat. 1523; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 30, sec. 226); to the Committee on the Public Lands.

607. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of the extension of leases in accordance with the act approved March 4, 1931 (46 Stat. 1523; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 30, sec. 226); to the Committee on the Public Lands.

608. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of the extension of leases in accordance with the act approved March 4, 1931 (46 Stat. 1523; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 30, sec. 226); to the Committee on the Public Lands.

609. A letter from the Chairman of the Federal Power Commission, transmitting the fifteenth annual report of the Federal Power Commission; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

610. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a draft of a proposed provision to make existing funds available to make payments under the 1935 cotton price adjustment payment plan (H. Doc. No. 393); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

611. A letter from the national president of the American War Mothers, transmitting their annual report covering from October 1, 1934, to October 4, 1935; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. WOOD: Committee on War Claims. H. R. 9472. A bill for the relief of officers and soldiers of the volunteer service of the United States mustered into service for the War with Spain and who were held in service in the Philippine Islands after the ratification of the treaty of peace, April 11, 1899; without amendment (Rept. No. 1918). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10297) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint Corp. Robert Slover as a first lieutenant in the United States Marine Corps and place him on the retired list; Committee on Military Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (H. R. 9353) granting an increase of pension to Mary L. Garrison; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 9848) granting a pension to Isabelle H. Brynes; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CURLEY: A bill (H. R. 10381) prohibiting revelations of confidential communications made to editors, news reporters, correspondents, journalists, and publishers; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CHANDLER: A bill (H. R. 10382) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HOFFMAN: A bill (H. R. 10383) to repeal section 904a of title 26 of the United States Code, and sections 311a, 316a, 316b, 405a, 448 to 448e, inclusive, 734a, and 734b of title 31 of the United States Code; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MALONEY: A bill (H. R. 10384) to authorize the Secretary of War to reconvey certain land in the State of Louisiana to the parish of Jefferson, La., subject only to the easement required by the Government for the operation, maintenance, and future enlargement of the Barataria Bay waterway; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RAYBURN: A bill (H. R. 10385) to amend the act creating the Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BEITER: A bill (H. R. 10386) to promote the public health, safety, and welfare by providing for the elimination of insanitary and dangerous housing conditions, to relieve congested areas, to aid in the construction and supervision of low-rental dwelling accommodations, and to further national industrial recovery through the employment of labor and materials; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mrs. NORTON: A bill (H. R. 10387) to establish a Racing Board in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. McSWAIN (by request): A bill (H. R. 10388) to aid the veterans' organizations of the District of Columbia in their joint Memorial Day services at Arlington National Cemetery and other cemeteries on and preceding May 30; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10389) relating to the appointment of cadets to the United States Military Academy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. REED of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 10390) to grant retired pay and allowances to certain retired officers who have been advanced on the retired list under the provisions of Public Act No. 123, approved May 7, 1932, or its amendments; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SISSON: A bill (H. R. 10391) to make more effective the law against advocating communism in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. STUBBS: A bill (H. R. 10392) to provide for the construction of a post-office building at Tulare, Calif.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10393) to provide for the construction of a post-office building at Paso Robles, Calif.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10394) to provide for the construction of a post-office building at Oxnard, Calif.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. McGRATH: A bill (H. R. 10395) to make it unlawful to take or receive California sardines (pilchards) for reduction on the high seas contiguous to the Pacific coast of the United States; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10396) to make it unlawful for any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and for certain vessels, to deliver California sardines (pilchards) for processing on the high seas off the western coast of the United States, except in accordance with the laws of the Western Coastal States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10397) to provide that persons and property in connection with the taking, delivery, receipt, and processing of California sardines (pilchards) on the high seas off the western coast of the United States shall be subject to the laws of the respective adjoining coastal States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. PITTENGER: A bill (H. R. 10398) to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans secured by receipts on account of national-forest reserves, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. BURNHAM: A bill (H. R. 10399) placing certain noncommissioned officers of the Corps of Engineers on the retired list, in the first grade; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HEALEY: A bill (H. R. 10400) to extend for 1 year the joint resolution approved August 31, 1935, relating to neutrality; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. McGRATH: A bill (H. R. 10401) to amend paragraph 1730 (a) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, to provide that oil, meal, and other products produced from the processing of sardines by reduction process shall not be exempt from duty; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McSWAIN: A bill (H. R. 10402) to validate payments, and to relieve the accounts of disbursing officers of the Army on account of payments made to Reserve officers on active duty for rental allowances; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10403) to validate payments, and to relieve disbursing officers' accounts of payments made to Reserve officers promoted while on active duty; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. REILLY: A bill (H. R. 10404) to amend section 2169 of the Revised Statutes relating to naturalization of aliens; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. VINSON of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 10405) for the relief of the State of Georgia; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HILL of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 10406) relating to the jurisdiction of the judge for the northern and middle districts of Alabama; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SCHULTE: A bill (H. R. 10407) to impose an excise tax on stores in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BEITER: A bill (H. R. 10408) to authorize the Federal Government to contribute funds in the improvement of a section of the New York State Barge Canal, provided the State of New York makes an appropriation of $10,000,000 for the same purpose; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 10409) to establish a Red Lake Chippewa fund from the present fund of Chippewa Indians of Minnesota; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HUDDLESTON: A bill (H. R. 10410) to amend section 43 of chapter 3, title 2, of the Code of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ELLENBOGEN: Resolution (H. Res. 399) to investigate recent disasters in air commerce, to recommend legislation providing for the safety and security of air commerce, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. SCOTT: Joint Resolution (H. J. Res. 462) providing for an amendment to the Constitution; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, regarding United States neutrality; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, a memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, opposing the Federal gasoline tax; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, favoring payment of the bonus; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, regarding the neutrality of the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 10411) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Patterson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BOEHNE: A bill (H. R. 10412) granting an increase of pension to Mary J. Aikens; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10413) for the relief of Addison B. Hampel; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BOILEAU: A bill (H. R. 10414) granting a pension to Elizabeth Ellen Barker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10415) granting a pension to Wilhelmina Skilling; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10416) granting a pension to Sarah A. De Gross; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10417) granting a pension to Sarah Jane Bump; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURNHAM: A bill (H. R. 10418) granting a pension to Neville S. Tout; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CASTELLOW: A bill (H. R. 10419) for the relief of S. H. Prather; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COLE of New York: A bill (H. R. 10420) granting an increase of pension to Emma S. Dolaway; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10421) granting a pension to Sarah J. Clarkson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10422) granting an increase of pension to Ella J. Winegar; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10423) granting an increase of pension to Carrie L. Fay; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10424) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Clark; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10425) granting an increase of pension to Harriet Brownrigg; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DOCKWEILER: A bill (H. R. 10426) for the relief of Joseph Leo Burns; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10427) granting an increase of pension to L. Georgia D. Crane; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McREYNOLDS: A bill (H. R. 10428) granting a pension to Sarah Hall Swafford; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DOCKWEILER: A bill (H. R. 10429) granting a pension to Laura A. Garrison; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10430) granting a pension to Alice Mitchell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRAY of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 10431) granting a pension to Hazel G. White; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10432) for the relief of James W. Kiplinger; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GRISWOLD: A bill (H. R. 10433) for the relief of Anson W. Oden; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAINES: A bill (H. R. 10434) granting a pension to William Paine Cope; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HILL of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 10435) for the relief of Emma Hastings; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HOFFMAN: A bill (H. R. 10436) for the relief of the heirs of Margaretta D. Fenn, deceased, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LAMNECK: A bill (H. R. 10437) granting an increase of pension to Columbia Hankins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEWIS of Maryland: A bill (H. R. 10438) for the relief of Hext P. Ware; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LUCKEY: A bill (H. R. 10439) for the relief of John B. Ricketts; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McREYNOLDS: A bill (H. R. 10440) for the relief of certain officers of the Foreign Service of the United States, who, while in the course of their respective duties, suffered losses of personal property by reason of war or other causes; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. MASSINGALE: A bill (H. R. 10441) granting a pension to Ransom Payne; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MORAN: A bill (H. R. 10442) granting a pension to Mary A. Hayes; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mrs. O'DAY: A bill (H. R. 10443) for the relief of Joseph Harris (Joseph Hersh); to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. POWERS: A bill (H. R. 10444) for the relief of Theodore Rosenberg; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 10445) for the relief of John B. Knuckles; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SADOWSKI: A bill (H. R. 10446) for the relief of Arthur Gajeske; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SNELL: A bill (H. R. 10447) granting an increase of pension to Margaret V. Besa; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10448) granting an increase of pension to Eliza P. Cook; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10449) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Bulluck; to the committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10450) granting an increase of pension to Agnes C. Johnson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10451) granting an increase of pension to Hattie G. Dyer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10452) granting an increase of pension to Mariah C. Kent; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10453) granting an increase of pension to Laura M. Shipman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10454) granting an increase of pension to Deborah Pond; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10455) granting an increase of pension to Ida M. Lent; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10456) granting an increase of pension to Clara F. Tower; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10457) granting an increase of pension to Rose Ann Richards; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10458) granting a pension to Sarah E. Sutton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10459) granting a pension to Jennie S. Bogardus; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 10460) granting an increase of pension to Van Letsinger; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10461) for the relief of Virgil O. Powell et al.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. THOMAS: A bill (H. R. 10462) granting an increase of pension to Nellie Murray; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. VINSON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 10463) granting an increase of pension to Kate P. Shannon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

9556. By Mr. AYRES: Petition of R. A. Strait and 31 other residents of Grass Range and Blakeslee, Mont.; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9557. Also, petition of J. P. Kane and 18 other residents of Pryor and Edgar, Mont.; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9558. Also, petition of Olive B. Tindall and 21 other citizens of Tindall, Benzien, and Sand Springs, Mont.; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9559. Also, petition of Jake Brand and 39 other citizens of Denton, Mont.; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9560. Also, petition of C. C. Daugherty and 25 other citizens of Billings, Rapelje, Molt, and Wheat Basin, Mont.; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9561. Also, petition of Frank T. Peters and 19 other citizens and patrons of star route no. 63295, Jordan to Haxby, Mont.; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9562. By Mr. BACON: Petition of the Bay Shore Post, American Legion, Bay Shore, N. Y., favoring payment of adjusted-compensation certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

9563. Also, petition of the Joseph Kovarik Post, American Legion, Bohemia, N. Y., with signatures of residents of Bohemia, urging enactment of measure providing for full payment of adjusted-compensation certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

9564. By Mr. BURDICK: Petition demanding the passage of the Frazier-Lemke bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

9565. Also, petition demanding the appropriation of sufficient funds to meet the payment of outstanding Agricultural Adjustment Administration contracts; to the Committee on Agriculure.

9566. By Mr. CARPENTER: Petition of citizens of Dickinson County, Kans., favoring the Guyer bill (H. R. 8739), which is to prohibit within the District of Columbia the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, sale, gift, purchase, or possession of any spirituous, vinous, malt, fermented, and all alcoholic liquors whatsoever, etc.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

9567. Also, petition of citizens of Riley County, Kans., favoring the Guyer bill (H. R. 8739), which is to prohibit within the District of Columbia the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, sale, gift, purchase, or possession of any spirituous, vinous, malt, fermented, and all alcoholic liquors whatsoever, etc.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

9568. Also, petitions of citizens of Marion County, Kans., favoring the Guyer bill (H. R. 8739), which is to prohibit within the District of Columbia the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, sale, gift, purchase, or possession of any spirituous, vinous, malt, fermented, and all alcoholic liquors whatsoever, etc.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

9569. Also, petition of citizens of Montgomery County, Kans., favoring the Guyer bill (H. R. 8739), which is to prohibit within the District of Columbia the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, sale, gift, purchase, or possession of any spirituous, vinous, malt, fermented, and all alcoholic liquors whatsoever, etc.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

9570. Also, petition of citizens of Jewell and Republic Counties, Kans., favoring the Guyer bill (H. R. 8739), which is to prohibit within the District of Columbia the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, sale, gift, purchase, or possession of any spirituous, vinous, malt, fermented, and all alcoholic liquors whatsoever, etc.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

9571. Also, petition of citizens of Geary County, Kans., favoring the Guyer bill (H. R. 8739), which is to prohibit within the District of Columbia the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, sale, gift, purchase, or possession of any spirituous, vinous, malt, fermented, and all alcoholic liquors whatsoever, etc.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

9572. Also, petition of Lovewell Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Jewell County, Kans., favoring the Guyer bill (H. R. 8739), which is to prohibit within the District of Columbia the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, sale, gift, purchase, or possession of any spirituous, vinous, malt, fermented, and all alcoholic liquors whatsoever, etc.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

9573. Also, petition of citizens of Osage County, Kans., favoring the Guyer bill (H. R. 8739), which is to prohibit within the District of Columbia the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, sale, gift, purchase, or possession of any spirituous, vinous, malt, fermented, and all alcoholic liquors whatsoever, etc.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

9574. Also, petition of citizens of Marion County, Kans., favoring the Guyer bill (H. R. 8739), which is to prohibit within the District of Columbia the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, sale, gift, purchase, or possession of any spirituous, vinous, malt, fermented, and all alcoholic liquors whatsoever, etc.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

9575. By Mr. COLE of New York: Petition of citizens of Troupsburg, N. Y., and Knoxville, Pa., to extend all existing star-route contracts; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9576. By Mr. GUYER: Petition of citizens of El Paso, Tex., asking restoration of the prohibition laws to the District of Columbia through the enactment of House bill 8739; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

9577. Also, petition of citizens of Ottawa, Franklin County, Kans., asking restoration of the prohibition laws to the District of Columbia through the enactment of House bill 8739; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

9578. Also, petition of citizens of Redfield, Bourbon County, Kans., asking restoration of prohibition laws to the District of Columbia through the enactment of House bill 8739; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

9579. By Mr. FISH: Petition of 93 patrons of star route no. 7478, Dutchess County, N. Y., favoring enactment of legislation for indefinitely extending all existing star-route contracts, and increasing compensation thereon to an equal basis with that paid to other forms of mail transportation; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9580. By Mr. FOCHT: Petition of citizens in towns served by star route no. 10971, running out of Lewistown, Mifflin County, a part of the Eighteenth Pennsylvania District, favoring legislation that will indefinitely extend all star-route contracts, and increase the compensation to an equal basis with that paid for other forms of mail transportation; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9581. By Mr. GOODWIN: Petition of Greene County Farm Bureau Association, Ashland, N. Y., opposing any lowering of tariffs on dairy products, maple products, poultry products, or, in fact, any of its agricultural products now protected, as a result of the reciprocal trade agreements being made with Canada; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9582. By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: Petition of Ellis County Agricultural Association, urging that immediate action be taken regarding an agricultural program that will take the place of the agricultural legislation declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court; to the Committee on Agriculture.

9583. Also, petition of Guy M. Gibson, Byron Cheney, L. I. Griffin, and W. C. Pearce, of Corsicana, Tex., favoring legislation to take the place of the agricultural legislation declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court; to the Committee on Agriculture.

9584. Also, petition of F. W. Smith, of the Lyon-Gray Lumber Co., Corsicana, Tex., favoring further extension of title I of the Federal Housing Act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

9585. Also, memorial of Woman's Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church South, Mexia, Tex., favoring passage of House bill 8739, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating beverages in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

9586. By Mr. MOTT: Petition signed by 90 citizens and patrons of star route no. 73156 from Jewell to Clatskanie, Oreg., urging that legislation be enacted which will indefinitely extend all existing star-route contracts and increase the compensation thereon to an equal basis with that paid for other forms of mail transportation; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9587. Also, petition signed by N. R. Fisher and 119 citizens of Douglas County, Oreg., urging that legislation be enacted which will indefinitely extend all existing star-route contracts and increase the compensation thereon to an equal basis with that paid for other forms of mail transportation; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9588. Also, petition signed by Vera A. Judy and 49 other citizens of Reedsport, Oreg., urging that legislation be enacted which will indefinitely extend all existing star-route contracts and increase the compensation thereon to an equal basis with that paid for other forms of mail transportation; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9589. By Mr. O'BRIEN: Petition of the Federation of the Italian World War Veterans in the United States of America, Inc., of Melrose Park, Ill., protesting against the stopping of exportation of so-called war materials, including oil, to Italy; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9590. By Mr. PFEIFER: Petition of 1,250 members and friends of the Rex-Spinola Democratic Club, Brooklyn, N. Y., concerning neutrality legislation; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9591. By Mr. ROMJUE: Petition of residents of Knox County, Mo., recommending indefinite extension of all existing star-route contracts, with increased compensation to the carriers; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9592. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Southwest Kansas Bar Association; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

9593. Also, petition of the Third United States Congress Against War and Fascism; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

9594. Also, petition of the depositors committee of all closed banks for the State of Illinois; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

9595. Also, petition of the Greenville Trades and Labor Council, Greenville, S. C.; to the Committee on Agriculture.

9596. Also, petition of the West Virginia League of Municipalities; to the Committee on Education.

9597. Also, petition of the National Annuity League, Inc.; to the Committee on Rules.

9598. Also, petition of the National Federation of National Farm Loan Associations; to the Committee on Agriculture.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JANUARY 21, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou who holdest in Thy heart the secret of life and the mystery of death, harken as we pause with a bowed and sorrowing world. A noble sovereign, grandly human and just, has passed through the portals of time. He has left a heritage of wisdom, power, and goodness which reaches to the ends of the earth. Lord God of the nations, we praise Thee for his rich Christian character, for his fidelity to the right, and for the way he mastered the rush of feeling in the darkest moments of his realm. Great soul, he marked the star in the darkness, he heard the music on the waters and the still small voice in the deluge. O comfort his people we pray. As we approach our tasks, may we believe in the resurrection and in the life eternal. We wait for the breath of God. In the name of our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 9870. An act to provide for the immediate payment of World War adjusted-service certificates, for the cancelation of unpaid interest accrued on loans secured by such certificates, and for other purposes.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 10464, Rept. No. 1919) making appropriations to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and, together with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 6137. An act for the relief of the Otto Misch Co.

DEATH OF KING GEORGE V OF ENGLAND

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call the attention of the House to the death of His Majesty George V, known throughout the world as a great ruler, very much beloved by his people, and respected throughout the world on account of his clean life. I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 400

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the United States of America has learned with profound sorrow of the death of His Majesty George V, and sympathizes with his people in the loss of their beloved sovereign.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate this expression of sentiment of the House of Representatives to the Government of Great Britain.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of King George the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, January 22, 1936, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

612. A letter from the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting a report and recommendations from the Federal Coordinator of Transportation, with comments upon his recommendations; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

613. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the War Finance Corporation (in liquidation) covering the period from January 1, 1935, to December 31, 1935; to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado: Committee on Appropriations. H. R. 10464. A bill making appropriations to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 1919). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado: A bill (H. R. 10464) making appropriations to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. CARMICHAEL: A bill (H. R. 10465) to legalize a bridge across Second Creek, Lauderdale County, Ala.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ARENDS: A bill (H. R. 10466) granting an increase of pension to Mary Warman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHAPMAN: A bill (H. R. 10467) for the relief of Charles M. Haggan; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CHRISTIANSON: A bill (H. R. 10468) granting a pension to William S. Morrison; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CROWE: A bill (H. R. 10469) for the relief of Frank P. Boyd; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HESS: A bill (H. R. 10470) to correct the military record of Arthur E. Roberts; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LEE of Oklahoma: A bill (H. R. 10471) for the relief of Earnest B. Carleton; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LORD: A bill (H. R. 10472) granting a pension to Rose S. Wood; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LUDLOW: A bill (H. R. 10473) for the relief of Homer J. Williamson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 10474) granting a pension to Molly Akin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SCHNEIDER of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 10475) granting a pension to Carrie Washburne; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STARNES: A bill (H. R. 10476) for the relief of J. H. Richards; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WERNER: A bill (H. R. 10477) granting an increase of pension to Fred W. Fox; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WIGGLESWORTH: A bill (H. R. 10478) granting a pension to Sarah M. H. Nickerson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10479) granting a pension to Bertha L. Wade; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10480) granting a pension to Dora B. Mann; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10481) granting a pension to Mary Spear; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ZIMMERMAN: A bill (H. R. 10482) granting a pension to Charles C. Bray; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

9599. By Mr. ARENDS: Petition of 141 patrons of star route 35136, in the State of Illinois, asking that legislation be enacted by Congress to increase the compensation of star-route contractors for the extension of their contracts, etc.; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9600. By Mr. CRAWFORD: Petition of 41 members of the Orleans (Mich.) Methodist Episcopal Church, asking Congress to enact the Capper bill (S. 541); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9601. By Mr. PFEIFER: Petition of Buskwick Democratic Club, Inc., Brooklyn, N. Y., concerning the neutrality policy; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9602. By Mr. RICH: Petition of Harry L. Ryder and others of Williamsport, Pa., protesting against the Copeland food, drug, and cosmetic bill in its present form; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9603. By Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts: Petition of the Cambridge (Mass.) Federation of Teachers, condemning the Kramer bill to make it a crime to advocate the overthrow of the Government by force and violence; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

9604. Also, petition of the Cambridge (Mass.) Federation of Teachers, opposing the Tydings-McCormack bill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

9605. By Mr. THOMASON: Petition of Midland County, Tex., farmers and businessmen, regarding operations of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration; to the Committee on Agriculture.

9606. By the SPEAKER: Petition of Chapter 152, Railroad Employees National Pension Association, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 22, 1936

(Legislative day of Thursday, Jan. 16, 1936)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, January 20, 1936, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the following bills of the Senate:

S. 1626. An act for the refunding of certain countervailing customs duties collected upon logs imported from British Columbia;

S. 2421. An act to amend the act entitled "An act forbidding the transportation of any person in interstate or foreign commerce, kidnaped or otherwise unlawfully detained, and making such act a felony", as amended;

S. 2887. An act authorizing the Perry County Bridge Commission of Perry County, Ind., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cannelton, Ind.;

S. 3120. An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to transfer certain moneys to "Funds of Federal prisoners";

S. 3131. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge and causeway across the water between the mainland, at or near Cedar Point, and Dauphin Island, Ala.; and

S. 3425. An act authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Government of Norway in settlement of all claims for reimbursement on account of losses sustained by the owner and crew of the Norwegian steamer Tampen.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 3245. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at Astoria, Clatsop County, Oreg.; and

S. 3328. An act to provide an official seal for the United States Veterans' Administration, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6137) for the relief of the Otto Misch Co.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4178) for the relief of the International Manufacturers' Sales Co. of America, Inc., A. S. Postnikoff, trustee, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland, Mr. RAMSPECK, and Mr. PITTENGER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 1415. An act to provide for the establishment of the Richmond National Battlefield Park, in the State of Virginia, and for other purposes;

H. R. 3565. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to effect exchange of certain rights-of-way in Hawaii;

H. R. 8024. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to dispose of material no longer needed by the Army;

H. R. 7225. An act authorizing a revolving reimbursable fund for the Lac Du Flambeau Band of Chippewa Indians in Wisconsin;

H. R. 8172. An act to authorize the transfer by the United States to the county of Mohave, Ariz., of all public lands in sections 20, 28, and 30, township 20 north, range 15 west, Gila and Salt River meridian, for public park, recreational, and other municipal purposes;

H. R. 8180. An act to prohibit the use of the mails for the solicitation of the procurement of divorces in foreign countries;

H. R. 8287. An act to establish an assessed valuation real-property tax in the Virgin Islands of the United States;

H. R. 8300. An act to authorize a preliminary examination of Suwannee River, in the State of Florida, from Florida-Georgia State line to the Gulf of Mexico;

H. R. 8940. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto;

H. R. 9871. An act to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the participation of the United States in the California-Pacific International Exposition to be held at San Diego, Calif., in 1935 and 1936; authorizing an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes", approved March 7, 1935, to provide for participation in the California-Pacific International Exposition to be held at San Diego, Calif., in 1936, to authorize an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10104. An act to aid in providing the people of the United States with adequate facilities for park, parkway, and recreational-area purposes, and to provide for the transfer of certain lands chiefly valuable for such purposes to States and political subdivisions thereof;

H. J. Res. 215. Joint resolution to amend Public Act No. 435, Seventy-second Congress;

H. J. Res. 307. Joint resolution authorizing the erection of a memorial to the early settlers whose land grants embrace the site of the Federal City; and

H. J. Res. 321. Joint resolution granting the consent of Congress to the minimum-wage compact ratified by the Legislatures of Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 6137) for the relief of the Otto Misch Co., and it was signed by the Vice President.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

On January 16, 1936:

S. 85. An act for the relief of Homer H. Adams;

S. 2257. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide additional pay for personnel of the United States Navy assigned to duty on submarines and to diving duty", to include officers assigned to duty at submarine training tanks and diving units, and for other purposes;

S. 2774. An act for the relief of certain officers on the retired list of the Navy and Marine Corps who have been commended for their performance of duty in actual combat with the enemy during the World War;

S. 2845. An act to provide for the retirement and retirement annuities of civilian members of the teaching staffs at the United States Naval Academy and the Postgraduate School, United States Naval Academy;

S. 2950. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Saline, Mo., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Missouri River at or near Miami, Mo.; and

S. 3280. An act for the relief of Doris Allen.

On January 17, 1936:

S. 1142. An act to reserve certain public-domain lands in Nevada and Oregon as a grazing reserve for Indians of Fort McDermitt, Nev.;

S. 1422. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of William E. B. Grant;

S. 1690. An act for the relief of R. G. Andis; and

S. 2616. An act for the relief of the estate of Joseph Y. Underwood.

On January 20, 1936:

S. 978. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to convey to the University of Oregon certain lands forming a part of the Coos Head River and Harbor Reservation;

S. 1016. An act to empower the health officer of the District of Columbia to authorize the opening of graves, and the disinterment and reinterment of dead bodies, in cases where death has been caused by certain contagious diseases;

S. 1059. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of Francis B. Kennedy;

S. 1277. An act to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code by conferring on district courts additional jurisdiction of bills of interpleader, and of bills in the nature of interpleader;

S. 2013. An act to provide for the issuance of a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. Pak Chue Chan;

S. 2519. An act to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of F. Mansfield & Sons Co., and others;

S. 2939. An act to provide for the issuance of a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. Ronald A. Cox;

S. 3077. An act for the relief of Constantin Gilia;

S. 3078. An act for the relief of C. R. Whitlock; and

S. 3195. An act for the relief of Guiry Bros. Wall Paper & Paint Co.

On January 21, 1936:

S. 430. An act for the relief of Anna Hathaway; and

S. J. Res. 144. Joint resolution to provide for the payment of compensation and expenses of the Railroad Retirement Board as established and operated pursuant to section 9 of the Railroad Retirement Act of June 27, 1934, and to provide for the winding up of its affairs and the disposition of its property and records, and to make an appropriation for such purposes.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Brown	Copeland	Glass
Ashurst	Bulkley	Costigan	Gore
Austin	Bulow	Couzens	Guffey
Bachman	Burke	Davis	Hale
Bailey	Byrd	Dickinson	Harrison
Bankhead	Byrnes	Dieterich	Hastings
Barbour	Capper	Donahey	Hatch
Barkley	Caraway	Duffy	Hayden
Benson	Carey	Fletcher	Holt
Bilbo	Chavez	Frazier	Johnson
Black	Clark	George	Keyes
Bone	Connally	Gerry	King
Borah	Coolidge	Gibson	La Follette

Lewis	Moore	Pope	Thomas, Okla.
Logan	Murphy	Radcliffe	Thomas, Utah
Lonergan	Murray	Reynolds	Townsend
McAdoo	Neely	Robinson	Trammell
McCarran	Norbeck	Russell	Truman
McGill	Norris	Schwellenbach	Vandenberg
McKellar	Nye	Sheppard	Van Nuys
McNary	O'Mahoney	Shipstead	Wagner
Maloney	Overton	Smith	Walsh
Minton	Pittman	Steiwer	White

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are necessarily absent from the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] is necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

HUEY PIERCE LONG

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, on the 8th day of September 1935 in the forty-second year of his life, HUEY PIERCE LONG, senior United States Senator from Louisiana, was stricken with a fatal wound and died 2 days later in Baton Rouge, the capital of the State.

He was felled by the bullet of an assassin. He was shot down in the majestic capitol which his own genius had conceived and builded. He was, by direction of the Louisiana Legislature, laid to rest within its grounds and under the shadows of its lofty spire, which rises as a mighty shaft to mark his grave.

There, "after life's fitful fever", he sleeps, beloved and revered as no other man in Louisiana's history by the great majority of her citizens.

His critics have repeatedly charged that through fear he had established a dictatorship in his State. But the multitude that gathered from Louisiana's northern hills to her southern marshes to attend the last rites and pass in procession before the funeral bier, and the tears that, unabashed, flowed down the cheeks of youth and age alike, are a complete refutation of that indictment.

Yesterday, Mr. President, was primary election day in the State of Louisiana. It was the day on which Senator LONG, if he had lived, would have offered himself for renomination to the office of United States Senator. It was the day on which the Democratic Party nominated its candidates for all elective State offices from Governor on down, and for the House of Representatives, and on which candidates were nominated to fill the unexpired term of Senator LONG and to succeed him in the United States Senate. The partial returns of that election, coming in last night and this morning, show that the Long organization candidates for the State and National offices were nominated by majorities far greater than have ever been polled by the Long organization in its remarkable record of uninterrupted victories. Why this stupendous majority in favor of the Long organization? Was it fear of Senator LONG? Was it fear of Senator LONG, alleged dictator, who 4 months ago passed into the silence and inaction of the grave? No, Mr. President, it was not this. It was the reendorsement by the splendid manhood and womanhood of Louisiana of the constructive and progressive policies of the Long organization in the State of Louisiana. It was more than this. It was a remarkable tribute of love and affection by Louisianans to their slain leader. And more than this, it was a solemn protest against the deep damnation of his assassination. And it was, furthermore, a just rebuke and warning to those who seek, through Washington, to run the State of Louisiana.

Senator LONG's enemies, Mr. President, had constantly sought, and by various methods, his political destruction. They undertook time and again to defeat him at the polls, but they failed in election after election. They tried to oust him from the governorship of Louisiana by impeachment, but they failed. They endeavored to have him expelled from the Senate of the United States, but they failed. They sought to accomplish his ruin by having him indicted in Federal and State courts, but they failed. At last, there were those who, in sheer desperation, resorted to "one man, one gun, and one bullet", and they succeeded. It took, Mr. President, the bullet of the assassin to cause the senior Senator from Louisiana to yield to his foes.

No one in the political history of our State had at his age been elected to the high offices or attained the national and international prominence held by Senator LONG. When only 37 years old he had occupied in succession the offices of chairman of the Louisiana Railroad Commission, Governor of Louisiana, and United States Senator; and at his death he was, with the possible exception of the executive heads of our greatest world powers, better known and more discussed throughout the world than any other man in public or private life.

It has been repeatedly contended by many of his critics that Senator LONG rose to political power by ruthless and unscrupulous methods. But those who make this charge, Mr. President, fail to appreciate, or else ignore, both the modern political history of Louisiana and the political career of the man they have sought to disparage. For some 25 years prior to Senator LONG's election as chief executive of Louisiana that State had been controlled by governors elected from the upper stratum of society and subservient largely to the interests of the wealthy classes. None could aspire to high office unless he was "to the manor born" and was accorded the support of a certain political organization long dominant in the affairs of the State. The politicians of this regime did nothing toward a constructive development of the State or a recognition of the rights, necessities, and hopes of the humbler classes; yet their domination of the State and its affairs seemed to be permanent and unshakable.

Against this long and firmly entrenched political aristocracy HUEY P. LONG, in 1928, unfurled his standard as candidate for Governor. He was a mere stripling; he was of humble origin; he was unschooled; he was ungrammatical; he had no organization, no power, no influence. But he came with irresistible enthusiasm and dynamic force, hurling defiance at big corporate influences and political war lords and championing with convincing sincerity the cause of what his opposition had long contemptuously derided as the "poor white trash." He was then, as he continued to be afterward, the exponent of the rights of the poor, the humble, and the lowly. He was a champion of the masses, and he had their love and confidence. He was victorious. He did—> * * * break his birth's invidious bar,

> And grasp the skirts of happy chance,
> And breast the blows of circumstance,
> And grappled with his evil star.

And, being victorious, he ousted and kept out of power and continued to keep out of power the political lords of the old regime. That, Mr. President, was his great, unpardonable sin.

The discredited political forces became determined that nothing should be left undone to drive him from power.

Then began that ruthless warfare against Governor LONG that is perhaps without a parallel in the history of our Government. His chief measures were fought before the legislature, before the people, and in the courts. Almost every conceivable attempt was made to discredit him and his administration. He himself was held up daily to public ridicule; his character was assailed, his motives misrepresented. So unrelenting were his enemies that they sought to subject to their political boycott all those who dared support him and his State policies. Within a year after his inauguration the old-line politicians, the big dailies and certain powerful corporate interests united in an effort to drive from the Governor's chair the man they could not defeat at the polls.

Thus, Mr. President, was changed the complexion of LONG's political life and career. Before his election as Governor he said to me, with evident sincerity, that it was his ambition to give Louisiana a splendid, constructive administration, and then retire to the practice of law, which was his first and greatest love. But, in order to save himself, his friends, and associates from political annihilation, it was necessary for him to build and maintain an organization as ruthless, perhaps, as was the opposition. To the perfection of such an organization he brought to bear the unusual combination of a genius for organizing and a mass appeal as a public speaker excelled by few, if any, of his day and generation. This body itself has witnessed the many times he has filled the Senate galleries as he rose to address the Senate, and emptied them when he resumed his seat. His greatest political asset was the affection that the common people entertained for him and the confidence that they reposed in him. They regarded him as one of them. He might be called Governor in Baton Rouge, doctor of laws at Loyola University, or Senator in Washington, but he was "Huey" to those who live down on the bayous and at the forks of the roads.

Mr. President, no man within my knowledge possessed greater political courage than did Senator LONG. He was at no time subservient to any man, set of men, or organization. He did not hesitate to enter the arena against any foe, however influential and however long entrenched in power. In his memorable senatorial campaign of 1930, immediately following his attempted impeachment as Governor, he arrayed himself against a combination of the daily press of Louisiana, the regular organization in New Orleans, and all the erstwhile political powers of his State, and succeeded in completely routing them by the greatest popular majority ever polled in Louisiana up to that time.

While it is true that in the United States Senate he put through to final passage no bill or measure, yet it may be said without exaggeration that in the 4 years of his service as a Member of this body he acquired a national following as an independent leader and established a reputation as a skillful debater excelled by none in our public life. So great had become his following that it can be said with truth that the assassin's bullet that sent him to his untimely grave likewise shot despair into the hearts of hundreds of thousands of his countrymen; for he was regarded by the common people generally as the poor man's friend and as a great apostle of the rights of the laboring classes in city and country. He was possessed of the brain, the energy, the persuasive power, and the purpose, had he lived, to have established during the many years of ordinary life expectancy that lay before him a long record of useful and splendid service to the toiling masses and the underprivileged of humanity.

When, however, Mr. President, we turn from his work in the Senate to his career as Governor of Louisiana we find that he left as Governor a record for constructive administration of a State's affairs unsurpassed by that of any other executive in our national history.

He literally lifted Louisiana out of the mud and left her with one of the finest systems of hard-surfaced and graveled roads in the United States. He abolished our toll ferries, substituting therefor magnificent toll-free bridges over the many broad rivers and bayous of Louisiana, and culminating in the great Huey P. Long Bridge that spans the Mississippi River at New Orleans.

He lifted more and more the burdens of public education from the poorer communities, equalized educational opportunities throughout Louisiana, and more than doubled the State's contribution to the cause of public education.

He enacted into law the permanent policy of distributing free of cost schoolbooks to every child in Louisiana attending school, public or private, and regardless of race, color, or creed.

He enfranchised the "poor whites" of Louisiana by repealing the poll tax prerequisite to vote.

He substantially relieved the poor man's taxes by exempting all homes up to a potential value of $2,000, and by shifting generally tax burdens from the masses to the wealthy classes.

Before LONG occupied the executive chair of Louisiana, legislatures had assembled and adjourned, Governors had come and gone in monotonous succession for over a quarter of a century, and all had left the Pelican State practically as they found it. But within the span of a few years LONG made Louisiana noted throughout the world for its spirit of progress, and studded the surface of the State with the monuments of his inspired vision, dynamic energy, and capacity for achievement.

Mr. President, he was a loyal friend—surely I may bear testimony to that fact—and he was an open foe. He fought none secretly. He battled always in the open. He was a man of strong convictions; and neither fear nor favor, nor dread of punishment, nor hope of gain, prevented the outspoken expression and advocacy of his views. There was no duplicity about him. The same opinions and sentiments that he uttered in private discourse he maintained upon the hustings and on the floor of the Senate. Shortly before his death, in the rapid fire of debate in this body, he gave the following truthful characterization of himself, eloquent in its frank simplicity:

> Mr. President, I am not undertaking to answer the charge that I am ignorant. It is true. I am an ignorant man. I have had no college education. I have not even had a high-school education. But the thing that takes me far in politics is that I do not have to color what comes into my mind and into my heart. I say it unvarnished. I say it without veneer. I know the hearts of the people because I have not colored my own. I know when I am right in my own conscience. I do not talk one way in the cloak room and another way out here. I do not talk one way back there in the hills of Louisiana and another way here in the Senate. I have one language. Ignorant as it is, it is the universal language of the sphere in which I operate. Its simplicity gains pardon for my lack of letters and education.

This deprivation of educational advantages in his youth made him especially interested throughout his political career in the cause of public education. During his administration the public schools of Louisiana received from the State more generous contributions than during the administration of any preceding Governor. He builded the Louisiana State University, a State-maintained institution, from a mediocre college into the greatest seat of learning in the South. He was its very lifeblood from the athletic field to the director's room. He had evolved and was about to put in execution a plan giving the opportunity of a collegiate education to every boy and girl in Louisiana. His death was an irreparable loss to both elementary and higher free public education in our State.

Upon his bed of death his mind dwelt unselfishly upon this great plan of collegiate training which he had conceived. His last uttered thought was a hope, a doubt, a prayer, all in one, for the students of Louisiana State University and the youth of Louisiana. "What will now become of my boys?" was the cry of anguish, the last articulate thought of the dying Senator.

Thus into life eternal passed a great soul that in its brief earthly pilgrimage struggled fiercely, sometimes, perchance, erringly, but at all times bravely, strongly, and unselfishly for the weak, the humble, and the oppressed.

"The friend of the poor" is the epitaph which, I think, he would himself have preferred to all others. It is the epitaph which hundreds of thousands of fellow Americans have bestowed upon him. It is an epitaph whose verity none may justly question.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, our diplomatic history records that in 1870 the French Ambassador here at Washington committed suicide. There was at that time the conflict well known to us between France and Germany. The German Ambassador passed a fitting comment of kindness upon the dead French official. Some officer of Government, turning to him said, "How is it that you speak so highly or at all of the French Ambassador?" To which the German Ambassador responded, "After death there is no war."

Mr. President, I think the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will disclose that the last passage which might be called a thrust of blades between the late Senator from Louisiana and opponents was between himself and myself. It was in the final moments of the last session of Congress, just at the instant of adjournment. This event is mentioned only to disclose that in wholly political matters there was a very wide variance between that eminent official of Louisiana and myself.

Mr. President, the scholars around me will recall that the Stoic, when in Latin moralizing on the duty to the dead, gave to mankind the admonition, "Of the dead speak nothing but good." The philosopher did not mean to counsel that without regard to one's deserts we should say that which is good. He meant to say that in all lives there is that which some would regard good, some ill; therefore, let the speaker, whoever speaks, comment on that which to him or her is good, leaving that which is else to silence.

Mr. President, I beg to call the attention of Senators who recall this celebrated dead to the fact that in all his efforts he was a man of courage. Right or wrong, from the standpoint of any other man, he neither feared a foe nor cultivated a friend at the expense of his convictions. To that we accord title of merit and praise.

Sir, he had his loyalty to those who were his friends and allies. Unto neither of these was there a surrender or compromise. In that virtue he offers us a commendable example. He was a proof to the young Americans of the land that struggling young manhood could upon merit rise to reward and renown. The apostrophe of the eminent orator who has just closed in a fitting quotation from Tennyson upon one who "breaks his birth's invidious bar" and has risen above the barriers that barricaded his progress was eminently descriptive of the dead Senator, to his honor.

I, sir, wish to conclude by saying that there was another element in this man that was attractive to those who heard him from this body. We recall, Mr. President, from tradition, that when someone expressed doubt as to the existence of a God, speaking in the presence of Napoleon, the master Bonaparte turned his eyes to the gleaming stars of the firmament and, pointing to the lustrous moon, asked, "Who made that?" We remember that this distinguished dead rarely addressed this body without bringing to his sustenance and support quotations from the Holy Scriptures, with his allusion to the infinity of the Creator, and asserting his belief in the rewards of the hereafter to the worthy, or the punishment of those who purposely afflicted their fellow mankind. This example of his faith and his trust can well be referred to as indicative of his character. It pointed to the fact that he believed in God, and moved ever so to conduct his own life that he could be worthy of reward and to shun action that could bring divine punishment.

In all of this, sir, we may say, in conclusion, that there will be an epitaph from this honorable body to this honorable dead, "Pace humani"—"This man, may he rest in peace", ever decorated with the love of friends and sanctified with the adoration of family and kinsmen.

Mrs. CARAWAY. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] has paid tribute where tribute is due. There are some who do not believe as he does, but there is not one in this body who does not regret that Senator LONG came to his death as he did. Only a few times in the history of this Republic have there been political assassinations. I do not recall that a Member of this body has ever before met such a death.

Senator LONG was my political friend, as evidenced by his work in my campaign for reelection. That he had little to gain if I won and much to lose in prestige should my campaign fail everyone knows. I won, and it is indicative of his greatness that I can stand here and assert that he never once presumed upon the fact of his assistance to try to influence my course in matters of legislation. He at all times showed me every courtesy and consideration, as has every Senator here.

I feel that I would be doing less than my duty if I did not at this time express my keen regret at the loss of a friend. I deeply deplore the fact that one endowed with such exceptional ability and courage, with youth, and an enthusiasm notable everywhere should no longer be here. In his fight for the rights of the people, the bone and sinew of this country, he was not always polite, but he was effective in keeping before the country the issues as he saw them.

Whether in accord with his policies or not, each Senator here must have admired the dynamic energy motivating him, the eternal youth which made him such a contradictory character. His wife and children, than whom there are none better, have lived most normal lives despite the storms raging around him, which is only another strange proof of his control of circumstances. No more fitting words can be found in writing finis to the chapter of his life than those of the poet who said:

After life's fitful fever he sleeps well.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, Senator LONG in his early youth lived almost in sight of my home in Oklahoma. For a time he attended the State University of my State.

Shortly after the last Congress adjourned I started for my home in Oklahoma. At St. Louis I was apprised of the attempt upon his life at Baton Rouge. When I reached Claremore, Okla., I was apprised of the death of my friend the senior Senator from Louisiana. When I reached Tulsa, Okla., I received a commission from the Senate to be one of a committee to attend his funeral. I deviated from my course, took an airplane at Tulsa, and flew to Fort Worth, Tex., in order to arrive at the Louisiana capital in time for the funeral. From Fort Worth, I took the train, but I could not reach Baton Rouge directly. I had to leave the train across the river from Baton Rouge, some 25 or 30 miles. My party was met at the train by automobiles and we started for Baton Rouge by motor. This was about 3 o'clock in the morning, the morning preceding the afternoon of his burial. As we started for Baton Rouge we found the roads at that early hour cluttered with traffic. The roads were full of conveyances, automobiles, wagons, buggies, and men and boys afoot. When we reached the ferry crossing the river at Baton Rouge the ferry was crowded. We had to wait our turn to get across the river. Upon arriving at Baton Rouge at about 5 o'clock, before it was light on that September morning, the capitol grounds were alive with people. A long line was waiting to go through the capitol to pay their last respects to the departed dead. The hotels were crowded.

During the day the crowd increased in Baton Rouge. The railway tracks were crowded for space to accommodate special trains coming for the funeral. I was advised that later in the afternoon the roads leading to the city were blocked and that traffic could not get to the city. The opposition press in Baton Rouge and in Louisiana generally in broad headlines made the statement that 100,000 people had passed through the capitol during the night and the day preceding Senator LONG's burial at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The same press stated that 150,000 people were on the grounds when he was laid at rest on the capitol grounds.

As members of the senatorial delegation headed by my friend the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], and consisting of the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], and the late Senator Schall from Minnesota, when we proceeded to leave the capitol for the burial ground, which is in the center of the capitol park, and as we left the building this was the scene before us. In front of the capitol is a park some four blocks in area. As we marched from the capitol it was like entering a giant stadium. Those four blocks were covered with humanity. The streets had been lined with guards, the grounds, streets, and sidewalks were full of Louisianians. The windows on buildings surrounding those four blocks were full of people. The tops of buildings were likewise covered with humanity. I was not surprised at the estimate which was made of 150,000 people being on the capitol grounds at that time. I believe it was a reasonable estimate.

Mr. President, after the funeral services were over I had time and opportunity for making inquiries, and I began to inquire in Baton Rouge of those with whom I came in contact why this great outpouring of the citizens of Louisiana at the burial of their senior Senator. This was the information which Louisianians gave me: They said that when Mr. LONG was a candidate for Governor he promised the voters and the people of Louisiana that if he was elected Governor he would build good roads through the swamps and over the crooked trails of Louisiana, and when he was elected Governor he built the roads.

He promised when he was a candidate that he would give them schools. As Governor he gave them schools. He promised the children of Louisiana that if he was elected Governor he would give them free textbooks. As Governor he gave them free textbooks.

He promised the people of Louisiana as a candidate that if elected he would build them bridges. As Governor he built the bridges.

He promised them hospitals. As Governor he built and improved the hospitals. Today in New Orleans I think we have perhaps one of the best hospitals in the world. It is so generally recognized.

He promised the people of Louisiana that he would raise the standards of the colleges of that State. As Governor he raised the standards of the colleges. Today Louisiana State University stands as one of the best universities in the Nation.

Mr. President, after all those promises had been made by the candidate the Governor fulfilled the promises.

I was somewhat astonished to know that Louisiana is financing those improvements by a decreased tax upon the poor and an increased tax upon the rich. Even the rich are not complaining, and the poor, of course, are delighted.

I was further somewhat surprised to know that of all the States of the American Union the credit of the State of Louisiana in the marts of trade and finance stands at the very top.

I give this, in connection with the eloquent address just made by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], as an explanation of the tribute given Senator LONG by his home folks in Louisiana.

HON. HUBERT D. STEPHENS

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a few days ago the President sent to the Senate the nominations of five directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. All of those who are now directors of the Corporation were renominated except my former colleague, ex-Senator Hubert D. Stephens.

It will be recalled that former Senator Stephens, after a service in the House of Representatives of 10 years, voluntarily retired. When he became a candidate for the Senate it was not his wish to do so, but he yielded to the solicitation of friends and became a candidate. When he accepted the position of director of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation he told the President at that time that he would serve only for a short period.

I desire to put into the RECORD a letter from former Senator Stephens to the President expressing the wish that he be not reappointed, and the reply of the President to Senator Stephens expressing his regrets and deep appreciation of his splendid services while a member of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 16, 1936.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: A few days after I was defeated for reelection to the Senate, Senator PAT HARRISON told me that you wanted to appoint me to some position. I said to him, "I appreciate that very much, but I have no desire to be given any position."

In February 1935 I came to Washington on a business matter. While here Senator HARRISON urged me to accept an appointment. Again I told him that I was not interested. After several conversations with him I said that there was only one position that I would accept—director of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I also told him that I would not care to hold it very long.

You gave me the appointment. This expression of friendship and confidence was greatly appreciated. My association with the directors and with the other persons employed here has been exceedingly pleasant.

I was informed a few days ago that you had stated you would reappoint all of the directors. I deeply appreciate this further evidence of your friendship and confidence. It has never been my intention to accept a reappointment. So, I am writing to inform you of this fact.

I wish for you much happiness and success in the future.

Respectfully yours,

H. D. STEPHENS.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 17, 1936.

Hon. HUBERT D. STEPHENS,
Member of the Board, Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR HUBERT: In accepting with sincere regret your decision to retire from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation I want to express to you my deep appreciation of your loyalty and your willingness to accept the responsibilities you undertook and performed over the past year.

I know your reasons for accepting the post for a limited period only, and for that reason do not urge you to stay on.

With warm personal regards,

Cordially,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENT WITH CANADA—LETTER OF HON. CORDELL HULL, SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, on November 2, 1935, a joint telegram was received by me from the Intermountain Livestock Marketing Association and the Intermountain Livestock Credit Corporation, stating:

NOVEMBER 2, 1935.

Hon. EDW. P. COSTIGAN,
Denver, Colo.:

It is rumored the State Department, Washington, considering reciprocal trade treaty with Canada which would mean lowering tariff on livestock imports. Any such measure would be extremely detrimental to livestock producers of western range States and tend to demoralize markets. Livestock men this section just getting back on their feet on basis present prevailing markets. Representing more than 10,000 livestock producers and feeders this intermountain section, we urge you oppose vigorously any contemplated action with view of lowering tariffs.

INTERMOUNTAIN LIVESTOCK MARKETING ASSN.
INTERMOUNTAIN LIVESTOCK CREDIT CORPORATION.

The message was transmitted by me to the distinguished present Secretary of State as a sample of various other messages at that time being received from representatives of western livestock producers. In my letter to the Secretary of State, I recalled recent explanations by him following similar suggestions with respect to the sanitary agreement with Argentina, stating that his earlier comments had been helpful and that any he might offer on the foregoing message would be welcome. In response to my letter of transmittal, the Secretary of State, on November 26, made a reply, in which, with characteristic directness and clearness, he presents an analysis of that agreement. The law under which the Secretary of State acted, and this detailed explanation of the careful manner in which the law is being applied are of importance, not only to members of livestock associations but to all citizens.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter of the Secretary of State, which I now present, may be properly referred and printed in the RECORD, following and as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter of the Secretary of State was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
November 26, 1935.

The Honorable EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
210 Flat Iron Building, Denver, Colo.

MY DEAR SENATOR COSTIGAN: I was very glad to receive your letter of November 2, 1935, enclosing, as a sample of various messages received by you from representatives of western livestock producers, a telegram from the Intermountain Livestock Marketing Association and Intermountain Livestock Credit Corporation urging that no reduction be made in the duty on livestock in connection with the trade agreement with Canada.

When your letter was received the trade agreement with Canada was in the final stages of negotiation. I therefore thought it desirable to await the perfection of the agreement and the publication of its terms in order that I might be in a position to deal fully with the subject on the basis of all the details. I greatly appreciate the opportunity you have offered me of commenting upon this matter.

As you, of course, know, the full details of this agreement were published in the newspapers of Monday, November 18. The reductions in duty of interest to the domestic cattlemen are limited to the following:

(1) On cattle weighing 700 pounds or more each the duty has been reduced from 3 cents to 2 cents a pound, to apply annually to no more than three-quarters of 1 percent of the average annual total number of cattle (including calves) slaughtered in the United States during 1928 to 1932.

(2) For calves weighing less than 175 pounds each the duty has been reduced from 2½ cents a pound to 1½ cents a pound, to apply to no more than one-quarter of 1 percent of the same average annual domestic slaughter of cattle.

(3) The duty on dairy cows weighing 700 pounds or more each has been reduced from 3 cents to 1½ cents a pound, the reduction to apply to not more than 20,000 head annually.

When consideration is given to these provisions and to the circumstances to which they relate, it will be clearly seen that the limitations imposed on the imports which can benefit by these reductions in duty assure the most ample protection to our domestic cattle producers.

Before examining more fully the provisions of the agreement regarding cattle I should like to comment upon the messages which we both received from evidently anxious domestic cattle-growing interests during the period immediately preceding the conclusion of this agreement. The anxieties which these messages express were clearly aroused by an incorrect impression of what was being done. It is not unlikely that this mistaken impression was in some way connected with the publication on September 7, 1935, of the correspondence which I exchanged with the Canadian Minister in Washington in November and December 1934 on the subject of a trade agreement. In a letter addressed to me on November 14, 1934, the Canadian Minister in Washington outlined a basis for a trade agreement proposed by his Government, which contained the suggestion that our import duties on various agricultural products, including cattle, be cut by 50 percent. In my reply of December 27 I stated, in referring to these proposals:

"* * * In communicating to you the willingness of the Government of the United States to enter upon negotiations with your Government looking to a trade agreement calculated to increase trade in both directions, I must, of course, make it clear that in advance of negotiations this Government cannot make any commitment as to whether it will be possible to agree to a reduction in the rates of duty on particular products, each of which must be carefully studied in the light of existing economic conditions before any decision can be reached."

Subsequent to this exchange of correspondence there was issued on January 21, 1935, the announcement of intention to negotiate a trade agreement with Canada, as provided for in the Trade Agreements Act of June 12, 1934, and March 11 and 18, respectively, were set as the dates for the submission of written statements and for the oral presentation of views by interested parties to the Committee for Reciprocity Information. The trade agreement which was announced by the President in his Armistice Day address on November 11, 1935, and which was formally signed on November 15, was the culmination of exhaustive preparations conducted during the intervening months. All of the agencies of the Government which regularly participate in the intensive preparations for trade-agreement negotiations, including the Departments of State, Commerce, and Agriculture, the Treasury and the Tariff Commission, cooperated in this preparatory work in order that each of the many problems involved might receive the fullest and most thorough consideration. All of the vast fund of information available from official sources, as well as the many statements and expressions of views submitted by interested persons, were painstakingly studied. During the entire course of the detailed and extended negotiations that followed the position and needs of our domestic producers were constantly borne in mind. The results of this most thorough procedure are to be seen in the agreement concluded.

The trade between the United States and Canada has always been of primary importance to both of the countries, but in the difficult years which have followed the enactment of the Hawley-Smoot Act, and the subsequent Canadian tariff increases, this trade had fallen very considerably. One of the most effective opportunities for aiding substantially in the restoration of production and employment in the United States lay in the negotiation of a trade agreement which would restore the opportunities for larger and less restricted trade between the two countries.

Because of the vital importance of the cattle trade to the Canadian prairie provinces, a concession with respect to cattle was effectively a sine qua non to any substantial trade agreement between the two countries. The difficulties which our domestic cattle producers had been experiencing were most clearly in our minds. The agreement concluded affords the evidence that the two sets of interests were not irreconcilable, and when the factual basis on which the concessions were made is fully understood this conclusion will surely be accepted by all who are willing to consider the subject reasonably and fairly.

In the first place the reductions made in the rates of duty are moderate. The duty on cattle weighing 700 pounds or more is to be 2 cents per pound instead of 3 cents under the Smoot-Hawley tariff, while the duty on calves weighing less than 175 pounds is to be 1½ cents per pound instead of 2½ cents. The new rates are the same for calves and for cattle over 1,050 pounds as those in force from 1922–30 under the Fordney-McCumber tariff, while for cattle between 700 and 1,050 pounds they are still one-half cent per pound, or 33⅓ percent, higher than the 1922–30 rates. It should not be forgotten in this connection that between 1913 and 1921 cattle of all weights were on the free list.

In the second place the numbers of imported cattle and calves which may benefit from these reduced rates are specifically limited. For the cattle of 700 pounds and over the reduced duties are to apply annually to no more than three-fourths of 1 percent of the average annual total number of cattle (including calves) slaughtered in the United States during 1928–32, while for the calves under 175 pounds the limit has been fixed at only one-fourth of 1 percent of this same figure. This means that the reduced rates apply to only 51,933 head of calves and 155,799 head of cattle per calendar year. Any cattle or calves which may enter the United States in any year in excess of this limitation will have to pay the Smoot-Hawley rates.

Certainly these moderate reductions in duty, limited to so small a percentage of the average annual domestic slaughter, cannot be of any appreciable injury to the domestic cattle producers. The total number of cattle and calves annually slaughtered in Canada amounts to less than one-tenth of the corresponding annual slaughter in the United States, and by the means adopted in the agreement a concession has been provided which, while of definite interest to Canada, is surrounded with such limitations as to make it of negligible significance from the point of view of our own cattle producers.

It is also to be borne in mind that, following last year's drought and the emergency measures taken in connection therewith by this Government to rescue the cattle growers from their difficult position, cattle slaughter in the United States at present and in the immediate future is below average. Under these conditions imports of cattle tend to afford some measure of assurance to the consumer.

Small as the increased imports may be in comparison to the total number of cattle annually raised in the United States, they will not be without direct benefit to American agriculture, for ordinarily they will be largely confined to feeder cattle requiring domestic feed to finish them off for the market.

My comment would be far from complete if I failed to call attention to the larger aspects of the subject by pointing out the very real benefits which the agreement, considered in its entirety, will bring to all of our agriculture, industry, and commerce, including our domestic cattle producers. The Canadian tariff concessions provided by this agreement for the benefit of our export trade will mean increased sales in Canada of a long list of our agricultural products, such as fresh and canned meats, vegetables, and fruits; the concessions obtained for our exports include tariff reductions on products of such direct interest to Colorado producers as wool, mining, and quarrying machinery, lard, lead, and zinc. Larger sales of our agricultural products to Canada will mean increased income for our agricultural producers in Colorado and other States; larger sales of our industrial products to Canada as a result of the extensive industrial concessions provided by the agreement, will mean increased production and increased pay rolls in our factories. All of this means increased purchasing power, and therefore increased consumption of all the things that our population needs and wants. It is well to bear in mind in this connection that increased purchasing power among our consumers is of particular importance to those producers whose products, such as beef, are omitted from the family table or displaced by cheaper substitutes, when the family purchasing power fails. It is not our producers for export alone but all our producers for our domestic markets, including those agricultural growers in Colorado and other States producing for domestic consumption, who stand to gain from the increased trade which this new agreement with Canada will lead to.

The small concession which we have granted on cattle, restricted as it is by its quota limitation, and preserving every necessary safeguard for our domestic cattle industry, must be considered, if its real significance is to be appreciated, in the broad light of the entire agreement of which it is a part, and of the benefits which we will derive from this agreement in the shape of hundreds of millions of dollars in increased exports, a large part of which will actually consist of agricultural exports, while the remainder of the increase will be in industrial products which through enlarged pay rolls and augmented purchasing power will inevitably redound to the further benefit of our farming and cattle-raising sections.

It is necessary thus to consider the agreement in its entirety to gain a correct appreciation of its meaning to all concerned. The essential significance of this agreement lies in the fact that it opens the way to a vastly increased exchange of goods, to hundreds of millions of dollars in increased trade, and so to that stimulation in our commercial and industrial activity, to that increase in our employment and pay rolls, to that expansion of purchases of our agricultural products of every sort, which is the central aim of our endeavors. I am convinced that such objections as have been raised against the trade agreement with Canada are largely the result of a misunderstanding of the actual facts and of a failure to appreciate their real significance, and that when the true facts are known to, and their meaning is fully understood by, those who have raised objections, most of them at least will agree that we have taken wise, prudent, and well-considered action, and that the agreement concluded with Canada lies along that path of increasing production, consumption, and trade for all concerned that is the road toward full recovery and sound prosperity.

I am very glad to have had this opportunity to make the foregoing comment, and with kindest regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

REPORT ON WAR FINANCE CORPORATION (IN LIQUIDATION)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the War Finance Corporation (in liquidation), covering the period from January 1, 1935, to December 31, 1935, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORT OF FEDERAL COORDINATOR OF TRANSPORTATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, the fourth report of the Federal Coordinator of Transportation on transportation legislation, with the comments of the Interstate Commerce Commission upon his recommendations, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Kentucky, expressing approval of and urging the continuance of a policy of strict neutrality on the part of the United States Government in international disputes not affecting this Nation, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

(See concurrent resolution printed in full when presented by Mr. LOGAN on the 20th instant, p. 675 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate papers in the nature of petitions numerously signed by sundry citizens of the United States, praying for the adoption of measures to end the destruction of life by war, and to lead the nations of the world toward the light of mutual tolerance and understanding, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by Chapter 152 of the Railroad Employees National Pension Association, Sunbury, Pa., favoring the adoption of a constitutional amendment restricting the power of the Supreme Court of the United States and providing for the election of the members thereof by popular vote, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Bessie L. Maygard, of Whitfield, Ala., praying for the adoption of measures for the benefit of fourth-class postmasters, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by officers and members of the Pontier Democratic Association, Inc., assembled at Jamaica, N. Y., favoring the prompt enactment of legislation providing for the immediate payment of adjusted-service certificates of World War veterans, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition numerously signed by members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Osage, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of intoxicating liquors, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WALSH presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from the Appalachian Mountain Club, Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the transfer of the Forest Service from the Department of Agriculture to another department, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the board of selectmen, of Sharon, and the selectmen of the town of Dedham, in the State of Massachusetts, favoring in the administration of Federal relief projects the granting of power to local authorities to recommend persons for employment, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Branch No. 107, National Association of Letter Carriers, of Gloucester, Mass., favoring the enactment of legislation placing special-delivery messengers under the classified civil service after 2 years' service, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Greater Boston (Mass.) Federation of Neighborhood Houses, favoring the formulation of a policy of American neutrality that does not penalize the victim of aggression while ostensibly preserving a state of impartial neutrality, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from members of North End Post, No. 53, the American Legion, of Boston, Mass., praying for the adoption of a fair and impartial neutrality policy by the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a declaration adopted by a convention of world psychiatrists at The Hague, Holland, in October 1935, favoring a strongly financed organization of the nations looking toward peace, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a paper in the nature of a memorial from the Boston Chamber of Commerce and the Maritime Association of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, in the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation repealing the so-called long- and short-haul clause of the Interstate Commerce Act, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the Springfield (Mass.) Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, praying for the adoption of Senate Resolution 211 (submitted by Mr. VAN NUYS), authorizing an investigation in connection with certain lynchings in the United States, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Cambridge (Mass.) Federation of Teachers, protesting against the enactment of legislation abridging the freedom of speech and of the press, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the Massachusetts Rural Letter Carriers' Association, favoring the enactment of legislation for the benefit of rural carriers, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Cambridge (Mass.) Federation of Teachers, protesting against the enactment of legislation making it a crime, by mere utterance or publication, to incite soldiers and sailors to disobey orders, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BULKLEY, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 3699) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of Cincinnati, Ohio, as a center of music, and its contribution to the art of music for the past 50 years, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1472) thereon.

Mr. McADOO, from the Committee on Patents, to which was referred the bill (S. 3121) to vest in the register of copyrights the registration of copyright prints and labels, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1473) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MINTON:

A bill (S. 3776) for the relief of Addison B. Hampel (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 3777) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to execute an agreement of indemnity to the First Granite National Bank, Augusta, Maine; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 3778) granting a pension to Ella Crouse (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3779) granting a pension to Charles G. Hostutler (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

A bill (S. 3780) to make further provision for the conservation and proper utilization of the soil resources of the Nation; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. BAILEY:

A bill (S. 3781) limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in certain cases; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 3782) to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

A bill (S. 3783) for the relief of Dr. T. J. Coble (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SCHWELLENBACH:

A bill (S. 3784) to extend the benefits of the Adams Act, the Purnell Act, and the Capper-Ketcham Act to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

A bill (S. 3785) for the relief of Sam Larson, guardian of Margaret Larson, a minor; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LOGAN:

A bill (S. 3786) for the relief of Col. J. P. Barney; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3787) to establish a United States Administrative Court to expedite the hearing and determination of controversies with the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. POPE:

A bill (S. 3788) granting a pension to Marion Oliver; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BYRNES:

A bill (S. 3789) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to convey the Charleston Army Base Terminal to the city of Charleston, S. C.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CHAVEZ:

A bill (S. 3790) to authorize amendment of the act of February 25, 1927, for the payment of damages caused by reason of the overflow of the Rio Grande on August 17, 1921; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3791) to amend the postal laws so as to provide for a minimum salary of $5,000 a year for postmasters at central-accounting offices; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

A bill (S. 3792) to provide for the grant of a certain concession to Jim White, discoverer and explorer of Carlsbad Cavern, N. Mex.; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. STEIWER:

A bill (S. 3793) authorizing officers and employees of the Government to attend rifle meets at Camp Perry; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3794) to correct the naval record of John B. Dolan; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SHIPSTEAD:

A bill (S. 3795) granting a pension to Matilda Davison; and

A bill (S. 3796) granting a pension to Ida S. Nolterieke; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STEIWER:

A bill (S. 3797) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing certain tribes of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes", approved May 26, 1920; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BLACK:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 200) to extend the period of suspension of the limitation governing the filing of suit under section 19, World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. CHAVEZ:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 201) to authorize under certain conditions the executive departments, independent offices, and agencies of the United States to lease lands under their jurisdiction and to grant rights-of-way over such lands; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles and referred, or ordered to be placed on the calendar, as indicated below:

H. R. 1415. An act to provide for the establishment of the Richmond National Battlefield Park, in the State of Virginia, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 8172. An act to authorize the transfer by the United States to the county of Mohave, Ariz., of all public lands in sections 20, 28, and 30, township 20 north, range 15 west, Gila and Salt River meridian, for public park, recreational, and other municipal purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

H. R. 3565. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to effect exchange of certain rights-of-way in Hawaii; and

H. R. 8024. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to dispose of material no longer needed by the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 7225. An act authorizing a revolving reimbursable fund for the Lac du Flambeau Band of Chippewa Indians in Wisconsin; and

H. J. Res. 215. Joint resolution to amend Public Act No. 435, Seventy-second Congress; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 8180. An act to prohibit the use of the mails for the solicitation of the procurement of divorces in foreign countries; and

H. R. 8940. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 8287. An act to establish an assessed valuation real property tax in the Virgin Islands of the United States; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

H. R. 8300. An act to authorize a preliminary examination of Suwanee River in the State of Florida, from Florida-Georgia State line to the Gulf of Mexico; to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 9871. An act to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the participation of the United States in the California-Pacific International Exposition to be held at San Diego, Calif., in 1935 and 1936; authorizing an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes", approved March 7, 1935, to provide for participation in the California-Pacific International Exposition to be held at San Diego, Calif., in 1936, to authorize an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

H. R. 10104. An act to aid in providing the people of the United States with adequate facilities for park, parkway, and recreational-area purposes, and to provide for the transfer of certain lands chiefly valuable for such purposes to States and political subdivisions thereof; to the calendar.

H. J. Res. 307. Joint resolution authorizing the erection of a memorial to the early settlers whose land grants embrace the site of the Federal City; to the Committee on the Library.

H. J. Res. 321. Joint resolution granting the consent of Congress to the minimum-wage compact ratified by the Legislatures of Massachusetts and New Hampshire; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS USING THE PANAMA CANAL—AMENDMENT

Mr. BAILEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2288) to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ACCEPTANCE OF MEDALS, ETC., BY OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN—AMENDMENT

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1975) authorizing certain officers of the United States Navy and officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps to accept such medals, orders, diplomas, decorations, and photographs as have been tendered them by foreign governments in appreciation of services rendered, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. McNARY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. ——) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page —, line —, to insert the following:

"There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500,000, to be used for the further development of the naval base at Tongue Point, Oreg.

"The Secretary of the Navy is authorized and directed to expend the appropriation of $1,500,000, made pursuant to this act, for the following purposes:

"For constructing hangars, ramps, barracks, shops, storehouses, and any other facilities required for the use and maintenance of naval aviation squadrons and their personnel;

"For dredging;

"For maintaining existing piers and shore facilities heretofore constructed;

"For enlarging existing piers and shore facilities heretofore constructed, if found necessary and desirable by the Secretary of the Navy."

THE REVISED ANNOTATED CONSTITUTION

Mr. ASHURST submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 28), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That 5,000 additional copies of the revised annotated Constitution be printed for the use of the Congress, 1,500 copies for the Senate, and 3,500 copies for the House of Representatives, and that the Senate Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ a competent person to assist in bringing the same up to date, his compensation to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate: Provided, That the Public Printer shall print not more than 10,000 additional copies of said revised annotated Constitution, and offer the same for sale at the cost of printing and binding, plus 10 percent, to persons who agree not to resell or distribute the same for profit.

PAYMENT OF ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BYRNES

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] on January 21, 1936, on the subject The Payment of the Adjusted Compensation Certificates.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The bonus fight is over. The bill providing for the payment at this time of the adjusted-compensation certificates held by the veterans of the World War passed the Senate yesterday by a vote of 74 to 16. Tomorrow the bill will be reported to the House. A motion will be made to concur in the Senate bill. That motion will be adopted and the bill will then go to the President for his approval or disapproval. Should the President approve it, it will immediately become the law. Should the President disapprove it, the vote in the House and the Senate clearly indicates that the bill will be passed by the Congress over the veto of the President.

Because of this situation it is interesting to know what the bill provides. Today approximately 3,750,000 veterans hold adjusted-compensation certificates issued in 1925 and maturing in 1945. These certificates are obligations of the Treasury. They are just as much part of the national debt as any other obligation. The bill which is now to become law provides that in exchange for these certificates the veterans will be given bonds of the United States for the full face value of their certificates, less any amount borrowed upon such certificates, which bonds will bear interest at 3 percent, and can be cashed by the veteran at any time he desires to receive the money. The Secretary of the Treasury will designate the places, including post offices, at which the bonds can be cashed.

There is no creation of a new debt. It is simply the payment of an old debt by the issuance of these bonds.

The bonds will be issued as of June 15, because that is the date upon which other Treasury obligations mature. The object of issuing them in the denomination of $50 is to encourage thrift on the part of the veteran who receives the bonds.

Slightly over 3,000,000 of the veterans have borrowed from the Government upon their certificates. As a result of these loans the average amount to be paid to the veterans in bonds is $525. This payment will be made by issuing to the veteran a check for $25 and ten $50 bonds. It is the belief of those of us who sponsored this legislation that if a veteran desires to pay a bill or to make a purchase he will cash one or two of these bonds and will retain the others. As an incentive to hold the bond they will receive interest at the rate of 3 percent. This 3 percent will begin to run as of June 15, 1936, the date the bond is issued. However, if a veteran cashes his bond before June 15, 1937, he will not receive the interest. For this there are good reasons. The veteran has claimed that he was entitled to payment in full in cash. If he cashes his bond, he will get just what he claims he was entitled to. However, if he exercises good judgment and holds his bonds, he will get more than he claims he was entitled to. He will get in June 1937, or any date thereafter, 3 percent on the amount due him from June 15, 1936, to date of payment.

If payment in cash were made, the money would have to be borrowed. We are simply providing that instead of paying the 3 percent to the banks or bond investors, that it should be paid to the veterans who have the good judgment to hold their certificates. It is asserted by the opponents of the measure that the 3,000,000 men who have heretofore borrowed upon their certificates will immediately cash all of their bonds. I do not believe it. These men have now reached mature years. They have children to support. I picture what will occur when the average veteran receives the average settlement of $525; a check for $25 and $500 in $50 bonds. Most of his pleasure he anticipates in showing to the family the evidence of his wealth. Just to celebrate the occasion he may make a purchase on the way home. But when he reaches there and those ten $50 bonds come into the possession of his "commanding officer", he will soon conclude that breaking the Hindenberg line was an easy task compared to getting those bonds away from her. In any event I hope I am correct and that she will hold the line and hold the bonds. Because, after all, these bonds will be as good as the Government. They will pay more interest than a savings bank, and will be better than any other bonds of the Government, because, while other bonds may sell for less than face value, these bonds can at any time be cashed for full value.

As to the effect upon the Treasury, it is evident that to the extent the bonds are held by the veterans, the less will be the drain upon the Treasury. When you remember that these obligations have to be paid in any event, the only additional charge upon the Treasury is the interest that must be paid upon the bonds. If the Government borrows upon short-term loans at the low rate of interest it has been borrowing, it will mean but a relatively small additional expenditure for interest each year from now until 1945, when these bonds become due.

I recognize that notwithstanding our effort and the efforts of the commanders of the veterans' organizations to induce veterans to hold their bonds that a large number will be cashed. The veterans are typical Americans. Some are thrifty. Some are improvident. Because this is true, it is interesting to speculate as to what those who cash their bonds will do with the money. Last fall before this bond plan was proposed, and when it was expected by the veterans that cash would be paid, the American Legion conducted a survey to ascertain how the veterans intended to spend their bonus money. Answers were received from 42,500 veterans. The study showed that 53.94 percent of the veterans expected to pay old bills. A total of 31.36 percent of the total bonus payments will be used for this purpose. Thirteen and seven one-hundredths percent of the total will go for home building and repairs. The survey indicates that 19.26 percent of the veterans will repair homes which they now own, while 4.56 percent will start construction of new homes. Furniture, rugs, electric refrigeration, oil furnaces, radios, and home equipment and furnishings will take 7.82 percent of the total paid.

The study shows that 28.5 percent of those who cash their certificates will buy clothes for their wives, while but 26.01 percent will buy a suit or overcoat for themselves. Approximately one out of four—25.88 percent—will buy clothes for their children. Investment in insurance, education, stock, bonds, and savings will receive 16.54 percent of the payments, while automobiles and trucks will be bought by approximately 10 percent of the veterans. They will spend 5.46 percent of the total sum paid them for these conveniences.

As an illustration of what this vast spending means, let me take the clothing industry into which 6.18 percent of the bonus payments will go. These payments will create, according to an estimate of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the United States Department of Commerce, sufficient work to employ 30,000 to 35,000 persons for a period of 1 year.

Commander Van Zandt, of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and Commander Harlan, of the Disabled American Veterans, who, with Commander Murphy, of the Legion, have been active in presenting the cause of the veterans, state that from their investigations they reach the same conclusion as to the intentions of the thousands of veterans who belong to those two organizations.

The bill provides that the veteran will be forgiven any interest due upon money borrowed upon his certificate since October 1, 1931. Congress authorized loans not to exceed 50 percent. Only approximately 1 percent of the interest has been paid.

Opponents of the veterans charge that this interest should not be canceled. However, the fair-minded citizen will, in my opinion, agree that there is force in the contention of the veteran that this bonus should have been paid November 11, 1918, and that he should not be charged interest upon money which should have been paid to him the day of the armistice. The opponents of the veterans, however, assert that no bonus should have ever been paid. Consider the compensation of the veteran, amounting to $30 per month. Out of this he was forced to send $15 to his dependents. He was practically forced to take out life insurance, for which he was charged $6.60 per month. He was forced to purchase Liberty bonds, for which an amount was deducted from his compensation. With what remained of his $30 he was supposed to have a good time. He was good natured about it. Upon his return, he agreed with much of the statement so often made, that the services of those who remained at home was essential to maintain an army at the front. But then he learned what had been paid for the services of those at home. He saw the compensation of the railroad companies adjusted. He saw adjusted the compensation of the contractors, who worked upon a cost-plus basis. He saw the civilian employees of the Government enjoying a bonus of $240 per year. He learned of the wages that had been received by workmen at the camps and in the shipyards, and the profits of those who were upon the farms during the war. He then concluded, and the Congress of the United States concluded, that he was entitled to a bonus.

At the close of the Revolutionary War George Washington was offered and accepted a bonus in land. Abraham Lincoln accepted a bonus. They were not ashamed to accept it, and the veterans of the United States armed forces during the World War are not ashamed to accept it.

It is said now that the mistake was made when the bonus was not paid in cash. I agree. But that was not the fault of the veteran. Critics say that when we gave them the adjusted-compensation certificates payable in 1945, it was a contract and the veteran should not violate the contract. A contract must be mutually agreed to. There was no agreement on the part of the veteran about the adjusted-compensation certificates. Congress passed the law and the veteran could take it or leave it. That is not the spirit of a contract.

When this bill is finally acted upon it is to be expected that some veterans will want their bonds the next morning. The friends of the veterans must explain to them that these bonds cannot be issued before June 15, 1936. When the original adjusted-compensation certificates were authorized by Congress in March 1924 the law provided that the certificates be issued as of January 1, 1925, because it was recognized that it would take months to prepare and issue the certificates. The accounts of 3,750,000 veterans must be credited with the interest which is canceled. Then the amount due each veteran must be determined. An application blank must be mailed to the veteran and returned by him. Approximately 35,000,000 bonds must be printed, and checks for the odd amounts must be drawn. All of this cannot be done before June 15. The veteran must be patient. After all, he must remember that June 15, 1936, is almost 9 years earlier than January 1, 1945, the date he would have received payment for his certificate.

The overwhelming vote of the Senate and House clearly represents the sentiment of the people of the United States that this question should be disposed of. The bill that is now about to become law disposes of it in an intelligent and just way, giving to the veteran an obligation of the Government which he can cash at any time but which it is to his interest to hold. It involves no charge upon the Treasury for a new venture or new activity. It involves the issuance of one obligation of the Government as a substitute for another obligation of the Government.

The enactment of this bill into law will do justice to the veterans of the World War and will cause them to feel that the sacrifices they willingly made are appreciated by the American people.

REDUCTION OF TRAFFIC ACCIDENTS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the Automobile Manufacturers Association of the United States is today proposing a broad program of attack upon the traffic hazards of the country. I ask that its statement be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, January 21.—A Nation-wide effort to reduce traffic accidents in 1936, by uniting all branches of the motor industry with nationally recognized safety agencies in a coordinated working program was announced today by Alvan Macauley, president of the Automobile Manufacturers Association.

Definitely stamping highway safety as a localized problem, the campaign will have State and community appeal as the primary approach. To that end, the entire motor industry is underwriting the cost of specific projects to be sponsored by the cooperating organizations, which will provide additional impetus to their present safety activities.

ATTACK PROBLEM ON BROAD FRONT

New and supplementary activities include the stimulation of intercity safety contests, renewal of public-school safety essay and safety lesson contests, expansion of schoolboy patrol and high-school driver training work, vigorous support for law enforcement, dissemination of films, literature, and educational material in a wide range of contacts with State and local civic and fraternal groups, assistance in the training of traffic-control personnel and more effective cooperation with all agencies concerned through automobile dealers and car owners.

Paul G. Hoffman, chairman of the safety traffic committee of the Automobile Manufacturers Association, which formulated details of the broad program said that "the primary responsibility for highway safety belongs with the public officials, who are charged with the duty of building and maintaining the facilities and controlling their use." He pointed out that the chief function of private groups who represent organized public sentiment is to support the official agencies with a broad, vigorous program of public education.

ALL BRANCHES OF AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY UNITED

All members of the industry, including automobiles, truck, parts, and accessory makers, finance companies, and rubber manufacturers have joined in "the most comprehensive, cooperative educational program for greater safety on our streets and highways that has yet been attempted by the industry", Mr. Macauley stated.

Officials of such outstanding organizations as the following have pledged their utmost efforts in this cooperative expansion of safety education, Mr. Macauley announced: American Association of Motor Vehicle Administrators; American Association of State Highway Officials; American Automobile Association; American Legion; General Federation of Women's Clubs; Highway Education Board; International Association of Police Chiefs; National Bureau of Surety & Casualty Underwriters; National Congress of Parents and Teachers; National Grange; National Safety Council; United States Bureau of Public Roads; United States Department of Commerce; United States Office of Education.

CONTINUING CAMPAIGN VITAL

"The motor industry is keenly aware of the futility of sporadic attacks on the driver accident problem", said Mr. Macauley. "Such attacks emphasizing the morbidity and horror aspects are not effective. In fact, we are inclined to believe that they may actually add to the hazards of the situation.

"Motor manufacturers and allied interests have devoted a great deal of time and money to the safety problem. Individually, car makers have put their best efforts into building the safest possible vehicle and will continue to do so. Millions of publications have been distributed, safety films presented, and free vehicle inspections offered. Collectively, among other things, we have sponsored safety essay and lesson contests in schools, with the assistance of interested public officials. We have participated in the development of uniform traffic laws. It is apparent, however, that all concerned must redouble their efforts. Greater safety can only be achieved through concentration on all known methods of relief."

STATEMENT OF POLICY FORMULATED

Recognizing the need for sound guiding principles, the organized automobile industry some time ago crystallized its past policies by the adoption of a definite safety platform.

"This is more than a statement of policies, it is a working guide", said Mr. Macauley. "Some phases of this platform were put into effect with the industry's $54,000 grant to Harvard University for carrying on research activities, training of traffic-control personnel, and other functions of the Bureau for Street Traffic Research."

Mr. Hoffman pointed out that detailed plans of individual organizations would be announced as they complete their arrangements. They will initiate and carry out projects on their own responsibility, he said:

"At the same time, we are expanding the scope of safety activities of the Automobile Manufacturers Association", said Mr. Hoffman. "Through dealers and related groups of the industry we hope to deal constructively with this difficult problem."

Members of the Safety Traffic Committee of the Automobile Manufacturers Association, responsible for the industry's broadened activity include: Mr. Hoffman, president of the Studebaker Corporation, as chairman; Lee J. Eastman, vice president, Packard Motor Car Co.; R. P. Fohey, secretary, Chrysler Corporation; Paul W. Garrett, director of public relations, General Motors Corporation; R. P. Page, Jr., president, the Autocar Co.; Alfred Reeves, vice president and general manager, Automobile Manufacturers Association; and Norman Damon, manager of the safety divison of the association.

The safety platform, adopted a few months ago, which is given full force and effect by the latest action, follows:

1. We will continue to build vehicles with every safety factor which intensive research and engineering ingenuity makes available.
2. We will merchandise our product under circumstances which emphasize the importance of safe construction, safe maintenance, and safe use.
3. We will assist our dealers in keeping a constructive safety message before their customers and their communities.
4. We will encourage our dealers and service organizations to deliver cars, new or old, in safe driving condition, and only to persons legally entitled to use the public highways.
5. We will continue to support a sound, scientific approach to a solution of the traffic problem, believing that the same methods which have given America safe cars will protect their safe use.
6. We will work for highways of the highest quality, consistent with traffic needs, and best adjusted to the safe use of the modern vehicle.
7. We will aid in the development and application of sound traffic regulations designed to gain maximum safety from existing streets and highways.
8. We will aid the school system in protecting the young and in developing good citizens conscious of their highway duties.
9. We will assist sound educational efforts through our own channels and through cooperation with other recognized safety educational agencies working for greater safety, economy, and happiness in the use of the public highways.
10. We will cooperate with the police departments and other enforcement agencies in a vigorous selective program of traffic-law enforcement designed to remove the reckless from the highways, to curb the careless, and to protect the right of the good citizen to use the highways safely and free from molestation.

JUSTICE ROBERTS AND JUSTICE STONE

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the New Republic of January 22, 1936, by John T. Flynn, entitled "Justice Roberts and Justice Stone", together with the editorial note.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New Republic of Jan. 22, 1936]

JUSTICE ROBERTS AND JUSTICE STONE

(The following article, which takes the place of Mr. Flynn's regular department for this week, is based upon the opinion and the dissenting opinion of the Supreme Court in the A. A. A. case. The dialog reproduces faithfully, for the most part, the precise words of the two opinions; a few minor changes of a word or a phrase have been made to adapt the material to this form or to shorten it. The spectator's inquiry is introduced to clarify the obscure language of the Court on two occasions. The object of the article is to render plain and make readily available the heart of this epoch-making decision.—THE EDITORS.)

Mr. Justice ROBERTS. The Government contends that under article I, section 8, of the Constitution the Congress has the power to levy this tax (a tax on processors of farm products to pay benefits to the farmers). The clause which the Government thinks authorizes the legislation—the first clause—confers upon Congress the power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and promote the general welfare of the United States."

Now, as we see it, this is the great and controlling question in this case. And we approach its decision with a sense of our deep responsibility to render judgment in accordance established for the governance of all three branches of the Government.

(Observing a deprecatory grimace on the face of Mr. Justice Brandeis:)

No misunderstanding, please! We know it is sometimes said (with a glance toward Mr. Brandeis) that the Court assumes a power to overrule or control the action of the people's representatives. This is a misconception. When an act of Congress is challenged in the courts as not conforming to the constitutional mandate, the judicial branch of the Government has only one duty—to ascertain and declare whether the legislation is in accordance with or in contravention of the Constitution.

Mr. Justice STONE. True. But while the unconstitutional exercise of power by the executive and legislative branches of the Government is subject to judicial restraint, the only restraint upon our own exercise of power is our own sense of self-restraint. For the removal of unwise laws from the statute books appeal lies not to the courts but to the ballot and the processes of democratic government. (Tense silence.)

Justice ROBERTS. Let us get on!

Hamilton maintained that the taxing and general-welfare clause confers a power separate and distinct from those later enumerated, that Congress has the power to tax and appropriate limited only by the requirement that it shall be exercised to provide for the general welfare of the United States. This Court agrees with this.

Justice STONE. Well, with the present depressed state of agriculture, which is Nation-wide, there is certainly no basis for saying that the expenditure of public money in aid of farmers is not within the specific grant of power to Congress to levy taxes "to provide for the general welfare", is there?

Justice ROBERTS. We are not now required to ascertain whether an appropriation in aid of agriculture falls within this grant of power.

Justice STONE. Then you don't decide on that point?

Justice ROBERTS. No; we do not.

Justice STONE. Then it is not denied that Congress in aid of the general welfare may make an appropriation in aid of agriculture?

Justice ROBERTS. We neither affirm nor deny.

Justice STONE. Then on what ground do you outlaw the tax?

Justice ROBERTS. There is a difference, let me remind my learned colleague, between making an appropriation "in aid of agriculture" and adopting a plan—of which the tax is merely a part—to regulate agriculture. The right to regulate agriculture is reserved to the States. It was never granted to the Federal Government. That being so, it is an established principle that the attainment of a prohibited end may not be accomplished under the pretext of the exertion of powers which are granted.

The power of taxation, which is expressly granted, may, of course, be adopted as a means to carry into operation another power also expressly granted. But resort to the taxing power to effectuate an end which is not within the scope of the Constitution is obviously inadmissible. This Court has held this over and over since Marshall laid it down in McCulloch v. Maryland. Therefore the taxing power may not be used to enforce a regulation of matters of State concern, with respect to which the Congress has no authority to interfere.

Justice STONE. But how is Congress regulating agriculture here?

Justice ROBERTS. Not having the power to regulate agriculture, Congress undertakes to purchase that power by paying benefits to farmers for compliance which Congress is powerless to command. Congress has no power to enforce its commands on the farmer to the ends sought by the Agricultural Adjustment Act. It must follow that it may not indirectly accomplish those ends by taxing and spending to purchase compliance.

Justice STONE. But the farmer is placed under no legal compulsion to reduce acreage.

Justice ROBERTS. That's what the Government contends, that its end is accomplished by voluntary cooperation. But it is not in fact voluntary. The farmer, of course, may refuse to comply, but the price of refusal is the loss of benefits. The amount offered is intended to be sufficient to exert pressure on him to agree to the proposed regulation.

Justice STONE. But it is threat of loss, not hope of gain, which is the essence of economic coercion.

Justice ROBERTS. The power to confer or withhold unlimited benefits is the power to coerce or destroy. If the cotton grower elects not to accept the benefits, he will receive less for his crops. Those who receive payments may be able to undersell him. The result may well be financial ruin.

Justice STONE. There is nothing to indicate that those who accepted benefits were impelled by fear of lower prices. After all, look at what actually happened. Fourteen percent of all acreage of cotton land—6,343,000 acres—refused to participate the first year and 6 percent the second. One-third of all the cotton farms in 1934 and 13 percent in 1935 did not participate.

Justice ROBERTS. The coercive purpose of the A. A. A. is not obscured by the fact that it is not perfectly successful.

Justice STONE. Well, the suggestion of coercion finds no support in the record or in the data showing the actual operation of the act. The presumption of constitutionality is not to be overturned by an assertion of its coercive effect which rests on nothing more substantial than groundless speculation.

The Constitution requires that public funds shall be spent for a defined purpose—the promotion of the general welfare. Their expenditure usually involves payment on terms which will ensure use by the recipients within the limits of the constitutional purpose. Expenditures would fail of their purpose and thus lose their constitutional sanction if the terms of payment were not such that by their influence on the action of the recipients the permitted end would be attained.

A SPECTATOR. Whoa there, Mr. Justice! Let me see if I get that. To achieve the general welfare the funds raised must be paid out by the Government to individuals, and those individuals must use the money for the purpose intended by Congress. Unless the money is spent for that purpose, the constitutional objective—the general welfare—will not be attained. Hence payments are usually made upon condition that they will be used as intended or they will lose their constitutional sanction. Therefore, payments are usually conditional.

Justice STONE. Quite right. Thank you for the translation.

Justice ROBERTS. Of course, I know it is contended that much of the total expenditure by Congress is made by appropriating money to executive officers to be spent under contracts between the Government and the individuals. But appropriation and expenditures under contracts for proper governmental purposes cannot justify contracts which are not within the Federal power.

A SPECTATOR. Pardon me, Mr. Justice Roberts. Do I understand your contention to be this: That Congress may tax and spend on declared purposes for the general welfare? And that these purposes may not be within the powers of the Federal Government under any of its special grants of power? But that if conditions are annexed to the payments of money, they must be for performance in a field over which Congress has control?

Justice ROBERTS. Precisely. And contracts for the reduction of acreage and the control of production are outside the range of that power. The Congress cannot invade State jurisdiction to compel individual action; no more can it purchase such action.

Justice STONE. Mere annexing of a condition to a payment of money by the Government cannot be called usurping regulation. The power of Congress to spend is inseparable from persuasion to action over which Congress has no control. Congress may not command that the science of agriculture be taught in the State universities. But if it would aid the teaching of that science by grants to State institutions, it is appropriate, if not necessary, that the grant be on the condition, incorporated in the Morrill Act (12 Stat. 593), that it be used for the purpose intended.

"Let the end be legitimate," said the great Chief Justice Marshall. "Let it be within the scope of the Constitution and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited but consistent with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional." This cardinal guide to constitutional exposition must now be rephrased so far as the spending power of the Federal Government is concerned.

Let the expenditure be to promote the general welfare still, if it is needful in order to insure its use for the intended purpose to influence any action which Congress cannot command because within the sphere of State government, the expenditure is unconstitutional.

Congress through the Interstate Commerce Commission has set aside intrastate railroad rates. It has made and destroyed intrastate industries by raising or lowering tariffs. These results are said to be permissible because they are incidents of the commerce power and the power to levy duties on imports. The only conclusion to be drawn is that results become lawful when incident to the similarly granted power to tax and spend.

The limitation now sanctioned must lead to absurd consequences. The Government may give seeds to farmers, but may not condition the gift upon their being planted in places where they are most needed, or even planted at all.

The Government may give money to the unemployed, but may not ask that those who get shall give labor in return, or even use it to support their families. It may give money to sufferers from earthquake, fire, tornado, pestilence, or flood, but may not impose conditions—health precautions designed to prevent the spread of disease or induce the movement of population to safer or more sanitary areas.

The Government may spend its money for vocational rehabilitation, but it may not, with the consent of all concerned, supervise the process which it undertakes to aid. It may spend its money for the suppression of the boll weevil, but may not compensate the farmers for suspending the growth of cotton in the infected areas.

It may support rural schools, but may not condition its grant by the requirement that certain standards be maintained. It may appropriate moneys to be expended by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation "to aid in financing agriculture, commerce, and industry" and to facilitate "the exportation of agriculture and other products."

Do all its activities collapse because, in order to effect the permissible purpose, in myriad ways the money is paid out upon terms and conditions which influence action of the recipients within the State, which Congress cannot command? The answer would seem plain. If the expenditure is for a national public purpose, that purpose will not be thwarted because payment is on condition which will advance that purpose.

Justice ROBERTS. We are referred to numerous types of Federal appropriations which have been made in the past and it is asserted no question has been raised to their validity. We need not stop to examine or consider them. As was said in Massachusetts v. Mellon, "as an examination of the acts of Congress will disclose, a large number of statutes appropriating or involving the expenditure of moneys for Federal purposes have been enacted and carried into effect." As the opinion points out, such expenditures have not been challenged because no remedy was open for testing their constitutionality in the courts.

But we are not here concerned with conditional appropriations. * * * By the A. A. A. the amount of the tax is expended only in payment under contracts whereby the parties bind themselves to regulation by the Federal Government. There is an obvious difference between a statute stating the conditions upon which moneys shall be expended and one expended only upon assumption of a contractual obligation to submit to a regulation which otherwise could not be enforced.

Justice STONE. The action which Congress induces by payments of money to promote the general welfare, but which it does not command or coerce, is but an incident to a specifically granted power, but a permissible means to a legitimate end. If appropriation in aid of a program of curtailment of agricultural production is constitutional, and it is not denied that it is, payment to farmers on condition that they reduce their crop acreage is constitutional. It is not any the less so because the farmer at his own option promises to fulfill the condition.

Justice ROBERTS. If the act before us is a proper exercise of the taxing power, then the regulation of all industry throughout the United States may be accomplished by similar exercises of the same power.

A possible result of sustaining the claimed Federal power would be that every business group which thought itself underprivileged might demand that a tax be laid on its vendors or vendees, the proceeds to be appropriated to the redress of its deficiency of income.

The expressions of the framers of the Constitution and the great commentators will be searched in vain for any suggestion that there exists in the Constitution the authority whereby every fair implication from that instrument may be subverted, the independence of the individual States obliterated, and the United States converted into a central government exercising uncontrolled police power, superseding all local control or regulation of the affairs of the States.

Justice STONE. That argument—that the power of Congress must be curtailed by judicial fiat because it may be abused by unwise use—hardly rises to the dignity of an argument. [Looking fixedly at Mr. Justice Roberts.] So may judicial power be abused.

Justice ROBERTS. Strange, it seems never to have occurred to the framers of the Constitution that the general welfare of the United States (which has aptly been termed an indestructible union of indestructible states) might be served by obliterating the constituent members of the Union.

Justice STONE. A tortured construction is not to be justified by recourse to extreme examples of reckless congressional spending which might occur if courts could not prevent expenditures which, even if they could be thought to effect any national purpose, would be possible only by action of a legislature lost to all sense of public responsibility. Such suppositions must leave unmoved any but the mind accustomed to believe that it is the business of courts to sit in judgment on the wisdom of legislative action.

Courts are not the only agency of government that must be assumed to have capacity to govern. Congress and the courts both unhappily may falter or be mistaken in the performance of their constitutional duty. But interpretation of our great charter of government which proceeds on any assumption that the responsibility for the preservation of our institutions is the exclusive concern of any one of the three branches of the Government, or that it alone can save them from destruction, is far more likely, in the long run, "to obliterate the constituent members" of "an indestructible union of indestructible States" than the frank recognition that language even of a Constitution may mean what it says: That the power to tax and spend includes the power to relieve a Nation-wide economic maladjustment by conditional gifts of money.

JOHN T. FLYNN.

OLD DEAL AGAINST NEW DEAL

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a comparative statement published in the Philadelphia Record under date of January 21, 1936, having relation to labor, agriculture, industry, commerce, securities, and public utilities in certain periods embraced in what are known as the Old Deal and the New Deal.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Record of Jan. 21, 1936]

Last 3 years of the Old Deal compared with first 3 years of the New Deal

OLD DEAL					NEW DEAL
					Labor
Unemployment	Apr.	1, 1930	3,188,000		Unemployment	Apr.	1, 1933	13,178,000
	Apr.	1, 1933	13,178,000	Advance 313%		Dec.	1, 1935	9,177,000	Decline 30%
					Agriculture
Cotton	Mar.	1, 1930	15.10 cents per pound		Cotton	Mar.	1, 1933	5.90 cents per pound
	Mar.	1, 1933	5.90 cents per pound	Decline 61%		Jan.	1, 1936	11.35 cents per pound	Advance 92%
Wheat	Mar.	1, 1930	$1.16 per bushel		Wheat	Mar.	1, 1933	48 cents per bushel
	Mar.	1, 1933	48 cents per bushel	Decline 59%		Jan.	1, 1936	101.5 cents per bushel	Advance 111%
Corn	Mar.	1, 1930	68.40 cents per bushel		Corn	Mar.	1, 1933	24.12 cents per bushel
	Mar.	1, 1933	24.12 cents per bushel	Decline 73%		Jan.	1, 1936	60.87 cents per bushel	Advance 152%
					Industry
Industrial production	Jan.	1, 1930	110.4		Industrial production	Jan.	1, 1933	61.4
(Index: 1926=100%)	Jan.	1, 1933	61.4	Decline 44%	(Index: 1926=100%)	Jan.	1, 1936	92.9	Advance 51%
Steel production	Jan.	1, 1930	2,903,012 gross tons		Steel production	Jan.	1, 1933	861,034 gross tons
(Month ending)	Jan.	1, 1933	861,034 gross tons	Decline 70%	(Month ending)	Jan.	1, 1936	3,081,000 gross tons	Advance 257%
Auto registration	Jan.	1, 1930	161,830 units		Auto registration	Jan.	1, 1933	55,105 units
(Month ending)	Jan.	1, 1933	55,105 units	Decline 66%	(Month ending)	Jan.	1, 1936	235,000 units	Advance 326%
					Commerce
Wholesale prices	Jan.	1, 1930	92.5		Wholesale prices	Jan.	1, 1933	61.0
(Index: 1926=100%)	Jan.	1, 1933	61.0	Decline 34%	(Index: 1926=100%)	Jan.	1, 1936	81.0	Advance 33%
Total exports	Jan.	1, 1930	$3,843,000,000		Total exports	Jan.	1, 1933	$1,675,000,000
(Year ending)	Jan.	1, 1933	$1,675,000,000	Decline 56%	(Year ending)	Dec.	1, 1935	$2,228,000,000	Advance 33%
Total imports	Jan.	1, 1930	$3,061,000,000		Total imports	Jan.	1, 1933	$1,450,000,000
(Year ending)	Jan.	1, 1933	$1,450,000,000	Decline 52%	(Year ending)	Dec.	1, 1935	$1,993,000,000	Advance 37%
					Securities
Listed stocks	Mar.	1, 1930	60.52		Listed stocks	Mar.	1, 1933	15.20
(Average)	Mar.	1, 1933	15.20	Decline 75%	(Average)	Jan.	1, 1936	35.62	Advance 134%
Listed bonds	Mar.	1, 1930	96.19		Listed bonds	Mar.	1, 1933	74.89
(Average)	Mar.	1, 1933	74.89	Decline 22%	(Average)	Jan.	1, 1936	91.55	Advance 22%
					Public utilities
Power production (Month ended)	Jan.	1, 1930	7.87 billion kilowatt-hours		Power production (Month ended)	Jan.	1, 1933	7.14 billion kilowatt-hours
Power production (Month ended)	Jan.	1, 1933	7.14 billion kilowatt-hours	Decline 9%	Power production (Month ended)	Jan.	1, 1936	8.50 billion kilowatt-hours	Advance 19%

To eliminate seasonal differences where they are a factor, the corresponding months in calendar years are used

TARIFF RATES UNDER RECIPROCAL TRADE TREATIES

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement giving a comparison of the rates in effect under the previous tariffs with those in effect under the various reciprocal-trade agreements entered into by the United States with other nations.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SCHEDULE 1. CHEMICALS, OILS, AND PAINTS

Paragraph	Article	Rates of duty: Old rate	Rates of duty: New rate	Country
1	Acetic acid containing by weight more than 65 percent acetic acid	2 cents per pound	1¼ cents per pound	Canada.
2	Vinyl acetate and synthetic resins made in chief value therefrom	6 cents per pound+30 per cent.	3 cents per pound+15 per cent.	Do.
4	Amyl alcohol	6 cents per pound	4 cents per pound	Netherlands.
4	Fusel oil	do	do	Do.
5	Laundry sour	25 percent	15 percent	Do.
5	Ammonium silicofluoride	do	do	Do.
5, 23	Haarlem oil	do	do	Do.
6	Aluminum sulphate	0.2 cent or 0.375 cent per pound.	0.2 cent per pound	Belgium.
10	Copaiba balsam, natural and uncompounded, and not containing alcohol (ad valorem).	10 percent	5 percent	Brazil.
10	Tolu balsam, natural and uncompounded, and not containing alcohol (ad valorem).	do	do	Colombia.
10	Balsams, not specially provided for, natural and uncompounded, and not containing alcohol.	do	5 percent ad valorem	Honduras.
15	Caffeine	$1.25 per pound	90 cents per pound	Netherlands.
15	Theobromine	75 cents per pound	65 cents per pound	Do.
20	Chalk or whiting or paris white:
	Dry, ground, or bolted	0.4 cent per pound	0.2 cent per pound
	Ground in oil (putty)	0.75 cent per pound	0.5 cent per pound	Belgium.
24	Flavoring extracts containing more than 50 percent alcohol	80 cents per pound+25 per cent.	60 cents per pound+18 per cent.	Netherlands.
24	Flavoring extracts, and natural or synthetic fruit flavors, fruit esters, oils, and essences, all the foregoing and their combinations, containing more than 20 percent and not more than 50 percent of alcohol.	40 cents per pound and 25 percent ad valorem.	30 cents per pound and 18 percent ad valorem.	Belgium.
27	Naphthalene which after the removal of all water present has a solidifying point of 79° C. or above.	7 cents per pound and 40 percent ad valorem.	3.5 cents per pound and 20 percent ad valorem.	Do.
29	Cobalt oxide	20 cents per pound	10 cents per pound	Canada.
29	Cobalt sulphate	10 cents per pound	5 cents per pound	Belgium.
32	Vulcanized fiber	30 per cent ad valorem	20 percent ad valorem	Sweden.
35	Ipecac natural and uncompounded, but advanced in value or condition by shredding, grinding, chipping, crushing, or any other process or treatment whatever beyond that essential to proper packing and the prevention of decay or deterioration pending manufacture, not containing alcohol.	10 percent ad valorem	5 percent ad valorem	Brazil.
35	Ipecac, natural and uncompounded, but advanced in value or condition by shredding, grinding, chipping, crushing, or any other process or treatment whatever beyond that essential to proper packing and the prevention of decay or deterioration pending manufacture, and not containing alcohol.	10 percent ad valorem	5 percent ad valorem	Colombia.
35	Maté, natural and uncompounded, but advanced in value or condition by shredding, grinding, chipping, crushing, or any other process or treatment whatever beyond that essential to proper packing and the prevention of decay or deterioration pending manufacture, not containing alcohol.	do	do	Brazil.
37	Amyl acetate	7 cents per pound	4 cents per pound	Netherlands.
41	Edible gelatin valued under 40 cents per pound	5 cents per pound+12 per cent.	2½ cents per pound+12 per cent.	Do.
42	Glycerin, crude	$0.008 per pound	$0.004 per pound	Cuba.
42	Refined glycerin (⅜ cent per pound differential over 1-cent rate on crude glycerin guaranteed).	2 cents per pound	1½ cents per pound	Netherlands.
52	Sperm oil, crude	5 cents per gallon [1]	2½ cents per gallon	Canada.
58	Distilled or essential grapefruit oil	20 percent	10 percent ad valorem	Cuba.
58	Cajeput oil	25 percent	12½ percent	Netherlands.
71	Acetylene black	20 percent	15 percent	Canada.
72	Lead pigments: White lead	2.5 cents per pound	2.1 cents per pound	Belgium
77	Lithopone containing less than 30 percent of zinc sulphide	1¾ cents per pound	1½ cents per pound	Netherlands.
81	Sodium phosphate (except pyro phosphate):
	Containing by weight less than 45 percent of water	1.5 cents per pound	1 cent per pound	Belgium.
	Not specially provided for	0.75 cent per pound	0.5 cent per pound	Do.
83	Potato starch	2½ cents per pound	1¾ cents per pound	Netherlands.
84	Dextrine made from potato starch or potato flour	3 cents per pound	2¼ cents per pound	Do.

SCHEDULE 2. EARTHS, EARTHENWARE, AND GLASSWARE

201 (a)	Firebrick, not specially provided for	25 percent	15 percent	Canada.
202 a)	Cement floor and wall tiles:
	Valued at not more than 40 cents per square foot	$0.08 per square foot, but not less than 40 percent nor more than 56 per cent ad valorem.	$0.04 per square foot, but not less than 20 percent nor more than 28 percent ad valorem.	Cuba.
	Valued at more than 40 cents per square foot	48 per cent ad valorem	24 percent ad valorem	Do.
203	Lime, hydrated	12 cents per 100 pounds	8 cents per 100 pounds	Canada.
203	Lime, not specially provided for	10 cents per 100 pounds	7 cents per 100 pounds	Do.
203	Limestone, not suitable for monumental or building stone, crude	5 cents per 100 pounds	2½ cents per 100 pounds	Do.
205 (b)	Roman, portland, and other hydraulic cement or cement clinker	6 cents per 100 pounds, including weight of container.	4.5 cents per 100 pounds, including weight of container.	Belgium.
207	Feldspar, crude	50 cents per long ton [2]	35 cents per long ton	Canada.
207	Sand containing 95 percent or more of silica and not more than 9/16 of 1 percent of oxide of iron and suitable for use in the manufacture of glass.	$2 per ton	$1 per ton	Belgium.
209	Talc, steatite or soapstone, ground, etc. (except toilet preparations), valued not over $12.50 per long ton.	35 percent	25 percent	Canada.
214	Dead-burned basic refractory material containing 6 percent or more of lime and consisting chiefly of magnesia and lime.	30 percent	27½ percent	Do.
218 (f)	Engraved ornamental glassware valued over $8 per piece	60 percent ad valorem	30 percent ad valorem	Sweden.
220	Laminated glass composed of layers of glass and other material or materials, and manufactures wholly or in chief value of such glass.	do	45 percent ad valorem	Belgium.
222 (a)	Plate glass, by whatever process made: Not exceeding 384 square inches	12.5 cents per square foot	8.3 cents per square foot	Do.
222 (a)	Plate glass, by whatever process made:
	Above that, and not exceeding 720 square inches	17 cents per square foot	11.3 cents per square foot	Do.
	Above that, and not exceeding 1,008 square inches	17.5 cents per square foot	11.7 cents per square foot	Do.
	All above that	19.75 cents per square foot	13.2 cents per square foot	Do.
	Provided, that none of the foregoing measuring one-half inch or over in thickness shall be subject to a less rate of duty than.	50 percent ad valorem	50 percent ad valorem	Do.
222 (b)	Plate glass containing a wire netting within itself:
	Not exceeding 384 square inches	15 cents per square foot	10 cents per square foot	Do.
	Above that, and not exceeding 720 square inches	20 cents per square foot	13.2 cents per square foot	Do.
	All above that	23 cents per square foot	15.3 cents per square foot	Do.

[See footnotes at end of table]

SCHEDULE 2. EARTHS, EARTHENWARE, AND GLASSWARE—continued

Paragraph	Article	Rates of duty		Country
		Old rate	New rate
222 (d)	Rolled, cylinder, crown, and sheet glass, not plate glass, if ground wholly or in part (whether or not polished), otherwise than for the purpose of ornamentation, or if ¼ of 1 inch or more in thickness and obscured by coloring prior to solidification.	Subject to specific duties in 222 (a) or (b) above.	Subject to specific duties in 222 (a) or (b) above.	Do.
	Provided, That none of the foregoing measuring ⅛ inch or more in thickness and not containing a wire netting within itself shall be subject to less than the following rates of duty:
	If ground wholly or in part (whether or not polished) otherwise than for the purpose of ornamentation.	50 percent ad valorem	50 percent ad valorem	Do.
	If not ground wholly or in part	do	40 percent ad valorem	Do.
226	Lighthouse lenses	40 percent ad valorem, 35 percent ad valorem+10 cents per dozen pairs.	25 percent ad valorem, but not less than 17½ percent ad valorem+5 cents per dozen pairs.	Sweden.
231	Opal, enamel or cylinder glass tiles and tiling	40 percent ad valorem	30 percent ad valorem	Belgium.
234 (a)	Granite paving blocks	60 percent ad valorem	40 percent ad valorem	Sweden.
234 (a)	Granite, unmanufactured	25 cents per cubic foot	20 cents per cubic foot	Do.

SCHEDULE 3. METALS AND MANUFACTURES OF

301	Sponge iron	$2.25 per ton	$1.25 per ton	Sweden.
302 (a)	Manganese ore (including ferruginous manganese ore) or concentrates, and manganiferous iron ore, all the foregoing containing in excess of 10 percent of metallic manganese (per pound on the metallic manganese contained therein).	1 cent per pound	½ cent per pound	Brazil.
302 (d)	Ferromanganese, containing not less than 4 percent carbon on manganese content.	1⅞ cents per pound	1⅝ cents per pound [3]	Canada.
302 (i)	Ferrosilicon, containing at least 8 percent but less than 30 percent of silicon.	2 cents per pound on silicon content.	1½ cents per pound silicon content.	Do.
302 (k)	High-carbon ferrochrome	2½ cents per pound on chromium content.	1¼ cents per pound on chromium content.	Sweden.
302 (k)	Low-carbon ferrochrome and chromium metal	30 percent ad valorem	25 percent ad valorem	Do.
302 (m)	Ferrotitanium, ferrovanadium, and ferrouranium	25 percent	15 percent	Canada.
303	Muck bars valued above 2½ cents per pound	0.8 cent, 1.0 cent, and 1.5 cents per pound.	0.5 cent, 0.8 cent, and 1.0 cent per pound.	Sweden.
303	Muck bars, pieces thereof except crop ends, bar iron, and round iron in coils or rods, iron in slabs, blooms, loops, or other forms less finished than iron in bars and more advanced than pig iron, except castings; all the foregoing valued at not above 1½ cents per pound.	0.3 cent per pound	0.25 cent per pound	Belgium.
304	Steel ingots, cogged ingots, blooms and slabs, by whatever process made; billets and bars, whether solid or hollow, weighing more than 30 pounds per linear foot:
	Valued at not above 1½ cents per pound	0.3 cent per pound	0.25 cent per pound	Do.
	Valued above 1½ cents and not above 2½ cents per pound	0.5 cent per pound	0.375 cent per pound	Do.
304	Billets and bars, whether solid or hollow, weighing not more than 30 pounds per linear foot, and concrete reinforcement bars:
	Valued at not above 1½ cents per pound	0.3 cent per pound	0.25 cent per pound	Do.
	Valued above 1½ cents and not above 2½ cents per pound	0.5 cent per pound	0.4 cent per pound	Do.
304	Unfinished steel, steel bars, sheets, and slabs valued 2½–8 cents per pound	0.8, 1.0, and 1.7 cents per pound.	20 percent ad valorem	Sweden.
304	Die blocks or blanks; shafting; pressed, sheared, or stamped shapes, not advanced in value or condition by any process or operation subsequent to the process of stamping; hammer molds or swaged steel; gun-barrel molds not in bars; all descriptions and shapes of dry sand, loam, or iron molded steel castings; sheets and plates and steel not specially provided for; all the foregoing:
	Valued at not above 1½ cents per pound	0.3 cent per pound	0.25 cent per pound	Belgium.
	Valued above 1½ and not above 2½ cents per pound	0.5 cent per pound	0.4 cent per pound	Do.
305 (1)	Alloy steels valued over 3½ and not over 8 cents per pound (supplemental rates on alloy steels in specified paragraphs).	8 percent ad valorem additional duty on total value of alloy steel plus specific rates on alloy contents.	4 percent additional duty on total value of alloy steel plus present specific rates on alloy contents.	Sweden.
307	Boiler or other plate iron or steel, except crucible plate steel and saw plate steel, not thinner than 109/1000ths of 1 inch, cut or sheared to shape or otherwise, or unsheared, and skelp iron or steel sheared or rolled in grooves, valued at not above 3 cents per pound.	0.5 cent per pound	0.35 cent per pound	Belgium.
308	Sheets of iron or steel, common or black, of whatever dimensions, and skelp iron or steel, valued at 3 cents per pound or less:
	Thinner than 109/1000ths and not thinner than 38/1000ths of 1 inch	0.45 cent per pound	0.35 cent per pound	Do.
	Thinner than 38/1000ths and not thinner than 22/1000ths of 1 inch	0.55 cent per pound	0.45 cent per pound	Do.
	Thinner than 22/1000ths and not thinner than 10/1000ths of 1 inch	0.75 cent per pound	0.60 cent per pound	Do.
	Thinner than 10/1000ths of 1 inch	0.85 cent per pound	0.70 cent per pound	Do.
	Corrugated or crimped	0.75 cent per pound	0.60 cent per pound	Do.
312	Beams, girders, joists, angles, channels, car-truck channels, tees, columns and posts, or parts or sections of columns and posts, and deck and bulb beams, together with all other structural shapes of iron or steel; any of the foregoing machined, drilled, punched, assembled, fitted, fabricated for use, or otherwise advanced beyond hammering, rolling, or casting.	20 percent ad valorem	15 percent ad valorem	Do.
314	Hoop or band iron, and hoop or band steel, cut to lengths, or wholly or partly manufactured into hoops or ties, coated or not coated with paint or any other preparation, with or without buckles, or fastenings, for baling cotton or any other commodity.	0.25 cent per pound	0.2 cent per pound	Do.
315	Wire rods: Rivet, screw, fence, and other iron or steel wire rods, whether round, oval, or square, or in any other shape, nail rods and flat rods up to 6 inches in width ready to be drawn or rolled into wire or strips, all the foregoing in coils or otherwise, valued at not over 2½ cents per pound.	0.3 cent per pound	0.25 cent per pound	Do.
315	Wire rods:
	Valued over 2½ and not over 4 cents per pound	0.3 cent per pound	0.3 cent per pound [4]	Sweden.
	Valued over 4 cents per pound	0.6 cent per pound	0.6 cent per pound [4]	Do.
316 (a)	Round wire, valued over 6 cents per pound	25 percent ad valorem	20 percent ad valorem	Do.
316 (a)	Flat wire and steel strips:
	Not exceeding 1/100 inch in thickness	do	15 percent ad valorem	Do.
	From 1/100 to 1/500 inch in thickness	do	20 percent ad valorem	Do.
321	Antifriction ball and roller bearings	10 cents per pound+45 percent ad valorem.	8 cents per pound + 35 percent ad valorem.	Do.
325	Anvils weighing over 5 pounds	3 cents per pound	2 cents per pound	Do.
339	Enameled ware, household utensils	5 cents per pound+30 percent ad valorem.	5 cents per pound + 15 percent ad valorem.	Do.
340	Crosscut, hand, back, and saws not specially provided for, valued over 5 cents each.	20 percent ad valorem	15 percent ad valorem	Do.
340	Mill, pit, drag, and steel band saws	do	12 percent ad valorem	Do.

[See footnotes at end of table]

SCHEDULE 3. METALS AND MANUFACTURES OF—continued

Paragraph	Article	Rates of duty		Country
		Old rate	New rate
353	Electrical cooking stoves and ranges, and parts	35 percent	25 percent	Canada.
353	Electric vacuum cleaners and motors therefor	35 percent ad valorem	35 percent ad valorem [5]	Sweden.
353	Calculating machines operated by electric motor	do	25 percent ad valorem	Do.
353	Electrical X-ray apparatus	35 percent	17½ percent	Netherlands.
354	Pocket knives with etched steel handles valued over $6 per dozen	35 cents each+35 percent ad valorem.	17½ cent seach+27½ percent ad valorem.	Sweden.
256	Machine knives	20 percent ad valorem	20 percent ad valorem [4]	Do.
361	Slip-joint pliers valued over $2 per dozen	60 percent ad valorem	40 percent ad valorem	Do.
361	Pliers other than slip-joint, valued over $2 per dozen	$1.20 per dozen+60 percent ad valorem.	$0.80 per dozen+40 percent ad valorem.	Do.
362	Files 7 inches or over	77½ cents per dozen	45 cents per dozen	Do.
365	Shotguns:
	Valued at not more than $5 each	$1.50 each and 45 percent ad valorem.	75 cents each and 22½ percent ad valorem.	Belgium.
	Valued at more than $5 and not more than $10 each	$4 each and 45 percent ad valorem.	$2 each and 22½ percent ad valorem.	Do.
	Valued at more than $10 and not more than $25 each	$6 each and 45 percent ad valorem.	$3 each and 22½ percent ad valorem.	Do.
	Valued at more than $25 and not more than $50 each	$10 each and 45 percent ad valorem.	$5 each and 22½ percent ad valorem.	Do.
	Valued at more than $50 each	65 percent ad valorem	32½ percent ad valorem	Do.
365	Barrels for shotguns, further advanced in manufacture than rough bored only.	$4 each and 50 percent ad valorem.	$2 each and 25 percent ad valorem.	Do.
365	Stocks for shotguns, wholly or partly manufactured	$5 each and 50 percent ad valorem.	$2.50 each and 25 percent ad valorem.	Do.
365	Parts of shotguns and fittings for shotgun stocks or barrels, finished or unfinished.	50 percent ad valorem	27½ percent ad valorem	Do.
365	Shotguns imported without a lock or locks or other fittings	$10 each and 55 percent ad valorem.	$5 each and 27½ percent ad valorem.	Do.
365	Shotgun barrels, in single tubes, forged, rough bored	10 percent	5 percent ad valorem	Do.
372	Reciprocating gang-saw machines	27½ percent ad valorem	27½ percent ad valorem [5]	Sweden.
372	Calculating machines operated by hand power	do	25 percent ad valorem	Do.
372	Machines for making paper or pulp	do	20 percent ad valorem	Do.
373	Forks, hoes, and rakes, and parts thereof	15 percent ad valorem	15 percent ad valorem [5]	Do.
373	Scythes, sickles, grass hooks and corn knives	30 percent ad valorem	20 percent ad valorem	Do.
397	Kerosene or gasoline compressed-air stoves	45 percent ad valorem	25 percent ad valorem	Do.
397	Stoves, heating and cooking	do	do	Do.
397	Blow torches and incandescent lamps	do	do	Do.

SCHEDULE 4. WOOD AND MANUFACTURES OF

401	Lumber and timber:
	Douglas fir and western hemlock	$1, tax $3	$0.50, tax $1.50	Canada.
	Reduced duty to apply to not more than 250,000 M board feet per calendar year.	Per thousand feet	Per thousand feet
401	Lumber and timber:
	Spruce, pine, eastern hemlock, larch and fir other than Douglas fir	$1, tax $3	$0.50, tax $1.50	Do.
1803 (1) sec. 601 (c) (6), Revenue Act of 1932.	Lumber and timber: Other softwood and hardwood, not specially provided for, if not of balsa or teak.	Tax $3	Tax $1.50	Do.
404 and sec. 601 (c) (6), Revenue Act of 1932.	Mahogany in the form of sawed boards, planks, deals, and all other forms not further manufactured than sawed.	12 percent ad valorem and $2.40 per thousand board measure.	6 percent ad valorem and $1.20 per thousand feet board measure.	Cuba.
412	Ice hockey sticks of wood	33⅓ percent	20 percent
412	Spring clothespins	20 cents per gross ad valorem	15 cents per gross	Sweden.
412	Clothespins other than spring	33⅓ percent ad valorem	25 percent ad valorem	Do.
402	Flooring of maple (except Japanese maple), birch, and beech	8 percent	4 percent	Canada.

SCHEDULE 5. SUGAR, MOLASSES, AND MANUFACTURES OF

501	Sugars, tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, testing by the polariscope not above 75 sugar degrees, and all mixtures containing sugar and water, testing by the polariscope above 50 sugar degrees and not above 75.	$0.010275 per pound	$0.006165* per pound	Cuba.
	For each additional degree or fraction in proportion, shown by the polariscope.	$0.000225 per pound	$0.000135* per pound
	NOTE.—In addition and outside of the scope of the agreement, the United States has allotted to Cuba a quota on dutiable sugar of 1,902,000 short tons during the calendar year 1934.
503	Maple sugar	6 cents per pound [3]	4 cents per pound	Canada.

SCHEDULE 6. TOBACCO AND MANUFACTURES OF

601	Cigar wrapper tobacco:
	Unstemmed	$2.275 per pound
	Not later than June 30, 1936		$1.875 per pound	Netherlands.
	After June 30, 1936		$1.50 per pound	Do.
	Stemmed	$2.925 per pound
	Not later than June 30, 1936		$2.525 per pound	Do.
	After June 30, 1936		$2.15 per pound	Do.
601	Wrapper tobacco and filler tobacco when mixed or packed with more than 35% of wrapper tobacco, if unstemmed.	$1.82 per pound	$1.50* per pound	Cuba.
601	Filler tobacco, not specially provided for:
	If unstemmed	$0.28 per pound	$0.175* per pound	Do.
	If stemmed	$0.40 per pound	$0.25* per pound	Do.
603	Scrap tobacco	$0.28 per pound	$0.175* per pound	Do.
605	Cigars, cigarettes, cheroots of all kinds, and paper cigars and cigarettes, including wrappers.	$3.60 per pound plus 20 percent ad valorem.	$2.25* per pound plus 12½ percent ad valorem.	Do.
	NOTE.—The quota on tobacco and tobacco products of Cuban origin imported into the United States shall not exceed 18 percent of the total quantity of tobacco and tobacco products used in the manufacture of cigars in registered factories of continental United States in the preceding calendar year.

[See footnotes at end of table]

SCHEDULE 7. AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS AND PROVISIONS

Paragraph	Article	Rates of duty		Country
		Old rate	New rate
701	Cattle weighing 700 pounds or more each	3 cents per pound	2 cents per pound	Canada.
701	Calves weighing less than 175 pounds each	2½ cents per pound	1½ cents per pound	Do.
	Reduction to apply annually to no more than ¾ of 1 percent for cattle and ¼ of 1 percent for calves, of the average annual total number of cattle (including calves) slaughtered in the United States during 1928–32.
701	Dairy cows weighing 700 pounds or more each (duty reduced on not over 20,000 head annually).	3 cents per pound	do	Do.
707	Cream, fresh or sour (duty reduced on not over 1,500,000 gallons annually)	56.6 cents per gallon	35 cents per gallon	Do.
710	Cheddar cheese in original loaves	7 cents per pound, minimum 35 percent.	5 cents per pound, minimum 25 percent.	Do.
710	Edam and Gouda cheese	do	do	Netherlands.
711	Live poultry	8 cents per pound	4 cents per pound	Canada.
712	Chickens and guineas, dead	10 cents per pound	6 cents per pound	Do.
714	Horses, valued at not more than $150 per head	$30 per head	$20 per head	Do.
716	Honey	$0.024 per pound	$0.012* per pound	Cuba.
717 (a)	Fish, fresh or frozen (not advanced):
	Halibut	2 cents per pound	1 cent per pound	Canada.
	Salmon	do	1½ cents per pound	Do.
	Swordfish, fresh only	do	do	Do.
	Eels	1 cent per pound	½ cent per pound	Do.
	Lake fish: Chubs, fresh water mullet, jacks, lake trout, sugers, tulli bees, white fish, and yellow pike.	do	¾ cent per pound	Do.
717(a)	Nonspecified fish, fresh or frozen	$0.008 per pound	$0.004* per pound	Cuba.
717(b)	Fish, fresh or frozen, filleted, skinned, boned, sliced, or divided into portions, not specifically provided for.	$0.02 per pound	$0.01* per pound	Do.
719	Fish, pickled or salted:
	(1) Salmon	25 percent	20 percent	Canada.
	(5) Alewives (bulk)	1¼ cents per pound	¾ cent per pound	Do.
719 (4)	Holland herring	1 cent per pound	¾ cent per pound (net wt.)	Netherlands.
720 (a)	Smoked herring:
	(2) Hard dry-smoked, whole or beheaded but not further advanced	1¼ cents per pound	⅝ cent per pound	Canada.
	(3) Boned, whether or not skinned	3 cents per pound	1½ cents per pound	Do.
721 (b)	Razor clams, canned	23 percent [3]	15 percent	Do.
722	Pearl barley	2 cents per pound	1 cent per pound	Netherlands.
724	Corn or maize, including cracked corn	$0.20 per bushel of 56 pounds	$0.10* per bushel of 56 pounds.	Cuba.
726	Hulled oats, unfit for human consumption	16 cents per bushel (32 pounds).	8 cents per bushel (32 pounds)	Canada.
727	Broken rice	⅝ cent per pound	5/16 cent per pound	Netherlands.
729	Wheat, unfit for human consumption	10 percent	10 percent [4]	Canada.
730	Byproduct feeds and mixed feeds dutiable at 10 percent	do	do.[4]	Do.
731	Screenings, scalpings, etc., of grains and seeds	do	do.[4]	Do.
732	Cereal breakfast foods	20 percent	15 percent	Do.
734	Apples, green or ripe	25 cents per bushel (50 pounds).	15 cents per bushel (50 pounds).	Do.
736	Fresh strawberries	1¼ cents per pound	¾ cent per pound	Do.
736	Blueberries, prepared or preserved or frozen	35 percent	25 percent	Do.
737	Cherries in their natural state	2 cents per pound	1 cent per pound	Do.
742	Hothouse grapes in bulk, crates, barrels, or other packages	25 cents per cubic foot of such bulk or the capacity of the packages according as imported.	25 cents per cubic foot of such bulk or the capacity of the packages according as imported.	Belgium.
743	Limes	$0.016 per pound	$0.008* per pound	Cuba.
743	Grapefruit, imported and entered for consumption from Aug. 1 to Sept. 30, inclusive.	$0.012 per pound	$0.006* per pound	Do.
747	Pineapples:
	In crates	0.50 per crate of 2.45 cubic feet.	0.35 per crate of 2.45 cubic feet.	Honduras.
	In bulk	1¼ cent each	0.009 each	Do.
747	Pineapples:
	In crates		0.35 per crate of 2.45 cubic feet.	Haiti.
	In bulk		0.009 each	Do.
747	Pineapples:
	In crates	$0.40 per crate of 2.45 cubic feet.	$0.20* per crate of 2.45 cubic feet.	Cuba.
	In bulk	$0.00½ each	$0.005* each	Do.
	Candied, crystalized, or glace	28 percent ad valorem	14 percent* ad valorem	Do.
	Otherwise prepared or preserved	$0.016 per pound	$0.008* per pound	Do.
751	All jellies, jams, marmalades (except orange marmalade), and fruit butters	28 percent ad valorem	14* percent ad valorem	Do.
752	Guavas prepared or preserved, and not specially provided for		17½ percent ad valorem	Haiti.
752	do	35 percent ad valorem	do	Honduras.
752	Mango pastes and pulps and guava pastes and pulps	28 percent ad valorem	14* percent ad valorem	Cuba.
752	do		28 percent ad valorem	Haiti.
752	do	35 percent ad valorem	28 percent ad valorem	Honduras.
753	Flower bulbs:
	Tulips	$6 per thousand	$3 per thousand
	Narcissus	do	$6 per thousand
	Crocus corms	$2 per thousand	$1 per thousand
	All other bulbs, not specially provided for	30 percent	15 percent	Netherlands.
754	Seedlings and cuttings of rose stock	$2 per thousand	$1 per thousand	Do.
757	Cream or Brazil nuts:
	Not shelled	1½ cents per pound	¾ cent pound
	Shelled	4½ cents per pound	2¼ cents per pound	Brazil.
762	Castor beans	½ cent per pound	¼ cent per pound	Do.
762	do	do	do	Colombia.
762	Poppy seed	32 cents per 100 pounds	16 cents per 100 pounds	Netherlands.
763	Grass and clover seeds:
	Alfalfa	8 cents per pound	4 cents per pound
	Alsike clover	do	do
	Sweet clover	4 cents per pound	2 cents per pound
	Timothy	2 cents per pound	1 cent per pound
	Bluegrass	5 cents per pound	2½ cents per pound	Canada.
764	Garden and field seeds:
	Beet (except sugar beet)	4 cents per pound	3 cents per pound
	Cabbage	12 cents per pound	6 cents per pound
	Carrot	4 cents per pound	3 cents per pound
	Kale	6 cents per pound	do
	Mangelwurzel	4 cents per pound	2 cents per pound
	Radish	6 cents per pound	3 cents per pound
	Spinach	1 cent per pound	½ cent per pound

[See footnotes at end of table]

SCHEDULE 7. AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS AND PROVISIONS—continued

Paragraph	Article	Rates of duty: Old rate	Rates of duty: New rate	Country
764	Garden and field seeds—Continued.
	Turnip	5 cents per pound	4 cents per pound
	Rutabaga	do	do
	Flower	6 cents per pound	3 cents per pound
	All others, not specially provided for	do	do	Netherlands.
765	Lima beans, green or unripe, imported and entered for consumption from Dec. 1 to the following May 31, inclusive.	$0.028 per pound	$0.014* per pound	Cuba.
769	Peas, green: Duty reduced only from July 1 to Sept. 30	3.9 cents per pound [1]	2 cents per pound	Canada.
769	Split peas	2½ cents per pound	1¼ cents per pound	Netherlands.
769	Peas, prepared or preserved in any manner, valued at 10 cents or more per pound.	2 cents per pound on entire contents of container.	1.5 cents per pound on entire contents of container.	Belgium.
771	White or Irish seed potatoes Duty reduced on not over 750,000 bushels per 12-month period beginning Dec. 1.	75 cents per 100 pounds	45 cents per 100 pounds (60 cents Dec. 1 through February).	Canada.
771	White or Irish potatoes, imported or entered for consumption from Dec. 1 to the last day of the following February, inclusive.	$0.60 per 100 pounds	$0.30* per 100 pounds	Cuba.
772	Tomatoes in their natural state, imported and entered for consumption from Dec. 1 to the last day of the following February, inclusive.	$0.024 per pound	$0.018* per pound	Do.
773	Turnips and rutabagas	25 cents per 100 pounds	12½ cents per 100 pounds	Canada.
774	Cucumbers, imported and entered for consumption from Dec. 1 to the last day of the following February, inclusive.	$0.024 per pound	$0.012* per pound	Cuba.
774	Eggplant, imported and entered for consumption from Dec. 1 to the following Mar. 31, inclusive.	$0.012 per pound	$0.006* per pound	Do.
774	Okra, imported and entered for consumption from Dec. 1 to the following May 31, inclusive.	40 percent ad valorem	20 percent* ad valorem	Do.
774	Peppers in their natural state imported and entered for consumption during the period from Jan. 1 to Apr. 30, inclusive.	$0.02 per pound	$0.015* per pound	Do.
774	Squash in its natural state imported and entered for consumption from Dec. 1 to the following May 31, inclusive.	$0.016 per pound	$0.012* per pound	Do.
774	Cabbage	2 cents per pound	1½ cents per pound	Netherlands.
774	Endives in their natural state	50 percent ad valorem	35 percent ad valorem	Belgium.
775	Sauerkraut	50 percent	25 percent	Netherlands.
775	Onions, pickled in brine	35 percent	do	Do.
776	Chicory, crude	2 cents per pound	1.5 cents per pound	Belgium.
776	Prepared chicory	4 cents per pound	3 cents per pound	Netherlands.
777	Cocoa and chocolate:
(a)	Unsweetened:
(b)	Cocoa	3 cents per pound	1½ cents per pound
	Chocolate	do	do
	Sweetened:
	Chocolate, in bars of 10 pounds or more	4 cents per pound	2 cents per pound
	In other forms, 10 cents or more per pound	40 percent	20 percent	Do.
777 (c)	Cocoa butter	25 percent	12½ percent	Do.
779	Hay	$5 short ton	$3 short ton	Canada.

SCHEDULE 8. SPIRITS, WINES, AND OTHER BEVERAGES

802	Whisky (aged not less than 4 years in wood containers)	$5 per proof gallon	$2.50 per proof gallon	Canada.
802	Rum in containers holding each 1 gallon or less		do	Haiti.
802	Rum in bottles, each containing 1 gallon or less	$4 per proof gallon	$2.50* per proof gallon	Cuba.
802	Gin	$5 per proof gallon	$2.50 per proof gallon	Netherlands.
807	Pineapples prepared or preserved in any manner containing ½ of 1 percent or more alcohol.	$4.00 per proof gallon	$2.50* per proof gallon on the alcohol contained therein in addition to any other duty.	Cuba.

SCHEDULE 9. COTTON MANUFACTURES

907	Waterproof cloth, wholly or in chief value of cotton or other vegetable fiber, whether or not in part of India rubber.	40 percent ad valorem	30 percent ad valorem	Belgium.
912	Garment labels	50 percent	25 percent	Netherlands.
921	Imitation oriental rugs, wholly or in chief value of cotton	35 percent ad valorem	20 percent ad valorem	Belgium.

SCHEDULE 10. FLAX, HEMP, AND JUTE, AND MANUFACTURES OF

1001	Flax, not hackled, valued at $340 or more per ton	1.5 cents per pound	1 cent per pound	Belgium.
1005 (a)	Sisal cordage, ¾ inch and larger in diameter	2 cents per pound	1 cent per pound	Netherlands.
1005 (a)	Sisal cordage, less than ¾ inch in diameter	2 cents per pound+15 percent.	1 cent per pound+7½ percent.	Do.
1005 (a)	Cordage, including cables, tarred or untarred, composed of 3 or more strands, each strand composed of 2 or more yarns, wholly or in chief value of sunn, or other bast fiber, but not including cordage made of jute.	2 cents per pound	1.5 cents per pound	Belgium.
1005 (b)	Cords and twines of manila, sisal, henequen, or other hard fibers	40 percent	20 percent	Netherlands.
1009 (b)	Woven fabrics, such as are commonly used for paddings or interlinings in clothing, wholly or in chief value of flax, or hemp, or of which these substances or either of them is the component material of chief value, exceeding 30 and not exceeding 120 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, and weighing not less than 4½ and not more than 12 ounces per square yard.	55 percent ad valorem	40 percent ad valorem	Belgium.
1009 (c)	Woven fabrics, in the piece or otherwise, wholly or in chief value of vegetable fiber, except cotton, filled, coated, or otherwise prepared for use as artists' canvas.	45 percent ad valorem	30 percent ad valorem	Do.
1010	Woven fabrics, not including articles finished or unfinished, of flax, hemp, ramie, or other vegetable fiber, except cotton, or of which these substances or any of them is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for.	40 percent ad valorem	do	Do.
1012	Pile fabrics of vegetable fiber other than cotton, pile partly cut	50 percent	30 percent	Netherlands.

SCHEDULE 11. WOOL AND MANUFACTURES OF

1109 (a)	Woven green billiard cloths, in the piece, weighing more than 11 ounces but not more than 15 ounces per square yard, wholly of wool.	50 cents per pound and 50, 55, or 60 percent ad valorem.	50 cents per pound and 40 percent ad valorem.	Belgium.
1109 (b)	Wool felt	50 cents per pound +50, 55, or 60 percent ad valorem, depending on value.	50 cents per pound +25, 27½, or 30 percent ad valorem, depending on value.	Sweden.

[See footnotes at end of table]

SCHEDULE 14. PAPERS AND BOOKS

Paragraph	Article	Rates of duty: Old rate	Rates of duty: New rate	Country
1402	Paperboard and wallboard not processed	10 percent ad valorem	10 percent ad valorem [4]	Sweden.
1402	Pulpboard in rolls for wallboard, not processed	10 percent	5 percent	Canada.
1405	Vegetable parchment paper by whatever name known	3 cents per pound and 15 percent ad valorem.	2 cents per pound and 10 percent ad valorem.	Belgium.
1406	Sensitized paper, to be used in photography	30 percent ad valorem	22½ percent ad valorem	Do.
	Transparencies, printed lithographically or otherwise:
	In not more than 5 printings (bronze printing to be counted as 2 printings).	40 percent ad valorem	30 percent ad valorem	Do.
	In more than 5 printings (bronze printing to be counted as 2 printings)	50 percent ad valorem	37½ percent ad valorem	Do.
1410	Unbound prayer books, bound prayer books except those bound wholly or in part in leather, and sheets or printed pages of prayer books bound wholly or in part in leather, all the foregoing not specially provided for, if of bona fide foreign authorship.	15 percent ad valorem	7½ percent ad valorem	Do.
	All other prayer books, not specially provided for	25 percent ad valorem	12½ percent ad valorem	Do.
1404	Provided that none of the foregoing composed in chief value of india paper or bible paper shall be subjected by virtue of the first proviso of par. 1404 to a higher rate of duty than—	4 cents per pound and 15 percent ad valorem to 6 cents per pound and 20 percent ad valorem.	3 cents per pound and 10 percent ad valorem.	Do.
1407 (a)	Bristol board over 15 cents per pound and weighing 8 pounds or over per ream.	3 cents per pound plus 15 percent.	2 cents per pound plus 10 percent.	Netherlands.
1409	Strawboard and straw paper from 8/1000 to 12/1000 inch in thickness	30 percent	15 percent	Netherlands.
1409	Wrapping paper	30 percent ad valorem	25 percent ad valorem	Sweden.
1413	Ribbon fly catchers or fly ribbons in chief value of paper	35 percent ad valorem	27½ percent ad valorem	Belgium.
1413	Pulpboard in rolls for wallboard, surface stained or dyed, lined or vat-lined, embossed or printed.	$14.50 [3] short ton, minimum 15 percent, maximum 30 percent.	15 percent	Canada.
1413	Paperboard, processed	30 percent ad valorem	$14.50 ton, but not less than 15 percent.	Sweden.

SCHEDULE 15. SUNDRIES

1501 (c)	Asbestos shingles and articles in part of asbestos, if containing hydraulic cement or hydraulic cement and other material:
	If not coated, impregnated, decorated, or colored, in any manner	0.75 cent per pound	0.60 cent per pound	Belgium.
	If coated, impregnated, decorated, or colored, in any manner	1 cent per pound	0.75 cent per pound	Do.
1502	Lacrosse sticks	30 percent	15 percent	Canada.
1502	Ice skates and parts	20 percent	do	Do.
1504	Harvest hats valued at less than $3 per dozen	25 percent	12½ percent	Netherlands.
1516	Matches in small boxes (plain stems)	20 cents per gross boxes	17½ cents per gross boxes	Sweden.
1520	Hatters' furs, or furs not on the skin, prepared for hatters' use, including fur skins carroted.	35 percent ad valorem	27½ percent ad valorem	Belgium.
1525	Hair felt, made wholly or in chief value of animal hair, and manufactures of hair felt, all the foregoing not specially provided for.	25 percent or 35 percent ad valorem.	20 percent ad valorem	Do.
1529 (a)	Laces, lace fabrics, and lace articles, if exceeding 2 inches in width and made wholly by hand without the use of any machine-made material or article provided for in par. 1529 (a); articles made wholly of any of the foregoing; and articles, not wearing apparel, in part of any of the foregoing and containing no machine-made material or article provided for in par. 1529 (a); all the foregoing, finished or unfinished, however, described and provided for in par. 1529 (a):
	Valued at more than $50 and less than $150 per pound	90 percent ad valorem	60 percent ad valorem	Do.
	Valued at $150 or more per pound	do	45 percent ad valorem	Do.
1530 (b):
(3)	Harness or saddlery leather (bovine)	12½ percent	10 percent	Canada.
(4)	Patent leather (bovine)	15 percent	do	Do.
1541 (a)	Pipe organs (church) and parts thereof	40 percent or 35 percent [1]	25 percent	Do.
1543	Sponges commercially known as velvet	20 percent ad valorem	12 percent[4] ad valorem	Cuba.
1545	Nonspecified sponges	12 percent	6 percent[4]	Do.
1551	Photographic dry plates, not specially provided for	20 percent ad valorem	15 percent ad valorem	Belgium.
1551	Photographic films, sensitized but not exposed or developed, of every kind except motion-picture films having a width of 1 inch or more.	25 percent ad valorem	12½ percent ad valorem	Do.
1551	Motion-picture films, sensitized but not exposed or developed, having a width of 1 inch or more.	0.4 cent per linear foot	0.2 cent per linear foot of the standard width of 1⅜ inches, and all other widths of 1 inch or more shall be subject to duty in equal proportion thereto.	Do.
1552	Tobacco pipes with clay bowls and stems of material other than clay	5 cents each plus 60 percent	2½ cents each plus 30 percent.	Netherlands.

[1] Margin of preference to Cuba.
[3] Presidential proclamation.
[3] Duty to be 1¼ times duty on manganese ore plus ¾ cent; at present rate on manganese ore this amounts to 1⅝ cents.
[4] Bound against increase.

"FREE" ITEMS—RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS

Par.	Articles	Country
1601	Sulphuric acid or oil of vitriol	Canada.
1602	Maté, natural and uncompounded and in a crude state, not advanced in value or condition by shredding, grinding, chipping, crushing, or any other process or treatment whatever beyond that essential to proper packing and the prevention of decay or deterioration pending manufacture, not containing alcohol.	Brazil.
1602	Root of ipecac, crude, natural and uncompounded, not advanced in value or condition by shredding, grinding, chipping, crushing, or any other process or treatment whatever beyond that essential to proper packing and the prevention of decay or deterioration pending manufacture, and not containing alcohol.	Colombia.
1602	Ipecac, natural and uncompounded and in a crude state, not advanced in value or condition by shredding, grinding, chipping, crushing, or any other process or treatment whatever beyond that essential to proper packing and the prevention of decay or deterioration pending manufacture, not containing alcohol.	Brazil.
1602	Aloes, crude	Netherlands.
1604	Agricultural implements: Plows, tooth or disk harrows, headers, harvesters, reapers, combination harvesting and threshing machines, agricultural drills and planters, mowers, horserakes, and cultivators, whether in whole or in parts, including repair parts.	Canada.
1606 (a) and (b).	Horses (subject to the provisions of par. 1616 (a) and (b))	Belgium.
1609	Gambier	Netherlands.
1616	Asbestos, unmanufactured, asbestos crudes, fibers, stucco, and sand, and refuse containing not more than 15 percent of foreign matter	Canada.
1618	Bananas, green or ripe	Colombia.
1618	do	Haiti.
1618	Plantains, green or ripe	Do.
1618	Bananas, green or ripe	Honduras.
1618	Plantains, green or ripe	Do.

"FREE" ITEMS—RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS—continued

Paragraph	Articles	Country
1619	Barks from which quinine may be extracted	Netherlands.
1623	Bread, Swedish type	Sweden.
1641	Calcium: Cyanamide or lime nitrogen	Canada.
1651	Dead or creosote oil	Belgium.
1652	Cobalt and cobalt ore	Canada.
1653	Cocoa or cacao beans, and shells thereof	Haiti.
1653	do	Brazil.
1653	do	Honduras.
1654	Coffee, except coffee imported into Puerto Rico and upon which a duty is imposed under the authority of sec. 319	Haiti.
1654	Coffee, except coffee imported into Puerto Rico	Brazil.
1654	Coffee, except coffee imported into Puerto Rico and upon which a duty is imposed under the authority of sec. 319	Colombia.
1654	do	Honduras.
1667	Sodium cyanide	Canada.
1668	Emeralds, rough or uncut, and not advanced in condition or value from their natural state by cleaving, splitting, cutting, or other process, whether in their natural form or broken, not set.	Colombia.
1670	Logwood	Haiti.
1672	Crude artificial abrasives, not specially provided for	Canada.
1681	Furs and fur skins, not specially provided for, undressed: Mink, beaver, muskrat, and wolf	Do.
1681	Undressed moleskins	Netherlands.
1684	Sisal fiber	Haiti.
1684	Kapok, not dressed or manufactured	Netherlands.
1684	Sisal, not dressed or manufactured	Do.
1685	Basic slag	Belgium.
1685	Precipitated bone of a grade used chiefly for fertilizers or chiefly as an ingredient in the manufacture of fertilizers	Do.
1685	Ammonium sulphate	Netherlands.
1686	Copal	Do.
1689	Ossein	Belgium.
1697	Gutta balata	Brazil.
1697	Gutta balata, crude	Colombia.
1697	Crude gutta percha and gutta siak	Netherlands.
1716	Wood pulp: Mechanically ground and soda, unbleached or bleached; and sulphite, bleached	Canada.
1716	Sulphate wood pulp, bleached and unbleached	Swedcn.
1719	Zirconium ores or concentrates	Brazil.
1727	Babassu nuts and kernels	Do.
1728	Sarsaparilla root	Honduras.
1731	Distilled or essential caraway oil not containing alcohol	Netherlands.
1731	Distilled or essential citronella oil not containing alcohol	Do.
1732	Babassu-nut oil, expressed or extracted	Brazil.
1732	Palm oil (processing tax of 3 cents per pound bound against increase)	Netherlands.
1734	Nickel ore, nickel matte, and nickel oxide	Canada.
1743	Plaster rock (including anhydrite) and gypsum, crude	Do.
1744	Platinum, unmanufactured or in ingots, bars, sheets, or plates not less than ⅛ of 1 inch in thickness, sponge, or scrap	Colombia.
1748	Quinine sulphate and all alkaloids and salts of alkaloids derived from cinchona bark	Netherlands.
1753	Crude sago and sago flour	Do.
1756	Sea herring and smelts, fresh or frozen, whether or not packed in ice, and whether or not whole	Canada.
1760	Shingles of wood (provided, that the United States reserves the right to limit the total quantity of red cedar shingles which may be entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption during any given half of any calendar year to a quantity not exceeding 25 percent of the combined total of the shipments of red cedar shingles by producers in the United States and the imports of such shingles during the preceding half year).	Do.
1761	Lobsters, fresh or frozen (whether or not packed in ice), or prepared or preserved in any manner (including pastes and sauces), and not specially provided for.	Do.
1761	Clams, quahaugs, oysters (except seed oysters), and crabs, fresh or frozen (whether or not packed in ice), and not specially provided for	Do.
1761	Scallops, fresh but not frozen (whether or not packed in ice)	Do.
1765	Deerskins, raw	Brazil.
1765	Reptile skins, raw	Colombia.
1765	Deerskins, raw	Honduras.
1765	Reptile skins, raw	Netherlands.
1768	Ginger root, not preserved or candied, unground	Haiti.
1768 (1)	Unground cassia	Netherlands.
1768 (1)	Unground mace	Do.
1768 (1)	Unground nutmegs	Do.
1768 (1)	Unground black and white pepper	Do.
1768 (2)	Caraway seed	Do.
1772	Standard newsprint paper	Canada.
1778	Tagua nuts	Colombia.
1779	Tamarinds	Do.
1781	Tapioca, tapioca flour, and cassava	Netherlands.
1796	Carnauba wax	Brazil.
1796	Beeswax, not specially provided for	Do.
1803	Cabinet woods in the log	Do.
1803 (1)	Timber hewn, sided, or squared, otherwise than by sawing, and round timber used for spars or in building wharves; sawed lumber and timber, not further manufactured than planed, and tongued and grooved; all the foregoing, if not of balsa or teak, and not specially provided for.	Canada.
1803 (2)	Logs; timber, round unmanufactured; pulpwoods; firewood, handle bolts, shingle bolts; and laths; all the foregoing, not cabinet woods, and not specially provided for.	Do.
1804	Posts, railroad ties, and telephone, trolley, electric light, and telegraph poles of cedar or other woods	Do.
1805	Pickets, palings, hoops, and staves of wood of all kinds	Do.
1806	Rattan sticks, unmanufactured	Netherlands.
1716	Sulphite wood pulp, unbleached	Sweden.

RESPONSIBILITIES AND DUTIES OF NAVAL OFFICERS—ARTICLE BY REAR ADMIRAL BELKNAP

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Rear Admiral Reginald R. Belknap, United States Navy, retired, entitled, "How Officers Must Think."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOW OFFICERS MUST THINK

By Rear Admiral Reginald R. Belknap, U. S. Navy, retired

In the many contests in sports of various kinds to which people go in crowds to witness, the players on both sides are expertly trained, physically fit, and familiar with the task before them. They are ready to exert their skill and powers to best effect. Such readiness was exemplified in the fleet some years ago, when the admiral said, "We are ready for a fight or a frolic"; and again at the latest Army-Navy football game, when a charming girl, facing about toward the midshipmen's seats and thinking she caught the eye of a friend, waved her hand; whereupon the midshipmen arose as one man, with caps waving and cheerful greetings. The kind of training we are now considering is quite different, but it requires the same standard; for alertness in national defense is far more important than that complete fitness which we take for granted in the world of sport. Where the stake is a cup or a ribbon we expect readiness to the minute. In national defense the stake is many lives, even the Nation's welfare. To measure up to such a responsibility how must an officer think?

As basis in the field of the Army, General MacArthur's hearing in April 1933 before the House Committee on Military Affairs, describes the background of the National Defense Act of 1920 very instructively. With his experienced views all officers may well make themselves familiar; for none are too young to study the road already traveled, and no training can be assimilated properly without comprehending the larger pattern into which each part is to fit. Napoleon's suggestion, that a corporal's knapsack contained a marshal's baton, holds good for military training generally; for the goal of all is ability to surmount emergency, though the emergency cannot be gaged in advance. A sergeant, a captain, any officer, may suddenly succeed to responsibilities far above his experience; and duties of the staff, too, are always in possible prospect for an officer, involving the coordination, effective employment, and welfare of many units.

In order that "reasonable preparation may substitute efficiency for muddling", the National Defense Act affords "a method whereby the citizen soldier, in various degree, would obtain partial preparation, so that he could reach the battlefront prepared and ready for the crisis of an enemy's attack." And to impress the vitalness of trained officers, General MacArthur emphasizes that, if it became necessary to cut down the National Defense Act, the last element to go should be the officer corps, as "the foundation of all the system, the mainspring of the whole mechanism."

Our ghastly record of wasted life and resources, through the persistent neglect of training and other essentials of security, is not creditable to our collective intelligence. Yet indifference to preparedness was natural enough to our people, spread over a vast continent between wide oceans, feeling far removed from potential enemies, if indeed we had any to fear. In our new, expanding Nation, men's own concerns were paramount, affairs of common weal arousing little interest. The hardy self-reliance of frontier spirit dismissed the thought of national danger, as easily disposed of when the time came, if come it ever did. Assurances of no more war operated powerfully to turn our backs on each war's bitter lessons. Our eyes were blinded to them by the dazzling triumphs of returning troops; and victories, even when delayed, suggested, perhaps, the most potent of arguments, that, since always successful in spite of unpreparedness, so could we be again. Why worry over remotest of possibilities?

Unhappily for the country, added to such indifference and blindness came the active opposition of people whose general prominence lends weight to all their utterances. High standing in some civil or scientific or literary field has been accepted as authority also in international and military affairs. Woeful waste of life and treasure has resulted from their undermining influence, however well meant. When emergency comes, they are powerless to rectify their sad handiwork. Yet, not being officially responsible, they are not brought to account; seldom even held up to public reproach.

Needless to say, such reasoning has not prevailed within the military services. Since the Civil War officer training in the Army has progressed constantly, if for many years slowly. Schools and courses for officers were set up, one after another, until in 1903, 38 years after the Civil War, the teachings of that war and of subsequent wars and military administrations abroad were recognized by establishing in Washington the Army General Staff and the Army War College. Both were due to statesmanlike grasp of our country's need for them by the Secretary of War, Elihu Root.

The Army War College capped the Army system, making its training comprehend every degree of command or staff responsibility. Additional schools and courses were provided as later requirements developed, notably the Plattsburg and similar training camps before and during the war. Afterward, by the National Defense Act of 1920, the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, the citizens' military training camps, and the civilian rifle clubs became essential parts of the Army system, by which the Nation, through reasonable preparation in time, may confront emergency with a fair measure of efficiency, instead of the confusion, hurry, extravagance, and ineffectiveness of eleventh-hour improvising.

In the Navy, during 20 stagnant years after 1865, except for torpedo work and naval construction, the Naval Academy was the only school. International law, navigation, surveying, hydrography, astronomy, and electricity received considerable attention; but applied study of the art and conduct of naval warfare received little support, still less of official stimulus. Much credit is due to officers who studied and wrote professionally, and to the officers as a body for maintaining high standards with what material they had, despite its being antiquated and despite their being overage in minor duties—subordinate officers abroad meeting foreign commanders young enough to be their sons. Our countrymen, indifferent enough to the Army, mostly knew little and cared less about the Navy, if indeed they understood at all what a Navy was for. American shipping carried only 10 percent of our foreign trade, the national interest was directed inland, and friends of sea power were at a minimum.

Fortunately our Navy had in Admiral Stephen B. Luce, a seaman of highest quality, an officer of rare insight, indefatigable energy, and resolute perseverance. As a captain he had codified naval seamanship with a comprehensiveness never before attempted nor since surpassed. He had succeeded after long endeavor in firmly establishing the training of naval apprentices, as a reliable source of petty officers of distinctly American brand. And in 1884 he brought into being the Naval War College, the first school for higher naval command in any country.

Against the conservatism inherent in the seafaring profession, acceptance of the Naval War College was painfully slow. More than once its further existence was seriously threatened, even after publication of the illuminating works of Mahan. But the War with Spain wrought a great change in both services. Promotion in the Navy improved radically, the fleet was built up, technical postgraduate courses were established, and by 1913 the War College had gained firm standing.

The idea that experience and good performance in a lower grade sufficed to qualify for higher responsibilities was being called in question. It was the doctrine of the "practical" men, who called dissenters highbrow. The salty man despised the scientific. But younger, active minds were seeing more clearly, thanks to the underlying persistence of Admiral Luce, despite his 80 years. One characteristically "practical" commander, soon after taking up the college course, explaimed, "All my life I have been a boatswain! Only now do I begin to understand the duty of an officer."

Except in the lowest grade, proficiency in routine duties was seen to be not enough for those who would be more than hewers of wood and drawers of water. And this new attitude, besides impressing the importance of systematic study by all officers, led to the establishment of courses preparatory to the War College, to the greater profit there through better grounding.

And now the Army and the Navy are cultivating a better mutual understanding through the interchange of officers, as both students and instructors, in their colleges and schools. Lately a further combination has been set up at the Marine Corps base at Quantico as a school for combined expeditions. All these provisions make for effective cooperation of the several services toward their common purpose of national defense, for concerted action, and for the studious planning on which to base not only operations but also matured advice to the President and Congress.

It often appears that in the public mind, so far as interested in the subject at all, military men are regarded as narrow and arbitrary, devoting their time and attention and interest solely to the business of war in the field, seeing and able to see only from their own point of view, dwelling and counting on and perpetuating ideas and methods of the past. To whatever extent this may have been true formerly, certainly in this country it is not so now. Study and postgraduate study are the order of the day in every field, but nowhere in such high quarters as in the services. Not merely majors, colonels, and naval captains attend the war colleges but generals and admirals of 30 years' service are not above digging into arduous study there in order to keep pace with developments affecting their grave responsibilities. And the scope of officers' studies, far from being limited to war operations, tactics, and the strictly professional, embraces the background of causes and general conduct of wars, international relations, national policies, economics, trade, also history and biography. The fine arts, belles-lettres, and music are not included, but any narrow view of the officers' proper horizon is dispelled by lectures on a wide variety of subjects given by men of high attainment in civil life.

Another apparently popular misbelief is that officers' thinking is dictated by their superiors, especially by "gold-laced graybeards", generals and admirals of reactionary conservatism, imposing wooden acquiescence in the obsolete. Nothing could be farther from the truth. In our Navy especially, suggestions from all officers, and from enlisted men, too, are welcomed, and, according to their merit, are put to use and credited. Freedom and invitation for improvement are open to all to a degree unsurpassed and rarely equaled anywhere.

In the Naval War College, and similarly in the Army's College, the Army, Marine Corps, and every staff corps except chaplain are represented, as well as the naval line. Experts are present in gunnery, engineering, torpedoes, submarines, aviation, communications, and intelligence. Lecturers come from other branches of the Government, from the universities, and various fields in civil life, including an international lawyer of world-wide recognition. In the discussion of maneuvers and problems, the rank of officers does not figure, and to remove any suggestion of rank, student officers do not wear uniform. They have no military duty nor administrative or other responsibility; simply to improve their minds amid utmost freedom of thought, with every incentive to take the opportunity seriously. Originality, initiative, comment, and criticism are encouraged. And a cardinal principle is not to determine a fact by majority vote. All officers pool their knowledge and experience, to test each step as in a laboratory, and thresh out a conclusion that will stand up against rough handling.

Thus are bias and prejudice eliminated, clear reasoning cultivated, and a habit formed to follow through to a decision on which to plan and draw up instructions for action. The guiding precept is to search for the principles affecting a situation and then apply them as experience and the facts indicate to be practical. Or, as one fine officer expressed it, to plan the right thing, rightly applied, in time. The Naval Academy motto, Sea Mastery Through Knowledge, has become at the War College, Victory Through Unity, a step forward that indicates the change hoped for by Admiral Harry C. Taylor, the Navy's professional head in 1902, when he said: "We have clung too long to the idea of single ships; we shall not be strong until we learn to think in squadrons."

A fundamental of the training systems is that each course contemplates more than a single degree or field of duty. Each is a step and a support to something higher and larger, the preparation on which fulfillment of a greater responsibility will depend. For no military duty stands alone. The steersman of a ship plies a simple art, once learned and practiced to proficiency. Normally, it affects only the ship's navigation. But in the battle line the steering has far greater importance, affecting the rapidity and accuracy of the battery's fire. And in the general case of the trained men in the ranks as well as the trained officer, it becomes instinctive to have regard for his support by others on each side and also to feel responsible for the support he gives to them. His own performance and his training for it, however good in themselves, are not complete unless they fit the larger scheme.

The German Army alternated staff duty and service with troops, successively selecting those of best performances at each stage for further alternating terms of duty. The best among the staff were promoted and sent to command, and after sufficient experience with troops, the best of these came again to the staff for higher duties there. By this method the ablest men had both staff and troop experience, advancing under the strongest incentive and at the ages most favorable for development. This gave the army in every grade of command and staff work officers of thorough training and proved ability, who were also mentally and physically in their prime. In other words, the training system contemplates an officer's progress. Those of inferior capacity or application are set aside along the way.

A further gain, of utmost value, has come through the training systems, in the soundness of military advice to Government, the highest and most far-reaching duty to which an officer may be called. Where formerly the civil power had to rely in the larger military matters upon personal opinions of individual officers or on reports of occasional boards assembled for the purpose, there are now the Army General Staff and the Naval General Board. The lack of provision for competent general advice, planning, and control, before and during the Civil War, is marked by thousands of Grand Army graves all over the country and by naval records of waste or delay of effort. For similar lack, our war with Spain contrasted sadly with the Japanese campaign of only 3 years before. For the Navy's part, the Department had to improvise a Board of Strategy to coordinate its comparatively simple efforts.

But now the President and Congress have within the War and Navy Departments permanent bodies responsible for reliable advice. They are composed of officers of thorough training and mature experience, having at disposal all obtainable information, trained assistance, time, and freedom for deliberate consideration. These advisory bodies have a judicial quality, going deeply into the facts, tendencies, and probabilities, and on that evidence reaching a considered conclusion. This distinguishes their recommendations from the reports of occasional boards convened from various sources. While these are valuable, often necessary, on special subjects; for regular use, as formerly the case, they are a weak dependence. They are lacking in comprehensive grasp of all that may be involved, lack time to digest and weigh the information, lack the familiarity with one another which makes for thorough consideration, and may not be of training and experience pertinent to the subject. Perhaps most serious, they lack continuity; lack also further responsibility after rendering their report.

In still greater contrast are the personal views of individuals. All officers are responsible for advice as well as action in their respective provinces; but sometimes they are asked, and give, their opinions on matters outside their official ken, a practice for many years quite common. Getting several such opinions substantially in agreement made it possible to quote "agreement of many high officers" in support of almost anything. The fact that those officers were not fully informed nor responsible in the matter would not be mentioned. One Assistant Secretary would appeal on any subject to anyone who happened to be in his office. That was trustfulness in military men indeed. One Secretary said he could get support from some naval officer for any proposal whatever, and unfortunately it was too nearly true. It is only human to express one's views, but such willingness to give an opinion when asked, and also the pushing of pet projects, have been costly to naval efficiency and wasteful of much money. Happily these practices are in rapid decline.

These distinctions are important, for the soundness of a recommendation by the General Staff or General Board, compared with an officer's opinion, is analogous to a Supreme Court decision against an outside lawyer's hypothesis. The individual may be conscientious, and his opinion may be right as far as he knows. But consideration by the responsible staff is more searching, and its result not personal opinion but the unbiased, unprejudiced, impersonal finding of a deliberative body, officially charged as advisory and having the information, assistance, and time for investigation far beyond an individual's command. Such advice now guides the training preparation and the material expenditure in hundreds of millions to forestall or meet a crisis that may not become acute for years, but when it comes, comes quickly.

Such is the range of duty from the smallest command formation to the highest responsibility. And such is the systematic, studious, and thorough training deemed requisite for the regular service. In military contests, especially in one of national magnitude, the readiness of the reserve may be decisive; and in our country the dependence on the citizen force is very large. Is it not then incumbent on Reserve officers, collectively and singly, to qualify by every means available? At best Reservists' opportunities are meager compared with those of Regulars; yet in emergency requiring practical performance, but without benefit of the Regular's constant familiarity, the Reservist must be competent for his task. When action is at hand the period of preparation is gone by. It is for this readiness of the officer, Reserve as well as Regular, in which we have been neglectful, that the training systems are designed to provide. Success depends upon how well each officer prepares himself by serious work, wide grasp of duty, most of all by well-informed thought.

Thus, officers must think of their own work as parts of larger effort, on which depend not only the immediate objective but continued progress in an operation, in which the present task is but one step. Such grasp of a task, far from lessening the duty in hand, enhances it, requiring complete success to be attained at minimum cost; that is, with highest military efficiency; for thereby the maximum force is conserved, available for further service.

Mechanical routine and parade precision are to the public mind typical of military duty. So it is depicted by the stage and romantic books and such minutiae are not recognized as corresponding to the practicing of scales by a musician. Some machinelike requirements are indispensable also for corporate living, for cultivating self-control and most of all instinctive responsiveness. The civilian admires the neatness and cleanliness of a ship, but does not grasp what it means to present her and 1,000 crew, with every part and man in perfect turn-out, ready for critical inspection at 9 o'clock of a morning. So with the German goose-step, frequently laughed at here. When done in ranks of 50 front, over a stretch of 100 yards, it is seen to be a test of will and stamina; and officers say that a man who cannot do it well seldom becomes a reliable soldier.

The general effects of service discipline are well portrayed by the late John W. Burgess, professor of political science in Columbia University, who devoted his life to the cause of peace. As a student in Berlin University in 1873, when he expressed regret on his professor's son being called away from study for a year of military service, the old German replied:

My dear young friend, you Americans do not understand the import of this custom among us. This strenuous service is the greatest possible benefit to our country and therefore to each one who renders it. In the first place, it is a school, best possible school, of physical training. It straightens the figure, relieves the organs, makes the muscles hard and tense, and adds 10 years more to the life of our men. In the second place, it is a school of morals. At the very period of life when our young men fall under the greatest temptation to go wrong, it places them under strict discipline and guards them against drunkenness, gambling, and sexual dissoluteness. In the third place, it is a school of science and intellectual culture, in which our young men are not taught simply military drill and the manual of arms, but also languages, geography, topography, mathematics, physics, metallurgy, and engineering. In the fourth place, it is a school of manners, in which the deference exacted from inferior to superior, and from those of equal rank to each other, transforms the rudest peasant to something like a gentleman. And finally, it is a school of patriotism, in which our young men, brought together from our still loosely constructed country, learn to know each other and to throw off provincialism for nationalism.

From the outset, an officer should strive to expand his knowledge without cramping his imagination and freedom of judgment. John Ruskin, philosophical art critic and author, in no sense a military man, said in a lecture to young British Army students at Woolwich:

" * * * While for others all knowledge is often little more than a means of amusement, there is no form of science which a soldier may not at some time or other find bearing on the business of life and death * * * the fates of those who will one day be under your command hang upon your knowledge; * * * no good soldier in his old age was ever careless or indolent in his youth."

Field Marshal Earl Robertson quotes General Smith-Dorrien's training instructions:

"Modern war demands that individual intelligence should be on a high plane. Battlefields now cover such extensive areas that control by officers is very difficult; consequently noncommissioned officers and even private soldiers often find themselves left to their own resources; and it is only by being accustomed in peace training to use their common sense and intelligence that they are likely to be equal to their duties in war."

From these quotations, typical of similar expressions in numerous military works, it follows that manuals and other standard instructions are not to be taken as rigid or as complete. They are ground work, but not the whole structure. Essentially they teach the language and mark the fairway, embodying what experience has shown to be wise and profitable measures, sound and expeditious methods, with necessary caution. Their aim is to facilitate action with vigor, by removing the trammels of inexperience. As in other arts, good technique makes for good performance, and the more one masters technique, the better he qualifies for the unexpected. For mastery requires understanding what are essentials, what can be altered or omitted. The man on the spot must decide; the book is not a master but a guide.

Naval history has notable instances of this, as when Admiral Byng was tried and executed on charges growing out of too close adherence to the book. When Admiral Rodney had brought about a long-sought tactical situation for routing the enemy fleet, it was frustrated by his leading captain keeping to the book. But Nelson, off St. Vincent, not yet an admiral but grasping his admiral's purpose, went directly against the book, and brought a victory sorely needed by his country, and made his chief a peer. Training courses were meager in those days, especially in the navy; but Nelson, like Napoleon and Wellington, admitted no bounds to the knowledge and study required in their profession.

"The object of training and instruction", wrote Admiral Mahan, "is not merely to mold the individual, but to impress upon each a common type, not of action only, but of the mental and moral processes which determine action; so that within a pretty wide range there will be in a school of officers a certain homogeneousness of intellectual equipment and conviction, which will tend to cause likeness of impulse and of conduct under any set of given conditions. The formation of a similar habit of thought, and of assurance as to the right thing to do under particular circumstances, reinforces strongly the power of cooperation, which is the essential factor in military operations. Combination and concentration, two leading ideas and objects in war, both indicate unity of energy by the harmonius working together—cooperation—of many parts.

"Obviously such harmony is not best when merely mechanical, for a mechanical mind is easily deranged in presence of the unexpected. It is the inspiration of common purpose and common understanding which, when the unexpected occurs, supplies the guiding thought to meet the new conditions and bend them to the common end. If this condition be adequately attained, the mind of the commander in chief will be omnipresent throughout his command; the most unexpected circumstances will be dealt with by his subordinates in his spirit, as surely as though he were present bodily. It is difficult to overestimate the importance of such a result."

In the second place, officers in the field must be able to think from the standpoint of the staff. This is not only for better work and cooperation in the field but also in preparation for possible detail to the staff. To most officers duty with troops is more attractive; but captains, even lieutenants of the present, may be thrust into the staff. They should recognize this now and prepare accordingly. And even if never so detailed, such training is well worth while. The staff experience of Robert E. Lee during the Mexican War was of incalculable value afterward to him as general, Wellington and Earl Roberts acknowledged their indebtedness to such experience as young officers. Without the officers' schools and War College of the Army training system the achievements of the American Expeditionary Force would have been impossible. In his report after the war, Field Marshal Haig wrote:

"The experience gained in this war alone, without the study and practice of lessons learned from other campaigns, could not have sufficed to meet the ever-changing tactics which have characterized the fighting. There was required also the sound basis of military knowledge supplied by our training manuals and staff colleges. * * * The course of the war has brought out very clearly the value of an efficient and well-trained high command, in which I include not merely commanders of higher formations but their staffs also. * * * The magnitude of our operations introduced a situation for which no precedent existed. * * * In expansion from 6 divisions to 60, many officers had to be recruited for staff appointment, from good regular officers chiefly, but also from officers of our new armies. * * * Good staff work is an essential to success in all wars."

In further comment on the importance of staff work, Colonel Henderson, in the Life of Stonewall Jackson, says:

"The influence of a good staff is seldom apparent except to the initiated. If a combination succeeds, the general gets all the credit. If it fails, he gets all the blame; and while no agents, however efficient, can compensate by their own efforts for the weakness of a conception that is radically unsound, many a brilliant plan has failed in execution through the inefficiency of the staff."

As previously alluded to, there has always been, and in the nature of human affairs always will be, a considerable number who style themselves "practical" men and who disdain the thought of study. They include fine officers, and their qualities of magnetism, force, hardihood, and personal gallantry are invaluable. Strong leaders in action, they make difficult undertakings succeed; to their courage, experience, and shrewdness in the field a higher commander may confide his daring conception. History teems with their brilliant deeds. But while indispensable in every service, they do not personify all the qualities requisite. And they know it. Even the best ones will admit that study has some value. A story is told of Marshal Blucher, known as "Marshal Vorwaerts", for his constantly urging forward; a "practical" man indeed. To the assembled officers after Waterloo he declared that he was the only man there who could kiss his own head; then put his arm around his chief of staff and kissed him on the forehead.

To the present subject of how officers must think, the application is twofold: The practical men accomplish more, the better they grasp their commander's conception; and the greatest leaders were themselves most practical.

Trafalgar exemplified the first. The attack which Nelson ordered would for a considerable period of time place his leading ships in chancery. He could dare to make his plan, because his captains were imbued with his ideas and his spirit. As for the second, Wellington was an outstanding example. As Colonel Henderson, in The Science of War, said of him:

"He was exceedingly observant both of men and things. No new discovery in science or in mechanics escaped his investigation. As he himself told one of his chief officers, it was his invariable habit to give up some hours daily to the study of his profession * * * he had not been content with the knowledge that suffices for the regimental officer; he had endeavored to qualify himself for higher things; and when his time came for greater responsibilities, he proved himself capable of bearing the weightiest burden that ever fell on a general's shoulders * * * it was by hard work, in peace as well as in war, by devotion to duty in its highest sense, by doing whatsoever his hand found to do with all his might, that Wellington not only won his battles but made his soldiers the most formidable in Europe."

And there are examples nearer home. Admiral Sims as a younger man was intensely practical, though a student of other things than the science of war. He scoffed at the Naval War College and, when ordered to take the course there, was for 6 months most recalcitrant of students. Then a light dawned upon him; he became an ardent supporter of the college, was twice its president, was an excellent commander of a destroyer force, and his command of the vast naval force in European waters was brilliant. And General Ely, on his retirement, was eulogized most highly not only for leadership in the field but also for unfailing improvement of every chance for study.

Circumstances limit the training opportunities for Reservists, but in war they will come into full responsibility. The passing years bring the younger men now ever nearer to higher duties. Now is their time for study. It is never too early to cultivate the habit, and they who could fulfill duty in the way the Nation will expect cannot afford to be only practical. Years ago, when the conduct of war in the field, the extent of operations, the variety of implements, were all much simpler than in our time, Lord Wolseley, as quoted by Von der Glotz in the Conduct of War, said:

"* * * The officer who has not studied war as an applied science, who is ignorant of modern military history, is of little use beyond the rank of captain."

That our country has never lost a war is said repeatedly; and it is true, despite repeated waste of life and treasure. Such waste is all the more regrettable, nationally, sinful, because our national wealth, material resources, men, and native intelligence and spirit are unequaled. The response of our men and the support of our women has been all that could be desired. When the time for action comes response is general and wholehearted, and success has been won at length.

For timely preparation in the quiet of peace, the appeal is not so popular. The hardest kind of work is study, yet it cannot be neglected or taken lightly if our country's record is to be kept unbroken. And we have now, under the National Defense Act and similar provisions for the Navy, opportunities and official encouragement and leading such as never before offered. At the best they contemplate a degree of preparedness which is only the minimum for a country such as ours. Their effectiveness will depend largely upon the earnest fidelity of Reserve officers voluntarily. They may have the encouragement, however, of knowing that the studious effort which the great leaders agree is essential soon becomes increasingly interesting; and it leads to that broadening of character which brought from one of that great family of diplomats, Presidents, and historians, Brooks Adams, this tribute:

"* * * I never fail to enjoy meeting officers of our services. They are the most intelligent, the least selfish, and on the whole, to my thinking, the most valuable body of men whom our civilization has ever produced."

POWER OF THE SUPREME COURT

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I present an article appearing in the Philadelphia (Pa.) Record of Sunday, January 12, 1936, by Dr. Edward S. Corwin, entitled "How Far Should the Power of the Supreme Court Extend?" I ask that the article may be published in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Record of Jan. 12, 1936]

HOW FAR SHOULD THE POWER OF THE SUPREME COURT EXTEND?—ONLY TO PARTICULAR CASE IT'S DECIDING, LAW EXPERT HOLDS—TRIBUNAL AND CONGRESS BOTH "ON THE SPOT" IN CONSIDERING LIMITS OF THEIR POWER; "WILL OF THE PEOPLE" FINAL

(Dr. Corwin, outstanding authority on the Constitution and the Supreme Court, is McCormick professor of jurisprudence at Princeton. He is the author of a number of books on political science, his most recent being Twilight of the Supreme Court, which has gone into its third printing.)

By Dr. Edward S. Corwin

Aside from repealing the A. A. A., which was perhaps the great thing, the Supreme Court seems, in the A. A. A. case, to establish the proposition that the National Government cannot use its taxing power to compel a person to contribute to a special fund from which Congress may make donations to other persons on the condition that the donee agrees beforehand to do something the National Government could not otherwise require him to do.

Besides this there is an implication running through Justice Robert's opinion that the appropriation power of Congress is in some way limited by the powers of the States. This implication is strongly and convincingly attacked by Justice Stone in his admirably lucid dissenting opinion. Actually the Court seems to have laid down a doctrine, which by its own admission, it would not ordinarily be in a position to enforce.

As to the Court's apprehensions lest the spending power may be abused—when hasn't it been abused? And as Justice Stone points out, all powers are subject to abuse. Indeed, he might have carried his argument further. Congress could, by its currency powers, apparently authorize the payment of all debts in dollars not worth the hundredth part of the dollar which was loaned. It could deflate the currency even more radically than Germany did the mark some years ago. It could conscript every man, woman, and child in the country into the Army and Navy and put them under military discipline, even including the Justices of the Supreme Court. Or it could enlarge the Court to a size sufficient to include all the voters—which may be necessary sooner or later in order to restore popular government in this country.

CURBS ON COURT SUGGESTED

Many people are questioning whether the Court did not abuse its power on this occasion, as well as on some others, and proposals are pending in Congress for cutting down the Court's power.

One suggestion is an act of Congress requiring a special majority of the Justices for throwing out acts of Congress on constitutional grounds. Another is an act of Congress whereby the lower Federal courts and the Supreme Court, on appeal, would be deprived of jurisdiction over cases in which constitutional questions arise. Still another possibility is that Congress might "pack" the Court.

The power of Congress to enlarge the Court indefinitely is, of course, not questioned. Nor could it be questioned that Congress would have the power to set up an entirely new court, along the lines of the old Commerce Court, to which all questions arising under certain designated laws of Congress would be appealed finally and exclusively, including all questions of their constitutionality. For it is admitted that the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is at the mercy of Congress.

All such devices seem to me unnecessary and undesirable. What is necessary and desirable is to rid the principle of judicial review of certain ancillary doctrines that have come to adhere to it, especially the doctrine that when the Court makes an interpretation of the Constitution for the purpose of deciding a case, such interpretation must be regarded by Congress and the President as henceforth a part of the Constitution, which they are bound by their oaths to support. This is not at all in harmony with the argument upon which Chief Justice Marshall first based the right of the Court to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional.

Thus, he cited the oath which the judges are required to take to support the Constitution, and argued that it would be immoral to impose this oath upon them if they could not read the Constitution for themselves. But Congress and the President also take oaths to support the Constitution. How immoral, therefore, to impose such an oath upon them unless they can read the Constitution independently.

And in very recent years, too, the Court has carefully explained that it has no substantive power from the Constitution to set aside an act of Congress, but that it does so simply in consequence of its duty to decide cases in accordance with the law, of which the Constitution is a part. As law of the case, the Court's view of the Constitution is the Constitution, but not farther.

ATTACKED BY PRESIDENT LINCOLN

For the contrary view, which is today one of the numerous constitutional fallacies being promulgated by the American Liberty League, proslavery was largely responsible in the first instance. Realizing in 1848 that they now dominated the Court, the proslavery people started then and there the drive which culminated 9 years later in the Dred Scott case, to elevate decisions of the Supreme Court interpretative of the Constitution to a level with the Constitution itself. But, as is well known, President Lincoln, in his first inaugural, attacked this theory as utterly without basis.

"The candid citizen", Lincoln pointed out, "must confess that if the policy of the Government upon vital questions affecting the whole people is to be irrevocably fixed by decisions of the Supreme Court, the instant they are made in ordinary litigation between parties in personal actions, the people will have ceased to be their own rulers, having to that extent practically resigned their Government into the hands of that eminent tribunal. Nor is there in this any assault upon the Court or the Judges. It is a duty from which they may not shrink to decide cases properly brought before them, and it is no fault of theirs if others seek to turn their decisions to political purposes."

In short, while the Court can, and must, decide cases according to its own independent view of the Constitution, it does not in so doing decide questions.

For that matter, the Court has never regarded its past interpretations of the Constitution as binding itself. These it has abandoned by one device or another many, many times. Why, then, should they bind the national legislative power?

Discarding, therefore, this spurious gloss upon the principle of judicial review, where do we arrive?

We arrive at clear recognition that the national legislative body, Congress and the President, are vested not only with the power but with the duty to read the Constitution for themselves. To be sure, they are entitled to consult the opinions of the Court for such light as these may shed on particular questions of constitutional power; but they are not entitled to abdicate their own official function of independent judgment on the plea that such opinions are the authentic Constitution.

And being entitled and required to reach its own independent construction of the Constitution, Congress is entitled and required to frame such legislation as in its judgment the country needs and as is permitted by such independent construction of the Constitution.

IT PUTS COURT "ON THE SPOT"

But this, it will be objected, means "putting the Court on the spot." Exactly; and the Court ought to be put on the spot when it subscribes to such labored and far-fetched opinions as those upon which it based its reversal of the Railway Retirement Act and A. A. A., or when it subscribes to such ambiguous opinions as that of the Chief Justice in the poultry case.

The latter, indeed, was a virtual request by the Court to be "put on the spot"; and when he asked Congress to pass the Guffey Coal Act the President but complied with this request. He would, however, have done better to call Congress's attention to the reasonableness of doubts as to the unconstitutionality of this measure than to use the precise language he did.

And if the Court is put on the spot, so also is Congress.

In other words, the above view of the constitutional duty of Congress brings both the Court's and Congress's interpretations of the Constitution to the test of public opinion and so leaves the issue of finality to be settled by what Madison termed "the national will."

In "a government of the people, by the people, and for the people" that is just how it ought to be settled.

AMERICAN AGRICULTURE—ARTICLE FROM YANKTON (S. DAK.) PRESS

Mr. BULOW. Mr. President, I present an article appearing in the Yankton (S. Dak.) Press and Dakotan of the 18th instant entitled "A Brief Survey of Some Elemental Subjects", which I ask may be published in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Yankton (S. Dak.) Press and Dakotan of Jan. 18, 1936]

A BRIEF SURVEY OF SOME ELEMENTAL SUBJECTS

Even in politics and at the beginning of what promises to be one of the most bitter of national campaigns there should be some semblance of proper decency and an adherence to truth, to such a degree, at least, as to make attacks sound plausible.

The Chicago Tribune is published in a large city; but the paper and the city itself, perhaps unfortunately for the city and the agricultural region that surrounds it, has reached its sprawling massiveness because of the greatness of the farming country of which it is the center, and both Chicago and the Tribune have lived and fattened upon the support of the farmers and must continue so to do.

But the Tribune, Chicago's representative paper, lets its special Washington writer, Arthur Sears Henning, in commenting on the recent Supreme Court decision, say:

"The Court has invalidated the A. A. A. * * * The President has bowed to the authority of the Court. * * * He has undertaken to construct a new system of restriction of agricultural production by other means than that held unconstitutional in the A. A. A. case. The new plan is based on the principle of promoting the general welfare of conservation of soil fertility. It will provide for the distribution of about $500,000,000 annually to the farmers, approximately the same amount they received under the A. A. A.

"The new project will go eventually to the Supreme Court for determination of its constitutionality, but it cannot possibly reach the Court until after the Presidential election in which the support of the farmers is essential to the reelection of Mr. Roosevelt. This subsidy is relied upon to hold the West in line for the President."

Undoubtedly the President does want "to hold the West in line." Also it is true that "the support of the farmers is essential to the reelection of Mr. Roosevelt." But it is in no sense a fair or honest inference that Mr. Roosevelt is interested in the farmers only for their votes or that he is intent upon repairing, to the best of his ability, the damage done to American agriculture by the recent Supreme Court decision by some new plan that may or may not, in its time, be unconstitutional, for the sole purpose of retaining those votes.

Mr. Roosevelt had those votes in 1932. He secured them by fair and open promises that he would do everything he could possibly do to better the deplorable condition of agriculture. He made good those promises in a remarkable degree. He honestly earned and was entitled to the support he had secured. He is now hastening into the breach that is again promising the total destruction of agriculture and is ready to continue the battle to save the farmer, no matter what it may cost him in losses in the industrial East, because, I believe, he is honestly enlisted in the fight for the forgotten producer of food and cotton crops and will win or lose with him in the contest.

Undoubtedly he expects the farmer vote. He has had it, has earned it in championing the farmer's cause, and is still in the fight front for him.

While on the subject, let me call attention to yet another political charge that is being made without any apparent effort to give the whole truth to the voters of America, and yet with every intent and purpose to influence their thinking and to control their voting.

The Liberty League in an attack January 12 on the Roosevelt proposed Budget for 1936 and 1937 charged that it provided for "the greatest orgy of peacetime spending by any nation in the history of the world." The Chicago Tribune, again, in its news story of this attack says: "The league held the first step toward Budget balancing to be abandonment of work relief and temporary substitute of relief."

It is true that the Democratic platform of 1932 promised that the National Budget should be balanced and that Roosevelt accepted that platform and promised his best endeavors to carry out its provisions. It is also true that the Budget is not balanced and that there is little hope of its being balanced in the near future unless the relief of which the league speaks is abandoned. But it is no less true that that relief is the humanitarian feeding, clothing, and keeping alive of millions of America's citizens who without this "orgy of spending" and this "unbalancing of the Budget" would have starved and been out of their misery long ago and that conditions today have not improved enough so they can survive if the spending stops.

No political party in power and no political sophistry in a preelection campaign can change this fact, and no administration in power can save the lives of the millions in dire need without spending money to do it. The relief had to be given if lives were to be saved. That it has changed to "work relief" is only the making of an effort to get some permanent value back to the public for the money that had to be spent in the service of suffering people.

It is true the money could have been saved and the lives lost. That alternative is still open. China has chosen that way many times in the past. Russia is said to have done so recently in her effort to build a successful communistic state. Perhaps money is the more valuable and our Government has been mistaken, but thank God it has made this error, if it is such, and pray God it will continue to make it, while hunger and human suffering can be relieved in no other way.

Later, when the terrible destruction of war has been absorbed and the mad orgy of spending and wasting of the "big bull market" of the late '20's, with its attendant destruction of the living of millions who believed the promises of Cities Service, the Van Sweringens, Mitchell, Morgan, the Wall Street bankers, insiders, promoters, and manipulators, has been somewhat replaced in slow, painful earning, is time to begin the balancing of a Budget that is going into the red a few billion a year in the effort to preserve a semblance of life in millions of human beings, ruined in large part, by that same war spending and by those hundreds of billions wiped out and utterly wasted in the uncontrolled madness of the so-called 7 fat years from 1922 to 1929.

This paper is and has been consistently Republican for 74 years, because it believes in the old-time principles of the Republican Party. But it has lived and prospered or suffered privations with the farmers of South Dakota and the Middle West. It must continue to so live or be wiped out with them.

We know, as they know, that agriculture, as an industry, is facing new conditions and must work out, with the aid of Government, an equitable, tenable position for itself; just as industry battled for subsidy, through tariffs and other methods, until it was firmly placed. We all know that relief, direct, by work, or otherwise must be continued for farmers and for others throughout the region dependent upon farming until such a position is secured and stabilized. Today these are our issues and we honestly believe the paramount issues of agriculture.

If these are the issues that have been forced upon us, then we must fight for them until we win or go down to disastrous defeat with the rest of agriculture. We must continue to support those in power, or who come into power, who are supporting agriculture and helping to solve farm problems and work them out to definitely helpful conclusions.

Here in South Dakota we cannot eat the Constitution, though we might get warmth by burning the fat out of the Liberty Leaguers who would "balance the Budget" no matter what became of human lives that must perish without food or warmth during this winter season.

W. C. LUSK.

ADDRESS BY HON. J. F. T. O'CONNOR TO AMERICAN BANKERS ASSOCIATION CONVENTION

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I present an address delivered by Hon. J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency, before the American Bankers' Association convention, at the Roosevelt Hotel, in New Orleans, La., on November 13, 1935, which I ask may be published in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On two former occasions—in Chicago in September 1933 and in Washington in October 1934—it was my privilege to address your association. It is a pleasure to be with you again on this occasion.

The annual reports made to Congress by the Comptroller of the Currency during the past 72 years contain an interesting history of the banking conditions of the Nation. When Abraham Lincoln appointed Hugh McCullough as the first Comptroller of the Currency on May 9, 1863, under authority of the act of February 25, 1863, definite form was given to a national banking system in the United States. The Comptroller of the Currency was charged with the responsibility for chartering national banks, approving branches thereof, conversions from State to National institutions, and for the examination, liquidation, reorganization, mergers, and proper adjustment of the capital structure of national banks, as well as their general supervision. These tasks have not been light during the past 3 years. Daniel Webster said, in his famous reply to Senator Hayne, "When the mariner has been tossed for many days in thick weather, and on an unknown sea, he naturally avails himself of the first pause in the storm, the earliest glance of the sun, to take his latitude and ascertain how far the elements have driven him from his true course." The banking storm is now definitely over. My purpose in appearing before you today is to present an accurate picture of the national banking situation now that the storm has passed, and to recount some of the work that has been done to repair its ravages.

It will be interesting to consider first, the progress made in the reopening of conservatorship banks; secondly, the work of liquidating closed national banks; thirdly, the strengthening of the capital structure of national banks; fourthly, a summary of some of the more important amendments to the National Banking Act; and, finally, the present condition of our national banks.

General statements, when not supported by unimpeachable evidence, are of little value, and that is my justification for presenting figures in some detail in order that no possible misunderstanding can arise. Many of the statistics will be released today for the first time. They will appear later in the annual report made by my office to Congress for the year ending October 31.

The most pressing problem before the Comptroller's office after the banking holiday in March 1933, was that of dealing with 1,417 national banks which failed to reopen and were placed in conservatorship. There was due to the unsecured creditors of these banks $1,924,473,019, and there has been made available to these creditors $1,427,056,746, or 74.15 percent of the amount due. These conservatorship banks owed to secured creditors $333,066,987, of which $325,946,756, or 97.86 percent, has been made available. It is significant that 489 of these banks have paid all their creditors in full. The statistics given are for June 30, 1935, the last date for which these figures have been compiled in our office.

If the figures for secured and unsecured creditors are combined, and the amount paid is deducted, we find a total balance due creditors on June 30 of $504,536,504, or 22.34 percent of the amount due on March 16.

The next problem which challenged the attention of the Comptroller's office was the orderly liquidation of all national banks in receivership, including those closed before and after the banking holiday. There are now 1,423 banks in receivership under the Comptroller's supervision. Of these banks, 832 were placed in receivership prior to March 16, 1933, with deposits of $779,635,584, of which sum the depositors have received $420,360,305, or 53.92 percent. Subsequent to March 16, 1933, 593 of these 1,423 banks were placed in receivership with deposits at time of closing of $1,067,524,707, of which the depositors have received $631,012,603, or 59.11 percent. These figures are as of October 31, 1935.

The largest number of active receiverships in the history of the Comptroller's office was 1,568, and this was on July 19, 1934. These were reduced to 1,423 on October 31, 1935. The largest number of active receivers was 833 on June 30, 1934. There are now 655.

Since March 16, 1933, there has been distributed to depositors in receivership banks $680,227,575. This large distribution has been accomplished by the orderly liquidation of the assets of these banks, and also by obtaining loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Our receivers borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation up to October 31, 1935, the sum of $337,016,740, and have repaid $242,698,243, leaving a balance unpaid of $94,318,497, or 27.99 percent. If we take the total number of national receiverships finally liquidated from the year 1865 to October 31, 1935, inclusive, numbering 1,367, we find the average percentage of expenses to collections to be 7.47 percent. In other words, out of every dollar collected by our receivers, over 92 cents has been paid to the depositors. The percentage of cost for the year ending October 31, 1935, was 8.57. The slight increase in cost is due largely to the system of borrowing from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Our receivers have paid $6,412,977 in interest up to the end of October.

During the past year particular attention has been given to the disposition of real estate included among the assets of insolvent national banks. A plan has been formulated and successfully followed in a number of States which has resulted in the selling to excellent advantage of real estate owned by the insolvent national banks in such States. For the first time in the history of the Comptroller's office we have tried a new procedure which involves extensive advertising and a public sale. You will be interested in the story of the results of this procedure in Gulfport, Miss.

At Gulfport the First National Bank has been in receivership since December 1931. Gulfport has a population of approximately 16,000, and derives its principal support from tourist trade. It receives some income from shipping, and also from one large cotton compress which is in operation there, although the surrounding territory is not generally considered an agricultural section. In this trust we had 344 separate pieces of real estate, some of it city property, and some of it farm acreage, most of which was nonproductive. We were advised that it was impossible to sell any real estate in this small community, as the people had no money and there was no demand for the property. We obtained the services of an energetic real-estate salesman, who went to work with vigor and dispatch. He ran a half-page advertisement on 7 consecutive days in 12 newspapers. He advertised in the adjoining State of Louisiana and in four towns and cities adjacent to Gulfport. Ten thousand copies of a pictorial booklet were circulated by hand. Ten thousand blotters were distributed. Five thousand cards were circulated in connection with a guessing contest on the prices which would be paid for certain pieces of property. Three thousand eight hundred letters were mailed to those depositors who held certificates in the closed banks. Ninety-four large oilcloth signs, 6 feet by 4 feet, and six signs, 12 feet by 4 feet, were used, as well as 500 automobile stickers. Seventeen thousand five hundred lists containing a description of each piece of property were distributed. Sixty consecutive announcements were made over the local radio stations and seven over the New Orleans radio station, while a sound truck traveled 1,800 miles and was used to amplify the sound on the day of the sale. The cost of all this was something in excess of $7,500.

About 2,000 people gathered in the city park at 10 o'clock on the morning of the sale. The Parent-Teachers Association furnished luncheon at a small profit to that worthy organization.

The sale was adjourned an hour for dinner, and after dinner a crowd of approximately 5,000 people were present. The sale continued until 1 o'clock in the morning, when the last piece of real estate was sold, and approximately six or seven hundred people remained until the end of the sale.

What was the result? The success of the sale surprised everyone. The bids amounted to $178,672, one-third of which was required to be paid in cash and the balance in 1 or 2 years. In many instances, however, the full amount was paid. In addition, the purchasers assumed the back taxes on the property, which amounted to a total of $35,284, making the entire proceeds of the sale $213,956. Several offers were made to purchase at par the paper received. A purchaser of this paper knows that he is taking very little chance when one-third of the price of the property has already been paid. These results were obtained notwithstanding the fact that each purchaser of property knew that title did not pass at the time of the sale, as the Federal statutes require the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency and the approval of a court of competent jurisdiction.

There are financial institutions in every part of the country which have similar problems. However, their task is much easier. We were dealing with a closed institution, with property in the morgue, where title did not pass when the auctioneer's hammer dropped, and where we were not in a position to assist in financing any part of the purchase price paid. We did more than merely sell all of the real property in this trust; we recreated values in this little town, stimulated activity in real-estate sales, and created a new psychology toward investments. No one believed it could be done. No one believed it was possible to obtain over $200,000. Yet that was the result of the sale. It is anticipated that this plan will be placed in operation in other sections of the country as rapidly as the necessary details may be arranged. It has been noted that interest in the acquisition of real estate for investment purposes has revived to a considerable extent, which will, of course, materially benefit the creditors of those insolvent national banks which have substantial real-estate investments.

A few items will give you an idea of the enormity of this particular problem. We hold title to 2,404 farms, containing 480,942 acres, with an estimated gross value of $7,257,020. In addition, we have mortgages on 3,690 farms, containing 839,028 acres, with an estimated gross value of $12,665,270. We hold title to 7,347 residences with an estimated gross value of $25,481,082, and hold mortgages on 16,380 residences with an estimated gross value of $48,925,143. We have title to 2,451 business properties with an estimated gross value of $19,660,344, and we have mortgages on 2,249 pieces of business property with an estimated gross value of $22,998,078. In addition to these items, we have title to 5,002 unimproved city properties with an estimated gross value of $4,480,295, and hold mortgages on 3,885 unimproved city properties with an estimated gross value of $3,358,326. We have 917 bank buildings with an estimated value of $39,729,877, and 1,050 miscellaneous items whose estimated gross value is $7,422,139.

The third problem confronting the Comptroller's Office was the strengthening of the capital structure in our national banks. On June 30, 1932, 6,150 national banks had capital stock of $1,568,983,000, and on June 30, 1935, 5,431 national banks had capital stock of $1,813,970,000. Although this indicates a reduction of 719 in the number of national banks, or 11½ percent, there has been a net increase in the capital of $244,987,000, or 15½ percent.

The selling of preferred stock enabled many banks to carry along loans which otherwise would have been foreclosed, and in other instances made it possible for banks to extend greater credit to the community in the time of stress. Approximately 2,000 national banks sold $550,729,300 in preferred stock of which $63,318,932 was purchased locally and the balance by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Of this total amount, $21,417,637 has been retired, leaving $529,311,663 in preferred stock still outstanding in our national banks.

A number of measures affecting the banks of the Nation have been considered and passed by Congress since 1933. Probably the most sweeping and far-reaching was the act creating the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. The Board of that Corporation is composed of Hon. Leo T. Crowley, Chairman, former United States Senator Phillips Lee Goldsborough, of Maryland, and the Comptroller of the Currency. The Board is bipartisan. At your Chicago meeting in September 1933 a considerable part of my address was devoted to this measure. The statements made at that time have been more than justified. This legislation has caused millions of dollars to be brought out of hoarding and back into circulation; confidence has been restored in the safety of deposits, and the wrongs resulting from vicious propaganda against the banks have been completely overcome.

The act of Congress permitting the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase preferred stock in national banks and capital debentures or notes of State banks, and the elimination of the double liability on bank shares on new common capital issued as a result of an increase in the bank's capital, has encouraged investments in these stocks. In this connection, the depositors of such banks have been given the added protection of laws which require the building up of a surplus equal to the bank's common capital, this increased surplus operating to take the place of the potential, but uncertain, protection formerly provided through assessment liability on shareholders.

Another provision made it possible for less than all the shareholders and depositors of a closed institution to reorganize and reopen such institution on a basis equitable alike to depositors and shareholders, thereby avoiding the delays and losses incident to receivership. Under this provision many institutions have been reopened and are operating today, which otherwise would have been placed in receivership.

Congress further authorized the Federal Reserve Banks and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make, to participate in the making of, or to give commitments with respect to loans to industry for the purpose of providing it with working capital, particularly where such industry is unable to obtain requisite financial assistance on a reasonable basis from the usual sources. As a result of the authority thus given, banks are enabled, either individually or in cooperation with the Federal Reserve Banks or the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to extend, with the utmost safety, financial assistance under conditions where it would not otherwise be possible to make such loans.

Further assistance has been given to the borrowing public and to the banks through the insurance of mortgages and improvement loans by the Federal Housing Administration. Through the protection given to the banks by such insurance, there has been opened to them a broader field for the utilization of their cash resources, and untold benefits have been afforded to home owners.

The congressional act prohibiting the payment of interest-on-demand deposits and placing certain restrictions on the payment of time deposits has been of great benefit to the banks. During the 5 years prior to the passage of this law member banks alone paid on demand deposits $1,230,242,000, or an average of $246,048,500 per annum. The total assessment paid to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to date by all insured banks in the United States during the nearly 2 years of operation is $41,031,652.85. Annual assessments under the permanent plan are estimated at $35,000,000. The practice of paying interest on demand accounts was generally condemned and denounced by the bankers, but they were powerless to correct the evil until Congress acted. This practice caused unwarranted competition between banks through the payment of high interest rates, which in turn necessitated unsound investments and loaning policies and unreasonable rates of interest to the borrower in order to earn and maintain the payment of interest on demand deposits.

Congress, further, has prohibited loans to executive officers. At the last session the time within which old loans could be paid by executive officers was extended by Congress, largely because of the favorable showing made by executive officers in paying their indebtedness to their banks.

This matter was covered fully in my testimony before the Glass subcommittee of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee in the last session. The committee accepted the recommendation to extend the time of payment. Restrictions and limitations have been placed upon banks with regard to loaning money to affiliates of such banks through the requirement that publicity be given to such relations between the banks and their affiliates. Banks have also been required to divorce their securities affiliates, and institutions which deal in or underwrite securities have been prohibited from taking deposits.

Both the depositing public and organized banking institutions have been aided by legislation designed to eliminate unregulated private banking. It is no longer lawful for anyone to engage in the banking business unregulated by either State or Federal authority. Under the Glass-Steagall Act of 1933 private banks not under State supervision were required to make reports to the Comptroller of the Currency. Five calls were made to these banks for reports of condition, the first one for June 30, 1934, the last one for June 29, 1935. As of June 29, 1935, there were 144 private banks reporting in the United States with total assets of $131,177,000 and total deposits of $68,488,000. In my annual report to Congress recommendation was made that this provision be eliminated for the reason that there seemed to be no corrective power over these banks which could be constitutionally lodged in the Comptroller. The provision was removed, and instead the private banks are required to submit to periodic examinations by the banking authority of the State and are required to make published periodic reports.

Greater latitude has been provided as to time of repayment and the character of assets on which loans may be obtained from Federal Reserve banks. This should prove to be a bulwark in times of stress.

Much has been accomplished in the light of past experiences, and, with intelligent leadership in the banking world and among our public, the causes which brought about the total collapse of the banking structure should never recur. It is a sad commentary on American leadership that 12,677 banks with $7,510,640,000 in deposits have closed during the past 12 years. Some of these failures have been due to poor management and bad investments, but, in addition, this Nation has been overbanked. A mad scramble to establish a bank opposite every gasoline station across this continent is not a situation which can be contemplated with any degree of satisfaction. For the first time in the history of banking in this country, Congress has provided a means to correct this condition by giving to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation the power to refuse to insure a State bank until certain conditions have been complied with and, particularly, until a necessity for the State institution has been shown.

From October 31, 1932, to October 31, 1935, only 66 primary national banks have been chartered by the Comptroller's Office; 29 for the year ending October 31, 1933; 26 for the year ending October 31, 1934; and 11 for the year ending October 31, 1935. This is the smallest number of national banks chartered in any 3-year period during the past 30 years. Prior to that time the office records were not segregated as to primary organizations as distinct from conversions or reorganizations.

We shall now consider the present condition of our national banks. Let us compare the call report for national banks for June 30, 1934, with that for June 30, 1935. Loans and investments in 1935 were $18,085,103,000, an increase of $1,038,807,000 over 1934; total assets were $26,061,065,000, an increase of $2,159,473,000; total deposits were $22,518,246,000, an increase of $2,585,586,000. If we include all banks, national, State, and private, comparing the same two periods, we find an equally favorable picture. Loans and investments on June 30, 1935, were $44,632,286,000, an increase of $1,911,641,000 over 1934; total assets were $60,393,057,000, an increase of $4,233,132,000; total deposits were $51,586,123,000, an increase of $4,961,082,000.

On December 31, 1928, national banks reported the largest amount of deposits and assets ever reported in the national banking system. Let me give you these figures as of December 31 for 1928 and the succeeding years. On December 31, 1928, total assets amounted to $30,589,156,000; for the same day in 1929 they were $28,882,483,000; in 1930, $28,799,684,000; in 1931, $24,662,286,000; in 1932, $23,310,974,000; in 1933, $21,747,483,000; in 1934, $25,629,580,000; and on June 30, 1935, they were $26,061,065,000. Total deposits on December 31, 1928, amounted to $24,347,380,000; for the same day in 1929 they were $22,773,493,000; in 1930, $22,871,646,000; in 1931, $19,244,347,000; in 1932, $18,518,107,000; in 1933, $17,589,882,000; in 1934, $21,676,303,000; and on June 30, 1935, they were $22,518,246,000.

It will be noted that total assets and total deposits continued to decrease from December 31, 1928, to December 31, 1933. They showed a marked increase on December 31, 1934, and again on June 30, 1935. On the latter date the total assets were 85.20 percent of the total assets on December 31, 1928, and the total deposits on June 30, 1935, were 92.49 percent of the December 31, 1928, figure, which was the largest in the history of the system. It should not be overlooked that on June 30, 1935, there were 2,204 less national banks than on December 31, 1928.

Probably a more significant figure is that for bills payable and rediscounts. On December 31, 1928, national banks had borrowed and were indebted in the sum of $785,309,000, and on June 30, 1935, the national banks owed $4,643,000, or less than 1 percent of the figure for December 31, 1928.

During the past year there probably has been more discussion of the earnings of banks than of any other subject connected with banking. For the year ending June 30, 1932, the national banks had a deficit of $139,780,000, or 8.91 percent based on capital; for the year ending June 30, 1933, a deficit of $218,384,000, or 14.39 percent; and for the year ending June 30, 1934, a deficit of $303,546,000, or 17.46 percent. On June 30, 1935, the situation completely changed, and there was a profit of $71,372,000, or 3.93 percent.

Nearly all of this recovery of $71,000,000 as represented in profits was obtained in the first 6 months of the present year. On December 31, 1934, the deficit was $4,893,000.

There is no more important function exercised by our national banks than the administration of trust powers. Those who create trusts in the trust departments of our national banks repose in the officers the highest confidence that one person can place in another. Here the trustor places the whole future of those dependent upon him, and, in many cases, of children unborn. Proper emphasis has not been placed upon this most important function of our banking system. When one contemplates the number of trusts, the amounts involved, and the increase in this particular branch of business, one cannot but feel that a high compliment is implied to the integrity of those entrusted with what might be called nearly sacred powers.

There are 1,578 national banks with active trust departments. They are administering 129,711 individual trusts with assets aggregating $9,251,291,947, and in addition are administering 16,801 corporate trusts, and are acting as trustees for outstanding note and bond issues amounting to $11,605,145,026. Compared with the year 1934, these figures represent a net increase of 8,577, or 6.2 percent in the number of trusts being administered; an increase of $734,740,203, or 8.6 percent, in the volume of individual trust assets under administration; and an increase of $120,683,289, or 1.05 percent, in the volume of note and bond issues outstanding for which national banks have been named as trustees.

An analysis of the $8,341,958,034 of invested trust funds belonging to the private and court trusts under administration revealed that 48.74 percent was in bonds, 29.28 percent in stocks, 7.96 percent in real-estate mortgages, 7.16 percent in real estate, and 6.86 percent consisted of miscellaneous assets. The investment of these trust funds is of the highest importance, and, therefore, this analysis, which is now given out for the first time, should be of considerable interest.

The impressive development of trust activities in national banks is further emphasized by comparing the record in 1935 with that of 1926. This comparison reflects an increase during the 9-year period of 120,459, or 462.36 percent, in the number of trusts being administered, an increase of $8,328,963,270, or 903.04 percent, in the volume of individual trust assets under administration, and an increase of $9,141,591,710, or 371.07 percent, in the volume of note and bond issues outstanding for which national banks were acting as trustees.

It has always been my custom simply to present the facts and never to make a prophecy. These facts, however, and my general knowledge of the banking situation, impel me now to predict that the present 6 months' period will be the best the banks of the Nation have enjoyed for more than 4 years.

In conclusion, permit me to express my deep appreciation of the enthusiastic and wholehearted support which the bankers of the Nation have accorded my rather inexpert efforts to outline what, in my opinion, are proper standards for bankers. The lawyers, the doctors, and members of other professions have boasted of their codes of ethics, and their boasts seem justified, for a large part of the progress these professions have made in claiming and holding public esteem is due to their adherence to a code of ethics.

The storms of yesterday have subsided; the picture presented to you today is one of hope and good faith. You have the facts. A few, no doubt, will still imitate the ostrich with its head in the sand, but the great majority of our financial leaders are looking toward clearing skies with high resolve, with courage, and with faith.

Let us go forward together, rendering a service to a mighty people, and deeply appreciative of their confidence. And may our actions vindicate their faith.

MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS USING THE PANAMA CANAL

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 2288) to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I should like to address myself to the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 2288, being Calendar No. 654, to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes.

Last year I submitted a minority report at the time that the committee voted out the bill favorably. I should be very glad to read that report, Mr. President. If I may say so, I think it is concise, to the point, and convincing. On the other hand, I am reluctant to take the time to read any report which has already been printed, has been on the desk of Senators, and which they have had an opportunity of reading if they cared to do so. Therefore, Mr. President, instead of reading it, I ask unanimous consent that these observations of mine which constitute the minority report on the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, being Calendar No. 654, be placed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The views of the minority are as follows:

The bill (S. 2288) is sponsored by the War Department and the Canal authorities for the purpose of eliminating the United States Rules of Measurement in determining the tonnage upon which is levied the tolls for vessels transiting the Panama Canal. The bill provides that after September 1, 1936, tolls shall be assessed only on tonnage determined under the Panama Canal Rules of Measurement. These rules may be amended from time to time by Presidential proclamation without further legislative action.

The rate of tolls to be prescribed by the President may not exceed $1 per net vessel-ton as determined under these rules nor be less than 60 cents. Lower rates of tolls are made mandatory for vessels transiting the Canal in ballast, and exemption from payment is prescribed for deck loads except to the extent that they exceed 20 percent of the net vessel tonnage.

The result of the bill is to effect a marked redistribution of the toll burden between different classes of ships, and to make possible a substantial increase in the total tolls that may be collected.

In his annual report for 1933, the Governor of the Panama Canal recommended the assessment of tolls at the maximum rate authorized in this bill. However, after consideration of protests received from steamship lines, the Secretary of War advised the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, in May 1934, that if legislation similar to the bill were enacted he would recommend to the President the adoption of a toll on laden vessels of not more than 90 cents. If applied to the traffic through the Canal during the fiscal year 1934, this rate would slightly reduce the aggregate toll collections. However, it would effect a very marked redistribution in the toll burden between different classes of ships as the following table demonstrates:

Type and nationality of ship	Increase or decrease	Percentage increase or decrease	Increase or decrease per transit
Passenger ships:
United States registry	$471,762	22	$1.371
Foreign registry	375,171	10	471
Total	846,933	15	742
Shelter-deck cargo ships (usually 3-deck ships):
United States registry	147,229	7	349
Foreign registry	101,488	2	95
Total	248,717	4	167

Type and nationality of ship	Increase or decrease	Percentage increase or decrease	Increase or decrease per transit
Other dry-cargo ships (usually 2 or less decks):
United States registry	[1] 92,950	[1] 3	[1] 109
Foreign registry	[1] 285,794	[1] 9	[1] 364
Total	[1] 378,744	[1] 6	[1] 231
Oil-tank ships:
United States registry	[1] 577,910	[1] 17	[1] 913
Foreign registry	[1] 342,195	[1] 19	[1] 1,107
Total	[1] 920,105	[1] 18	[1] 977

[1] Decrease.

Thus it is apparent that even if there is no increase in the aggregate tolls collected, nevertheless the effect of the bill will be to impose large increases in the tolls of the passenger and general-cargo ships which, under present-day conditions, are least able to bear this added burden, and to effect corresponding reductions in the tolls paid by bulk carriers most of which are industrially owned and none of which have protested against the existing system.

The enormity of the burden imposed upon the leading American lines using the canal is evident from their testimony at the hearings both before this committee and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. In the case of one passenger and general-cargo line it was testified that the annual increase in tolls at the 90-cent rate would be $400,000 and $551,000 at the maximum rate of $1. Another line's tolls would be increased $208,000 annually at the 90-cent rate and $297,000 at the $1 rate. A third line would pay $140,000 more at the 90-cent rate and $276,000 more at the proposed maximum. Representatives of a fourth line testified that its tolls would be increased between $290,000 and $300,000 at the maximum rate.

The ships operated by these lines are among the most desirable in American merchant marine, and of the type whose operation it is most necessary to encourage in the interest of both commerce and national defense. The imposition of this large additional burden at a time when they are already suffering operating losses is entirely unwarranted, particularly as the passenger and general-cargo ships are paying more than their share of the tolls, based on weight-carrying capacities.

No sound reason has been advanced for abandoning the tonnage determined under the United States Rules of Measurements as the basis for the assessment of tolls at the Panama Canal. Our national registry rules have developed out of our maritime experience and that of other seafaring nations. Their principal object and primary purpose is to afford a fair and equitable basis for the assessment of dues and charges for the use of publicly improved and publicly maintained waterways. They are almost universally accepted throughout the world for the purpose for which they were designed. In addition, in many ports, they are accepted by private parties as a basis for the assessment of charges for use of facilities or services rendered to ships, such as drydocking, dockage, pilotage, etc. It would seem most unreasonable to assume that tonnage determined under these rules would not furnish an equally suitable basis for assessment of Panama Canal tolls.

Moreover, the bill perpetuates a dual system under which American ships will continue to be measured according to two systems of measurement, one administered by the Department of Commerce, the other by the War Department. This "dual system" of measurement creates conflicting standards with which the American shipowner is compelled to comply, and unnecessarily complicates the efficient management of his business. No other maritime nation has two sets of rules for the measurement of ships which fly its flag.

From the point of view of the Government, this system has resulted in disagreement and friction between two coordinate departments, and involves duplication of effort and overlapping of functions for which there is no reasonable justification. The enactment of the bill would perpetuate this system, which is not only inconsistent with sound organization, but violates the principles prescribed by Congress for the reorganization of executive departments, as set forth in the act approved June 30, 1932:

"TITLE IV. REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

"DECLARATION OF POLICY

"SEC. 401. In order to further reduce expenditures and increase efficiency in government it is declared to be the policy of Congress—

"(a) To group, coordinate, and consolidate executive and administrative agencies of the Government, as nearly as may be, according to major purpose;

"(b) To reduce the number of such agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head;

"(c) To eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort."

If the elimination of the dual system of measurement is really to be accomplished, the proper course of procedure would be to establish a single set of measurement rules under which ship tonnage could be determined for all purposes, including the payment of Canal tolls. Only in this way can overlapping functions be eliminated and administrative costs reduced. Moreover, their administration is a commercial function with which the War Department should neither be required nor expected to deal, and for this reason it should be centralized in the Bureau of Navigation of the Department of Commerce.

The proponents of this bill have cited the Suez Canal as an illustration of an improved waterway which has adopted its own rules of measurement for ascertaining tonnage upon which to assess tolls. The Suez Canal is owned and operated by a private corporation, and for this reason it cannot properly apply the measurement rules of any nation. Furthermore, its primary object is to earn as large a return as possible for its stockholders, rather than the equitable distribution of operating costs over all commercial traffic. Its success in attaining this objective is strikingly demonstrated by the fact that distributions of profits to stockholders have averaged over 200 percent annually over a period of years and that its shares are currently quoted at about 20 times the original investment. Clearly a system of measuring ships designed to yield such profits should not be accepted as the pattern for the charges to be assessed by our Government against American ships which transit through the Panama Canal.

The majority report alleges that the enactment of the bill is necessary to prevent shipowners from effecting large reductions in their tolls by making minor alterations which, without reducing the actual earning capacity of the ships, have reduced the net tonnage as determined under the United States Rules of Measurement. Instances are cited of alterations to 38 American ships during 1933 by means of which substantial reductions in tolls were effected.

In the putting forward this argument the proponents of the bill ignore these vital factors:

(1) The carrying capacity of cargo ships is materially reduced by reason of these alterations. One company which effected changes in 18 of its ships during 1933 pointed out that the weight-carrying capacity of these ships was reduced by 1,362 tons per ship as a result of these alterations, although the reduction in the United States net tonnage was only 972 tons per ship.

(2) The interpretation and administration of the United States rules rests entirely within the control of the executive department of the Government. If this administration has been lax, the remedy does not lie in setting up another set of measurement rules for the sole purpose of assessing canal tolls, which rules can be changed at will by the Chief Executive.

(3) The United States rules have been uniformly applied without discrimination, thus affording equality of opportunity to all.

The Canal authorities admit that the Panama Canal rules of measurement require modification and that unless modified an undue hardship will be suffered by certain types of ships. For this reason the President is authorized in section 2 to appoint a special committee of three to recommend such changes in the Panama Canal rules as in its judgment are necessary to provide an equitable system of levying tolls. There is no requirement in the bill that such a committee be appointed or that the rules be revised, and the basis of assessing tolls provided for in section 1 goes into effect on September 1, 1936, whether or not such revision is undertaken or made.

Obviously it is not fair to the shipowner to enact the legislation before revising the rules of measurement. Unless he knows what changes are to be made in the rules he cannot pass judgment on their fairness as applied to his fleet. No valid reason is cited why this procedure cannot be followed.

Moreover, the enactment of section 1 places unreasonable restrictions on the committee's consideration of all factors involved in an equitable system of levying tolls. For example, section 1 requires that tolls be "based on net vessel-tons of one hundred cubic feet each of actual earning capacity. * * *" This mandate would restrict the committee's consideration, to the cubical content of the ship, and would prevent its giving due consideration to weight-carrying capacity as well as to many other relevant factors which have been suggested during the course of the hearing. Should the committee ignore the restrictions imposed in section 1, and recommend a system of assessing tolls not in harmony therewith, the President is powerless to put such recommendations into effect without further legislation by Congress. The folly of authorizing an investigation into the method of assessing tolls and simultaneously prescribing a particular method without awaiting the recommendations of the investigating agency is too obvious to require further elaboration. Clearly, further legislation must logically await the result of such an investigation.

Opposition to the bill may be summarized as follows:

1. The bill increases very drastically the tolls on American general-cargo and passenger ships, which are now operating at a loss.

2. In proportion to their weight-carrying capacities, the general-cargo and passenger ships are now paying more than their share of the toll burden.

3. The bill increases tolls on American general-cargo and passenger vessels by larger percentages than it does similar ships of foreign registry. Moreover, the reductions effected in tolls of American oil tankers are relatively smaller than those received by tankers of foreign registry.

4. Our national registry rules represent the result of our maritime experience and afford an equitable basis for charges for the use of waterways improved and maintained at public expense. There is no valid reason why they should be eliminated as a basis for assessment of Panama Canal tolls. These rules, by exempting spaces which do not contribute to the buoyancy of the ship, give due consideration to both weight-carrying capacity as well as to cubic capacity and, for this reason, afford a more equitable basis for the assessment of tolls.

5. The bill permanently establishes two conflicting systems of measurement of American vessels by separate departments of our Government. This duplication of effort is unwarranted and places in the War Department what is admittedly a commercial function—that of measuring commercial vessels.

6. The administration and interpretation of the United States Rules of Measurement is vested in the Department of Commerce, and consequently other more appropriate remedies are available for such abuses as may exist in the present system. Moreover, such alterations as the Canal authorities have complained of have had the effect of reducing the weight-carrying capacities of the ships in which such changes were made.

7. The enactment of new legislation should await the investigation authorized under section 2. The absurdity of authorizing an investigation into an equitable and just system of levying tolls and then simultaneously prescribing a particular method without awaiting the result of the investigation must be clearly apparent.

W. WARREN BARBOUR.

Mr. BARBOUR. To those who will have read the RECORD, what I am now going to say in a sense will be superfluous. For the purpose of this address, however, I do wish to add a short message, and in doing so I shall recapitulate, so to speak, the facts which I think are most pertinent and which I feel are brought out very clearly in the minority report already mentioned.

Section 1 of the bill provides for the establishment of tolls on tonnage determined under the Panama Canal rules of measurement, somewhat modified in this bill. In other words, the rules that I have referred to, as I have just said, are modified in certain respects in the bill now before the Senate.

Section 2 provides for an investigation to ascertain the best method of measurement of ships for the assessment of tolls, and a report to be made to the President 6 months prior to the effective date of section 1.

Manifestly, Mr. President, if such an investigation is to be made, permanent legislation should await the information made available by such an investigation.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield.

Mr. DUFFY. I do not recall that the Senator from New Jersey was present the other day when this bill came up, but the chairman of the committee at that time announced that he intended to move that section 2 be stricken from the bill as reported out by the committee.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I am grateful to the Senator for drawing that fact to my attention. I was not in the Senate chamber when the distinguished Senator the chairman of the committee made that observation, but it seems to me what he suggests is very definitely putting the cart before the horse, if he did make any such observation as that.

I can understand, however, why anyone who is desirous above all else of having these rates put into effect should do everything he could to avoid the investigation in the meantime, but I cannot understand the logic of first setting the rates and then making an investigation of what the rates should be and on what basis as far as this matter of measurement is concerned.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. GORE. I think I can explain that to the Senator. The pending bill fixes a maximum rate of a dollar and a minimum rate of 60 cents. Those constitute the maximum and minimum fixed rates. Under this bill, if passed, the President will fix the exact tolls to be charged within those limits, between the maximum of a dollar and the minimum of 60 cents. The object of creating the committee was that their report and findings should be submitted to the President, and upon that report the President would fix the exact rates to be imposed and collected between the upper and lower rates, the maximum and the minimum.

As I suggested at the time, the shipping interests seemed to take exception to that provision and I thought were taking advantage of it to make a plea for unnecessary delay. I felt that if they objected to that provision I would consent to strike it out, which would perhaps lessen their objection. I may say, however, to the Senator that I am assured by the Canal officials that an investigation will be made even though section 2 be stricken from the bill.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I am glad always to have heard the Senator's views, and he knows how highly I respect him and his views.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield to me?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield very gladly.

Mr. COPELAND. I am not quite sure that I understood the Senator from Oklahoma. Did I understand him correctly to say that the only purpose of section 2 was that the committee proposed to be appointed should make an investigation to determine what the rates should be?

Mr. GORE. No; not to determine what the rates should be, but to ascertain the facts, the changes in the construction of ships since the original measure passed in 1912, and on changes also that have been made in order, I take it, to accommodate the ships to the rules and regulations of the Commissioner of Navigation; and then to lay the facts before the President, the President himself under this bill, as under the original act, to fix the tolls.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. BARBOUR. I was going to say, if I may, before I yielded again to the Senator from New York—and I will be very glad to yield again to him in a moment—that section 2 provides for an investigation to ascertain the best method of the measurement of ships for the assessment of tolls.

Mr. GORE. Yes, indeed; there are two provisions, the one referring to measurement and the other to tolls.

Mr. BARBOUR. The last is just as important as is the first.

Mr. COPELAND. It is more so.

Mr. BARBOUR. The two things are each a part of the whole equation. And it is just this fact that I was going to point out following the remarks of the Senator from Oklahoma. In other words, just what I have just now said following the inquiry of the Senator from New York.

Mr. GORE. There are two points, the rules of measurement and the rates of toll.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield further?

Mr. BARBOUR. I gladly yield.

Mr. COPELAND. If I can understand the English language, the second section provides for "a study and investigation of the rules for the measurement of vessels" as well as of the tolls to be charged.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. So far as I am concerned, I would welcome the enactment in the bill of the second section, because some agency of the Government ought to take time enough to study this problem with a view to the establishment of rules of measurement and rates of toll and to decide the questions in such a way as not to impose a further burden upon American shipping, which will be done if this bill shall pass in its present form.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I agree wholeheartedly with the Senator from New York and, so far as I am concerned, if the second section of this bill were the burden of the bill itself, I would be for it rather than against it.

However, to continue, if I may, we have the United States rules of measurement for ships, which rules are applied in every conceivable case save for the one purpose of ascertaining tolls on vessels using the Panama Canal. Tolls are now assessed there in accordance with the United States rules, and there seems to exist no good reason, from my point of view, why the War Department should make a different set of rules for this one purpose than the rules prescribed by the Congress and administered by the Department of Commerce and otherwise universally applicable.

It has been said that the Suez Canal has its own set of rules for fixing tolls, and I believe that is so. The Suez Canal, however, is owned by a private corporation that pays 200 percent annually in dividends to its stockholders and is concerned solely with charging what the traffic will bear. I do not say that in a critical or invidious sense, but it is a situation which most certainly does not and should not prevail so far as the Panama Canal is concerned.

The Canal authorities maintain that if a 90-cent rate is applied the total of tolls under the proposed system will not vary greatly from the existing total. That may be true; but let me point out, Mr. President, that the burden on various classes of ships will differ very materially. The provisions of section 1 will increase tolls on passenger ships and general cargo ships, which already pay more than any other type of ship in proportion to their weight-carrying capacity by more, as a matter of fact, than a million dollars a year, which will thus correspondingly reduce the tolls on bulk carriers, tankers, and ships of that kind. In other words, the common carriers and the producers whose commodities they transport will be penalized in the neighborhood of a million dollars annually in order to relieve the industrially owned private carriers of substantially the same amount.

I wish to say in the same breath, however, in that connection, Mr. President, that I do not mean for one moment to indicate that I feel for a moment that this proposed legislation was introduced in the interest of anybody or any type of carrier or anything of that sort. My own interest is just as much in one type of carrier as in another, and I believe there has not been any pressure brought upon anyone for any particular type of carrier. The fact remains, however, that there will be a great difference brought about and that a much greater burden will be put on what might be called in lay language the ordinary type of passenger and freight ships, and that an equal burden in tolls will be lifted from the industrially owned vessels that carry their own products or commodities.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question at that point?

Mr. BARBOUR. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. If the charge is increased on the common carriers, as the Senator has just stated, who is going to pay for that? Of necessity it must be American citizens who ship goods through the canal. There will have to be imposed on them an additional tax sufficient to pay this addition to the tolls. Am I not correct in that contention?

Mr. BARBOUR. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. DUFFY. In the last few years vessels have been cutting holes in their decks and bulkheads and thereby reducing, by that artificial means, the rates which they have to pay to go through the canal. Have those savings been reflected in any way by a lessening of the rates that the shippers have had to pay? I do not think that was brought out in the committee, and I am just asking for information regarding it.

Mr. BARBOUR. The Senator may be entirely correct as far as the pact is concerned. That is a very pertinent and sensible question, but I think I have just as pertinent and sensible an answer for it as far as the situation at present is concerned. The whole point being that the premise of the Senator is certainly no longer applicable since the enactment of the Coastwise Load Line Act of 1935, approved August 27, 1935. In other words, it is no longer possible to exempt any of the cargo-carrying space under the United States rules of measurement without—and this is important—at the same time affecting a corresponding reduction in the ship's weight-carrying capacity.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again? I do not wish to interrupt him if it is not agreeable.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am glad to yield.

Mr. DUFFY. Is it not a fact that shipowners are continuously cutting holes in the decks of their ships because of the saving thereby accomplished? As I understand, during the last few years the Japanese have materially reduced the cost of the tolls paid by their vessels going through the Panama Canal by cutting these tonnage openings in the decks and in the bulkheads.

Mr. BARBOUR. The force of the explanation which I have just made, I thought was entirely clear, but apparently it has escaped the Senator. The answer is: If they do that, they are forced to carry less tonnage.

Mr. DUFFY. Certainly; but they would not do it if they were not thereby saving money in the aggregate; otherwise there would not be any sense in doing it.

Mr. BARBOUR. Exactly; and they do not do it any longer, because if they do it they do not gain anything by it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Very gladly.

Mr. COPELAND. I think the Senator from New Jersey made an effective answer. This practice on the part of the Japanese and others—perhaps by some of our own shipping—has now been thwarted by the load-line enactment. There is a limit now to what the ships may carry. The Senator from New Jersey has mentioned that all of them are on the same plane because of the limitation placed on the load line.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, there is one point which I intended to make a little earlier and to which I will return, though I welcome the interruptions, if I may call them such, because they are pertinent and helpful.

It has been said, I think either by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], or possibly in the hearings which, as a member of the committee, I attended last year, that it was the expectation and hope that because of increased business generally through the Canal there would be quite naturally a reduction in tolls; in other words, the Canal would charge less as it did more business. As a matter of fact, there is apparently no hope of any such thing. If Senators will examine the printed hearings of the joint committee on the bill at pages 29, 30, and 31, they will see that the revenues of the Canal have been mounting and not going down. The revenues in 1933 were $553,000,000; in 1934, $539,000,000; and in 1935, $549,000,000. It will be found also that there is a fixed expense of between $15,000,000 and $16,000,000 a year for interest; in other words, the debt structure expense.

I think it is fair to point out—though I do so in the same spirit in which I pointed out certain other facts, because I am not criticizing the management of the Canal in this instance—that there are many charges which are more expensive in relation to the Panama Canal than is so in relation to anything approaching a first-class port anywhere else. I refer specifically to transfer charges for moving cargoes on the docks, pumping charges in relation to tankage, and other such charges, which, if studied, will show that those who use the Canal are paying the full price for that character of service.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BARBOUR. I am very glad to yield.

Mr. DUFFY. The charges for the military, the forts, and all that sort of thing are not included.

Mr. BARBOUR. No. I am glad the Senator brought out that point, because in my reference to expense of the conduct of the Canal I have, I think, eliminated everything in reference to the fortifications and other Army aspects of the undertaking.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BONE. I note in the report of the committee that the cost of handling at the present time is about $543,000,000. Can the Senator advise whether any part of that reflects the cost of the fortifications of the Canal?

Mr. BARBOUR. No; my understanding is that it does not.

Mr. BONE. I wondered if the committee hearings indicated whether any portion of that amount is properly allocated in that way?

Mr. BARBOUR. Perhaps the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] can enlighten the Senator from Washington.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. A number of years ago a study of the cost of the Canal was made and an effort was made to arrive at that part of the cost of the Canal which should be charged to the military value of the Canal and what part should be allocated to the commercial uses of the Canal. While I do not have the exact figures in mind, I have a vague impression that it was somewhere around one-third of the costs of the Canal which are properly to be charged to its defense features and advantages. It was at least that much. The exact figures appear somewhere in the hearings.

Mr. BONE. I wondered whether the receipts of the Canal in past years have been sufficient to carry the operating costs and to provide any fund to amortize the cost of the Canal. Has there ever been any effort to set up a fund to amortize the cost of the Canal reflected in its outstanding bond issue? I only seek information.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Gladly.

Mr. COPELAND. If I am correctly advised, the amortization fund which is set up provides for the payment of the cost of the Canal and also the cost of the military defenses.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BARBOUR. Certainly.

Mr. DUFFY. Surely the Senator from New York would not intentionally make an incorrect statement, but I distinctly recall the testimony was that it did not include anything that has to do with the military features of the defense of the Canal. I believe that is the fact.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator has the evidence, I hope he will bring it before us because that is an important matter.

Mr. BONE. Are the revenues of the Canal sufficient to carry the operating costs and provide any reasonable or safe margin over and above the operating costs?

Mr. BARBOUR. I believe the revenues are well in excess of the operating costs.

Mr. BONE. Perhaps the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] can enlighten us. I am inclined to look upon a public operation of that sort as something that ought to be conducted as cheaply as possible, of course, having in mind always efficiency of operation, but if the revenues now and over a period of years have been sufficient to cover the elements of cost, is there any legitimate reason now for attempting to raise the rates?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. The question propounded by the Senator from Washington is pertinent. The receipts balance the Budget, running about $25,000,000 a year, about $10,000,000 of which covers the expense of operation and about $15,000,000 of which covers the capitalized value of the Canal.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is, the interest charges?

Mr. GORE. Yes. It is not the purpose of the proposed legislation to increase aggregate receipts from the operation of the Canal. Under the measure the rates are reduced from $1.20 a ton to $1 as the maximum. The aggregate receipts will be approximately the same. The Secretary of War has already announced that if this measure becomes a law he will not recommend that the President impose a maximum of $1 but will recommend a maximum of 90 cents.

The point is that under the bill all tolls will be assessed on tonnage and all ships will be required to pay the same charge on their cargo-carrying capacity, on their earning capacity. The tolls will be regulated by law and by rules and regulations issued in accordance with the law and will not be subject to the caprice and manipulation of individual shipowners and individual shipping concerns.

Was the Senator from Washington present when I made reference to the Empress of Britain the other day?

Mr. BONE. No; I was absent at the time.

Mr. GORE. I may merely add that when the Empress of Britain passes through the Suez Canal she pays a toll of $28,000 or $29,000. When the same vessel transits the Panama Canal she pays a toll of $18,900. One reason for that is that under the United States rule of measurement—not the Panama Canal rule, but the United States rule of measurement—passenger space is exempt. On that great vessel, one of the finest that sails the seas, there is a social deck comprising 3,300 tons. There was a cloak room on that deck where the passengers checked their wraps. The owners of the vessel were advised that by converting that cloak room into a so-called cabin they could lift the 3,300 tons out of the toll-paying space and make it exempt space.

Accordingly, they placed a bed in that room, with a portable washstand and chiffonier. The room has never been used for sleeping quarters and never will be so used, but under the technical rules adopted by the United States Commissioner of Navigation, that took 3,300 tons of cargo-carrying space or passenger-carrying space or social space out of the requirement to pay tolls, and excused that vessel on that one item alone of paying $4,400 each transit through the Canal to the Government of this country.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I know the chairman of the committee, my distinguished friend from Oklahoma, will not misunderstand me if I continue. I wish to occupy only a moment more anyway.

Mr. GORE. I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is quite all right.

In a nutshell, to sum up the matter, the actual result of section 1 would be, regardless of what we may say about it or of what our views may be in respect to the justice or injustice of that section, that the ordinary type of what I term "passenger ships" and "freight carriers", vessels that take passengers and the merchandise made by the manufacturer, the products of the farm, and others, through the Canal, is going to be burdened to the tune of about an additional million dollars, which million dollars is going to inure to the benefit of another type of ship; and that type of ship is the industrially owned vessel, such as the tanker, the ore ship, and other vessels of that kind.

Again I say, as I said before, that I am not intimating for one moment that the owners of the latter type of shipping have sought this legislation because of the relief it will accord them. I do not say for one moment either that any Senator who is interested in this bill has any such idea at all; but I do say that that is going to be the result nevertheless. I do say, as I said at the outset, that section 2 calls for an investigation not only of rates but to ascertain the best method of measurement of ships for the assessment of tolls; and when that is the very point in this whole legislation I cannot for the life of me see the logic of not having the investigation first, and then seeing what is the proper method to pursue and what are the proper tolls to charge. Why there should be this very special, unusual treatment of the general premise of measurements and tolls so far as the Panama Canal is concerned is a mystery to me.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I do not believe the Senator quite appreciates the purpose of this measure and the point of it.

The pending bill fixes the maximum and the minimum rates of toll for passing through the Panama Canal. The maximum rate is $1. The minimum rate is 60 cents. Between the maximum and the minimum the President is authorized to fix the tolls under this bill, as he was authorized to do under the original act.

The purpose of the proposed legislation in section 2 is to create a committee to investigate both subjects—the rules of measurement and the rates of toll—and submit that report within 6 months or within a given time after the passage of the measure. Then the President, under the general authorization in section 1, could consider the recommendations of the committee, the recommended rules, the recommended tolls, and could proceed by proclamation to fix the proper rules and the proper rates. The purpose of this is to avoid endless delay.

This measure miscarried through an opinion of the Attorney General rendered 20 years ago. Efforts have been made at every session since that time to enact this proposed legislation. Every Secretary of War has recommended its enactment. The measure has four times passed the House of Representatives. President Wilson recommended it. President Roosevelt has recommended it. It never has passed the Senate.

There will be no delay. If this measure passes, the investigation will be made by the committee. If the measure had passed as it was drawn, when the report was submitted the President would consider the rules, the recommendations as to rates, would fix the rules and the rates, and then it would go into operation.

Those who are sponsoring this measure do not want another 20 years' delay after section 2, if it shall be passed alone, shall be acted upon, the rules recommended, and the rates recommended before we stop the discriminations that are going on, and of which advantage is being taken by shipping concerns under the existing rules and regulations.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I am always glad to yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. BARBOUR. No; I was not through; but I am glad to yield to the Senator at any time.

Mr. GORE. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is perfectly all right. I am always glad to yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

The Senator has said that, in a sense, the meat of the coconut is that rates between one figure and another have been fixed. I do not know how they have been arrived at, and I do not know why those particular figures were fixed. I know that if we should have the examination that is proposed here, we should know whether that range is correct. It is perfectly fair to assume that it is somewhere in that range, of course; but why should we be in such terrible haste at this particular time to seize rigidly on a range of rates when we admit that there is to be an investigation to determine what the actual rate should be in respect to a study of the rules of measurement in relation to it?

Furthermore, please bear in mind that as far as a 20-year delay or a 10-year delay or any other delay is concerned, the bill calls for an investigation and a report within 6 months. It has to be within that time. Then we will know "where we are at."

Mr. President, I feel that we have gone about this whole important matter, so far as this particular bill is concerned, as I said when I began, "hind-end on", to put it bluntly. I feel that the charge that certain vessels are misinterpreting their space, so to speak, was taken care of, if they ever were doing any such thing, by the Coastwise Load Line Act of 1935, which I mentioned before. Please remember, there is no objection on my part to an examination of the question of Panama Canal tolls with a view to a possible revision up or down, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I think the Senator misinterprets the effect of the Load Line Act which we passed in August last, or the rules and regulations made under it. The load line law was applied to foreign ships engaged in foreign commerce passing through the Canal as far back as 1929; and, in spite of that, all this manipulation has been under way, as I shall show again in a few minutes. It was applied to the coastwise trade, I believe, last August. The load line relates to weight, whereas tolls are imposed upon space, tonnage.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, we sometimes have our honest differences of opinion. I am sure no one can disagree about that. It does not mean that I am always right, for I am by no means always right; but I am perfectly convinced, and absolutely sincere in my conviction, that the thing to do is to make the investigation first, and limit the time as rigidly as we like within which a report shall be made. This is a very difficult subject. It is an especially technical subject. I think there are few Senators who understand it. Certainly I do not pretend to be an expert on maritime matters myself. The question is a very technical one as I have said, except in its general phases and general applications.

I very much hope, particularly after reading the minority report, of which I spoke at the beginning of my remarks, and which I took the liberty of having inserted in the RECORD—I almost wish now I had read it rather than having that done—that the Senate will feel I was justified in making the minority report, and maintaining the position I still take in relation to the proposed legislation.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator answer a question?

Mr. BARBOUR. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. BONE. What particular type, if any, of boats would be directly affected by the pending bill, or are taking advantage of the present law to make the changes the Senator from Oklahoma suggests, as to cutting holes in the deck and putting a cabin on a deck where no cabin normally would be? What type of ships are now particularly able to take advantage of the existing toll regulations?

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I do not think they can now take the advantage which they may or may not have taken heretofore. We have labored over that same question heretofore, and I think I have already answered it. The Senator from Oklahoma feels that they still can do so. I think, because of the subsequent legislation of which I have spoken, that they cannot.

To answer the Senator's question specifically, however, obviously they cannot take advantage of anything of this kind except by virtue of the type of ship involved. That is true of oil tankers or any others that are to be benefited if this bill goes through. So by the same token the only kind of a ship that has sufficient elasticity, so to speak, in its construction, to do any such thing as we have been speaking of, is the ordinary sort of ship that carries passengers and the usual freight cargo. But I reassert that these ships are not doing, and cannot do, this sort of thing any longer because of the Coastwise Load Line Act of 1935.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma referred a moment ago to the Empress of Britain, I believe, where a cabin for sleeping purposes was deliberately built on a deck which was ordinarily used for social purposes.

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. BONE. Can the Senator advise me what there is in existing regulations that would permit the owner or owners of a vessel deliberately to do that, and thereby remove over 3,000 tons of dead weight from the operation of tolls? What sort of elastic regulations exist that permit that?

Mr. GORE. I do not wonder at the Senator's inquiry. He stated that he was not present when the bill came up a few days since. The present condition is an anomaly. It is not rational. It is not logical. It resulted from what we regard as a misinterpretation by the Attorney General of the original act of Congress.

The original law, passed in 1912, fixed a maximum of $1.25 and a minimum of 75 cents according to which tolls might be levied and collected. In other words, tolls might not exceed $1.25 per registered ton nor be less than 75 cents per registered ton.

The President was authorized to issue a proclamation fixing the rate between those two points. He did issue a proclamation fixing the toll to be charged under the Panama Canal rules at $1.20 per ton for laden vessels and 40 percent less, or 72 cents per ton, on vessels in ballast.

Some of the shipping concerns on the west coast operating lumber ships raised a question contending that the words "net registered ton" in the statute were controlling, and that they related to registered tons as ascertained and determined by the Commissioner of Navigation.

I repeat what I said the other day on that point for the information of the Senator. We have now, as a result of that opinion, two sets of rules for the measurement of vessels, one known as the United States rules, the other known as the Panama Canal rules, the latter the result of a great deal of investigation. The first set of rules of measurement, the United States rules, has been developed during the last three-quarters of a century, designed to ascertain the tonnage on which the vessel should pay taxes and should pay port charges and harbor dues in this country and in foreign ports.

Mr. BONE. Is that rule applied by the Customs Service?

Mr. GORE. Yes; it would be.

Mr. BONE. I wondered what governmental agency applied the so-called United States rules.

Mr. GORE. They have been evolved and developed by the Commissioner of Navigation; now, I believe, they call it the Bureau of Navigation. The objective was to secure as low a tonnage registry as possible in order to reduce the port charges and harbor dues to as low a point as possible.

I may say to the Senator that commercial nations have a sort of comity in that respect. Foreign governments accept our registry when they impose charges upon our ships in entering their ports. In return we accept their registered tonnage without question when their vessels enter our ports. That has constituted a constant motive on the part of every government to reduce its registered tonnage in order to reduce the port charges, lighterage, and charges of that sort in foreign ports and in home ports.

It had no reference to the earning capacity of a ship, no reference to the cargo-carrying capacity of a ship, and the rules were designed for an entirely different object, namely, in order to cut down port charges and similar charges.

The Panama Canal rules, which were patterned largely after the Suez Canal rules, were based on the cargo-carrying capacity of the ship, were based on the earning capacity of the ship, and applied to every ship alike in accordance with its earning capacity.

I will say to the Senator, to illustrate, in addition to the instance of the Empress of Britain, during 17 years, running from 1915 to 1931, inclusive, the aggregate tonnage passing through the Panama Canal, according to the United States rules of measurement, were 272,000,000 tons, whereas under the Panama Canal rules of measurement they would have amounted to 331,000,000 tons.

There was a difference of 60,000,000 tons resulting from the different rules of measurement, and the United States Government lost more than $60,000,000 as a result of this dual system of measurements, which nobody intended should happen in the beginning.

During 10 years running out in 1931 the difference between the tonnage passing through the Panama Canal under the United States rules and the Panama Canal rules amounted to 52,000,000 tons, and the Government lost in the neighborhood of $60,000,000 as a result of this accidental dual system, which was not a matter of design.

During the year 1934 the total tonnage passing through the Canal under the United States rules was 24,000,000 tons. Under the Panama Canal rules it would have amounted to 31,000,000 tons. There was a difference of 7,000,000 tons, involving a loss to the United States Government of more than $8,000,000.

I will say to the Senator that he and I could have companion ships, sister ships, identical in every detail from stem to stern and from keel to topmast. I would cut a hole in the weather deck of my ship 4 feet wide and 18 feet long, cover it with a tarpaulin, and I would take out the entire deck space between that deck and the next deck below it, in some instances a space of 2,000 tons, and that tonnage, even though the space were loaded to the uttermost inch with cargo, would go through, without paying tolls. The Senator not cutting a hole in the weather deck of his ship would pay on the space between the weather deck and the next deck below, on the entire tonnage space, even though he did not have 1 pound of cargo in the space.

Mr. President, that is the monstrous anomaly that has resulted from this dual system, and the pending legislation is intended to correct that mistake, and that is its only purpose.

No ship, if this bill shall become a law, will pay more tolls than it ought to pay. Some of the ships will pay more tolls than they have been paying. A privilege will be taken away from them of which they have availed themselves by cutting a tonnage opening in the weather deck. I ought to add, for the Senator's information, that when I cut this little slot in the weather deck of my ship I could not reduce the tolls by that device alone; I would have to put a freeing port in the side of the ship near the deck below, a little contraption about 18 inches square, a flap that lets the theoretical water out when it comes through this theoretical tonnage opening above. That would not be quite enough. In addition to that I would have to put in three scupper pipes on each side about 3½ inches in diameter, to drain out the remaining parts of this theoretical water. I could close those scupper pipes with rubber or with wooden plugs, making them airtight and watertight, and I would still be within the rules and escape the tolls. But if I close them with a steel cap or with cement, then I have made a permanent sealing of the scupper pipes, and I would have to pay the tolls.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURRAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I should prefer not to interrupt the Senator if he wishes to go ahead with his argument, but I have some questions to ask, which I can put to the Senator when he presents the bill. I understand the Senator is now answering questions.

Mr. GORE. Yes. One more point and I shall be glad to answer, now or later, as the Senator may choose.

Some of the commercial ships would pay more tolls than they pay now, because they have been availing themselves of the privilege to which I have referred. Some other ships of commerce would pay less than they pay now, because they have not availed themselves of this privilege. They have not cut holes in the decks of their ships; therefore they pay full tolls.

It is true, as I understand, that as a class the oil-tank vessel or the tank steamers would benefit ratably more than the others. That is not the design of the proposed legislation, as the Senator says, and the concerns owning such ships did not appear before the committee. They made no representations, so far as I know.

The reason why they will profit by the pending bill in a reduction of rates is due to the particular kind of traffic in which they are engaged. They bring oil from the west coast, they come east through the Canal laden, but as a matter of necessity they make the return trip in ballast. They have no cargoes going back, they have no earnings on the return trip to the west, and this measure will result in a lower charge on ships in ballast, which is the reason why they will profit from the legislation.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator one more question?

Mr. GORE. Certainly.

Mr. BONE. Under the so-called United States rules, I understand the Senator suggests that shipping companies, for the purpose of using these rules for their advantage, have fixed the value of boats for taxation purposes, and that those values have been accepted. Is that the case?

Mr. GORE. I would not want to go so far as to speak on the question of taxation under the various State laws, because I am not advised as to that, but they have reduced their tonnage for the purpose of paying tolls, which to that extent has the same effect, of course.

Mr. BONE. It is a rather interesting commentary on this situation, although it would be a side issue, that the owners of a vessel may fix its value for taxation purposes. It would be a very lovely situation for the average home owner in the United States if he could do that.

Mr. GORE. That is exactly what they are doing with reference to the Panama tolls, and that is exactly what this legislation is designed to stop.

I say this to the Senator from Washington: There is a gentleman in this country who makes a business of advising shipping concerns as to how they can take advantage of the United States rules of measurement, how they can cut holes in their decks and reduce the tolls they pay to the Government of the United States. He splits the profits and the savings with the shipping companies, and I am advised that he has profited so generously that he took a trip across the sea in order to carry the glad tidings to foreign shipping companies, so that they could avail themselves of his learning and his wisdom, and could cut gashes in their decks, thus reducing the revenues received by his Government from the transit of those ships through the canal.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to ask the Senator a question on the point of his present remarks. I read on page 5 of the minority report:

> The bill increases very drastically the tolls on American general-cargo and passenger ships, which are now operating at a loss.

I should like the Senator from Oklahoma to give me his view about that statement.

Mr. GORE. First, I will say to the Senator that under our United States rules of measurement much of the passenger space does not pay any tolls at all. The stately passenger ships which ply the Canal have much of their passenger space exempted from the payment of tolls. We are the only Government on the globe which grants such a liberal concession to passenger ships. Of course, granting it to our own ships, we are obliged to grant it to the ships of other countries, and if the proposed legislation be passed it will bear more upon foreign shippers than upon our own.

I shall give a further illustration. In 1934 the Japanese concerns owned 84 ships which transited the Canal. Up to that time they had not taken advantage of these rules. They had not scuttled their decks. Two of those old vessels have lately had slight structural changes made in them which have materially reduced their tolls.

I think the Senator from Washington will be interested in this. The way in which the reduction on those two ships was effected was not by cutting holes through the decks, but they were converted from coal burners to oil burners. They carried the oil in double tanks in the bottom of the ship. That left the coal bunkers no longer in requisition for use or service. So they cut doors between the coal bunkers and the engine room. By that device alone they materially cut down the tolls which they paid.

I know that is mystifying to Senators until I make one further explanation.

These two Japanese ships—and undoubtedly the rest will follow suit—the owners of these Japanese vessels cut doors between the coal bunkers and the engine room, and that materially reduced the tolls they pay when they pass through the Panama Canal. Why? Before they cut the openings their engine rooms occupied less than 13 percent of the gross tonnage, and therefore was deducted from the cargo-carrying tonnage only to the extent of the exact percentage it constituted of the total registered tonnage. But when they cut doors beween the coal bunkers and the old engine rooms then the coal bunkers became a part of the engine room, and raised the percentage of the engine room to the entire gross tonnage above 13 percent of the total, and by that automatically and at once the vessel became entitled to an exemption of 32 percent for engine rooms and propelling space.

Why did they deduct only the actual percentage so long as it is 13 percent or less on the gross tonnage and why the moment it exceeds 13 percent they jump it up to 32 percent of the total gross tonnage and exempt that amount from the toll-paying space? That is one of the devices.

Fourteen new Japanese vessels were constructed last year and passed through the Canal for the first time in 1935. They had gotten wise to these devices. And the tonnage of those 14 vessels constructed to take advantage of those devices, under the United States rules of measurement, are only 70 percent as much as they would be if measured according to the Panama Canal rules of measurement.

Now I shall be glad to hear from the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not suppose the Senator was answering my question. He was continuing his argument.

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. The question was this: On page 5 of the report of the minority I find this statement:

> The bill increases very drastically the tolls on American general-cargo and passenger ships, which are now operating at a loss.

I should like the Senator to inform me if that is correct.

Mr. GORE. I will say this to the Senator: It will raise the tolls in certain cases, but only where their ships have taken advantage of this privilege and this device, and have been paying less tolls than they ought to pay. Whether ships are going through the Canal now at a loss, I do not know.

Mr. BAILEY. I find further in the report of the hearings the general statement that the increase in the tolls of commercial cargo ships will be about $500,000 a year, whereas there would be a corresponding decrease of $500,000 a year on the industrial or tanker type of ships. Is that correct?

Mr. GORE. I would not undertake to say as to the precise figure.

Mr. BAILEY. Is that generally correct?

Mr. GORE. I will explain that. There is no way to tell how many ships, or I do not know how many ships have taken advantage of these privileges and are paying less tolls than they ought to pay. Some ships have not taken advantage of it and are paying at least in accordance with the Panama Canal rules. They are at a serious disadvantage in competition with the ships which have availed themselves of that privilege. Neither do I know nor can I approximate what the reduction would be on the tanker-ship tolls. There would undoubtedly be some reduction, not on their loaded ships, except as that applied to all loaded ships alike, but it would operate to their advantage insofar as it would take account of the fact that they make return in ballast instead of in cargo. And I think that ought to be taken into account.

Mr. BAILEY. On page 3 of the hearings I find the statement in response to a question by the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], that the Standard Shipping Co. would get a reduction of $135,000, the Standard Oil Co. of California would get an annual reduction of $85,000, the Sun Oil Co. would get a reduction of $78,000, the Union Oil Co. of California would get a reduction of $42,000, and the miscellaneous tanker lines would get a reduction of $238,000. I think that will aggregate approximately one-half million dollars.

I should like to get a clear statement as to why there should be a great reduction of the tolls on the tanker oil-carrying ships and the great increase on the commercial ships which must carry out cotton from the Atlantic coast to the Gulf coast through the Panama Canal to the Orient. The matter comes home to me as a comparison, not absolutely or wholly but certainly for the moment as between cotton and oil.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, under this measure, if it shall pass, there would be a fixed toll per net ton on laden ships, whether they bore cotton or whether they bore oil, whether they bore diamonds or whether they bore coal.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator would agree that that would be a reduction in the freights or tolls on oil, under this act, and probably an increase on the freights or tolls on cotton, under this act, is that right?

Mr. GORE. There would be an increase in the tolls paid by certain ships, those which have been availing themselves of this privilege; there would be a reduction in the tolls paid by other commercial ships, such as those carrying cotton, which have not availed themselves of this device and have not been paying less tolls than they ought to pay.

Mr. BAILEY. That is to say that the other ships would be lifted up to the level, so far as tolls are concerned, of the ships, of which the Senator now speaks, carrying cotton? Is that correct?

Mr. GORE. No; the present rate is $1.20. Under this bill it could not exceed a dollar. The Secretary of War will recommend 90 cents. There will be a reduction, a general reduction, on all ships excepting those that have gone to the extreme in artificially reducing their tonnage measurement by these special devices.

Mr. BAILEY. I believe the Senator is going to agree that, while there would be a reduction, the reduction on the tank ships, oil-carrying ships, would be all out of proportion to the reduction on cotton-carrying or general-cargo-carrying ships?

Mr. GORE. Not at all. The oil-carrying ship would pay exactly the same tolls, ton for ton, that a ship carrying cotton would pay.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that; but now let us consider the question of the transfer of a burden with which we began. According to the report and according to the statement which the Senator so far has not controverted, and with which I began this questioning by reading, there will be an increase of approximately half a million dollars in the tolls on the general-cargo ships passing through the Canal, and there will be a decrease of approximately half a million dollars in the tolls of ships of the tanker type carrying oil or ships of the industrial type. I should like to have an explanation of that.

Mr. GORE. I cannot answer categorically because I do not know on what toll basis the calculation was made, whether it was on the basis of $1.20 or $1 or 90 cents; for that reason I cannot answer categorically, but I do not hesitate to tell the Senator what I have already stated time and time again, that there would be a reduction in the aggregate tolls paid by tank ships carrying oil. That would result from the fact that when they go through the Canal loaded with oil they would pay exactly the same toll per ton as a ship passing through the Canal that carries cotton; there would be no discrimination whatever, no favoritism whatever shown to oil and no prejudice or antagonism whatever shown to cotton, they would be taxed and taxed alike, as I think they should be, but——

Mr. BAILEY. That is true now, is it not, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. GORE. No.

Mr. BAILEY. What is the difference?

Mr. GORE. Here is the point: Tank ships return through the Canal in ballast. The prevailing rate on ships in ballast is high. There will be a reduction, or it is anticipated that there will be a reduction, in the tolls imposed on ships going through the Canal in ballast. Of course, if the ship to which the Senator refers carries cotton one way through the Canal and goes back in ballast the tanker will have no advantage; the oil will have no privilege over the cotton. It just happens that a tank steamer is not adapted to carrying any other cargo than that of liquids—petroleum. So that when it delivers a cargo at Baltimore and returns to California for another load, it goes through the Canal in ballast, and it pays a high toll charge. Under this plan it is expected that the tolls levied on a ship transiting the Canal in ballast, whether a cotton ship or an oil ship, will be lower than they are now. That is the reason why the tank ships will realize some advantage from this measure. I will say to the Senator that I think some parade was made of the fact at the hearings that the ships owned by the Standard Oil Co. would receive some reductions in tolls. I think they would; I think a ship going through in ballast ought not to be taxed as much as if it were laden, as sometimes happens under the existing dual system; I think that this measure, if enacted, would bring some relief to all ships passing through the Canal in ballast, and I think it ought to do so.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, let me call the Senator's attention to the statement on page 2 of the minority report, that passenger ships under United States registry would have an increase of $471,762, or a percentage increase of 22, while passenger ships of foreign registry would have an increase of $375,171, or an increase of only 10 percent.

Will the Senator explain to me why we should adopt a measure that would place a 22-percent increase upon American passenger ships and only a 10-percent increase on foreign ships passing through the Panama Canal? If that is a fact, it is a very serious fact to me, and I should like to get more light on it.

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that I think, as a general proposition, it cannot be taken as true; but that is not my only or final answer. Americans are more or less renowned—and I think justly so—for their enterprise. American shipowners have been rather enterprising in availing themselves of the privileges resulting from the dual system of measurement of their vessels, and they have been pretty free in cutting holes in the decks of their ships in order to excuse their tonnage from paying tolls.

I have here a list of 38 American ships owned by 5 different American companies which during the last year or two by cutting holes in the decks of their ships and by other devices have reduced their own tolls 24 percent. One concern—I believe the Panama Pacific Line—reduced its toll a little less than 20 percent—19.7 percent. Another concern automatically reduced its own tax 20 percent. Another concern, the Luckenbach, reduced its own tolls and paid to the Government 26 percent less than it formerly paid; and the Grace Line, in the case of four ships—and they were all saints—the Santa Rosa, the Santa Elena, the Santa Lucia, and one of the saints I have forgotten—cut holes in the decks of these American passenger ships owned by enterprising Americans; and so the Grace Line reduced its own tolls on its own ships by its own devices 33.9 percent and paid the Government $2 when it ought to have paid the Government $3, and would have so paid the Government but for this dual system of measurement, which permits them to bring about the reduction I have indicated. I will say to the Senator that in measuring tonnage we do not count passenger space situated above the first deck which is not a deck to the hull.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. BONE. The questions of the Senator from North Carolina interest me, because he suggests an increase in tolls. The explanation of the Senator from Oklahoma indicates, if the facts he has set forth are accurate, that it is not an increase but rather a restoration of taxes and tolls imposed under the Panama Canal rules prior to the practice of cutting holes in the decks of vessels. Is that correct?

Mr. GORE. I think the Senator from North Carolina was speaking of tolls in the aggregate. There might be an aggregate increase in tolls on certain groups of ships such as I have mentioned here. The Grace Line probably would have an increase in its tolls. I was speaking more directly of rates, and the rate per ton would be the same on all ships regardless of the cargo carried.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course we agree that the rate per ton would be the same, as it is the same under present conditions. We are not, however, talking about rates per ton. What I wish to get at is the effect of the bill. I am reading from the minority report, and I will say to the Senator I have read the majority report. The majority report certainly does not meet the facts set out in the minority report, and I wish the Senator could meet those facts.

I read just now showing that under the proposed legislation there would be an increase in the tolls paid by ships of foreign registry of only 10 percent, whereas on ships of American registry there would be an increase of 22 percent. The Senator answers that by saying that the American ships cut holes in their decks and thereby reduced their tolls 22 percent. I imagine that a shipowner is not going to cut a hole in the deck of his ship unless it is useful to the structure. I do not think that meets the situation; but let us go for the moment. I wish to call the Senator's attention——

Mr. GORE. The Senator is entirely mistaken. I have here a statement from one of our own admirals, who states that the cutting of holes, tonnage openings in the decks, impairs the safety of the ship and its structural strength.

Mr. BAILEY. That would come under the general control of the shipping laws; that would not relate to freight. The United States Government is not going to permit unsafe ships to sail the ocean.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. DUFFY. May I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina, in answer to his questions, that the charts appearing on the wall on the other side of the room show the saving to all United States vessels as compared to the saving to vessels of foreign registry? There was no dispute by either side represented at the hearings that these holes were cut into the decks precisely for the purpose of reducing the tolls the ships had to pay, and in the few remarks which I will make later I will quote authorities showing that it does seriously interfere with the safety of a vessel. There are certain limits beyond which shipowners cannot go, but they cut these holes and then put tarpaulins over them. They cannot, however, permanently close them, or they could not get the benefit.

Mr. BAILEY. The shipowner may cut holes in the deck of his vessel, to use that expression, but I imagine that it would have to be something more than a hole for the purpose of conforming a vessel to the law and thereby getting a reduced rate. I do not think, on its face, that that savors at all of fraud; that may be a very sound thing. However, my point is that we would be increasing the rate on American ships and decreasing the rate on foreign ships.

I wish to call attention to the second item in the table, relative to "shelter-deck cargo ships", and I see the increase on American ships would be 7 percent and the increase on foreign ships would be but 2 percent.

We go all the way down through the table. There are the facts. I should like to have them thoroughly discussed and I should like to know just why we should at this stage be placing additional burdens upon ships of American registry passing through the American Panama Canal.

Mr. GORE. I stated as a generalization that I think the lines read by the Senator could not be accepted as correct. It is possible to except groups of ships here and there and reach that conclusion. That may be true in some instances. However, I have a statement showing that certain groups of American ships during a given period cut down their tolls $900,000 and foreign ships cut theirs down $1,300,000. Eighty-four of the old type Japanese ships measured by the United States rules aggregated for the several transits 1,100,000 tons on which they paid tolls, and on the basis of the Panama rules would have paid on 1,400,000 tons. They saved the tolls on 300,000 tons.

If there is any difference at all it is due to the fact that the foreigners have not availed themselves of this privilege to the same extent as our own vessel owners, because if this measure is passed and becomes a law, foreign and American ships will pay on exactly the same basis, a dollar a ton or 90 cents a ton or 60 cents a ton on their cargo-carrying space. There will be no discrimination, as there should not be under the treaties under which the Panama Canal was constructed. If there be any apparent discrimination it is due to the fact that the vessels which will pay the increased rates have simply gone further or gone faster in exempting their own tonnage from the tolls.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before the Senator yields the floor I wish to ask him a question.

Mr. GORE. Very well.

Mr. BARKLEY. When I was a Member of the House of Representatives I was a member of the committee which had charge of all Panama Canal legislation and I was somewhat familiar with the method of measuring vessels for passage through the Canal. The other day in a private conversation I was told by a man who claims to know—and I am not passing on the question of whether he does or not—that the effect of this bill would be to decrease the rate at which oil tankers could go through the Canal, and to increase the rate at which all ordinary freight carriers could go through the Canal.

I have no prejudice against any type of American ship. I am intensely concerned in the development and maintenance of an American merchant marine. Would the effect of the bill be to the disadvantage of the ordinary American freighter which is engaged in attempting to carry American products to the markets of the world, and especially to South America, as compared, for instance, to any other type of vessel, with particular reference to oil tankers?

Mr. GORE. The Senator was probably out of the Chamber at the time that point was pretty thoroughly discussed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I was out of the Chamber.

Mr. GORE. I can answer the Senator in a sentence. Under this measure every vessel under our flag, no matter what it carries, and every foreign vessel, no matter what it carries, when it goes through the Panama Canal laden will pay exactly the same toll per ton. There will be no discrimination between our own ships. There will be no discrimination between our own ships and foreign ships. They will all pay exactly the same tolls on their tonnage, the same rates. That is the object of the legislation. Under the existing law there are instances where a ship pays exactly the same tolls when it passes through the Canal in ballast as when it passes through with cargo.

There will be some reduction on tank ships, on oil ships, resulting from the fact that they come laden from the west coast to the east coast and, owing to their peculiar type of structure and cargo, are obliged to make return trips in ballast. Under this bill the tolls for ships passing through the Canal in ballast will be reduced as compared with the present law, rules, and regulations. To that extent only it will operate to reduce the tolls of tank ships, but any other vessels passing through the Canal in ballast will enjoy the same privileges and the same tolls as tankers passing through in ballast.

Mr. BARKLEY. I supposed, judging from the Senator's remarks, that a larger portion of oil tankers come back through the Canal in ballast than of ordinary freighters which seek to bring back freight.

Mr. GORE. I think the tankers return in ballast, necessarily. It is a burden which they have been bearing heretofore under the tolls which have heretofore prevailed.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator's contention is that it is an incidental effect because of the particular type of ship and the circumstances under which it returns and is not due to a design to favor one type over another.

Mr. GORE. The tankers returning in ballast have been penalized under the existing system. They will be relieved from that penalty in the future. That is what it amounts to.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. GORE. Certainly.

Mr. BONE. Were any figures made available to the committee which might indicate the possible gross revenues under this bill were it enacted into law and under the existing system of collecting tolls?

Mr. GORE. It is the general purpose under this bill so to regulate the tolls as merely to realize sufficient revenue to pay the operating expenses of the canal and to pay the carrying charges on the indebtedness. There is no purpose to increase the aggregate receipts of the canal. That is not the point at all. It is intended merely to iron out the inequalities.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD as a part of the debate on the subject of Panama Canal tolls, at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], telegrams which I have received from some persons interested in the port of Boston.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURRAY in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegrams are as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., January 14, 1936.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senator:

Understand unanimous consent has been obtained for vote on Senator GORE's Panama Canal tolls bill. Also that amendment will be proposed to eliminate section 2, which provides for appointment of commission to completely investigate before any legislation is enacted. It is our view that, in order to protect New England shipping port and industrial interests, section 1, providing for assessment of proposed tolls, when bill is enacted, should be eliminated and section 2, which delays assessment of proposed tolls pending investigation by commission, should be retained. May I bespeak your careful consideration accordingly when bill comes up for vote?

FRANK S. DAVIS,
Manager, Maritime Association of the Boston Chamber of Commerce.

BOSTON, MASS., January 14, 1936.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Informed Senate vote imminent on Senator GORE's Panama Canal tolls bill. Believe further investigation by commission, as suggested in section 2, essential before assessment proposed tolls. Boston Port Authority, representing Commonwealth of Massachusetts and city of Boston, favors retention of section 2 and elimination section 1, which provides for application proposed tolls when bill enacted. Request your consideration our viewpoint when bill comes to vote.

RICHARD PARKHURST,
Vice Chairman, Boston Port Authority.

BOSTON, MASS., January 17, 1936.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

It is for the best interest of the port of Boston that you oppose Panama Canal toll bill (S. 2288). Would appreciate your strongest opposition to this bill from the floor if possible.

ROSCOE H. PRIOR.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9870) to provide for the immediate payment of World War adjusted-service certificates, for the cancelation of unpaid interest accrued on loans secured by such certificates, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 9870) to provide for the immediate payment of World War adjusted-service certificates, for the cancelation of unpaid interest accrued on loans secured by such certificates, and for other purposes, and it was signed by the Vice President.

MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS USING THE PANAMA CANAL

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 2288) to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I have before me a chart of which I shall make use in the few remarks I shall submit as soon as I can get the floor in my own right. The chart shows that the rates of toll for the Panama Canal will be fixed by this proposed legislation at approximately what they were in the years 1934 and 1935. The tables will show that if the rates go into effect as expected under this bill, the tolls paid by all ships will be considerably less than they have been heretofore up to 1935. The tables will also show that the tolls which will be imposed will in several instances be less than paid prior to the time the structure of certain ships was manipulated by cutting holes in their decks.

Mr. BONE. Is it to be assumed that there will be adequate revenues to finance the operation of the Canal, its operating overhead, and take care of the funded debt by amortization?

Mr. DUFFY. That is why the Secretary of War has recommended the 90-cent rate to go into effect. There is a leeway of which the President can take advantage if he so desires, but he will probably take the recommendation of the Secretary of War.

Mr. BONE. I am wondering if any suggestion has ever been made to amortize the outstanding funded debt of the Canal. Has a suggestion of that kind ever been made or is it the purpose of Congress to maintain perpetually that debt structure intact? I think some step ought to be taken by Congress to amortize that frightful debt structure so that ultimately there may be a tremendous reduction in tolls through the Canal. There never can be any reduction in tolls if we are not going to amortize any of this debt.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if I am not entirely mistaken, the present tolls on the Canal are sufficient to maintain and operate it, and also to amortize the original expenditure, including expenditures for military purposes.

Mr. BONE. I cannot find any information here, and seemingly none is available, to indicate whether or not any part of the capital structure is ever going to be retired. The outstanding bonds are now used as a basis for currency in the national bank system.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, there is provision at present for the creation of a sinking fund.

Mr. BONE. There is no evidence of it. Certainly a consideration so important as that ought not to be obscured here. Members of this body ought to know whether or not the Government will ever undertake that to amortize and retire the debt.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will say that the plan was more general, not a fixed and concrete policy to amortize the capital cost of the Canal. It was assumed that in a hundred years amortization would take place. The last figures I saw had reduced the period to 85 years.

A portion of the original bonds issued and sold to construct the Canal bore interest at the rate of 2 percent annually, while others bore 3 percent, the bonds aggregating $134,000,000, and the Canal has been realizing, over and above the cost of operation, about 3 percent. Last year, I believe, the return was only 2.85 percent, but it has not been reduced to a fixed and concrete policy to set aside a certain portion of the receipts as a sinking fund to amortize the debt in the long run. The authorities have gone on the theory that they were realizing generally a little over 3 percent on the capitalized value and that that would amortize the debt.

Mr. BONE. Of course, the trouble with the tolls is that in the tolls is reflected the amount necessary to preserve intact the present capital structure. If that shall continue indefinitely, and no effort shall be made to amortize out any of it, we shall perpetuate to future generations the burden about which we have had all this discussion. Senators have occupied the floor talking about the size of the tolls, and what a burden they are upon commerce, and yet apparently no effort ever has been made to eliminate the one thing which leads to all this discussion at this time. I am astounded that some fund has not been set apart to pay off these bonds.

Mr. GORE. No; the Senator is mistaken about the purpose and object of the proposed legislation. The purpose and object of it is to obviate and get rid of these discriminations and inequalities.

I appreciate the importance of the point the Senator has made. As I suggested a moment ago, the Government has proceeded on the theory, and a good deal of the time on the fact, that it was realizing 3 percent and a little more on the capitalized cost of the Canal, and that the carrying charges on the bonds was about 2 percent, and that the difference might be treated as a sinking fund which would ultimately amortize the capital cost. It has not been set aside as a sinking fund in a definite and concrete policy of that sort.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Oklahoma whether he is entirely accurate in stating that the receipts from the operation of the Canal have been sufficient, year in and year out, to return 3 percent or even 2 percent upon the invested capital of three or four hundred million dollars.

Mr. GORE. Generally they have been; yes. Last year, I believe, the receipts dropped below 3 percent. I think the return in that year was approximately 2.80 percent upon the invested capital. I have forgotten the fraction.

Mr. KING. Did the Senator take into account the cost of operating the Canal?

Mr. GORE. Oh, yes. The operating cost is about $10,000,000. The capitalized cost of the Canal is $540,000,000. One hundred and thirty-four million dollars, as heretofore stated, was raised by the sale of bonds. It is the plan to realize enough revenue to pay the $10,000,000 of operating cost and to realize $15,000,000, in addition to cover the carrying charge and, if you please, a return or amortization charge on the capital cost of the Canal.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator another question? What have been the gross returns year by year since the Canal was put into operation?

Mr. GORE. Last year the gross return was, I believe, between $25,000,000 and $26,000,000. I think perhaps at the bottom of the depression it dropped down 1 year to $19,000,000; but I speak from memory.

Mr. KING. One other question: It is not considered, is it, that the railroad which is operated in connection with the Canal is a part of the Canal system in the sense that if any amortization plan should be set up the cost of operating the railroad, together with the cost of construction of the railroad, would be considered as a part of the general scheme?

Mr. GORE. I am speaking now rather offhand; but my understanding is that the $10,000,000 to cover operating cost does include the operation of the railroad and all the costs, including the government of the zone as well.

Mr. KING. My understanding is that the railroad, taken alone, if it may be segregated from the cost of operating the Canal, realizes a loss of 1 percent annually. That is to say, the cost of operating the railroad with a large number of employees thereon is greater than the amount received for services in connection with the railroad.

Mr. GORE. The Senator may be right. I do not know.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief reply to the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE]. I happened to be a member of the subcommittee which gave consideration to a bill similar to this one in 1930. In the hearings on that bill, at page 49, are found the figures which answer the question propounded by the Senator from Washington. I shall not give them in extenso, but they seem to show that a continuing effort has been made, through amortization, to wipe out the capital debt.

Mr. BONE. The report of the committee seems to indicate that there is now charged to the Canal approximately $542,000,000. There must have been steady accretions to the capital account. I do not know how much is outstanding in the way of these 2-percent bonds, nor is it indicated anywhere in the report that any of the bond issue has been retired.

Mr. COPELAND. One of the great complaints of those who have studied the Canal problem is the fact that in the attempted amortization, payment was made not alone for the Canal itself, but for the military additions made at the time of construction, and those which have since been made.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I think anyone considering the subject will have to concede that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] is accurate in the statement that there have been anomalies and inconsistencies and perhaps inequities in the administration and in the levying and collection of Panama Canal tolls. I am generally familiar with them; but to me, speaking very generally, they seem relatively unimportant. The changes that have been made in ship construction and the superstructure of ships have in no instance, so far as my knowledge goes or so far as the testimony before the committee indicates, violated the laws of the United States with respect to the construction of vessels, or the laws of any other nation whose ships have passed through the Canal.

The changes which have been made, in no respect whatsoever depart from the provisions for the safety of life at sea laid down by international convention. Changes have been made, manifestly, and no one can controvert the fact, for the purpose of reducing the tolls paid by vessels in the transit of the Canal; but, so far as I am concerned, so long as the income from the Canal is sufficient to meet the carrying charges of the Canal, I welcome toll reduction, for I see in a reduction of tolls the possibility of a reduction in freight charges, which are a burden upon the commercial interests of the United States and upon all persons who utilize service by water in the movement of their commodities to the markets of the world and of the United States. I see no harm in, and indeed I wholly approve, all efforts of vessel owners to reduce tolls so long as those efforts have due regard for the safety of life at sea, due regard for the laws of the United States and for the laws of other maritime nations. When that is done I conceive it proper for them to endeavor to reduce the tolls paid in the transit of the Canal.

Mr. President, two purposes are assigned for the introduction and report of the proposed legislation. It is said, and it is true, that the bill is designed to do away with the dual system of measurement in vogue at the canal, and to have tolls through the canal based on the earning capacity of vessels moving through that great structure.

Before the completion of the canal, the United States had its long-established system for the measurement and registration of its vessels, a system still in force, and that will continue in force in the event the proposed legislation is passed; a system recognized by all the nations and authorities of the world, and a system which, as I have said, will remain in force after the proposed legislation shall have been enacted.

In 1911, Congress by law authorized tolls for the use of the Canal to be established and to be based upon registered tonnage, net or gross, or on displacement tonnage or otherwise; but it further provided that tolls on ships of commerce should not exceed $1.25 per net registered ton and should not be less than 75 cents per net registered ton.

Somewhat later the Attorney General ruled that in fixing these maximum and minimum rates Congress used the term "net registered tonnage" as defined by the statute and as determined by the Department of Commerce. The Attorney General further held that if in a particular instance tolls exceeded such maximum of $1.25 per net registered ton they would be illegal to the extent of that excess, and if they fell below the minimum of 75 cents per net registered ton then such minimum per net registered ton must be the legal rate and must be collected.

As the result of this decision, Canal authorities felt it necessary to determine net registered tonnage of all vessels, foreign and domestic, transiting the Canal, under both the Panama Canal rules and under the general registry rules of the United States, and, as I have already indicated, it limited the rates the President could apply.

There have been instances in which vessel changes have resulted in reduced tolls. Some inconvenience has resulted to the Canal authorities, but no substantial harm has resulted either to the United States or to the commercial interests of the United States or of the world.

These changes have not adversely affected the revenues of the Canal. The interest on the bonds and the maintenance charges of the Canal, including that part of the cost chargeable to its military value, amount to about $24,000,000 or $25,000,000 a year. For the years 1928, 1929, and 1930 the tolls collected amounted to about $27,000,000 a year, or substantially in excess of the carrying charges, and no one doubts that in normal times the system complained of will meet the carrying cost of the Canal. In those circumstances I see no reason why effort should not be made to reduce these tolls and these charges levied upon the commerce of the United States.

This dual system exists only at the Canal. It is complained of only by Canal authorities. This complaint might justify a change; it does not, however, justify what is proposed in the pending legislation.

I invite the attention of the Senate to precisely what the bill before us proposes to do. First of all, it works a redistribution of the toll burden. Using the rates which it has been said will be put into effect under the bill, that is, the 90-cent rate and the 54-cent rate, there would be a decrease in tolls in the amount of $754,900, and there would be an increase in tolls on other classes of vessels in the amount of $706,000.

On its face, this would show a decrease of approximately $50,000 a year in the tolls collected, but the important and significant thing is, where does the increase fall, and who is the beneficiary of the decreases which would result from this changed system?

I invite attention to the evidence presented by the proponents of the legislation before the committee as it appears in the hearings. Assuming the 90-cent rate which it is said the Secretary of War will put into effect as the maximum, and assuming the 54-cent rate, which it is said will be the lower rate, it is shown that a group of tankers made up of ships belonging to a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, the Standard Oil Co. of California, the Sun Oil Co., the Union Oil Co. of California, and some other miscellaneous tanker lines, would receive the benefit of a decrease in tolls under the proposed system of $578,000 a year.

There is another tabulation in this hearing, showing another group of ships which would have the tolls reduced. That tabulation shows a reduction in the aggregate of $176,900; and I notice with interest in that category of ships that a subsidiary of the Bethlehem Steel Co. would receive a reduction of more than $63,000. I note also that another industrial carrier, the United Fruit Co., would receive a reduction in tolls under the proposed classification and method of measurement.

These are the beneficiaries of this proposed chang[illegible] Who is it who will bear the increases which will result? I state again that I am taking the testimony introduced into the record by the proponents of the legislation. There is a small group of ships, some six lines, all commercial vessels—and I am reading from page 4 of the record—whose tolls will be increased to the extent of $231,000 or a little more. There is another group of cargo and passenger ships whose tolls will be increased, even upon the basis which it is said will be put into effect, $475,000. So that the net result of the changes will be that these industrial carriers, the subsidiaries of the oil companies and the Bethlehem Steel Co. and the United Fruit Co., will secure benefits exceeding $700,000, and the common carriers of the Nation transporting the commodities of the people of the United States, moving the cotton of the South through the Canal to the East, and all the other things which move from the farms and the industries of our Nation, which pay tolls to common carriers—those carriers will feel an added burden of something like $706,000. That is the first and the outstanding result of the changes proposed in the legislation.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WHITE. For a question.

Mr. DUFFY. Does the Senator agree to the statement that, if there is to be any increase by reason of this legislation being enacted into law, the particular lines about which he has been talking will be paying less in toll charges under the proposed new law than they paid before they started manipulating their vessels by cutting holes and changing the structure?

Mr. WHITE. I cannot answer that question and do not care what the answer is. I am not in favor of any system if it can be avoided which will increase the tolls of common carriers moving through this Canal, because I see in increased tolls the probability of increased freight rates, and I see in such increased rates an added burden to the industrial and to the agricultural life of the Nation.

Mr. DUFFY. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. DUFFY. A number of these lines have saved a considerable amount by making these structural changes. Has the Senator heard of these lines passing any saving to the people who ship cargoes in those vessels?

Mr. WHITE. I think the proposed legislation has been hanging over them ever since the changes were made, and I do not blame them very much, under the threat of this measure, for not reducing their tolls.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he has any doubt, if this legislation shall be enacted and higher tolls shall be charged, that there will be passed on certainly the higher expense of operating through the Canal, even though the people up there did not get the benefit of the lower rate for the reasons suggested by the Senator?

Mr. DUFFY. If the Senator from Maine will permit, the answer is that in the aggregate there is going to be a reduction on United States ships going through this Canal.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; when we count oil tankers and steel carriers and private carriers and foreign vessels there will be a decrease, but the ships carrying the apples and citrus fruit and other products of the Pacific coast through the Canal and the ships carrying cotton and other products from the Atlantic coast through the Canal will pay more after this bill shall be enacted. It is inevitable.

Mr. DUFFY. I will answer the Senator in my own time.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I next invite the attention of the Senate to other specific criticisms which may properly be directed toward this proposed legislation. The first section of the bill provides in the first instance that tolls shall be based on net vessel tons of 100 cubic feet each of actual earning capacity.

That is the principle laid down for the determination of tolls. Then the legislation destroys the principle and the effectiveness of it by, first, exempting deck loads from tolls, and, second, by providing a very much lower rate to vessels moving through the canal in ballast.

No one can be sure what amount in dollars is involved in exempting deck loads in ballast, but it is substantial.

The evidence and common knowledge tell us that when cargo is carried in deck space it contributes to the earning capacity of the ship. There are ships today carrying as much cargo on deck as below deck. I contend moreover that is unwise in the extreme, to incorporate such a provision because it makes a direct contribution to greater hazard at sea.

There is a committee of the Senate, I think under the chairmanship of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], undertaking a study, at the direction of the Senate, of methods by which hazards at sea may be reduced to a minimum, and I venture the assertion that if this matter were referred to that special committee of the Senate, charged with the study of those things which contribute to the safety of life at sea and safety of cargo at sea, with a unanimous voice they would say that any scheme or any method which induces the loading of decks is a dangerous practice to be encouraged, and this proposed legislation is subject to the infirmity, in that, as I have said, no tolls would be charged on the deck space used in the transportation of cargoes.

This proposed rule of basing the toll upon the tons of earning capacity of the vessel is again repudiated by the provision of section 1, that the toll on vessels in ballast shall be less than the rate of toll for vessels with passengers or cargo. How much less the toll shall be the section does not state, nor does it provide for the determination of this lesser rate by any rule or by any method or by any person. It simply says that there shall be a lesser rate of toll on vessels moving in ballast. There is no statutory definition, there is no statutory limit of the amount of reduction, and no rule by which anyone can determine what it shall be, and with no authority in any particular person to determine it.

If any deduction from the established rate is to be accorded because a vessel is in ballast, why should there not be a graduated scale of toll based on the proportion of her earning space occupied by cargo? To illustrate, why should we give a reduced rate to a 3,000-ton ship moving in ballast and charge another ship having 10,000 tons of earning capacity for the full 10,000 tons of capacity even though she has but a hundred tons of cargo on board?

I mentioned, in speaking of the general effect of these proposed rules, that the industrial carriers would be the chief beneficiaries thereof. These carriers, as a matter of fact, are largely tankers. I again emphasize that the oil tankers in larger degree than any other ships move through the Canal in ballast one way. So that the chief beneficiary of this reduced rate for the ship in ballast will be largely the tankers of the great oil companies.

There is one other comment I wish to make. The proposed rule is based on net vessel tons of 100 cubic feet of actual earning capacity. This refers only to space devoted to cargo. It ignores completely the weight of cargo a ship can carry, and so disregards actual earning capacity of a vessel. It is perfectly obvious that two vessels may have the same net tons of 100 cubic feet and at the same time have widely different earning capacities. A substantial part of the world's commerce consists of weight cargo, and a rule which ignores the weight-carrying capacity of the ship does not reflect her earning capacity. This may be illustrated by a vessel loaded with lumber and another loaded with ore. The first boat may have her entire space below deck filled without settling the vessel to her load-line marks. Her decks may be completely filled before the vessel is sunk to her load line. This vessel carrying this type of cargo may load to every vessel ton and earn thereon. An ore carrier may be submerged to the depth permitted by our load-line law with only one-half of her measurement capacity utilized. Yes under this bill, ignoring as it does this factor of weight, this ore vessel would be required to pay on her full measurement earning capacity. A proposed system ignoring this weight factor is not sound.

Mr. President, a further and to me a fatal objection to the bill is found in its uncertainty. I have in mind the assurance which has been given the Senate that a 90-cent rate and a 54-cent rate is fixed by the statute, but it does not work out that way when we analyze the language of the bill. It lays down no definite rule for the fixing of tolls. In the present law there is a definite maximum and a certain minimum of legal charge. The toll may not exceed $1.25 a net registered ton; it may not be less than 75 cents per net registered ton. Such a ton is defined by statute. In the pending bill the charge is to be based on net vessel tons of earning capacity determined not by a statutory rule but by rules prescribed by the President and as amended from time to time by him. Here is no certainty of charge. The tolls will move up or down in accordance with no statutory provision or of statutory rule, but they will vary as the President without guide or restraint varies his rules of measurement.

Mr. President, conceding the inequalities and confusion of results under existing practice, I still insist that the legislation before us does not meet the problem. If adopted, there will be continued the inequities already alluded to. There will still be dual systems of measurement throughout the world; there will be multiplied complaints and new injustices.

It seems to me there is only one sensible course. This is a problem of great complexity. It was said this morning that this matter had been before the Congress for 20 years of time, and that is true, in one form or another. But in that 20 years of time, so far as my knowledge goes, no one but the Canal authorities have urged the enactment of this pending provision. Over and over again the Canal authorities have come here with a different form of legislation, a different method proposed to meet this situation, and this is only the last child of their minds.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I wish to ask the Senator whether there were any hearings before the committee relative to this proposed legislation?

Mr. WHITE. There were hearings before the Committee on Interoceanic Canals. There have been no hearings so far as I know before any committee having responsibility for the commercial interests of the United States, having responsibility for the shipping interests of the United States.

Mr. WAGNER. I understand that jurisdiction is really within the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, and I wondered whether there had been any hearings held by that committee.

Mr. WHITE. There have not been any hearings held by the Committee on Commerce. There were members of the Committee on Commerce who were invited to sit in with the Committee on Interoceanic Canals in these hearings, and I believe I did so.

Mr. WAGNER. I have received some complaints from constituents of mine that they did not have an opportunity to present their views, and they are very much opposed to this measure and feel that if enacted it will be destructive of their industry.

Mr. WHITE. In my opinion it will be harmful to the general commerce of the United States. The confusion that is complained of will be confounded. In view of the changing views of the Canal authorities in respect to the legislation they want, the sensible thing for us to do is to eliminate section 1 from the bill and write into law section 2, which authorizes the appointment of a committee to study this whole problem and to make its recommendations and have a study of the problem made, have the judgment of the shipping interests of the United States with respect to what should be done, and then bring before Congress a bill which meets the situation, if it can be met—one which will respond to the commercial interest of the United States. This bill does not do so, in my opinion.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], I will say that there were joint hearings on the bill before the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and a Subcommittee on Merchant Marine of the Committee on Commerce. The hearings are printed.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I have heard some discussion today in the Senate as to whether the shippers of oil or the shippers of cotton would be discriminated against. I assure Senators that there is neither cotton nor oil produced in my State. I have no such interest, and I knew nothing about this legislation until I sat as a member of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals in the hearings on the bill.

I was somewhat surprised to hear the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] say that no one else had advocated this measure. Perhaps he is technically correct in saying "this particular measure", but I am informed that similar measures have passed four times through the House of Representatives. I am informed that Presidents heretofore have asked for the passage of similar legislation, at least starting with President Wilson, and I have in my hand extracts from letters from various Secretaries of War, Mr. Garrison, Mr. Baker, Mr. Weeks, Mr. Hurley, and Secretary Dern, all of them urging the enactment of at least similar legislation, and to save the time of the Senate I ask unanimous consent that these extracts from letters or communications from the various Secretaries of War be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS OF SECRETARIES OF WAR RECOMMENDING PASSAGE OF BILLS PROVIDING FOR THE MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS AT THE PANAMA CANAL SO THAT TOLLS WILL BE PAID UNDER THE PANAMA CANAL RULES ONLY

On February 1, 1915, in a letter to the chairman, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives, Secretary of War Lindley M. Garrison recommended the passage of bill H. R. 20899, stating: "With either of the above amendments the bill would meet my approval, although, as indicated, I feel that the first-mentioned amendment would be more satisfactory."

On February 15, 1915, in a letter to the chairman, Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate, Secretary of War Garrison requested that section 3, relating to Panama Canal measurement rules, be reinserted in the sundry civil bill, H. R. 21318, stating: "I enclosed herewith a copy of a letter addressed to me by the President under date of February 15, which I think indicates clearly the present status of the subject of collection of tolls for vessels passing through the Panama Canal and shows the difficulty under which we are working, which difficulty would have been cured if the proposed section 3 were passed."

On January 22, 1916, in a letter to the chairman, House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Secretary of War Garrison, with regard to bill H. R. 6832, stated: "I quote below a modification of section 1 of the bill referred to, which modification I feel will meet the situation more completely than the wording of the bill as referred to me. * * * There is great need for this legislation * * *."

On July 13, 1916, in a letter to the chairman, Senate Committee on Interoceanic Canals, Secretary of War Baker stated: "I have the honor to invite your attention to the difficulties at present being experienced by the Panama Canal authorities in connection with the levying of tolls on vessels using the Canal, which would seem to require remedial legislation by Congress at the earliest possible date."

On January 23, 1917, in a letter to the chairman, House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Secretary of War Baker, with regard to bill H. R. 9818, stated: "I sincerely hope that it will be possible for you to bring the matter before Congress in such a way that it may realize the gravity of the situation and speedily enact appropriate remedial legislation."

On February 7, 1919, in a letter to the chairman, Committee on Interoceanic Canals, Secretary of War Baker, with regard to bill S. 831, stated: "I would again urge the enactment of legislation during the present session of Congress to remedy these matters. Senate bill 831 fully covers the subject."

On February 7, 1919, in a letter to the chairman, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Secretary of War Baker, with regard to bill H. R. 1655, stated: "I would again urge the enactment of legislation during the present session of Congress to remedy these matters. House bill 1655 fully covers the subject."

On March 1, 1920, in a letter to the chairman, Committee on Interoceanic Canals, Secretary of War Baker stated: "I desire to invite your attention again to the urgent necessity of legislation regarding the method of measuring vessels in connection with levying Panama Canal tolls. A bill (H. R. 7015) passed House of Representatives on October 1, 1919, which would overcome the existing difficulties if it were enacted into law."

On June 6, 1921, in a letter to the chairman, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Secretary of War Weeks stated: "A bill (H. R. 250) entitled 'Governing the tolls to be paid at the Panama Canal' was recently introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. Denison, which, if enacted into law, would remedy the present unfortunate situation."

On June 13, 1921, in a letter to the chairman, Committee on Interoceanic Canals, Secretary of War Weeks stated, with regard to bill H. R. 250: "It is respectfully requested that you take steps to introduce a similar bill in the Senate, so that this subject can be given early consideration by your committee, for if this bill were enacted into law it would remedy the present unfortunate situation."

On January 29, 1924, in a letter to the chairman, Committee on Interoceanic Canals, Secretary of War Weeks stated: "This matter is extremely important from the standpoint of equitable and efficient administration of the rules governing the collection of Panama Canal tolls. * * * I would request that you introduce a bill in the Senate substantially in the form submitted, and trust that your committee will give early and favorable consideration to the bill."

On January 29, 1924, in a letter to the chairman, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Secretary of War Weeks advised that same as quoted in the foregoing paragraph.

On February 17, 1925, in a letter to the chairman, Committee on Interoceanic Canals, Secretary of War Weeks stated: "I desire to urge that every effort be made to have H. R. 7762 reported to the Senate and passed before the expiration of the present Congress."

On February 25, 1925, in a letter to the chairman, Senate Committee on Commerce, Secretary of War Weeks, with regard to bill H. R. 7762, stated: "It is also understood that the Committee on Commerce will hold hearings on this bill on the 26th instant, and I trust that every effort will be made to have it reported in the Senate and passed before the expiration of the present Congress."

On March 21, 1930, in a letter to the chairman, House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Secretary of War Hurley stated: "I concur in the governor's comments contained in his report of March 5 on H. R. 9587, as modified by the remarks contained in his radiogram of March 19, regarding H. R. 10583, which was substituted for H. R. 9587, and I favor the pending bill."

On April 8, 1930, in a letter to the chairman, Senate Committee on Commerce, Secretary of War Hurley, with regard to bill H. R. 10583, stated: "I strongly favor the passage of the pending legislation."

On February 6, 1934, in a letter to the chairman, Committee on Interoceanic Canals, Secretary of War Dern, with regard to bill S. 2517, stated: "I recommend the passage of the pending legislation in order to remedy a situation which requires early correction as, with each year's delay, further inequities are developing."

On May 26, 1934, in a letter to Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, United States Senate, Secretary of War Dern stated: "I earnestly request your assistance in securing the enactment at this session of Congress of bill S. 2517 or the similar bill H. R. 7667, to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal."

On May 26, 1934, in a letter to the chairman, Committee on Interoceanic Canals, Secretary of War Dern, with regard to bill S. 2517, stated: "I earnestly recommend that prompt action be taken thereon by the Committee on Interoceanic Canals. It is very desirable that this legislation be enacted at the present session of the Congress."

On May 24, 1935, in a letter to Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, United States Senate, Secretary of War Dern stated: "I am again, as I did last year when you favorably responded, requesting your assistance in securing the enactment at this session of Congress of bill S. 2288, "To provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal."

Mr. DUFFY. The bill before us carries out the recommendations of the Canal administration, which has repeatedly urged the revision of the law so as to base the tolls charged at the Panama Canal on the basis of tons of 100 cubic feet of all the interior spaces usable for the carriage of cargo and of passengers. The present law provides that the amount of tolls collectible shall be limited on the basis of the net tonnage as determined by the United States rules of measurement for the registry of vessels. These United States rules, Mr. President, were in effect long before the Canal was constructed. They were designed for an entirely different purpose. We try to give as light a tonnage to vessels under our registry as we possibly can under our rules, so that when they go to foreign ports where the charge is made of so much per ton for lighterage or dockage they will get the benefit of the lower rates. That is done by all nations. But those rules were not in any way designed for and I think are not suitable for the charging of tolls on vessels going through the Canal.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DUFFY. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is there reciprocity between the United States and other nations with respect to the charging of rates so that, for instance, if we should establish a lesser rate, other nations would follow that example?

Mr. DUFFY. I understand it has been the practice of the various nations for many years back, where a vessel is registered under their flag, to make as many exemptions and use as many devices as possible to have the vessel as light as possible, so when it goes to foreign ports they will get out as light as they can with respect to various charges which are made.

That seems to be recognized and in practice by the various nations; but that is not, it seems to me, in any way applicable to what the charge should be for shipping passing through the Panama Canal. This bill is not designed to increase the present revenues of the Canal but to prevent further and unjustified continuing decreases in its revenues.

The pending bill provides a method of measurement which cannot be subject to manipulation. The bill will be quite free from administrative difficulties and will have direct relationship to the earning capacity of vessels. It seems to me that the earning capacity of vessels is the only logical basis for the levying of toll charges.

The argument has been made that this will unduly burden that part of our merchant marine using the Canal. It is difficult for me to understand why a few who are unduly benefiting, after having taken advantage of an unfair situation, should be allowed to block legislation that will lighten the toll burdens of industry as a whole.

Mr. President, I wish to invite attention to the letter which President Roosevelt sent to the chairman of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], with reference to this particular legislation. He points out that under the present law many inequalities have arisen and that the earning capacity of a vessel no longer governs the amount of tolls paid.

The President likewise points out that under the present law the United States rules are administered by the Bureau of Navigation and the Department of Commerce, which has no responsibility whatever for the Canal; and the President is of the opinion—and I thoroughly agree with him—that the rules themselves have never been considered suitable for determining Canal tolls.

As I understood the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] and several other Senators who have spoken, they would leave the impression that the shipping industry, as a whole, is opposed to this proposed legislation, or that generally they are opposed to it. I have in my hand a magazine called the Marine Review. It is stated to be "The national publication covering the business of transportation by water." I know nothing about the various marine magazines, but this apparently appears to be one of a general character. It is stated that it was founded in 1878; so it has existed for a considerable period of time. I merely wish to quote a paragraph or two from an editorial found on page 9 of the March 1935 issue, which goes to show that there are those interests within the merchant marine that believe that the measure now before the Senate should be adopted. The editorial says, among other things:

There can be no reasonable disagreement, however, on any grounds of logic, convenience, and safety as to the wisdom of discarding the existing pernicious system of dual classification. A single system would be preferable in every way. I would do away with the subterfuges that now must be used to reduce tonnage. It is merely a legal way of evading the real intent of the rules and is vicious, unsatisfactory, and absurd. It would be far better if the ship were allowed to remain as properly designed and built and the spaces deliberately exempted from measurement.

The editorial says further:

We are convinced that opposition to a single system of measurement is not the logical or reasonable approach to the solution of this problem.

One final sentence:

The Panama Canal rules are the logical standards for assessing the tolls. They represent a thorough survey and study of vessel measurement. They embody the experience of the past. By adopting a single system, using these rules, endless controversy and continual inconvenience are forever eliminated.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. DUFFY. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. I should like to make an inquiry with reference to this matter. Perhaps it is not especially pertinent at this point, but I will make it none the less. Why did it seem justified to the committee to recommend a lowering of the maximum unit charge for freight? As I understand from the bill, the fixing of a unit charge rests in the discretion of the President. I do not understand why the proposed limitation should be placed on the President. Why does not the bill provide the existing maximum and leave to the judgment of the President the fixing of the tolls within that maximum?

Mr. DUFFY. That is the law.

Mr. ADAMS. That is the law today, but under that law the maximum is $1.25, and now it is proposed to make it a dollar.

Mr. DUFFY. The pending bill provides a maximum of a dollar and a minimum of 60 cents.

Mr. ADAMS. My inquiry is, why should it be proposed to restrict the President's discretion, in face of the fact that, apparently, the Panama Canal, in certain years, at least, is not earning upon its cost a return adequate to take care of its indebtedness and to provide necessary repairs and replacements?

Mr. DUFFY. The Panama Canal authorities, after years of study, are of the opinion, and the Secretary of War has agreed with them in that respect, that by the adoption of this bill and charging a 90-cent rate the balance will be maintained, and they will still have the leeway of going up to a dollar, which is far more than is anticipated will be required. For instance, I have a table here showing how the new Japanese ships which have been designed for the purpose of obtaining lower rates in the Canal by manipulation of their structure are going through the Canal at 68 or 70 cents a ton, while others that have not changed the structure of their ships will be paying a dollar or a dollar and five cents or a dollar and ten cents. It is figured, if this manipulation could be stopped, as it would be by the enactment of this proposed legislation—and then they would have at least a leeway of from 60 cents to a dollar—that from everything that may be anticipated 90 cents will be sufficient, and it is intended, if this legislation shall be enacted, that the 90-cent rate will be put into effect.

Mr. ADAMS. I have no conflict with the theory that there should be a change in the method of computing the tonnage upon which the charge is made. My inquiry is as to why it is necessary to reduce the maximum and tie the President's hands so that if he should find that there should be a charge of a dollar and one cent or a dollar and ten cents he could not make it. In other words, I am not much in favor of reducing maximums in the charging for the use of property of this kind.

Mr. DUFFY. I will say to the Senator that I have in my hand a chart, which has been prepared by the Canal authorities, which gives a picture of what has happened. I think the chart will provide an answer to his question.

The chart shows in the black figures, if the provisions of this bill had been in effect in 1930, that the ships that used the Canal would have saved $1,577,400 in that year. In other words, they paid more in 1930 by over a million and a half dollars than they would have paid if this bill had been in effect. The amount was reduced the following year to $1,100,000; in 1932 they paid $503,000 more than they would have paid under the 90-percent rate. This bill seeks to stop this downward line which is shown on the chart and which is rapidly getting to the point where large losses will be caused to the Canal. In other words, we are not worried about the maximum. If this bill should go into effect, the Canal authorities are positive that a maximum of $1 would give sufficient leeway to take care of anything that can be reasonably anticipated and that a 90-cent rate would be sufficient; but if this bill should not be enacted by manipulating the vessels which have not been changed, by cutting more holes in the decks and by cutting doors through the bunker room, the vessel owners will continue to reduce the tolls on ships that will come into the Canal; so if the present rate should be continued there would be a loss of $1,500,000 by the year 1939. In other words, they are not worried about the rate; they feel that $1 will give ample leeway; but they are worried the other way, for where, not by direct action, not by open and aboveboard methods, but rather by manipulating a change in a single vessel tolls can be reduced, there seems to be no end to the process, and there seems to be a constantly decreasing amount of revenue from tolls.

Mr. ADAMS. As I understood the Senator from Oklahoma, he stated—and I think the same statement is in the report—that the cost of the Panama Canal is some $543,000,000; that we have outstanding a commensurate bond issue; that in 1919 the net return of the Canal was less than $10,000,000.

Mr. DUFFY. I think the Senator from Colorado misunderstood. I think it never got below $19,000,000.

Mr. ADAMS. No; nineteen million was the gross return, and then they had nine and a half million to deduct from it as the cost of operation; so that the net dropped down to practically $9,000,000 or $10,000,000. It seems to me that we are not securing an adequate return for this vast governmental investment, nor are we in a position to lay aside a sinking fund and pay the interest and to make the necessary replacements. I do not think we ought to furnish these great facilities and not make a reasonable and adequate charge for them.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. DUFFY. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. STEIWER. As I understand the question propounded by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], he assumes that the pending bill will naturally result in limiting the President so that the maximum rate he could establish would be lower than the present rate. I am not sure that I am correct in the interpretation which I have placed upon the Senator's question; but it occurs to me, under the new method of measurement to be provided by the pending legislation, if enacted, that the rate of $1 a ton would provide more revenue than the existing rate of $1.25 a ton. Does the Senator from Wisconsin agree to that?

Mr. DUFFY. I think that is correct. It is contemplated that a 90-cent rate will, in the aggregate, bring in about the same amount of tolls as now received or, at least, as were received at the end of the year 1934. But if this process of whittling down the tolls paid by changing the structure of ships continues, of course, the returns from the Canal must go much lower.

Mr. STEIWER. In other words, if there is a minimum limitation of 60 cents and a maximum of $1, in order to increase the present revenues or even to hold them substantially near the present figure, it would not be necessary to charge the maximum rate of $1.

Mr. DUFFY. That is correct.

Mr. STEIWER. But in all likelihood a lower rate, which the Senator assumes might be 90 cents?

Mr. DUFFY. The Secretary of War has investigated and has stated that if the legislation is enacted he will recommend to the President a rate of 90 cents, and it is assumed the President will adopt the recommendation. The charts and arguments and tables are presented with the idea that it is certain the 90-cent rate will be made effective.

Mr. STEIWER. I observed that statement in the report of the committee. It might be well for the Senator from Wisconsin to say that some members of the shipping industry calculate that a rate of 85 cents would produce an amount of revenue substantially the same as the present rate under the present system of loading.

Mr. DUFFY. I will hand to the Senator from Oregon the chart which shows the point at which it is assumed now to fix the gross income, which would be somewhere between $211,000—the shipping lines paid more in 1934—and the income of 1935, which would be $435,000 the other way.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DUFFY. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. Leaving the maximum alone would not do any damage. In other words, there is no injury in the maximum figures being where they are now.

Mr. DUFFY. I do not know, but I assume by reason of the fact that certain rather powerful shipping interests have always opposed legislation where the tolls might be increased that that provision was put in as a sort of guaranty that they could not go above that figure. I do not know that to be a fact.

Mr. ADAMS. My only contention is that the wider the range the safer they would be in making the provision.

Mr. DUFFY. I see the force of the argument of the Senator, but the bill has been presented, and after the hearings it was assumed that would be the proper way to do it. I am an humble member of the committee and knew nothing about the legislation until I sat in on the hearings.

Mr. President, there has been some comment here about the Japanese shipping interests changing the structure of their vessels so as to take advantage of the anomalous situation we now have to get their ships through the Canal at much lower rates than the average paid by American shipping or by the shipping of any other country. I have the figures, for instance, of a new Japanese freight ship, which I believe used the Canal for the first time during the year 1935. The name of the ship is the Awobosan Maru. The interesting figures I can give the Senate are that when this ship goes through the Suez Canal the tolls amount to $11,700. When she goes through the Panama Canal, under the prevailing system, she pays $4,700; but if this legislation should be enacted, under the rate of 90 cents per ton this Japanese vessel would pay some increase over the present amount, in other words, $6,200. Even at the $6,200 rate it is paying scarcely half the rate that is charged when that ship goes through the Suez Canal.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. DUFFY. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. The same rule would apply to all other ships passing through both canals, would it not?

Mr. DUFFY. I am merely pointing out what can be done by taking advantage of structural changes by having openings made in the decks of certain of the Japanese ships. I understand they have engaged the services of a gentleman by the name of Ryan, who is advising the nations of the world, which use the Panama Canal, how they can alter the structure of their ships in order to take advantage of our peculiar situation and get a much lower rate.

I have here a list of 14 Japanese ships which are mentioned at page 105 of the Governor's annual report as having been recently constructed to take advantage of the rules which are now in existence and which ships passed for the first time through the Panama Canal during the year 1935. They paid tolls upon 193,000 tons, whereas if this bill becomes a law the 14 new Japanese vessels would pay on 279,000 tons. In other words, they would be paying upon the cargo-carrying capacity of the vessels, and that is what it seems to me they should be charged.

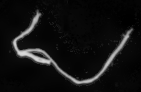
Mr. President, may I invite the attention of Senators to the chart which has been placed on the wall? The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] asked a question a while ago which I wish to answer. He said, "You are going to benefit the tankers, but what about the vessels carrying cotton?" At the bottom of the chart is represented a cargo-carrying vessel. It is the kind of vessel that could carry cargo, such as cotton or any other cargo of that kind. It will be noted that the way that cargo ship was constructed under the rules, those parts of the ship which are outlined in red were not measured as part of the carrying capacity of the vessel, but all that part shown in blue was used in carrying freight, bales of cotton, or any other cargo.

In the decks of those vessels were cut a tonnage hatch, some small, round openings called scuppers, and a little square opening called a freeing port. They carry just as much freight on that deck which is shown in blue as they did before they put in those openings, but by using that device they exempt themselves from paying any toll on that entire deck which is shown in blue. They can do it legally under the rules under which we are now operating, but if this bill shall be enacted into law it would not be possible for them to do it any longer.

I invite attention to the top part of chart where is shown another type of vessel. At the top the boat deck is shown. That was not considered space for which the ships could receive pay, but the next deck, indicated on the chart as B deck, is passenger-carrying space. By the device of going back to the end of B deck and putting in a little opening called a tonnage hatch, and a freeing port, and scuppers on the part shown in green, they lifted that whole B deck out of the classification upon which it would have had to pay charges or tolls, and paid no charges or tolls upon it whatsoever although it is bringing money to them and they are renting those cabins to people who travel on that ship. In other words, the tolls have been reduced by resorting to a device which never was intended by Congress when the legislation was originally enacted.

In 1934 these exemptions amounted to 2,159,505 tons. Of those which have been exempted in that way, 656,000 tons were United States ships and 1,503,000 tons in foreign ships.

The charts show the foreign vessels would not save more than the United States vessels. The charts show the savings to the United States vessels in yellow and in similar manner show the savings to foreign vessels. I shall not take the time to explain fully the chart, but it shows there is considerably more saved now by foreign vessels than there would be after the enactment of this measure into law, when the saving will be to United States vessels rather than to foreign vessels. But that is not the primary purpose of this legislation. Some foreign ships, like Japanese ships, up to the last year did not take advantage of the opportunity to change their vessels by cutting holes in their decks and changing the structure in that way so as to get that advantage.



With the traffic at the level at which it has been during the past few years, the exemption of cargo-carrying space in shelter-decks and superstructures amounts to approximately 2,816,000 net tons per year. Of these, about 1,000,000 tons are on United States vessels, and nearly twice the amount, or 1,826,000 tons, are on foreign vessels.

While United States vessels form over 45 percent of the total transits through the Canal, yet the exemptions are about 32 percent of the total for this type of vessels. That shows why, if this legislation shall be enacted, there will be greater savings to United States vessels than to those of foreign countries, because so many foreign countries have adopted the advice of this gentleman who goes around advising them how to cut down their Panama Canal tolls.

I am of opinion that if there is the opportunity to cut down tolls—and, of course, foreign vessels should have the same advantage of it and will get the same advantage of it under the treaty as our own—we should do it openly and aboveboard, and say we are reducing the rates, and not permit some nation or some line or some individual ships to reduce the toll upon their own particular vessels by the device of cutting a hole in the deck and cutting some scuppers in the sides.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] said he did not believe that any vessel or any line would deliberately cut a hole in its vessel for the purpose of reducing the rate. As I understand the practice the Senator is very much misinformed. There is not any question about the matter in the mind of anybody who knows. This gentleman, Mr. Ryan, offers his services for compensation to various governments and ship lines, and tells them that if they will make this change here, and cut out this place over there, they can exempt the whole deck, although the deck may be crammed full of cargo for which they are getting freight charges; and yet, under that device, the Canal authorities are helpless. It seems to me a reasonable proposition that we ought to adopt a schedule of tolls based upon the cargo which a vessel can receive in its hold and on which it can make some money.

Mr. President, some Senator quoted from the figures given in the minority report. I believe the figures given in the minority report are incorrect. I have in my hand a copy of a letter which was sent to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] under date of May 27, 1935, by the Panama Canal authorities, calling attention to the fact that the figures quoted in the minority report are incorrect. I wish to read now from this letter, which was addressed to the Senator from New Jersey, a few paragraphs to show that the figures given there are not accurate, according to the statistics maintained by the Panama Canal authorities:

In view of the statement in the minority report, this office requested the Governor—

Meaning the Governor of the Panama Canal—

by radio to verify the figures which had been used in the table on pages 3 and 4. The Governor's radio reply, from which the figures in the last column are obtained, is quoted below for your information, and shows clearly that the claims of the various companies are out of all reason as compared with the existing facts.

To save the time of the Senate, I ask at this point unanimous consent that the entire letter, giving the figures as to the ships Virginia, California, and Pennsylvania of the Panama-Pacific Line, and the ships of the Grace Line, the American-Hawaiian Line, the Luckenbach Line, and the Dollar Line, may be included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

THE PANAMA CANAL,
Washington, May 27, 1935.

Hon. W. WARREN BARBOUR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR BARBOUR: At the request of Governor Schley I am submitting the following relative to your minority report (No. 624, pt. 2) to accompany bill S. 2288, providing for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal. The following statement on page 2 of the report appears to contain the basic reasons for your objection to this legislation:

"The enormity of the burden imposed upon the leading American lines using the Canal is evident from their testimony at the hearings both before this committe and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. In the case of one passenger and general-cargo line it was testified that the annual increase in tolls at the 90-cent rate would be $400,000 and $551,000 at the maximum rate of $1. Another line's tolls would be increased $208,000 annually at the 90-cent rate and $297,000 at the $1 rate. A third line would pay $140,000 more at the 90-cent rate and $276,000 more at the proposed maximum. Representatives of a fourth line testified that its tolls would be increased between $290,000 and $300,000 at the maximum rate."

The figures given in the above paragraph, evidently taken from statements made by the representatives of the interested lines, differ so much from the figures contained in the table submitted by the Panama Canal and found on pages 3 and 4 of the hearings (being inserted in conformity with the agreement made by Chairman GORE with Senator COPELAND), that it appears that the exact result of the proposed legislation was overlooked. A comparison of figures based upon the 90-cent rate appears below:

Steamship line	Increase claimed by companies 90-cent rate	Increase shown in hearings (p. 4) [1]	Corrected figures
Panama Pacific	$208,000	$195,000	$112,260.15
Grace Line	400,000	263,000	177,593.25
American-Hawaiian	140,000	132,000	124,196.05
	$1.00 rate
Luckenbach Line	$290,000–$300,000	59,000	63,643.87

[1] At the foot of the table printed on p. 4 of the hearings it was stated that the increases indicated for the first 2 lines, the Panama-Pacific and the Grace Line, would be materially reduced by the proposed elimination of charges for public rooms. It was also stated that the increase for the American-Hawaiian Line would be reduced if that line continued the present practice of closing the shelter deck on some of their east-bound transits and paying on an increased tonnage increasing the tolls about $1,200 per transit.

In view of the statement in the minority report, this office requested the Governor by radio to verify the figures which had been used in the table on pages 3 and 4. The Governor's radio reply, from which the figures in the last column are obtained, is quoted below for your information, and shows clearly that the claims of the various companies are out of all reason as compared with the existing facts:

"Your 59 in 1934 Panama Pacific paid $579,701.25. Under 90-cent rate on present Panama Canal net would pay $775,967.40, an increase of $196,266.15. This would be reduced by possible revision of Panama Canal rules eliminating public rooms and allowing crew serving passengers, estimated 93,340 tons, or $86,006, leaving increase of $112,260.15. Would pay $691,961.40, which is $30,354.85 less than these vessels would have paid if they had not been reconditioned to reduce United States tonnage. Example: Virginia paid $15,086.25 per transit for 78 transits, would pay approximately $14,589 per transit; California paid $14,918.75 for 63 transits, would pay $14,078.70; Pennsylvania paid $15,022.50 for 31 transits, would pay $14,613.30.

"Grace Line passenger ships paid $865,038.75; would pay $1,127,945.70, an increase of $262,906.95, which, minus the estimated amount of public rooms and crew space of 94,790 tons, or $85,311, leaves increase of $177,593.25. Would pay $1,042,632, which is $51,460 less than would have been paid if installation had not been made. Example: Santa Clara paid $6,287.50 per transit for 31 trips, would pay approximately $6,169.50 under proposed plan. Grace Line cargo ships paid $20,071.25, would pay $18,361.80, a decrease of $1,709.45.

"American-Hawaiian paid $1,031,581.25, would pay $1,155,777.30, increase of $124,196.05. No passenger ships, no public rooms, or additional crew, but this would be reduced if practice continued closing shelter deck on some vessels east-bound. This is $33,555.20 less than would have been paid if no installation had been made whereby exemption of shelter-deck space was secured.

"Luckenbach Line paid $971,929.43, would pay $1,035,573.30, an increase of $63,643.87; passenger cabins negligible. This is $94,212.38 less than they would have paid if no alterations had been made.

"Dollar Line paid $652,646.25, would have paid $669,343.50, an increase of $16,697.25; estimated reduction on account public rooms and crew, 49,241 tons, or $44,316.90, making decrease repeat decrease of $27,619.65. Tolls then would be $625,026.60 or $104,758.40, less than would have been paid if alterations had not been made."

In response to a request of a representative of the Luckenbach Steamship Co. the Governor was requested to check the estimated increases specified for that company. A copy of the reply of the acting executive secretary of May 22, 1935, together with a copy of a detailed statement listing each of the vessels of the company transiting the Canal during the fiscal year 1934, is attached for your information. This statement indicates the care that was taken in the preparation of the figures used.

The Governor has been requested to comment upon other features of your report and it is hoped that you will give careful consideration to the above-corrected figures and to any further comments which may be made by him in reference to the subject of this bill, the passage of which is so essential to the proper administration of the Panama Canal.

Very respectfully,

A. L. FLINT,
Chief of Office.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I am one of those who believe in protecting the merchant marine of this country. I am one of those rather old-fashioned persons who would even be willing to grant a subsidy where it is necessary to keep our vessels afloat, and give us protection in time of war. I do not know what all the insinuations are about some vessels belonging to the Standard Oil Co. or to some other concern. I suppose vessels carrying oil are just as valuable to this country in time of a great national emergency, in bringing fuel to the fleet, and so forth, as would be cargo vessels that might bring food or clothing. I do not care; it does not make any difference to me which particular line may get some small benefit. I think it cannot be gainsaid that the ship lines in this country whose tolls will be raised as the result of the proposed legislation even so will be paying less than they paid before they started manipulating their vessels and reconstructing them to take advantage of the anomalous system of measurement that they are now required to go through at the Canal.

In other words, the cargo vessel shown here on the chart, when this proposed law becomes effective, will not pay as much toll for going through the Canal as it did before the time those structural changes were made; but, of course, it will pay a higher rate than it is paying now, and I think it ought to do so. Why should it not pay tolls based upon the deck that we see marked in blue, that is just filled with cargo, for carrying which the vessel is being paid? Why should that deck be exempted because of the artificial device of making a hole in the deck above?

The theory, of course, is that if there is a hole in the deck above, the deck marked in blue cannot be used for cargo purposes, and that it will not be any good to the ship, and therefore, under the present rules they have it exempted; but, as a matter of fact, they put tarpaulins around it. They can do everything to close up those holes and protect the cargo from the weather except to seal it permanently. So we have the unique situation of somebody telling fairy tales. In other words, a ship comes through the Canal, and because it has a little extra hole in the deck, and scuppers in the sides, that deck is exempted on the ground that it cannot be used for cargo, and yet it is packed plumb full of cargo. It is just a foolish device. If we wish to give subsidies of that kind, let us give them openly to our own ships; but in this way we are giving a subsidy to foreign vessels as well as our own, because the foreign vessels may use exactly the same device as our own vessels that have so changed the structures of their ships.

Mr. President, I wish now to cite merely one or two other typical cases and read one or two more paragraphs from the letter of Governor Schley which he addressed to the chairman of our committee, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. The last paragraph, which sums up the other parts of his letter, I think is very instructive, and I think his statements are entirely borne out by the facts:

> The passage of this bill will not increase the aggregate of the toll collections; it will eliminate inequalities in charges between different vessels; it will stop the making of structural changes in vessels which in many cases reduce the safety of the vessels at sea; it will make unnecessary the measurement of vessels transiting the Canal except under one set of rules especially adapted to the purpose, such rules being an improvement upon, though similar to those applicable to the Suez Canal; it will eliminate an expensive indirect subsidy which up to now has accrued to foreign vessels in much greater proportion than to United States vessels; it will stop the apparently endless reduction in tolls paid by a vessel, and it will so fix Panama Canal income that a change therein will be effected, as it should be, by a change in the rate per ton ordered by the President within the limits prescribed by Congress, rather than by arbitrary changes in the measurement of vessels.

Mr. President, it does seem to me that the Governor of the Canal Zone states the case in a very few words and in a very able manner.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] said that the changes which were made did not affect the safety of the vessels; that putting holes in the decks and putting scuppers in the sides did not affect the safety of the vessels, because of certain regulations that were in effect. I have in my possession a statement by Admiral Tawresey, who was our representative at the conference which was held with reference to safety of life at sea. I thought I could lay my hand on it, but I do not find it at the moment. I ask to have it printed at the end of my remarks, and as a part of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, the whole situation as to the proposed legislation, as I see it, is as follows:

The President has requested the legislation. Practically every Secretary of War, Republican or Democrat, who has looked into this matter—and they have had charge of the administration of the affairs of the Canal—has recommended it. It will not in the aggregate increase the tolls, but it will fix them so that this artificial device can no longer be used. It will stop the indirect subsidy which we are giving to foreign vessels at the expense of our own vessels; and it does seem to me that the shipping interests that are opposing the measure are taking a very unreasonable and rather selfish attitude. In other words, they have made structural changes in their vessels for the purpose of obtaining reduced rates, and now that they have them made they wish to keep on operating their ships in that manner.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DUFFY. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. From whose letter was the Senator reading?

Mr. DUFFY. The letter is from the Governor of the Canal Zone, Governor Schley.

Mr. BLACK. Has the War Department taken any position on this bill?

Mr. DUFFY. Oh, yes! The Senator probably was out of the Chamber at the time; but I had introduced into the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, extracts from the recommendations of practically every Secretary of War from the time of Mr. Garrison down to the present Secretary.

Mr. BLACK. What were their recommendations?

Mr. DUFFY. That such legislation should be enacted, and there should be an end to the present anomalous situation of measurement as it relates to the Panama Canal.

Mr. BLACK. A few moments ago I heard a statement that the effect of enacting this bill would be to lower the charges to oil tankers and to raise the charges to other vessels. What is the basis for lowering the charge to oil tankers?

Mr. DUFFY. I pointed out—the Senator was out of the Chamber at the time—that in the case of vessels shown on the bottom part of the chart, vessels designed to carry cotton, and which I assume do carry cotton, those that have not changed their structure by cutting an extra hole in the deck to reduce the rate will benefit in exactly the same way that tankers will, except that there is a lower rate for vessels returning in ballast. Tankers return in ballast more frequently than other vessels do; but any vessel that returns in ballast will get exactly the same benefits that a tanker will get which returns in ballast.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator, does the War Department take the same position as that indicated by what the Senator has just read as representing the position of the Governor of the Canal Zone? I mean by that, does the War Department take the position that the foreign vessels are subsidized by the present condition to the disadvantage of the American vessels?

Mr. DUFFY. I do not know that I have heard that exact language used. They are very much in favor of the enactment of the pending bill into law, and I think there can be no answer to the argument that by permitting these artificial devices to be taken advantage of, we are in effect cutting down the tolls at the Canal year after year, and giving the benefit of that fact either to such foreign lines or our own as have adopted the device to which reference has been made, and therefore it is an indirect subsidy.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DUFFY. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I find on page 3 of the hearings that in response to a request of my own there was inserted by Mr. Flint, chief of the Washington office of the Panama Canal, certain figures showing the effect of these new rates on shipping. Does the Senator question the figures there given?

Mr. DUFFY. I do not have those figures before me now.

Mr. COPELAND. These figures indicate that the Standard Shipping Co., which is the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, will, under the bill before us if it becomes a law, have a reduction in tolls of $135,000; that the Standard Oil Co. of California will have a reduction of $85,000; that the Sun Oil Co. will have a reduction of $78,000; that the Union Oil Co. of California will have a reduction of $42,000 and that miscellaneous tanker lines will have reduction of $238,000. Does the Senator dispute those figures?

Mr. DUFFY. Not at all, but I assume that when there is a tanker, a hole cannot be cut in the side of the vessel or scuppers and freeing ports and holes in the deck, as in the case of some of these other cargo vessels.

Mr. COPELAND. I am not talking about tubs such as the Senator has pictured here. How many ships are there like that transiting the Canal?

Mr. DUFFY. I have not the figures here, but I can get them for the Senator very readily.

Mr. COPELAND. Are there many such vessels?

Mr. GORE. I can furnish the list. I have a list of 38 belonging to different big concerns.

Mr. COPELAND. Thirty-eight ships out of how many?

Mr. GORE. I say, I can furnish a list of 38 ships now, in answer to the Senator's request.

Mr. COPELAND. Out of how many ships using the Canal?

Mr. GORE. I stated a while ago that from 1915 to 1931 the total tonnage of ships passing through the Canal altogether, as measured by the United States rules, amounted to 272,000,000 tons. If they had been measured by the Panama Canal rules, they would have measured 331,000,000 tons. There would have been 60,000,000 tons more, which would have brought between seventy and seventy-five million dollars in addition into the Treasury of the Government. I do not know at the moment how many ships there are altogether.

Mr. COPELAND. May I say, in all courtesy, that, in my opinion, the answer of the Senator has not been responsive? He says there are 38 tubs like the one pictured on the wall; out of how many?

Mr. DUFFY. Is the Senator reflecting on the draftsman of the chart by calling the illustration a tub?

Mr. COPELAND. Not at all.

Mr. GORE. Following up my point, I was using this as illustrative of all the ships which have done this thing. I do not have a list showing all the ships of all the nations which have resorted to this device to reduce their own tolls. I cannot answer at the moment the Senator's question in gross, but I happen to have a list of 38 ships on my desk, which illustrates the device to which the owners of these vessels have resorted, and the advantage which they have taken of this dual system of measuring, and I will insert the list in the RECORD at this point. The Grace Line has reduced its own toll charges 33.9 percent by resorting to these methods.

The list referred to is as follows:

During the year 1933 the following 38 ships secured a reduction in tonnage under the United States rules of measurement and therefore secured a reduction in tolls charges at the Panama Canal as shown in the following table:

List of vessels that have recently had United States tonnage reduced

LUCKENBACH LINE—REDUCTION OF 26.1 PERCENT

Vessel	United States net		Reduction in—
	Former	New	United States tonnage	Tolls charges
	Tons	Tons	Tons
Dorothy Luckenbach	5,370	3,999	1,371	$1,713.75
Harry Luckenbach	5,381	3,967	1,414	1,767.50
J. L. Luckenbach	5,374	3,999	1,375	1,718.75
Jacob Luckenbach	5,741	3,549	2,192	2,740.00
Lena Luckenbach	4,211	3,200	1,011	1,288.75
Lillian Luckenbach	5,374	3,999	1,375	1,718.75
Mathew Luckenbach	4,702	3,635	1,067	1,333.75
Susan V. Luckenbach	4,671	3,623	1,048	1,310.00
Walter A. Luckenbach	5,212	3,758	1,363	1,703.75
AMERICAN-HAWAIIAN LINE REDUCTION OF 23.1 PERCENT
Californian	4,927	3,653	1,274	$1,592.50
Panaman	4,067	3,159	908	1,135.00
Texan	5,506	4,428	1,078	1,347.50
Hawaiian	3,836	2,899	937	1,171.25
Ohioan	4,033	3,138	895	1,118.75
American	3,778	2,840	938	1,172.50
Montanan	3,821	2,878	943	1,178.75
Minnesotan	4,059	3,135	924	1,155.00
Alaskan	4,266	3,300	966	1,207.50
Mexican	5,457	4,442	1,015	1,268.75
Pennsylvanian	4,070	3,132	938	1,172.50
Dakotan	4,086	3,150	936	1,170.00
Missourian	4,927	3,653	1,274	1,592.50
Kansan	3,880	2,864	1,016	1,270.00
Oregonian	3,830	2,870	960	1,200.00
Columbian	3,748	2,861	887	1,108.75
Kentuckian	4,039	3,180	859	1,073.75
Iowan	4,053	3,137	916	1,142.50
GRACE LINE REDUCTION OF 33.9 PERCENT
Santa Paula	5,814	3,840	1,974	$2,467.50
Santa Rosa	5,814	3,840	1,974	2,467.50
Santa Elena	5,814	3,840	1,974	2,467.50
Santa Lucia	5,814	3,840	1,974	2,467.50

List of vessels that have recently had United States tonnage reduced—Continued

DOLLAR LINE REDUCTION OF 20.6 PERCENT

Vesse	United States net		Reduction in—
	Former	New	United States tonnage	Tolls charges
	Tons	Tons	Tons
President Lincoln	8,361	6,787	1,574	$1,967.50
President Taft	8,447	6,627	1,820	2,275.00
President Pierce	8,425	6,604	1,784	2,230.00
President Wilson	8,319	6,684	1,635	2,043.75
PANAMA PACIFIC LINE REDUCTION OF 19.7 PERCENT
Virginia	12,168	9,782	2,385	$2,981.25
California	11,935	9,512	2,423	3,028.75
Pennsylvania	12,018	9,703	2,315	2,893.75

NOTE.—These 38 vessels made approximately 400 transits of the Canal with a saving to them or, in other words, a loss of revenue to the Canal of approximately $710,000 per year.

Mr. COPELAND. I assume the Senator will admit that there are several thousand ships using the Canal.

Mr. GORE. Thousands of ships use it, and hundreds of ships have resorted to this device.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator admits that there are thousands of ships using the Canal, but he is only jumping to a conclusion when he says that thousands have used this device. He said a moment ago that there were 38 ships now——

Mr. GORE. No; I did not say that. I said I had a list of 38 on my desk which had done it. How many hundreds and how many thousands have done it I do not know, and therefore I could not answer the Senator's question categorically. I do not know the exact number of ships which have resorted to this device. But I will put it in the RECORD later.

Mr. COPELAND. Then, so far as the Senator does know, there are 38 ships like that pictured on the wall.

Mr. GORE. Thirty-eight, belonging to five American concerns. I have not information as to the number of British ships, Swedish ships, Japanese ships, using the device. All of them resort to this device. I was only referring to five American companies, and only 38 ships belonging to them, but the list typifies and illustrates what all countries are doing. They are all taking advantage of this situation, and depleting our receipts at the Canal by resorting to this device.

Mr. COPELAND. I should like to say, in respect to that, if the Senator will permit me, that there has been no contention on the part of the Senator from Oklahoma that the receipts of the Canal would be increased under this new plan.

Mr. GORE. Not at all. There has been no purpose and there is no purpose in this proposed legislation to increase the aggregate receipts, which ought to amount to twenty-five or twenty-six million dollars in order to cover the operating cost and the service of the capital cost of the Canal. The rates will be reduced under the pending bill, if it be enacted into law, so that the aggregate receipts will not exceed the aggregate receipts at present. The point is that the receipts as they now come in are unequal. Some ships avail themselves of this device; other ships do not; and the Senator from Wisconsin has just instanced a Japanese ship, and says that when it passes through the Suez Canal it pays $11,000 toll, and when it passes through the Panama Canal, as it did last year, it pays a little over $4,000 toll. Under the pending bill, if it be enacted, that particular ship would pay an increase in its tolls, and it ought to do so. On the other hand, there are Japanese ships, no doubt, that will pay a smaller toll if this measure shall be enacted, because they have not availed themselves of the privilege to which I have referred. The ships which pay increased tonnage under the new law will simply be paying in proportion to the privilege they have been enjoying in the past. They will lose the privilege and will pay an increased toll in accordance with the privilege they have heretofore been enjoying—of which they will be deprived.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I should like to conclude the few remarks I have intended to make. I have now in my hands the communication to which I referred a few minutes ago.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DUFFY. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have not had the opportunity of listening to all the discussion, but as much as I have heard seems to relate almost exclusively to the comparative rates paid by various shipping lines. Can the Senator tell me the effect of the pending bill upon freight rates in the aggregate?

Mr. DUFFY. That brings out a very good point. I tried to bring out that information by a question I asked a little while ago.

During the past few years there have been American ships and foreign ships which have cut these holes in their decks and saved themselves thousands and thousands of dollars in the way of tolls, and I have not yet heard that one nickel of that saving was ever passed on down to the people who were shipping the cargoes on the vessels. In other words, I do not think that the small amount involved here will affect freight rates at all.

The aggregate which the American vessels will pay in the way of toll charges after this proposed legislation shall go into effect will be approximately the same as what they pay today. Some few, those which have used this device of changing the structure of their ships and artificially reducing their own rates, will pay more, while their competitors and others who were trying to play the game and did not do that will benefit. But I have not heard of the savings being passed on to the people who ship cargoes on those vessels.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I observe, on line 2, page 2, that there is a maximum rate of $1 per net vessel-ton and a minimum rate of 60 cents per ton. From the report of the majority, it would appear that under the present system there is a maximum of $1.25 and a minimum of 75 cents. I ask, therefore, would not the enactment of this proposal reduce the average cost per ton of transporting freight through the Canal?

Mr. DUFFY. In the aggregate I think it will remain about the same as it now is. I will say to the Senator that the present rate, although this refers to $1.25 as a maximum, is based upon the United States rules, which really have nothing to do with the carrying capacity of a vessel going through the Canal; but each nation, when a ship registers under its flag, tries to cut its tonnage as low as possible in order that the charges for docking at foreign ports may be as low as possible.

When the Canal was built, long before those rules were in effect, by an opinion of the Attorney General, clearly contrary, in my opinion, to what Congress intended, he held that it was the United States rules which had to be used down at the Panama Canal, instead of the rules based upon the carrying capacity of the vessel.

I think in the aggregate there will not be much change. There may be a slight change downward, but I think in the aggregate there will not be much change.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. What I am trying to determine is whether or not the bill will enable the Canal to compete more efficiently with the transcontinental railroads. Can the Senator answer that question?

Mr. DUFFY. I do not think it is going to make any substantial difference in the income which the Canal gets.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is not the question. The question is whether freight can be carried at a lower rate per ton under this measure than under the present system. I am not now interested in what it will cost a particular vessel to get through. I am interested in determining what it will cost a ton for a particular commodity to get through.

Mr. DUFFY. One of the costs of operating a vessel through the Canal is the Canal toll. Of course, when certain vessels use these artificial devices to change the structure of their boats they do not pay as much as they did before. They could have passed that on to the people shipping on their vessels in a reduction of freight rates, but I never heard of anything like that being done. So I cannot understand the Senator's inquiry further than to say that I do not think it is necessarily going to make any change.

I should like to conclude, Mr. President. I started to quote from Rear Admiral J. G. Tawresey, United States Navy, retired, who represented the United States as delegate to the International Conference on Safety of Life at Sea, as well as to the International Load Line Conference. I have a copy of a report he wrote to the Panama Canal authorities in answer to an inquiry as to what his opinion was as to the structural changes which these various lines had taken advantage of in order to reduce the toll they would have to pay, and he said:

> I understand the inquiry to refer to certain openings that are cut in ships' decks, sides, and bulkheads to secure exemption of interior spaces from the vessel's net tonnage. Such openings are a potential danger to the ship and may become a major contributing cause of disaster, as happened in the loss of the Vestris. The nearer they are to the load water line the greater the hazard.
>
> One function of the ship's side structure and of the deck and bulkhead structures is to keep the water out of the vessel, or, if some water enters, to confine it to the leaking compartments.

In other words, in spite of the references that are made in the Senate that it would not make any difference as to the safety of the vessels, yet here is a very eminent authority who has represented this country at various international conferences who says that in his opinion there is a potential danger.

I now merely wish to cite in answer to some of the inquiries that are propounded three typical kinds of vessels and give Senators the comparative figures. The first vessel is a passenger vessel known as the President Pierce. The next is an open-shelter-deck cargo vessel, call it, of the type of the Hanover, and the third is a closed-shelter-deck vessel such as the Robin Goodfellow. The President Pierce, under the present dual system, pays $8,300 in going through the canal. If this bill shall become a law, the President Pierce would be charged an additional sum of $900, or $9,200. On the same vessel going through the Suez Canal the charge would be nearly $20,000.

With respect to the Hanover, the Panama Canal charge at present is $4,500. There would be a slight increase, in case the bill shall be passed, to $5,300, but the charge through the Suez Canal would be about $11,500.

The figures on the Goodfellow would be: The present charge, $5,300; if this bill shall become effective there would be a reduction to $5,000; while if the Robin Goodfellow went through the Suez Canal the charge would be $11,200.

In other words it depends upon what structural changes have been made, or whether some of the new vessels have been constructed with the idea of taking advantage of the double system of measurement which now exists.

So, I wish to conclude, Mr. President, by saying that those administering the Panama Canal have not any particular ax to grind. They merely desire to get enough income so they may pay the certain charges for operating and the fixed overhead charges. They are interested in that. But they have seen how there has been a steady chiseling process over a period of years where certain ship lines and certain ship owners have, by changing and weakening the construction of their vessels, reduced their toll charges. There is no sense, there is no logic to that sort of a system, and I contend that this bill, which the President of the United States asks us to pass, which the Panama Canal authorities ask us to pass, which every Secretary of War from the time of Garrison has been in favor of, ought to be enacted.

EXHIBIT A

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 16, 1934.

Mr. A. L. FLINT,
Chief of Office, Panama Canal,
Munitions Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your inquiry as to the effect on safety at sea, because of the rules for making deductions from the gross tonnage of vessels to determine their net registered tonnage:

I understand the inquiry to refer to certain openings that are cut in ships' decks, sides, and bulkheads, to secure exemption of interior spaces from the vessel's net tonnage. Such openings are a potential danger to the ship, and may become a major contributing cause of disaster, as happened in the loss of the Vestris. The nearer they are to the load water line the greater the hazard.

One function of the ship's side structure, and of the deck and bulkhead structures, is to keep the water out of the vessel, or, if some water enters, to confine it to the leaking compartments. Some openings in the structure are necessary. Safety requires that they have the most efficient closing appliances known, such as watertight hatch covers, watertight doors, covers, valves, etc.

The tonnage regulations prohibit permanent, watertight closing appliances if the spaces concerned are to be exempted from gross tonnage. Hinged watertight doors and covers and regularly installed valves are not allowed, but some less efficient closing must be used to secure the exemption.

The tonnage openings, and the necessary accompanying freeing ports and scuppers, add nothing to safety; their only purpose is to reduce the net registered tonnage, without reducing the available interior space in the vessel.

Yours very truly,

J. G. TAWRESEY,
Rear Admiral (C. C.) U. S. Navy, Retired.

Rear Admiral J. G. Tawresey, United States Navy, retired, has represented the United States as delegate to the International Conference on Safety of Life at Sea, as well as to the International Load Line Conference. Vessels built to use the Panama Canal are constructed so as to secure the lowest tonnage possible under registry rules and minimize the toll charges. As Admiral Tawresey points out, the openings required in order to take advantage of shelter-deck exemption do not make the vessel safer but make her less safe. Openings are cut in the deck and bulkheads and also freeing ports and scuppers are placed in the side walls of the vessel, which are not allowed to be permanently and efficiently closed but are permitted to be closed temporarily and inefficiently. These openings serve no purpose of safety or any other purpose than a technical compliance with the rules to secure exemption of space from measurement. The freeing ports and scuppers are a potential danger, for instead of caring for leakage they may admit water and be at least a potential cause for the loss of a vessel.

At the hearings held in 1934, the shipping interests maintained that if the bill passed and the maximum rate of $1 per Panama Canal net ton applied, there would result a substantial increase in tolls and a financial burden put upon American shipowners.

A hearing was granted the steamship interests by the Secretary of War, after which the Secretary wrote Senator GORE under date of May 26, 1934, as follows:

"After a full study of the situation and especially after consideration of the objections which have been raised by steamship interests, I have determined that I will recommend to the President after the enactment of the legislation with the proposed maximum rate of $1 per ton, that he establish a tolls rate on laden vessels of not more than 90 cents."

With this rate applied to the 1933 figures, then current, American vessels would have paid $232,398 less than they actually did pay, while Norwegian would have paid $53,500 more; French would have paid $41,190 more; German would have paid $82,350 more; Dutch would have paid $15,140 more; British would have paid $150,435 less; Japanese would have paid $103,517 less; not even taking into consideration the additional saving they would secure by the revision of the rules. At that time United States vessels were paying a larger rate per ton than any of the maritime nations, except Japan.

The effect on the 1934 figures is indicated on the chart and shows, after allowing for the reductions that will be secured by a revision of the rules, a saving to American vessels of $321,869, or approximately 3 percent.

Thus, it will be seen that on the 1933 and 1934 figures United States vessels would save at the 90-cent rate and the revision of the rules more than the vessels of any other nation, and, in fact, more than all the foreign nations combined.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I do not know what the dispositon of my leader is. I wish to make some reply to the argument which has been presented on the pending bill. Would the Senator from Arkansas care to have it go over until tomorrow?

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator would prefer to go on with his address tomorrow, I am ready to move an executive session.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well.

INTERNATIONAL MANUFACTURERS' SALES CO. OF AMERICA, INC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4178) for the relief of the International Manufacturers' Sales Co. of America, Inc., A. S. Postnikoff, trustee, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BAILEY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. BAILEY, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. WHITE conferees on the part of the Senate.

COLUMBIA RIVER BRIDGE, ASTORIA, OREG.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3245) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at Astoria, Clatsop County, Oreg., which was, on page 1, line 8, to strike out "1935" and insert "1936."

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF SILVER PURCHASE ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate House Resolution 396, which, with the accompanying Senate bill 3260, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 3260) to amend Public Law No. 438, Seventy-third Congress, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver, issue silver certificates, and for other purposes", in the opinion of this House contravenes that clause of the Constitution of the United States requiring revenue bills to originate in the House of Representatives, and is an infringement of the prerogatives of this House, and that said bill be respectfully returned to the Senate with a message communicating this resolution.

CLAIM OF EBERHART STEEL PRODUCTS CO., INC.—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 149)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, Senate bill 2996, entitled "An act for the relief of the Eberhart Steel Products Co., Inc."

The bill proposes to confer upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction over the claim of the Eberhart Steel Products Co., Inc., growing out of certain contracts made by the company with the United States for the manufacture and delivery to the War Department of certain material and parts for military trucks. In addition, the measure proposes to waive certain substantive defenses that the Government may have to any suit that may be brought on this claim, including a defense that the suit is barred by the fact that a settlement contract was entered into between the parties, which resulted in an adjustment of the matter and the payment of a substantial sum by the Government to the claimant.

In cases in which a claimant is accorded a day in court by a special act, the Government should naturally be permitted, as it is in all cases, to interpose and present such proper defenses to the merits of the claim as its counsel deem wise and appropriate to advance. No reason appears why the Government should be denied such right in this instance.

For the foregoing reasons, I am constrained to withhold my approval from the bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 21, 1936.

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the President's message be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations and withdrawing a nomination, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received and nomination withdrawn, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported favorably the following nominations:

Stewart McDonald, of Missouri, to be Federal Housing Administrator for the unexpired portion of a term of 4 years from June 30, 1934, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate, vice James A. Moffett, resigned;

Samuel D. Sanders, of Washington, to be cooperative bank commissioner in the Farm Credit Administration, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate, vice Francis Winfred Peck, resigned;

William O. Douglas, of Connecticut, to be a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission for the remainder of the term expiring June 5, 1939, vice Joseph P. Kennedy, resigned; and

Jesse H. Jones, of Texas; Charles B. Henderson, of Nevada; C. B. Merriam, of Kansas; Frederic H. Taber, of Massachusetts, and Charles T. Fisher, Jr., of Michigan, to be members of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for terms of 2 years from January 22, 1936. (Reappointments.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the calendar. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

NATIONAL EMERGENCY COUNCIL

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Lyle T. Alverson, of New York, to be Acting Executive Director, National Emergency Council.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask that that nomination go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over.

POSTMASTERS IN MINNESOTA

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters in Minnesota.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not know what the pleasure of the Senator from Nebraska is concerning the nominations of postmasters in Minnesota. I ask that they go over for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters in Minnesota will be passed over.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James W. Morris, of Florida, to be Assistant Attorney General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Seth Thomas, of Iowa, to be judge of the United States Circuit Court, Eighth Circuit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of David J. Davis, of Alabama, to be judge of the United States District Court, Northern District of Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Robert E. Mattingly, of the District of Columbia, to be judge of the municipal court, District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Charles F. Uhl, of Pennsylvania, to be United States attorney for the western district of Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Roulhac Gewin to be United States marshal for the southern district of Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John E. Hushing to be United States marshal, district of the Canal Zone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of E. Marvin Sessoms to be United States marshal for the northern district of Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Henry Clayton Walthour to be United States marshal for the southern district of Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar, with the exception of the Minnesota postmasters, whose nominations I understand have gone over for the day, be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters, with the exception of the Minnesota postmasters, are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Army be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, January 23, 1936, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 22 (legislative day of Jan. 16), 1936

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

T. Whitfield Davidson, of Texas, to be a United States district judge, northern district of Texas, vice Edward R. Meek, retired.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The following-named surgeons to be senior surgeons in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from the dates set opposite their names:

Edward C. Ernst, January 15, 1936.

Peter J. Gorman, January 19, 1936.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 22 (legislative day of Jan. 16), 1936

ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL

James W. Morris to be Assistant Attorney General.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT JUDGE

Seth Thomas to be judge, eighth circuit.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

David J. Davis to be judge, northern district of Alabama.

MUNICIPAL COURT JUDGE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Robert E. Mattingly to be judge of the muncipal court, District of Columbia.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

Charles F. Uhl to be United States attorney for the western district of Pennsylvania.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS

Roulhac Gewin to be United States marshal for the southern district of Alabama.

John E. Hushing to be United States marshal for the district of the Canal Zone.

E. Marvin Sessoms to be United States marshal for the northern district of Florida.

Henry Clayton Walthour to be United States marshal for the southern district of Georgia.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

Col. Frank C. Burnett to be Assistant The Adjutant General with the rank of brigadier general.

Lt. Col. Henry Harley Arnold to be Assistant to the Chief of the Air Corps with the rank of brigadier general.

Col. Wallace DeWitt to be Assistant to the Surgeon General with the rank of brigadier general.

CHAPLAINS

To be chaplains with the rank of first lieutenant

Ralph Emmerson McCaskill
John Frazer Chalker
Harold Henry Schulz

MEDICAL CORPS

To be first lieutenants

Lewis William Kirkman
William Donald Graham
Thomas William Mattingly
Joseph Frank Peters
Edward Morris DeYoung
Harold Everus Harrison
Stephen Christopher Sitter
James Clark Van Valin
Victor Robert Hirschmann
Paul Hartsock Leach
Clifford Paul Michael
James Augustus McCloskey

DENTAL CORPS

To be first lieutenant

George Farrer Jeffcott

VETERINARY CORPS

To be first lieutenants

Velmer Wayne McGinnis
John Howard Rust, 3d
Bernard Francis Trum
Lloyd Christopher Tekse
Edwin Louis Millenbruck
Thomas Carlyle Jones

APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY

TO ADJUTANT GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT

Maj. Ralph Brundidge Lovett
Capt. John Glenn Brackinridge

TO JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT

Capt. Ernest Marion Brannon
Capt. Charles Emmett Cheever
Capt. John Henry Corridon
Capt. James Lowe Harbaugh, Jr.
Capt. David Sanderson McLean
Capt. Loren Francis Parmley
Capt. Edgar Harvey Snodgrass
Capt. Robert Montgomery Springer
Capt. Edward Joseph Walsh
Capt. Charles Whitney West

TO QUARTERMASTER CORPS

Maj. Rufus Boylan
Maj. Brisbane Hanks Brown
Maj. William Booth Van Auken
Capt. Theodore Anton Baumeister
Capt. Joseph Henry Burgheim
Capt. James Lawrence Keasler
Capt. Elam LaFayette Stewart
Capt. James Longstreet Whelchel
Capt. Michael Henry Zwicker

TO FINANCE DEPARTMENT

Capt. John Bartlett Hess
Capt. Ray Homer Larkins
Capt. Richard Kemp LeBrou
Capt. Hiram Barricklow Turner
Capt. Thomas Patrick Walsh

TO CORPS OF ENGINEERS

First Lt. Oscar Benjamin Beasley
First Lt. James William Park
Second Lt. Paul Henry Berkowitz
Second Lt. Austin Wortham Betts
Second Lt. Clarence Bidgood
Second Lt. William Beehler Bunker
Second Lt. John Dudley Cole, Jr.
Second Lt. Frederick Benjamin Hall, Jr.
Second Lt. Clarence Carl Haug
Second Lt. Stanley Tage Birger Johnson
Second Lt. Ellery Willis Niles
Second Lt. John Richards Parker
Second Lt. Craig Smyser
Second Lt. Robert Morris Stillman
Second Lt. Langfitt Bowditch Wilby

TO ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT

First Lt. Horace Alvord Quinn
First Lt. David Louis Van Syckle

TO SIGNAL CORPS

Capt. Elton Foster Hammond
First Lt. Earle Fremont Cook
First Lt. William Little

TO CAVALRY

First Lt. Brendan McKay Greeley
First Lt. Graves Collins Teller

TO FIELD ARTILLERY

Capt. Escalus Emmert Elliott
Second Lt. Carl Darnell, Jr.

TO AIR CORPS

First Lt. Walter Campbell Sweeney, Jr.
Second Lt. Harvey Thompson Alness
Second Lt. Paul Carter Ashworth
Second Lt. Herbert Marvin Baker, Jr.
Second Lt. John George Benner
Second Lt. Byron Elias Brugge
Second Lt. William Monte Canterbury
Second Lt. George Bernard Dany
Second Lt. William Milton Gross
Second Lt. Paul Tompkins Hanley
Second Lt. John dePeyster Townsend Hills
Second Lt. John Monroe Hutchison
Second Lt. Richard Andrew Legg
Second Lt. Elvin Seth Ligon, Jr.
Second Lt. Arno Herman Luehman
Second Lt. Lawson S. Moseley, Jr.
Second Lt. Wilson Hawkes Neal
Second Lt. Jack Jerome Neely
Second Lt. Frank Carter Norvell
Second Lt. Raymond Judson Reeves
Second Lt. Jack Edward Shuck
Second Lt. Curtis Delano Sluman
Second Lt. Dale Orville Smith
Second Lt. William Sebastian Stone
Second Lt. Hudson Hutton Upham
Second Lt. John William White
Second Lt. Albert Theodore Wilson, Jr.
Second Lt. William Harvey Wise

TO QUARTERMASTER CORPS

Maj. Paxton Sterrett Campbell
Capt. Thomas Edmund Mahoney

TO CORPS OF ENGINEERS

Second Lt. William Loveland Rogers

TO CAVALRY

Second Lt. John Baird Shinberger

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

MEDICAL CORPS

To be majors

Kincheon Hubert Bailey
Richard Emmons Elvins

To be captains

Max Naimark
Vernon James Erkenbeck
Arthur Herbert Thompson
Wilson Theodore Smith
Clarendon Barron Woods
Joe Alexander Bain
Cecil Spencer Mollohan
Francis Whitney Hall
Joseph Sibley Cirlot
Richard Howard Eckhardt
John Mars Caldwell, Jr.
Charles Parmalee Ward
Elmer Arthur Lodmell
Lester Paul Veigel
George Lewis Beatty
Harold Irvin Amory
John Albert Egan
George Gustavo Guiteras
Edgar Louis Olson
Charles Edwards Spellman

DENTAL CORPS

To be colonels

Minot Everson Scott
George D. Graham

To be lieutenant colonels

Thomas Chester Daniels
Frederick Randolph Wunderlich
Bruce Harold Roberts

VETERINARY CORPS

To be colonel

Burton Alpheus Seeley

To be captains

Russell McNellis
Richard George Yule

MEDICAL ADMINISTRATIVE CORPS

To be captain

Douglas Hall

To be first lieutenants

Homer Clarence McCullough
Joseph Carmack

CHAPLAINS

Edward Larose Branham to be chaplain with the rank of lieutenant colonel.

John Thomas DeBardeleben to be chaplain with the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Samuel Johnson Miller to be chaplain with the rank of lieutenant colonel.

John Thomas Axton, Jr., to be chaplain with the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Earl Dudley Weed to be chaplain with the rank of lieutenant colonel.

William Loren Fisher to be chaplain with the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Emerson Etherage Swanson to be chaplain with the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Thomas Edward Swan to be chaplain with the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Frank Hallie Hayes to be chaplain with the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Aristeo Vincent Simoni to be chaplain with the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Peter Joseph Kilkenny to be chaplain with the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Orville Earl Fisher to be chaplain with the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Peter Joseph Quinn to be chaplain with the rank of major.

Vernon Paul Jaeger to be chaplain with the rank of captain.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE NATIONAL GUARD OF THE UNITED STATES

Charles Elmo McPherren to be major general, National Guard of the United States.

Herbert Jay Paul to be major general, National Guard of the United States.

George Perry Rains to be major general, National Guard of the United States.

John Critcher Coleman to be brigadier general, Adjutant General's Department, National Guard of the United States.

Harry Hamilton Morehead to be brigadier general, Adjutant General's Department, National Guard of the United States.

William Kern Herndon to be brigadier general, National Guard of the United States.

George Emerson Leach to be brigadier general, National Guard of the United States.

Gilson Don Light to be brigadier general, National Guard of the United States.

Charles William Nimon to be brigadier general, National Guard of the United States.

William Ottmann to be brigadier general, National Guard of the United States.

Heinrich August Pickert to be brigadier general, National Guard of the United States.

REAPPOINTMENTS IN THE OFFICERS' RESERVE CORPS OF THE ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES

Brice Pursell Disque to be brigadier general, Reserve.
Hugh Samuel Johnson to be brigadier general, Reserve.
Richard Coke Marshall, Jr., to be brigadier general, Reserve.
John Henry Sherburne to be brigadier general, Reserve.
Benedict Crowell to be brigadier general, Inactive Reserve.

POSTMASTERS

FLORIDA

Schubert S. Welling, Babson Park.
Ora S. Goforth, Caryville.

MISSOURI

Avery L. Dreier, Billings.
Joseph E. Soutee, Marionville.
Verna F. Whisner, Sarcoxie.
Grailie B. Windes, Washburn.

NORTH CAROLINA

James Franklin Greene, Bakersville.
John R. Giles, Glen Alpine.
Carl V. Bundy, Jamestown.
Frank L. Hoyle, Sr., Shelby.

PENNSYLVANIA

Francis J. Pension, Abington.
LeRoy W. Stengel, Bally.
Edith M. Cockins, Canonsburg.
Isaac A. Hiorth, Chester.
Curtis R. Bloom, Clymer.
William K. Wrigley, Curwensville.
John H. Renstrom, Fayette City.
Caroline E. W. Curry, Glen Olden.
Isaac W. Edgar, Glenshaw.
John Johnston, Library.
James P. Dennehy, Lock Haven.
Matthew C. Fox, Jr., Media.
James Mosco Ott, Orbisonia.
James W. Nash, Portage.
John W. Connelly, Prospect Park.
William F. Halligan, Jr., Radnor.

Charles F. McCartney, Reedsville.
LeRoy Walker, Ridley Park.
Stephen G. McCahan, Saxton.
Ralph Blaine Althouse, Sharon Hill.
Mabel J. Stover, Shrewsbury.
Julia W. Lightner, Sinnamahoning.
William S. Becker, Temple.
Ella R. Williams, Vandergrift.
Harold G. Seyler, Weiser Park.
Charles E. Fullwood, Wellsboro.
Jacob F. Hertzog, West Lawn.

WITHDRAWAL

Executive nomination withdrawn from the Senate January 22 (legislative day of Jan. 16), 1936

POSTMASTER

FLORIDA

Albert S. Herlong, Jr., to be postmaster at Leesburg, in the State of Florida.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 22, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, enable us to realize each day our great responsibilities. Ever lead us to put our labors on the side of right, truth, and justice. We beseech Thee to strengthen us by a serene and sober optimism, quickening our consciences, and walking in the light of Thy countenance. Give Thy blessing to all tired bodies, jaded minds, and sick souls. Let the revelation of Thy only begotten Son be our ideal; we pray that our knowledge and influence may soften the burdens of society and hasten on the better days. In the name of our Lord and Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REAR ADMIRAL ARTHUR LEE WILLARD

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD concerning the character and achievements of Rear Admiral Arthur Lee Willard.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives, I know there are a large number of Members of this body who were well acquainted with the person, character, and distinguished services of Rear Admiral Arthur Lee Willard, who died April 7, 1935, in Washington, D. C.

Rear Admiral Willard had a long and distinguished career in the service of his country; he was born February 21, 1870, at Kirksville, Mo., and was appointed as naval cadet in the Naval Academy by Hon. William H. Hatch, then a Member of Congress from the First Missouri District, September 7, 1887, and during his service as cadet he distinguished himself by his excellent demeanor and achievements. He was promoted to the position of ensign July 1, 1893, and his services to his country were so distinguished and his achievements so successful that he was given the rank of rear admiral June 5, 1924.

Having been born and reared in the First Congressional District of Missouri, which I have the honor to represent, I had the pleasure and good fortune to know him personally for a good many years, and to know him well. He was not only a gentleman of the highest order but was one of the most distinguished naval officers of our country. He retired from the service with a most enviable record for efficiency, and I can truthfully say that whatever he undertook to do was done well, and his record in the Navy Department is one of which all true Americans may well be proud. He enjoyed the distinction of having many warm personal friends, and even in his boyhood and young manhood he stood out prominently as one of great promise.

During the War with Spain he achieved a most signal distinction and rendered most effective and efficient service; he was the first to plant the American flag on Cuban soil during the War with Spain, and in honor of this achievement the State of Missouri, the home of his birth, recognizing his splendid service to his country, through its own legislature voted and gave to him a gold sword as a token of Missouri's appreciation of his sterling qualities.

The First Congressional District of Missouri, which I have the honor to represent, has the distinction of having had born within its boundaries not only Rear Admiral Willard, but also Admiral Robert E. Coontz, of Hannibal, Mo.; General Pershing, of Laclede, Mo.; and General Crowder, of Grundy County, Mo.; and a very remarkable thing is that Admiral Coontz, Rear Admiral Willard, General Crowder, and General Pershing were all residents of the same town at the same time in the First Congressional District.

Rear Admiral Willard was one of the most pleasant characters it has been my pleasure to know; he was a man of tremendous energy and devotion to duty; he was always keenly alive to the best interests of his country; took great pleasure and spent much time, aside from his official duties, to study the problems that had bearing on his country's history.

Rear Admiral Willard and his wife, Isabel Ellison Willard, were always held in the highest esteem by those who knew them. Mrs. Willard was the daughter of Judge Andrew Ellison, who for many years distinguished himself as a Missouri jurist. The Ellison family furnished a long line of judicial officers in the history of Missouri; they were a family of distinguished lawyers, upright and splendid citizens.

The last time and opportunity I ever had to see Rear Admiral Willard was at a Missouri Society meeting where we were then conducting exercises in honor of Admiral Robert E. Coontz, deceased.

We mourn with their loved ones; and in bereavement we recall that, while all men must meet death somewhere on the way, our friend met his death with honors full upon him. I am sure he was able to join voices with that valiant spirit who sang:

Under the wide and starry sky,
Dig the grave and let me lie.
Glad did I live and gladly die,
And I laid me down with a will.

This be the verse you grave for me,
Here he lies, where he longed to be.
Home is the sailor, home from the sea,
And the hunter home from the hill.

THE CONSTITUTION AND THE SUPREME COURT

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a speech I delivered over the National Broadcasting Co. as of January 20, 1936.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address which I delivered over the radio on January 20, over the N. B. C. System.

When the Constitution of the United States was first framed, it consisted of an enacting clause and seven articles, and it is interesting to examine the enacting clause, generally known as the preamble. "We, the people of the United States, do ordain and establish this Constitution of the United States"—(1) "In order to form a more perfect union; (2) to establish justice; (3) to insure domestic tranquility; (4) to provide for the common defense; (5) to promote the general welfare; and (6) to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity."

In these 57 words we find a definite and succinct statement of the objectives for which such an instrument was created and to analyze each of the objectives would entail voluminous discussion; but I do desire to examine one or two of the objectives in order to reach a comparable slant on the minds of the framers of the Constitution and on the minds of present-day legislators and jurists.

In the first case, one of their objectives was to advise the people of the newly created union, that in order to be a happy people, a composed people, tranquillity needs must be had. Surely this philosophy is as applicable today as it was then. We now come to the question of whether the word "tranquillity" as used in the objective of the preamble by the framers of the Constitution was meant only to direct the future Government of the United States of America toward a course of ordinary composure in our affairs of government, irrespective of changes in the social order of things and the natural progress of science. As for myself, I do not so interpret this objective, nor do I give it credence when so interpreted by the courts of the land. I believe that when the words "domestic tranquillity" were used by the statesmen and framers of the Constitution, they had in mind that these words should make for an economic composure and peace; a tranquil condition, which, under all circumstances, would make our Nation a nation free from chaos and poverty, thus, in turn, giving us a tranquil spirit of heart and soul—for without economic peace and composure there can be little or no other kind of peace and composure.

Therefore, if this be logical—and I hope you agree with me—is it not the rational thing to say that this sort of tranquillity must be met according to the times? Must not our courts regard this statement in the preamble as a sort of barometer in overcoming precedents which have long since outlived themselves? And then comes the statement in the preamble, "To promote the general welfare." This objective certainly speaks for itself, and its very commonplace meaning seems to abhor as well as condemn old and worn-out precedents that belong to an order of affairs long since shelved by the modern laws of economics.

I believe if the framers of the Constitution were living today and preparing such a sacred statement of objectives, they would add the following: "To promote the general welfare by meeting changing conditions with adequate legislation", and that is exactly what Franklin D. Roosevelt has been assiduously trying to do, even in the face of paramount obstacles.

In other words, my friends, there must be some flexibility in all laws, and certainly this applies to the Constitution of the United States, because its enacting clause contains such objects as "to insure domestic tranquillity" and "promote the general welfare", and both of these objectives certainly imply the sacred rights of a government to meet emergency conditions with the sort of legislation necessary to promote the general welfare and to insure domestic tranquillity.

So much for this very personal observation.

Much discussion is now being heard, mostly political discussions among party leaders, concerning the power of the Supreme Court and especially its recent decision on the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which became a law in May 1933. As to their legal judgment or conclusions I have nothing to say but I have observed a growing tendency among its members to hairsplit an issue and to opine that certain precedents, none of which aline themselves with modern conditions, must control irrespective of the constitutional objective that we must promote the general welfare—nor do I propose that constitutional amendments are necessary to meet such emergency legislation as the Agricultural Adjustment Act because I believe the right to salvage by Federal legislation the hopes and prosperity of 30,000,000 farmers is plainly written in the Constitution itself, and I have found no more pertinent statement or opinion among numerous opinions recently handed down by Federal courts than the decision in the case of Economy Dairy Co., Inc., v. Henry A. Wallace, Secretary, and Milton R. Beck v. Henry A. Wallace, Secretary, reported in 61 Washington Law Reports, page 633, in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. Here the validity of the Agricultural Adjustment Act was involved and on August 29, 1933, Mr. Justice O'Donoghue refused to grant temporary injunctions and dismissed the bills of complaint on the following grounds, "Because the court finds that a national emergency exists and that the welfare of the people and the very existence of the Government itself are imperiled"; further, the justice stated:

"The day has passed when absolute vested rights in contract or property are to be regarded as sacrosanct or above the law. Neither the necessity of life nor the commodities affected with a public interest can longer be left to ruthless competition or selfish greed for their production or distribution, and, therefore, the court finds that the Agricultural Adjustment Act passed by Congress May 12, 1933, is constitutional and that the regulations and licenses promulgated and issued thereunder are reasonable and valid."

And even in the United States Supreme Court itself we find dissension. Just a short time ago we find Justice Cardozo accusing the majority of the Supreme Court of using a process of "psychoanalysis" to impute meaning to acts of Congress. His statement implied very strongly that the judiciary was tampering with the domain belonging strictly to the legislative and the executive departments of government. Be this as it may, to say the least, the Supreme Court itself is well divided as to what actually is the proper interpretation of the Constitution as affects such modern emergency legislation as the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which certainly did, during its existence, insure domestic tranquillity and promote the general welfare of 30,000,000 farmers which, necessarily in turn, either directly or indirectly insured domestic tranquillity and promoted the general welfare to a mighty extent to every other commercial and industrial agency in the United States, because it is a recognized fact that agriculture is the taproot of all prosperity, and when it lags behind all other commodities are affected.

Let us look for a moment at that part of the Supreme Court's decision affecting the Agricultural Adjustment Act which I consider highly pertinent to this discussion and equally as inconsistent in interpretation. The opinion held that the Congress had no right or power to authorize the spending of money for the aid of agriculture—it held that while the Congress had the authority to tax and spend for the national welfare it could not do so by contracting with farmers because this was a right reserved unto the States. The Court also held that agriculture was not a matter of national concern. Then, in quite the next breath, we find the Court saying that any and all industrial plants in whatever States they may be located may be aided by certain tariff taxes authorized by the commerce clause found in the Constitution. Now for the inconsistency. This all mighty and powerful tribunal has actually told the Congress of the United States that it may go ahead and aid industry in the States by virtue of the commerce clause in the Constitution but that the general-welfare clause does not authorize aid to agriculture, without which the commerce clause and industry would amount to little.

I say that when 30,000,000 Americans are faced with economic destruction; when they are hungry and socially depressed then the general welfare of the Nation is concerned to a paramount extent, and legislation enacted to sustain assistance to them should be held to be constitutional. And in the words of Justice Stone of the United States Supreme Court in his dissenting opinion in the Agricultural Adjustment Act decision: "The interpretation of our great charter of Government which proceeds on any assumption that the responsibility for the preservation of our institutions is the exclusive concern of any one of the three branches of Government, or that it alone can save them from destruction, is far more likely in the long run, to obliterate the constituent members of indestructible States than the frank recognition that language, even of a Constitution, may mean what it says. That the power to tax and spend includes the power to relieve a Nation-wide maladjustment by conditional gifts of money."

It was said not so long ago by a Justice of the Supreme Court, and there has been no argument as to the truth of the statement coming from his associates, that the depression we have been in for almost 6 years is an emergency worse than war. Surely this is the truth, and legislation to aid 30,000,000 people sorely distressed, whose patriotism has been challenged by the laws of adversity, certainly comes within the fair rule applicable to national welfare which would make the Agricultural Adjustment Act constitutional.

Laws must fit in with modern civilization. Antiquated interpretations are foul to modern progress. I have the very highest regard for our Supreme Court, but if it cannot and will not regard the welfare of 30,000,000 farmers in their hour of economic and physical misery because of legal technicalities, which I have been unable to find in the present case, then it is up to the National Congress to correct the situation and do it quickly.

Why should not such a situation be corrected by legislation if the effect of such legislation is to insure domestic tranquility and bring us once again from the abyss of economic misery? Is it to be said that any law that shall approach an abrogation of age-old and musty precedents is an insult to the wisdom of our American institutions? Certainly not. One who becomes ill this day and time and perhaps needs the handiwork of a surgeon certainly would not trust the handiwork of the surgeon who practiced according to the art of 100 years ago. One would naturally want the surgeon who practices the modern and scientific way. And just as experience and changed conditions has compelled the surgeon of yesterday to abandon musty precedents and employ methods commensurate with the science of the times, so also must not only the laws be made to meet a similar situation as regards our economic system, but the minds of men, including jurists, must articulate also according to changed and modern conditions.

And so, in closing, I must say again that I do not feel that amendments to our Constitution are necessary, but if there is no other way out, then it is up to the National Government to find a way to deal nationally with matters of a national nature; matters which, as in the Agricultural Adjustment Act, are beyond the reach of the States of the Union insofar as aid is concerned.

Just as man has learned from experience to build over his head suitable shelter from endangering elements, so also must the Government find shelter through patriotic legislation as needs be to care for its people during an economic hurricane, because, as Thomas Jefferson once wrote to a friend, as recorded on pages 177, 178, and 179 of the writings of Thomas Jefferson, volume 7, and compiled under act of Congress from the original manuscript, "The Judges are not the ultimate arbitrators of our constitutional questions"; and in another letter, addressed to Monsieur A. Coray and dated October 31, 1823, Thomas Jefferson wrote as follows: "At the establishment of our Constitution the judiciary bodies were supposed to be the most helpless and harmless members of the Government. Experience, however, soon showed in what way they were to become the most dangerous; that the insufficiency of the means provided for their removal gave them a freehold and irresponsibility in office; that their decisions seeming to concern individual suitors only, pass silent and unheeded by the public at large; that these decisions, nevertheless, become law by precedent, sapping by little and little the foundations of the Constitution, and working its change by construction, before anyone has perceived that that invisible worm has been busily employed in consuming its substance. In truth, man is not made to be trusted for life, if secured against all liability to account."

Finding Jefferson taking a stand of this sort, then surely in our modern ways this philosophy ought to appeal to us as a guiding light in maintaining domestic tranquillity and promoting the general welfare, because yesterday is a remembrance, tomorrow a hope, and today alone is ours.

PROGRESS IN COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address by Hon. George Henry Payne, Federal Communications Commissioner.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of George Henry Payne, Federal Communications Commissioner, January 13, 1936, at the Graduate School of Business Administration of Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass.

In the year and a half of its existence the Federal Communications Commission has made distinct contributions to the improvement and regulation of the industries for which it is the governmental regulating body. This statement will be challenged by some, laughed at by others, but I feel safe in assuring you that no one will arise with an offer to debate it in public.

Some of those who have been bettered and improved are not quite conscious of it yet. Some of them are still breathing a little strenuously in the rarified high altitude into which they have been somewhat involuntarily raised. Nevertheless, I think we may say in the language of Galileo, as translated by Artemus Ward, "The world do move"—referring, of course, to the world of communications.

When I appeared here last spring the Commission was just emerging from its swaddling clothes. It still has its growing pains. Not infrequently, I believe, when I am not around, I am referred to as one of the most distinct ones. Despite this fact, our relationship with the companies under our regulation are marked by amiability that almost may be considered dangerous.

The problems that confront all three divisions of the Communications Commission—the problems of telegraphy, telephony, and broadcasting—while of interest to most groups, although from different angles, are all three problems, with which business, businessmen, and what is known as the business world are particularly interested.

First, there is the Division whose activities are confined to the regulation of the telegraph field. This is one of the few countries in the world where the telegraph is in the hands of private individuals. This is one of the few countries in the world where we have competitive companies, privately owned, cutting each others throats with unction and glee at the expense of the public. One of the first things that the Telegraph Division of the Federal Communications Commission did was to make an investigation into the possibilities of merger, under section 4 (k) of the act which brought us into being. Our recommendations to Congress were not treated with a great deal of respect by Congress, due, in part I imagine, to the fact that we were not very popular for a while.

Since that time and since the Postal-Telegraph Co. has been reorganized, there has developed, I believe, more of a sympathetic attitude toward our recommendations.

In the Telephone Division great progress has been made in the very momentous undertaking of an investigation of the very large and important company—the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. Seemingly a mere incident in its work, it was a notable accomplishment to establish radiotelephonic communication with France, not without quite a few difficulties. Up to the time that this was done there seemed to be a belief that the Government had very little to say in the matter because the telephone system, on this side of the water, was a private corporation. By deciding to give part of the existing facilities for radio trans-Atlantic telephone transmission to a country other than Great Britain, we established, I believe, in quarters where there was some confusion on the subject the fact that our Government intends to control its own communications.

At a recent hearing, the attorney for the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. made an illuminating remark. He said, "If the company has not been completely frank in the past it will be so in the future."

Such a statement as the able attorney for the American Telephone & Telegraph made augurs well for the future.

Several weeks ago, speaking at the University of Syracuse, I stated that, "the Commission has also had to suffer from the most efficient propaganda of the telephone company, as, for instance, in the case of the coaxial cable, with regard to which it was printed from one end of the country to the other that the Commission, by not granting the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. an unrestricted license to lay the coaxial cable, was holding back the coming of television for many years."

It was one of the distinguished representatives of the telephone company who came to me with clippings that he had collected from newspapers in all sections of the country and admitted that those clippings justified the statement, but wished me to know that in no case had the company encouraged the apparent propaganda and that, as a matter of fact, it had exerted every possible human effort to trace the source of these articles which represented the position of the company.

I have referred to these matters because they reflect what I believe should be the proper attitude of large business units toward governmental agencies. It is true that in these same hearings of the coaxial cable another distinguished attorney of the same company—not only a brilliant man but one with a most ingratiating personality—did state, when he was asked what restrictions the Government should put on the granting of the licenses that would permit the company to lay a cable between New York and Philadelphia, that he would prefer "that there be no restrictions at all." The laughter that followed this observation was due, doubtless, to the fact that his remark certainly represented the worn-out philosophy of another day. "Rugged individualism", they called it, but it was individualism only for those powerful enough to tell the Government they wished no restrictions on their operations and no regulation. There was little individualism for those not powerful enough to defy not only the Government but public opinion. There was little individualism and little opportunity for the many who had to take what the powerful business units were pleased to give them.

DEVELOPMENT IN COMMUNICATIONS

The fascinating part of these problems of communication is the widely spread belief among scientists and others that we are on the threshold of even greater developments than those marvels that have been revealed to us in the past 20 years or so. It was Mr. David Sarnoff who stated that he believed the time would come when a man would be able to turn on a small apparatus, the size of a wrist watch, to call up his house and state that he was going to be late for dinner because he had to go and see, possibly, a sick friend. Marvelous as is the thought, it is not without some suggestion of horror if, along with the ability to turn on the frequency for voice transmission, he or his wife, in turn, were able to turn on a frequency permitting picture transmission or television.

There are those who even say that the time may come with the development of the radio spectrum when there will be instant communication for every man, woman, and child in the United States. If that astonishing day ever does arrive and the complaints that need adjustment over the use of frequencies increase proportionately, I can imagine no unhappier job than being a member of the Federal Communications Commission. Those who have given little thought to the subject may think that these advantages of the future are extravagant. Charles William Taussig, Jr., called my attention to an incident within our own memory that is just as remarkable as anything that has been prognosticated in radio development. During the early part of the war, practically the only marine radio was that which existed between ships in the same neighborhood for a distance of half a mile or thereabouts. At about this time, Edwin H. Armstrong, a radio inventor, went abroad and in cooperation with the British Admiralty set up an apparatus in Whitehall, London, in the Admiralty office. Overnight the British Admiralty was able to pick up all the messages being exchanged by the German fleet, located at Kiel, without the Germans knowing anything about it.

The most important of the many problems that have confronted the Federal Communications Commission in the year and a half of its existence has been that of combating the impression that the new Commission was or could be dominated by the bodies, industries, or corporations over which it was given by Congress the power to regulate. There was a belief that our predecessor, the old Radio Commission, was dominated by the industry that it was supposed to restrain and control. I am very happy to say that such is not the case, and that many of the corporations over which we have jurisdiction are quite convinced that the Commission, or those divisions with which they deal, form independent judgments without bias or without prejudice and with no other interest or consideration than regard for their oath of office.

Just as there has been improvement in the relations between the Commission and the broadcasting companies under our regulation, so there is evidently a very steady trend of improvement in the character of the programs broadcast throughout the country, although I am frank to admit there is still a considerable distance to go. It would be unfair on my part if, when I had so sharply criticized those responsible for programs and advertising that were distasteful, I did not frankly admit that there is a new and better attitude of mind in the matter of the broadcasters' responsibilities to the public. The idea is beginning to take hold that the widespread criticism is not merely the yawping of splenetic faultfinders. It is beginning to be admitted that the advertiser, from his purely mercenary point of view, should not be the dominating factor in deciding what a hundred million people should be forced to listen to. In the mere matter of advertisements for liquor and alcoholic beverages, the protests are bearing fruit.

A gentleman who is one of the powerful financial factors in radio, with whom I talked over this matter some months ago, took the most encouraging point of view. I think the broadcasters missed their opportunity when they permitted Dr. James M. Doran, administrator of the Distilled Spirits Institute, consisting of liquor distillers and manufacturers, to make the first public pronouncement that he had such a regard for public opinion and the rights of the people to decide what messages should come into their homes, that the members of his association would discontinue radio advertising.

I don't know whether I have brought much information or comfort to the students here when I first began my series of talks 8 months ago, but I will tell you frankly that the talks here at Harvard and those at Cornell, Columbia, and Syracuse Universities, and elsewhere, have been a great comfort and encouragement to me.

The theory that government is best when it is conducted around a table by a couple of "good fellows" is fundamentally unsound. It has contributed to most of the vices of government; it has contributed to much of the degradation of business. I don't intend to imply that relations should not be amicable or that men cannot have friends among those with whom they deal in the governmental capacity, but standards of friendship should be as high as the standards of official duty and business conduct.

There are many men who are intimate friends during a lifelong period and possibly not one word passes between them that might not be heard by anyone or everyone. There is, however, the other type—the person who meets you in the Pullman car and because you ask him for a match immediately wants to know if you have heard the latest of Mae West's.

It was Goethe who said, in substance, that you find in Rome what you bring with you. It is the same everywhere, and particularly so in business life.

In a radio speech that I made shortly after the present Commission began its work I quoted President Theodore Roosevelt to the effect that "the Commission (referring to the Interstate Commerce Commission) cannot do permanent good unless it does justice to the corporations precisely as it exacts justice from them. The public, the shippers, the stock and bond holders, and the employees all have their rights, and none should be allowed unfair privileges at the expense of the others."

Those were the words of Theodore Roosevelt. Let me add to them, in closing, the lofty thought of another great man, applicable not only to this Commission but to all government:

"All the grand sources of human suffering", said John Stuart Mill, "are in a great degree, many of them almost entirely, conquerable by human care and effort, and though their removal is grievously slow, though a long succession of generations will perish in the breach before the conquest is completed, yet every mind sufficiently intelligent and generous to bear a part, however small and unconspicuous, * * * will draw a noble enjoyment from the contest itself which he would not for any bribe in the form of selfish indulgence consent to be without."

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, after other Members have made their requests, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recognize the gentleman for that purpose until after the bonus bill is disposed of.

PROMISE AND PERFORMANCE

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the promises and performances of the administration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, political platforms have been altogether too often regarded as things on which to ride into office. They are regularly adopted by national conventions which regard themselves as bound by no laws, and which went out of existence with the adoption of the platform and the nomination of its candidates for President and Vice President. Nobody held himself responsible for the birth and nobody seriously considered the terms; whatever any group demanded was usually inserted—and forgotten.

The candidate for the Presidency received the notice of his nomination some time later and promptly wrote his own platform. The official document was almost without exception full of vague declarations of principles and even these were all too often phrased in "weasel" words. On June 27, 1932, a new page was written into major party history. The Democratic National Convention drafted and adopted a platform which was so brief as to be read; so plainly stated as to be understood; and so straightforward as to be a challenge and revive the almost dead hopes of our people. In addition it contained this solemn pledge:

Believing that a party platform is a covenant with the people to be kept faithfully by the party when entrusted with power, and that the people are entitled to know in plain words the terms of the contract to which they are asked to subscribe, we hereby declare this to be the platform of the Democratic Party.

Remember the dramatic, precedent-breaking, custom-smashing trip through the air when the Governor of New York flashed from Albany into Chicago and there, in the presence of the very men and women who had adopted the ringing declaration of principles, with the deepest emotion and the simplest language made their platform his solemn pledge?

That pledge was repeated and amplified during the campaign. Frankly and without qualification, the Democratic Party and their President which it proudly furnished the Nation are entitled to be called to account and to render the report of the squaring of performance with promises of action with words.

We are not merely meeting a challenge; we are not answering an indictment. We are proudly and with no evasions coming to our people with the declaration that our President and our party have been faithful to the trust reposed in us.

In the language of one of our great leaders, "Let us look at the record." However, before we can test the record we may well find and agree upon a yardstick. That yardstick is in the platform. It is plain, simple, and may be used on all occasions and for all purposes. Fortunately, this measure is not only in the platform but it is there with striking emphasis. It was deliberately adopted as the sole floor amendment to the platform as it came from the committee. It is the summing up of the party purposes and the declaration of the party goal. We are willing to stand or fall on that record when measured by this basic statement out of the heart of that great convention. Let us repeat it:

We advocate the continuous responsibility of government for human welfare.

Human misery stalked the land with ever more menacing tread from 1929 to 1932. Statistical charts show the stagnation of commerce, the flight of credit, the collapse of the banking structure, the ruin of business; but the memory of human hearts alone can picture and evaluate the thwarting of ambitions, the darkening of hope, the wiping out of savings, the loss of jobs, the foreclosure of mortgages, the gnawing of hunger, the stark despair which gripped the heart of our people—the brutal corruption under Harding, hitting a new low level with its debauchery of public morals; the smug complacency of the Coolidge days, ignoring the national orgy of paper profits; and the hopeful corner watching of Hoover, whirling down the spiral of disaster.

Closed factories, silent mills, deserted mines, foreclosed homes, bankrupt men, jobless workers, striking farmers, hungry children, and hopeless prospects were the legacy of 12 years of Republican rule. The hundreds of thousands of foreclosed homes and farms, the bottomless prices of agriculture, the 10,000 banks closed prior to September 1932, the literally countless millions of unemployed, and the uniform bankruptcy of our municipalities were the heritage of Harding corruption, Coolidge indifference, and Hoover donothingism. Franklin Delano Roosevelt cannot be charged with that record, but it must be reproduced to keep the record straight. To understand where we are we must remember where we were.

First of all, our hopeless and bewildered people despaired of leadership, but when Franklin Delano Roosevelt stood at the east portico of the Capitol and assumed leadership, the heart of America leapt. Its lifeblood began to flow; its will to live reasserted itself, and the Nation lifted its face to the future. Its banks were closed, to be reopened only when the remaining savings of our people were safe.

In this crisis the expenses of government were drastically reduced. Excepting only the Federal judges, every public servant from the President in the White House to the humblest scrub woman in the smallest Government building accepted a cut in wages equal in percentage. The veterans made a mighty contribution. Immediately Government credit was restored, and the day was won. From that hour the defeat of depression was as certain as sunrise. Thus the first of our pledges was redeemed. The National Budget as to its normal expenditures was balanced, but, fortunately, the Budget was not made a sacred calf.

No man worthy of the name figures the price of water when his house is on fire; no father stops the surgical operation because his son's operation will strain his credit or exhaust his resources. He pledges everything to save his boy's life. He considers his obligation to his son superior to his pledge to deposit part of his salary in the saving bank. So a nation! Confronted as we were with actual hunger and the destruction of human life itself, remembering our platform, we made human welfare the task and we immediately used our restored credit to take the boys off the streets and put them in the C. C. C. camps.

We chose to recreate men rather than to recruit gangsters. We bought up the mortgages and gave our tottering farmers and home owners a chance to save their farms and homes. We poured out billions to our railroads and to our banks that they might assume their places as effective servants of our people. We threw the mighty resources of our Nation behind the humble and the great. We repudiated the philosophy that would help the powerful in the blind hope that they might pass on a broader charity to the ordinary citizen. We restored the Jacksonian concept that the humblest citizen was entitled to the full support of his Nation's might.

We so successfully restored the credit of our currency that our dollar is the soundest money in the world. Our land is the refuge of the capital in the world in these troubled days. When the world becomes sane again our stable currency will be the rallying point of world finance.

Through reciprocal trade agreements we have reopened the markets of the world. We are breaking down the artificial barriers which had reduced our foreign trade to the vanishing point.

We have extended our credit to our weakened State and local governments. Without the strong hands of the Federal Government millions of our citizens would have starved.

We have started a great and comprehensive program of useful public works, possible only with the Federal funds and credit. We have at the same time conserved national resources and furnished work. We have built for the future and at the same time we have not pauperized our people. We have declared that work is honorable, but that charity to the able-bodied is degrading.

We have used too much water here; we have lost some hose there; we have wasted some efforts in this place and that; but we have carried on through the world's greatest conflagration and have definitely defeated starvation, revolution, and disaster. We have restored 5,000,000 jobs in private industries and we are clearing out the last smoking remains of the red ruin.

We have established as a definite policy that the Federal Government owes a responsibility for unemployment of the willing worker and for the comfort of the worthy aged. True, the amount granted is not yet adequate, but with returning prosperity we can increase the Federal contribution until the horrors of the old days will have become but unpleasant memories.

We promised to restore the purchasing power of agriculture, and we have done so in the great basic commodities. If you say, "Yes; but you did it by unconstitutional methods", we answer that the reasoning of the minority opinion of the Triple A decision, so ably stated by Justice Stone, seems sound law to us. We will find some method of securing a permanent justice for our farmers, even if we have to revamp the mechanics of government. The fathers dedicated our Government to the general welfare and we will fulfill that trust, even if the old engine has to be readjusted, even as our fathers would have acted. They followed ideals and not methods. We need to consider the results to be gained rather than solely the tools to be used. Even the best-tempered steel edge needs some sharpening.

We have maintained the Army and Navy at the highest point of efficiency, and we are providing an adequate national defense for any contingencies which may come from a world possibly again about to commit wholesale destruction. We will have peace, but we cannot close our eyes to the terrible fact that the strong marauder still robs the weak.

Business cried out for salvation and was given its first Nation-wide opportunity to cooperate within itself, with the benefit of Federal guidance, direction, and assistance.

Under N. R. A. business did survive the chaos of 1933. The greatest impetus in history was given to the elimination of unfair trade practices, the protection of labor in respect to hours, wages, and working conditions, and a real attempt was made to secure consumer representation. Although the Supreme Court ruled that most business was outside the scope of Federal control and that our Government was powerless to protect child labor from the unscrupulous boss, to limit hours and conditions of work, to prevent vicious oppression of weaker competitors, or to secure rights for consumers, a start has been made and many industries are carrying out the principles first established by N. R. A.

We have declared our natural resources to be under the public trust and we have revived the standard of Theodore Roosevelt—that our natural heritage should be passed onto our children, better developed and more valuable than when we received it from our fathers.

We have used every power and resource of government to compel the sellers of stocks and bonds to give the ordinary purchaser—the investing public—true and accurate information as to bonuses, commissions, principal actually invested, and the real interest of the sellers. In other words, to tell the truth.

We have, in exact compliance with the platform, used the full power of the Federal Government to regulate holding companies in the utility fields, to restrict within the limitation of fair returns the rates of utility companies, and to prevent a recurrence of the Insull outlawry, with its attendant ruin to millions.

We have liquidated the frozen bank deposits with a minimum of loss to the depositors. We have revised the banking act to make banks more effective medium for the general good. We have restored the Federal Reserve System more nearly to its purpose, as established under Woodrow Wilson—to serve the business and commercial interests rather than speculators and gamblers of the exchange. We have limited banks to their true function—banking.

In the midst of a crumbling world of war-mad leaders and hysterical peoples we have steered the Ship of State through peaceful waters. We have secured the most nearly perfect understanding between all of the Americas. We have made the Stars and Stripes the true emblem of the good neighbor. We have fostered and built a spirit of true cooperation between peoples.

We have refused further to compromise the debts owed us by our former allies, although the precedent established under Republican so-called leadership undoubtedly gave ground for the expectation that the taxpayer of the United States should and would pay the cost of the World War. In this connection, those who freely gave billions of the taxpayers' money to foreigners as a rebate on legal and just debts appear in bad grace when they violently protest the use of Government credit for the benefit of our own citizens.

We have fulfilled our pledge to grant independence to the Philippine Islands, and we have already seen their people take their place as members of the family of nations.

We have built a most magnificent Division of Criminal Investigation which has made the interstate operations of gangsters so unprofitable and dangerous that they have ceased to be major menaces. J. Edgar Hoover has made kidnaping a losing game. Thanks to the work of the Department of Justice, your child and my child are safe at home.

We have seen fit to live up to the spirit as well as to the letter of our platform by not only publishing the names of our financial supporters but we have paid our party debts by the modest contribution of our citizens rather than by the second-hand donations of the ultrawealthy, stealthily slipped to that illegitimate child of reaction—the American Liberty League.

We have repealed the notorious eighteenth amendment and have restored the control of the habits and customs of our people to their own localities. Neither here nor elsewhere do we favor regimentation. Federal action is justified when other means have failed, and then only. There is no parallel here with the agricultural program. Farming, in spite of the decision of the Supreme Court, is not a matter of local concern.

The Government no longer acts as the agent for the House of Morgan in peddling foreign securities. We have brought the capital of the Nation from the stock exchanges to the banks of the Potomac.

We have restored the ideals of the fathers in again using as the national guide this declaration: "Equal rights for all, special privileges for none."

We have fought the fight! We have kept the faith! With the leadership of that master humanitarian, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, and under the guidance of a divine Providence, we will reestablish a democracy in which in spirit and in truth the goal of government—the welfare of its citizens—shall be reached.

We are proud of our leader. We pledge a new and greater battle for human rights and a final victory in the interest of the ordinary citizen.

TRIBUTARY FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech I delivered at the Mississippi Valley Association on November 26.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention of the House to H. R. 10302, introduced in the Senate by Senator NORRIS, and in the House by me. This bill will solve the great problem of conserving the national resources. This bill embraces the whole Mississippi Valley and accomplishes for that area what I hoped to accomplish for the Arkansas Valley in two bills I introduced last year, H. R. 5712 and House Joint Resolution 275. My views on the subject are in this speech.

ADDRESS OF HON. PHIL FERGUSON, OF OKLAHOMA, BEFORE THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY ASSOCIATION CONVENTION, ST. LOUIS, MO., NOVEMBER 25, 1935

Mr. President, members of the Mississippi Valley Association: It possibly is strange that a Member of Congress from the "dust bowl" should be here as a speaker at the Mississippi Valley Association. I probably represent the driest district in the United States. It was my home that furnished all those clouds of dust that descended on this country last spring. As a result of living in that country, when I went to Congress it was not an accident that I got on the Flood Control Committee. After investigating the activities of the various committees that I had a chance to make as a new Member, I asked for position on the Flood Control Committee and was fortunate enough to receive an appointment. I asked for that committee because I felt it was within the realm of that committee in Congress to attack the problem of flood control, of soil conservation, of the best use of our natural resources.

When we think about what has happened to this country we must realize that we have probably dissipated our natural resources in a shorter time than any other nation in history. Because we had an opportunity to move west, as was described so vividly by General Markham, it was considered good form to destroy the land and move on and take up new land, to plow new sod every year, because it made a better crop; to log the entire timber off the hillside, off the mountainside, and move on to the next place where they could get the greatest amount of timber at the least cost.

We have probably destroyed more natural wealth than any country in the history of the world had to begin with. It has been a national policy to follow this up; and you cannot get this picture unless you start noticing what has happened to the surface, fly over it, drive through it, with an eye to seeing what the surface of this United States looks like today. Drive across Tennessee or Arkansas or Oklahoma or Texas, and see every field, where it has a sufficient amount of slope, gashed and scarred by water. You can see where the water and the winds cut down to the clay, the topsoil is gone, the productive part of the land is gone; nothing is left that will produce.

As a member of the Flood Control Committee, I investigated what legislation had been passed to meet this problem of controlling floods on the lower Mississippi. In 1928 the first actual Flood Control Act was passed. This recognized the problem of controlling floods on the lower Mississippi below Cape Girardeau, Mo. Three hundred and twenty-five million dollars was appropriated under that act, or, rather, authorized to be appropriated. This bill was passed after the flood had destroyed millions of dollars of property and taken the many lives described to you by Congressman WHITTINGTON, of Mississippi.

Now, this $325,000,000 was spent on the recommendation of the Army Engineers to solve forever the danger of floods in the lower Mississippi. The people were assured that the problem was going to be solved and those who lived behind the levees never need worry again about being destroyed by floods. The levees were raised higher and higher, the cut-offs were created, divisions were built, the program neared completion, and yet everyone who lived behind those levees knew they were in just as much danger from a flood of the proportions of 1928 as they were before the expenditure of all that money. The problem had not been solved, but our land, our topsoil from the Western States, from the tributaries of the Mississippi, had been piled on the banks of the Mississippi and carried out into the Gulf of Mexico, never again to be of any use to this Nation.

The first bill to be laid before the flood-control committee at this session asked for $273,000,000 more. For what purpose? To continue the construction of levees below Cape Girardeau, Mo.; to build new diversions; to continue the policy that had proved a failure. $273,000,000 recommended by the Corps of Army Engineers to complete the flood-control program.

When this bill came up for hearing, naturally delegations from the States affected appeared. We had delegations from Mississippi who told us the bill was the only solution, the only way to solve the problem. Why? Because the bill proposed to run the excess water of the Mississippi across the States of Louisiana and Arkansas. Naturally, the people from Arkansas and Louisiana, who lived in this territory that was to be made into a man-made river, also appeared, they also testified, but they were not nearly as enthusiastic about the proposition as the people from Mississippi.

This plan recommended to our committee, to solve the problem, called for the construction of a new river across the full length of the State of Louisiana, banked on either side by levees, to carry the excess water that was to be taken out, in case of floods, at Eudora, Ark. A new stream as great as the Mississippi, 10 miles wide, with big levees on either side, to carry the excess water.

We had hearings for months on that proposition, day hearings and night hearings. Some of the members of the committee thought that the principle of building reservoirs on the tributaries should have some recognition. We proposed to eliminate this floodway and substitute the construction of reservoirs on the White and Arkansas.

Although I believe a majority of the members were in favor of trying this reservoir system of flood control, giving it a fair trial by constructing a complete system on rivers, we were never able to bring it to a vote in the committee, because of the opposition of the members from the lower Mississippi, who insisted that diversions were the only way to solve the problem. Well, that bill, at least, never came out of committee.

While we were in that kind of shape, the Mississippi Valley Association, working with our chairman, Mr. Wilson, proposed an omnibus bill that would include projects from all over the United States. They were justified in drawing up such a bill. I hold in my hand bills introduced, every one of these a separate bill, by Members who lived and represent districts on various streams in the United States, that favored building reservoirs on the White or on the Arkansas or on the Monongahela, or on the various rivers of the United States. Each one introduced a separate bill for his own river. There was no national plan.

The Mississippi Valley Association, as I say, working with Mr. Wilson, combined all these bills as best they could into what is known now as House bill 8455. The first bill that recognized the principle of building reservoirs on the tributaries, the first bill that recognized the principle that if you will retain the water at the head waters, it will not be a problem on the lower Mississippi.

Let me give you an example that is very close to me: I live on a tributary of the Arkansas, the North Canadian River. Three or four times a year that river is a raging torrent—it comes down that dry bed a veritable wall of water, destroying property on both sides for miles, taking lives, even in our State capital, and then when the spring freshets are over, it becomes dry, shifting sand.

In this bill there is provision for two reservoirs that will impound enough water to make that stream run the year around. Think of the difference between a country which is a dust bowl and a country supplied with waters from two reservoirs; whose economic status will be changed because the people can be assured of a crop through irrigation; whose social problems will be improved because they will have water for people and animals. And it is that same water that is the difference between our very existence, when it reaches the lower Mississippi, causes swamps, destroys lands, and no matter how high your levees, it increases the amount of backwater to destroy thousands more acres of the richest land in the world.

There you are: Hold it on the tributaries and save the life and economic future of those people, or let it go down to the Mississippi, make the new rivers to run it over the good land, the lower Mississippi, cause new swamps, make bigger backwaters. There is your choice.

As I say, every man in Congress, who had individual streams, tried to draw a bill, and, at last, they were combined into an omnibus flood-control bill that tried to solve the problem on a national scale.

This bill, while not perfect, is a step very decisively in the right direction. As a Member, and a new Member, I am proud of the part I had to play in passing this omnibus flood-control bill.

Mr. DRIVER, of Arkansas, who talked to you here this morning, finally got a preferential rule through the Rules Committee that gave us a chance to get this legislation up in the closing 3 weeks of Congress. That was a step and a big hurdle to make, but then we had to get recognition. Although the Speaker promised Mr. DRIVER that he would recognize him on several occasions, the press of administration legislation, the press of last-minute legislation got in the way, he was turned down and we thought we had lost the battle.

At last, on Thursday before we adjourned, we were all huddled together back there—DRIVER and the members of the Flood Control Committee—wondering if we were going to get a chance to get recognition; JOHN O'CONNOR, the floor leader, came and told us that he did not think we had a chance, and we decided to take desperate measures. I stood up and served notice on the House of Representatives that if they did not recognize the fact that we had a preferential rule, that we were entitled to their consideration, that I was going to object to the consideration of any further legislation that day. Whether it was due to that threat or not, we got recognition. Mr. DRIVER put his rule through the House. At 10 o'clock that night the first flood-control bill, recognizing the principle of building reservoirs to stop floods, passed the House of Representatives by a margin of 10 votes. [Applause.]

As I say, I almost got into trouble sponsoring that bill. I did a lot of maneuvering before time. I had a break-down made. Congressmen do not always follow legislation; they do not have a chance to do so; so I had a break-down made by districts and by States, and I collared every Member there for 3 weeks and told him about this bill.

As a result of my efforts on behalf of the bill the ranking minority member, Mr. RICH, when opposing the bill had this statement read into the records: "Representative FERGUSON, of Oklahoma, member of the Flood Control Committee, which approves the bill, made a break-down by States and districts and then buttonholed each Congressman whose district would be benefited on behalf of the bill." I am very glad—although he called it a "pork-barrel bill" and they made a lot of fun of it—that we did get it through, and I think it is a fine piece of legislation.

That was in the House. We went over to the Senate, and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce added some $200,000,000 of projects to what was in the bill. We had gotten it through the House with the addition of only $300,000 in amendments and were proud of that, but the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee added on $200,000,000. Before they ever had it printed they reported it out.

I was over there at the time it was called up—they give Congressmen the privilege of the floor—and Senator TYDINGS decided it was a bill that should not pass the Senate, and if there is anyone more clever than Senator TYDINGS when he desires to oppose propositions, I do not know who it is. I want to read you some of the statements in the speech made by Senator TYDINGS while opposing this bill. He thumbed through the bill he had in his hand until he came to the authorization of the appropriation for Council Grove, Kans., and this was his comment:

"That great metropolis of Council Grove, Kans., bursting with its millions of people, and these great ocean liners going up there laden down to the gunwales with freight from all four corners of the earth. I can see now the miles of docks along the water front in Council Grove, Kans., the busy steamships occupying the slips with their gigantic funnels sending smoke into the air, while down 100 railroad spurs there comes freight train after freight train."

The next item is the Pensacola Reservoir on Grand (Neosho) River in Oklahoma, for flood control and other incidental benefits; report to Congress not yet made; survey completed and data in office of Chief of Engineers; cost $6,263,000.

"I wish we had the Neosho River over in Maryland.

"Yet, think of those great rivers out West where the giant ocean liners come laden down, where the babble of many languages is heard on the foredeck up around the forecastle, where the Chinamen and the Lithuanians and the Portuguese and the Morrocans and the Italians and the Englishmen and the Irishmen all man the decks when the liner sails up the Neosho River out in Kansas, and the 5 tugboats come out to warp her into the docks, and the 1,000 people of Council Falls who happen to be standing on the wharf, and the million back in the interior of the city are waiting for friends returning from Addis Ababa, Abyssinia. They have to have deep water, or that great port will perish."

And so the Senator, with his biting sarcasm, caused the bill to be recommitted. He attacked that bill as if it were a rivers and harbors bill, holding it up to ridicule, and he did a good job of it. As I say, I was over there, seated in the Senate at the time he was talking, and although I knew he was strangling our child I had to laugh. He is a master of the English language.

But this same Senator TYDINGS, who attacked the bill on the ground that we were trying to improve navigation, his home city of Baltimore, this year, is going to receive $23,000,000 to improve the port.

I have been out on Chesapeake Bay and I have seen channels marked on either side, so that ships could carry their cargoes up to Baltimore; every port has a harbor. Congressman BLAND, of Virginia, told me that one of the finest projects he knew that was going forward under W. P. A. was removal of shoals in Chesapeake Bay, so his crab fishermen could come in whether the tide was in or out.

Money has been expended on river and harbor projects for years, yet when the West, the great valley of the Mississippi, comes in with a proposition to save our land, to save our industry which is falling into destruction by water, to save our buildings, our houses, our towns, we are held up to ridicule.

I have a letter from General Pillsbury, of the Army Engineers, stating a billion, ninety million dollars has been expended in the last 10 years on river and harbor projects. We come, asking for the expenditure of three hundred and seventy million on a proposition that is not only worth the expenditure from its local benefits, but is the beginning of a policy of reservoir control of floods on the lower Mississippi.

I feel entirely too strongly on this subject to leave St. Louis without asking this group of men to carry away a determination to help the passage of this bill. It has passed the House, it is in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in the Senate. If that committee will report it out and the Senate passes it, we will have an opportunity to see basic flood-control legislation on our books.

I just want to read you some figures here—you people are from all over the country—of the States and amounts involved in this legislation. We are all interested in our own State, we all would like to see these projects constructed.

Alabama	$686,100
Arkansas	61,135,000
California	70,607,000
Colorado	7,728,000
District of Columbia	571,000
Florida	132,600
Georgia	855,000
Illinois	26,523,325
Indiana	10,285,200
Iowa	2,226,300
Kansas	15,405,700
Kentucky	5,878,000
Louisiana	4,899,800
Massachusetts	66,000
Minnesota	464,000
Mississippi	3,160,000
Missouri	9,450,100
Montana	184,700
New Mexico	8,691,000
New York	43,000
North Dakota	28,200
Ohio	192,000
Oklahoma	53,977,000
Pennsylvania	21,876,000
South Dakota	1,139,300
Texas	16,459,000
Vermont	354,000
Washington	10,735,700
West Virginia	15,318,400
Wisconsin	29,000

Now, don't think those amounts of money are appropriations. This bill authorizes the appropriation of this money. Every project that is constructed will have to get its money through the Appropriations Committee. In addition to that, it says that local interests must supply the rights-of-way; must maintain and operate these works after they are constructed. It isn't any "pork barrel" proposition. Projects that are not meritorious simply will not get the necessary backing from their local communities. The local communities are not going to pay for rights-of-way, are not going to pay for maintenance on projects that do not have enough to justify their construction.

In tackling this problem of sponsoring this bill let us not be too selfish about things in our own district and in our own State. This is the initial bill; we should have flood-control bills for years to come, until the problem is complete.

I had a very vivid personal experience on personalities, on selfishness: One member of the Oklahoma delegation voted against the bill because his pet project was not included. Your own DEWEY SHORT, from Missouri, who has long been an advocate of water resources, is vice president of the River and Harbors Congress, voted against the bill because an individual project of his was not included. We cannot get the initial legislation if we have to have every project in it. We must start some place. Let us sacrifice selfishness in order to put the original bill through.

In conclusion, I want to leave this thought with you: When I come into St. Louis and see smoke and murkiness, it reminds me of the millions of people who are now living in cities, who cannot continue to live there and be economically justified in doing so. We are going to have to shift our population; we are going to have to move it some place. We cannot take care of it on the dole. We have to have land, and when I say land, I do not just mean a place for them to build a house and starve. It must be productive land, and the only way we can get that land is by keeping that water out in the West, in the Northwest, and in the East, where it belongs, and utilizing it to reclaim millions of acres. We can reclaim millions of acres of the finest land in the South, by keeping the water out of the Mississippi, and the day is coming when we have to have a place to put those people, and it is coming fast, because we cannot maintain them just by feeding them in the cities, as we are doing today.

When we talk about the expenditure, even if it costs a billion, two hundred million dollars for complete systems of reservoirs, as is estimated, if we have a flood damage of $300,000,000 every year, that is almost 30 percent on the investment. I think that is a pretty good return. And if we do not construct reservoirs on the tributaries, we have no assurance the three hundred and twenty-five million, plus the local contributions, which probably bring the amount up to a billion dollars that has already been expended on flood-control works in the South, if we do not construct reservoirs we have no assurance that that entire effort will not be wiped out in one great flood. It is insurance that the present works and the works that will be built in the future will handle the floods, and I think it is insurance that we have to have.

So, it solves your problem of what to do with the people and it solves the problem of your lower Mississippi. It not only does that, if we do not maintain the productivity of our soil, if we do not make it possible for people to produce on this land, if we allow it to continue to be eroded and washed down to the Mississippi and the Gulf of Mexico, our national debt can never be paid. We have to have something to produce with.

We have heard a lot, today, about transportation, about rates. You have to have something to haul, and if we do not protect our natural resources, we will not have anything to haul on these rivers and on these railroads, after we get them built. [Applause.]

Now, the last thought: We are not always going to have lump-sum appropriations, in fact, the way I feel now, I will never again vote for another lump-sum appropriation. [Applause.] I think the committees in Congress are perfectly capable of drawing legislation; I think the Flood Control Committee can formulate a policy that will build national public works of national value that will constantly form a "backlog" to take people off the unemployed lists and leave works that will be a monument to Congress, to the committee, and to this great association that has been so instrumental in pushing this kind of work. We can do things that we will be remembered for, that will be of lasting value, and I am glad to have had a part in promoting the legislation sponsored by this group. I know that this group, if they really set their heart and mind to it, if they really make a conscientious effort, when we meet here again, if I have the privilege of coming back to your convention, we will have a flood-control bill passed by the Senate and signed by the President. You have the power to do it, and I hope you will see fit to make the effort necessary to put it through at the next session of Congress. [Applause.]

THE AGRICULTURAL PROBLEM MEASURED WITH THE A. A. A. DECISION

Mr. AYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. AYERS. Mr. Speaker, recovery is well on its way; and that it started in the spring of 1933 is admitted by all. Yes, it is even admitted by the Liberty League, arch enemy of the New Deal.

Agriculture is the cornerstone of whatever measure of success recovery has had. That destruction of the cornerstone will destroy the structure is the only conclusion we can reach. It does not take the special training and the experience of statesmen, jurists, or Liberty Leaguers to know that it is the only conclusion possible to draw. It takes only the exercise of the ordinary common sense, that is all, just common sense to draw the proper construction.

Farm prices may remain at the present level for a time; may even advance for a time due to the instant removal of the processing tax; but if legislation restoring the benefits that have been accomplished under A. A. A. is not enacted, prices of agricultural raw materials will descend again to less than the cost of production. This will be caused by the loss of the processing tax which was ultimately paid to the farmer and which in fact is only an equalization of the tariffs so that the producer of agricultural products may have, in part at least, his just benefit of the tariff laws. Then, too, if remedial legislation is not promptly enacted, we will lose control of production. All of this will result in lower price levels and we will go back to world prices for our agricultural raw materials.

A. A. A. IN CORNERSTONE OF RECOVERY

A. A. A. was the very mortar in the cornerstone of recovery. It had remedied these things; it had given the producer a share of the benefits of the tariffs; it had controlled production to fit consumption and had made a price for agricultural products above the cost of production. It had taken us out of competition with cheap farm labor of foreign countries. The farmer could live under the operations of the A. A. A., but it is impossible to say as much for him during the 5 years before its enactment.

NEW FRONTIERS HAVE EXPIRED

For something like 150 years before A. A. A., the farmer had been selling on a world market and buying on a protected market. Up to 1929 he had been able to stand it—after a fashion. This disadvantage had been to some extent, which grew less all the time, offset by the fact that we were a new country and had within our borders "new empires to conquer" and had a continued increase in our population. We had been, in a measure, solving our problems by opening up new frontiers, but when we had no more new frontiers, then we woke up to the fact of the unsoundness of this economic system.

FARM FAILURE OF PAST ADMINISTRATION

From 1929 to March 1933 efforts were made to put the farmer upon a national economic basis with industry, but none of these efforts were directed at the source of the trouble. They were directed to the banks, the trust companies, the insurance companies, the railroads, and to the processors and manufacturers, with the apparent idea that the result of these efforts would drift down through the funnel and adjust agricultural prices. But not so. Those in authority had directed all governmental efforts and funds to the wrong end. They did not realize or else did not desire to admit that the banks, the trust companies, the insurance companies, and the processors and manufacturers all depend primarily upon agriculture, and that without it and its success, nothing else could be successful. They refused to recognize that agriculture was and is the basic industry that oils the wheels of all other industry.

FAILURE OF FARMER MEANS FAILURE OF ALL

When the farmer fails, the merchant goes down. When the merchant goes down, he takes the processor and the manufacturer with him—not only the processor and manufacturer of food and clothing commodities which come from the farms but all other processors and manufacturers, for they cannot operate without the products of the soil. When the farmers, the merchants, the processors, and the manufacturers go down, the wage earners become destitute. When this condition is brought about, what is left for the transportation companies and necessarily what is there to keep the banks, the trust companies, and the insurance companies going? Ah, when agriculture fails we are right back where we started in March 1933—at the depths of depression.

INDUSTRY NEEDS CUSTOMERS, NOT LOANS

What the merchant needs, what the wholesaler needs, what the processor and the manufacturer need, is not money from the Government but customers to buy their goods. And what the insurance companies and the trust companies and the mortgage companies need is borrowers who can pay their interest, and what the banks need is depositors. None of these needs can be brought about unless the primary industry of this Nation—agriculture—is successful.

PRESENT ADMINISTRATION'S UNDERTAKING

In March 1933 this administration undertook to restore prosperity, not in the old way that had been tried and had failed but in a new way, namely, by beginning at the source of the trouble. It started by building up the selling price of agricultural products, which restored the buying power of the farmer, the basic producer of all that lubricates the wheels of success and prosperity. Economists and theorists, processors, manufacturers, bankers, financiers, and the Liberty League all put together, and for good measure throw in all the big daily papers controlled and directed by big business, may draw their fine lines on theoretical cures, and they may spin all the yarns they desire about the depression, its cause and its cure, but you cannot have recovery, you cannot have good times again, unless you get money into the hands of the producer. Hoover's administration tried to effect recovery by making loans to the banks, the insurance and trust companies, the railroads, the factories, and processors. It did not work. It could not work any more than you can stop a squeak in the spindle of a wagon wheel by greasing the driver's seat. You have to grease the squeak if you are going to stop it. It was not loans that these institutions at the top needed; it was customers, and customers could only be made by restoring buying power, and that could only be done by starting at the source.

BUYING POWER RESTORED

President Roosevelt immediately undertook to bring about recovery by restoring buying power to the farmers. First, because they are the largest of all producers, and they produce the things that feed and clothe the human race; and, second, because they are the largest of all consuming groups; hence, without their success, nothing else can succeed.

The President and the new Congress recognized that under the then existing conditions with which the Government was confronted, the proposition was to either remove the tariff walls and permit the law of supply and demand to operate naturally on the manufacturer and the processor, as well as the farmer; or, second, give the farmer a tariff that would stimulate his price, for it was recognized that he could no longer sell on a world market and buy on a protected market. That program was too one-sided, for him, to exist. The latter method was decided upon and to that end the A. A. A. law was speedily enacted.

Under the administration of A. A. A., checks began going out to the agricultural producers of the Nation. For the first time in more than 4 years lifeblood had again found its way to the dry veins and arteries of prosperity. It had reached the very foot that made the first step toward recovery. Cash had reached the producer. Farm prices immediately increased. In many instances they doubled, trebled, and quadrupled. From two bits which the farmer was getting in 1932, he got $1 in 1935 for his wheat. The beef-cattle producer's price had gone from 4 cents to 12 cents. The sheepman was getting 25 cents for his wool instead of 7 cents. Corn had raised from 15 cents to 75 cents, and hogs from 3 cents to 10 cents. Butterfat for the dairy farmer had more than doubled. Cotton had done likewise. The rise in the income of the producer who came directly under A. A. A. had its beneficial effect upon all other agricultural products, including all classes of livestock.

This increased the purchasing power of the farmer from three to five times what it was. Money began finding its way into the channels of trade. It went to town. It paid old bills. It bought new clothes, new machinery, new harness. It bought material to repair buildings. It bought paint and new furniture. It bought new automobiles and new trucks. In turn this money went to the wholesaler and jobber, and on to the manufacturer and processor. Bank deposits grew enormously. The wheels of industry started rolling again, and laborers went back to their jobs all along the line. Why this movement toward recovery? Because the farmer was again producing and selling at a price above the cost of production. His purchasing power had been restored, and it in turn restored purchasing power all along the line. The start had been made at the bottom, at the source, and it was successful.

There could be no start on national recovery so long as gross economic inequality prevailed. Therefore the efforts of this administration were directed to the elimination of that inequality.

AGRICULTURE'S PLACE IN RECOVERY

Agriculture has produced and will continue to produce food and fiber to sustain life, but it demands and must demand a fair return for its service. The proof of agriculture's recent economic distribution and contribution is all around us. No one can escape it. You see it everywhere. It is in the metropolitan centers, in the industrial districts, in the banks, on the railroads, on the highways by the increase in truck tonnage, in the store, and on the farms and ranches themselves.

It was agriculture that caused the economic spiral to uncoil its spring. Consumers, industrialists, merchants, toilers—all began to share in recovery when agriculture began to buy. Disagree, if you will, as to what caused agriculture to start buying, but you cannot put aside the indisputable fact that economic prosperity and economic stability spring from the soil. The man on the land creates the basic new wealth of this Nation. When it was made possible for him to produce at a profit his buying power was restored, basic new wealth had been found, and the backbone of the depression was broken.

Attribute the cause for the general increase in all purchasing power where you will, you will have to admit that it started with agriculture and that agriculture has been its main stimulant.

A. A. A. ADMITTEDLY HELPED AGRICULTURE AND ALL ELSE

In all the arguments against A. A. A. that I have heard or read I have yet to hear or see one statement that A. A. A. has not been helpful to agriculture. Then, it must have had to do with restoring the farmer and, in turn, all else. Taking that as a fact, let us see, then, to what extent the restoration of agriculture has helped in other lines. I shall quote from Roger Babson, one of the Nation's greatest and most reliable statisticians. In his report of October 30, 1935, Mr. Babson tabulates the percentage of gain on items since March 4, 1933. I shall quote a few of these, giving those which I consider as leading barometers of conditions since President Roosevelt's inauguration.

	Percent gain
Industrial production	55
Factory pay rolls	92
Automobile sales	512
Steel-ingot output	270
Residential building	322
Factory employment	45
Electric power consumed	39
Freight-car loadings	30
Lumber production	186
Rural-store sales	112
Department-store sales	49
Corporation profits	86
Stock prices	194
Cash farm income	62
National income	25

Mr. Speaker, the general grasp of all business has been steadily upward during the New Deal, and particularly since A. A. A. was put into operation. The Nation's income itself has increased by 25 percent. The greatest single attribute to these better conditions is the workings and the successful administration of A. A. A.

THE SUPREME COURT DECISION

Now we are confronted with the Supreme Court's decision nullifying the law under which the agricultural program was successfully working. That decision knocked the mortar from the rocks out of which the foundation of recovery is being built.

It is with great deference, Mr. Speaker, that I approach a discussion of this decision of the Supreme Court. However, representing as I do the largest diversified agricultural district in the Nation, the largest not only in area but in people of agricultural pursuits, and the producers of the greatest variety of agricultural products, the gravity of our situation constrains me in an expression of my views on this decision and the position in which it leaves us.

For 10 years I was a trial judge and also sat upon the bench of the supreme court of my State. My tenure as a judicial officer and my training as a lawyer prompt me to accord that decision and the high Court that rendered it the respect which is due. However, my training and experience also prompt me to the conclusion that honest difference of opinion among good lawyers ofttimes makes lawsuits. And ofttimes when lawsuits get to the court of last resort that court is divided. That is the reason we always have odd numbers on our supreme courts—so there can not be a tie. I have known supreme courts, on a rehearing, to take the opposite view to that originally decreed, and I have also known supreme courts of their own voluntary motion to set aside their own decision and enter a new one expressing the opposite view. I mention these facts only to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that there is nothing sacrosanct about the instant decision. I think it was a sadly strained construction of the Constitution. I accept it, of course, as the law of the case, but I cannot agree with the learned Court that made it. I believe the minority opinion is the correct construction on the points involved.

Assuming that two constructions can be put on a legislative or congressional act, one pointing to constitutionality and the other pointing to unconstitutionality, then the construction should be adopted which is consistent with the constitutionality of the act. That was one of the first principles of constitutional law that I learned as a law student and I have since heard and read it many times as reenunciated by supreme courts. The Court that rendered this decision said so, and not so very long ago, either. It was in March 1923. You will find the decision in Two Hundred and Sixty-first United States Reports, at pages 379 to 383. On this point the decision reads:

The rule is fundamental that if a statute admits of two constructions, the effect of one being to render the statute unconstitutional and the other to establish its validity, the courts will adopt the latter.

So, Mr. Speaker, the rule is fundamental. And I contend that the act was subject to two constructions. There was a 6-to-3 division of the Court itself as to that question. Then surely one would conclude, in conformity with the fundamental rule, that the Court should adopt that construction which is consistent with the constitutionality of the act.

The Court had a choice of deciding that the A. A. A. law was a scheme to use the taxing power to compel regulation in a field the Federal Government had no power to regulate which would make the law unconstitutional, or the Court could have taken the position that the law was the exercise of the power granted by the Constitution to lay an excise tax and use and collect it in the interest of the general welfare and that in the use of it save the agricultural industry of the Nation. Congress might reasonably be held to have acted in the general welfare and, therefore, the act be constitutional. However, the Court did not decide the point of general welfare at all. That point was passed, with a statement that the Court was not required to pass upon it, which statement I will quote later.

THE SUBJECT OF GENERAL WELFARE

On the subject of general welfare, permit me to remark, Mr. Speaker, that it is common knowledge existing for more than 10 years prior to 1933 that the agricultural industry of this Nation had gradually gone toward the rocks of destruction, and it all but reached there in the fall of 1932, when the farmers' crops did not bring a price equal to the cost of harvesting, and, at the same time, their farms were being taken wholesale by mortgage foreclosure or by tax title. The fruits of a lifetime of toil were being taken before their very eyes, and they were hopelessly helpless insofar as their ability to pay was concerned, which helplessness had been brought about through no fault of their own. All efforts on the part of the Government to assist them had failed and they had been abandoned to drift with the current while the Government was exerting every effort and advancing fabulous sums of public money to help other classes of industry, financiers, and the bondholders of the Nation. This drove the farmers to distraction. Armed with weapons, they barricaded the highways and poured milk into the drain gutters; they prevented sheriffs' sales and likewise prevented the issuance of tax titles, and in at least one instance organized and forcibly threatened to hang a trial judge because he entered a decree in a foreclosure case. That was the picture confronting this administration when the A. A. A. was enacted. It was an emergency never before paralleled. Something for general welfare must be done.

CHESTER DAVIS SUCCESSFUL ADMINISTRATOR

Chester Davis was made Administrator and he hurried to put the act into operation. It worked, and it has continued to work. It has increased agricultural prices, agricultural buying power, and buying power all along the line as I have indicated. The farmers' success helped everyone. These things are common knowledge—judicial knowledge, if you please—that class of knowledge which is so common that it needs neither evidence nor argument to establish it. Really, one would think that the Court would have approached consideration of this case with these facts uppermost in its mind, and, with such approach, held that this act was a valid exercise of the taxing power, and that the collection and use of the tax to save the agricultural industry of this Nation was in the interest of the general welfare and therefore constitutional.

TAXING POWER NOT QUESTIONED

The constitutional power of Congress to levy an excise tax upon the processors of agricultural products was really not questioned in the decision. The levy was held invalid not for any want of power in Congress to lay such a tax to defray public expenditures, including those for the general welfare, but because the use to which the moneys collected under the tax was put is disapproved by the Court. On this subject the Court said:

The tax can only be sustained by ignoring the avowed purpose and operation of the act.

The depressed state of agriculture being Nation-wide in extent and effect, there can be no basis for saying that the expenditure of public moneys in aid of farmers is not within the specific powers of Congress, granted by the Constitution, to levy taxes to provide for the general welfare.

On the proposition of the general-welfare clause of the Constitution the decision said:

We are not now required to ascertain the scope of the phrase "general welfare of the United States" or to determine whether an appropriation in aid of agriculture falls within it.

Then the Court went on to discuss and determine the rights reserved to the States by the Constitution—State rights. It then said, referring to the Agricultural Adjustment Act:

It is a stautory plan to regulate and control agricultural production, a matter beyond the powers delegated to the Federal Government. The tax, the appropriation of the funds raised, and the direction for their disbursement, are but parts of the plan. They are but means to an unconstitutional end.

Assuming that the A. A. A. is not constitutional unless it comes within the general-welfare clause or unless agriculture is an interstate business, let us consider it. I have pointed out the reasons why it is within the general-welfare clause. The Court decided, as I have just quoted, that it was not required to ascertain the scope of that clause—which to me was the gist of the case. Now we will go on the States' rights conclusion of the Court.

THE STATES' RIGHTS QUESTION

In this instance the Court went on to hold, as I have also quoted, that Congress has no right to regulate and control agricultural production. Let us see if that is the logical conclusion. Is agriculture an interstate business or an intrastate business? If it is intrastate, then it is confined solely within a State. If it is interstate, then it is an industry, the operation of which is not confined to any one State, and Congress does have authority over it. If it is determined to be intrastate, then the product must lose its agricultural identity when it is taken from the ground that produced it, for the raw materials of agriculture are invariably the subject of interstate commerce, not intrastate. For instance, in my State—Montana—no raw agricultural product is wholly consumed within the State. By far the greater portion of our wheat goes to Minneapolis, Duluth, and Chicago. A greater portion of our beef goes as beef-on-foot to Sioux City, St. Paul, Omaha, and Chicago; all of our wool, as it comes from the sheep, goes to Chicago, Boston, and other East coast markets. Our corn is fed to hogs and they, on foot, are sold in States both east and west of us. Likewise, a greater percentage of our alfalfa seed, our mustard seed, and our flaxseed is sold beyond the border of our State, and a considerable portion of our sugar beets are processed in another State. In all instances, except that of wheat, the title to these agricultural products remains in the grower until sold by him in foreign States.

Much the same condition exists in all other agricultural States. As a matter of fact State lines, artificial in most instances, have very little indeed to do with agriculture. In all cases the price of the product is fixed at the terminal and the local price becomes the terminal price less transportation charges and selling commissions. All these things point to agriculture's being interstate and not intrastate, and if so, States' rights were not invaded.

REMEDIAL LEGISLATION CAN BE ENACTED

Getting down to the basis of the decision, we have the Court finding a fact to support the conclusion that the act is unconstitutional. The fact found was that agriculture is intrastate, and, naturally, after finding such fact, the conclusion is against the act. That is the decision and nothing more. Therefore, unfortunate as the decision may be, our situation is by no means hopeless.

Being mindful of the decision and working in harmony with it, Congress may yet levy the tax. The right to do so is not denied. The tax, when levied and collected, goes into the Treasury. Then the Congress is authorized to appropriate it. No limitation is placed upon appropriations, except that there is a time limit on Army appropriations and on all others that the expenditure be made for the purpose and in accordance with the act making the appropriation. The use of appropriations by Congress is not mentioned in the Constitution except in these two instances, and there is no limit upon the object of appropriations except that the appropriation is restricted to the purpose for which it is made, such as the payment of national debt, provide for national defense, and the general welfare; it must be for governmental purposes. So far all is well. Nothing in the decision says Congress cannot enact a new law levying the tax and getting it into the Treasury. Then Congress can appropriate it in aid of agriculture under the general-welfare clause. There is nothing in the decision forbidding it. The most that can be said is that the Court dodged that point. Who can say that if that point is decided the Court will not agree with the dissenting opinion? Until this moment we have no expression of the Court on that point except what the three dissenting justices said in their opinion. In view of the facts I have pointed out, can it be said that such appropriation and expenditure would not be in the interest of the general welfare? Is it possible for anyone to say that such appropriations and expenditures are not related to the general welfare? I do not think so. And I do not believe that the Supreme Court will so decide.

Although the Court has committed the agricultural industry to the States, I believe that when these questions are put to it for the rendering of a decision on the general-welfare clause of the Constitution, it will decide that agriculture as a whole is of national concern and that when it is affected the general welfare of the Nation is affected.

COURT HAS NOT HAMSTRUNG CONGRESS

Notwithstanding the fact that the general word has gone out, and that the big newspapers and the general news services of the country have broadcasted the idea, that the A. A. A. and all its principles have gone everlastingly to the legislative graveyard, I have concluded, after careful study of the Supreme Court decision, that a decidedly false impression has been created. The Court has not hamstrung the Congress at all. The Court decided only one point, and that wash-out can be bridge.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I urge action or remedial legislation to meet this crisis, and I hope my humble remarks may encourage Members who are in sympathy with such action. A whole meal is not spoiled because of a fly in the soup.

WILL OF PEOPLE IS SUPREME

This is a grave problem, and this decision, if it stops Congress here, leaves the country in a mighty serious position. This country has had other grave problems and it has overcome them. I have faith that it will do so in this instance. I have faith in the people, in the Congress, and in the courts. The people want a law to revive the equitable benefits that prevailed under the A. A. A. To that end our colleague from Texas [Mr. JONES], chairman of the Agriculture Committee, has today introduced a bill. I believe Congress will enact it and I believe the Supreme Court will sustain it. However, if the Court in its wisdom does not do so, then, under the Constitution itself, the people may act in their own behalf and amend it in accordance with its own provisions. This is the way the drafters of the Constitution made the will of the people supreme.

PAYMENT OF THE ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House. I am a consistent supporter of the bonus. My vote for it today is in keeping with my entire record in the House and before I came to Congress.

I have consistently opposed an interest charge to veterans who borrowed on their adjusted-service certificates and on the grounds the money was theirs. It is payment already long past due. Why be charged interest? At numerous times in the House I have spoken in the interest of paying the so-called "bonus." On June 15, 1932, I pointed out on the floor of the House that our Government had given a bonus of $1,600,000,000 to the railroads at the close of the war and $2,000,000,000 to war contractors. I further pointed out we had canceled some $11,000,000,000 to the nations of Europe in our settlement with them. Again on March 12, 1934, I spoke on the floor of the House in support of the bonus pointing out many reasons why it should be paid at that time.

Quite true, the boys were drafted. It was an honor to serve our country in time of war. While serving at $30 per month, the Government sent home $15 for dependents, deducted for life insurance, so in the final analysis, the private only received a few dollars a month. Certainly, it was an honor to go to the front for this great United States. Others too, had honored positions at home in their work supporting our country, but not for $1 a day. Men in factories, mills, cantonments making shot and shell did their part but not for $1 a day. They received from $8 a day up and some jobs paying $12 and $14 and up to $20 per day, going home to comfort at night, to their friends and families. This was far different from the barracks or the dugout at $1 to $1.25 a day.

The bonus is a positive, direct obligation of our Government. Figured as all other debts are figured it is a long time overdue. The veterans now hold Government bonds, which they cannot use. It is high time they are given securities they can use instead of those they cannot use.

CONCERNING THE IMMEDIATE PAYMENT OF THE ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

If the face or maturity value of these certificates is paid in full at this time, there will be a remainder due the veterans in each county of the Ninth Congressional District of Indiana approximately as follows—this information compiled from information obtained from the Veterans' Administration, Statistical Division of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, and from other governmental sources—all other districts will likewise share in these benefits:

Bartholomew	$409,286.31
Brown	85,070.45
Clark	506,406.21
Dearborn	346,602.82
Franklin	238,651.58
Jefferson	315,754.91
Jackson	390,736.00
Jennings	194,239.80
Lawrence	585,731.77
Ohio	61,679.35
Orange	287,392.60
Ripley	297,581.96
Scott	109,696.11
Switzerland	138,799.16
Washington	268,067.39

THE SUMMONS OF THE NEW REPUBLICANISM

Mr. FENERTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a radio address delivered by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FENERTY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech delivered by myself over the Columbia Broadcasting System's network from Philadelphia Thursday, December 5, 1935:

In beginning his historic reply to Hayne, Daniel Webster substantially stated that, when the mariner has been tossed for many days upon an angry sea, he takes advantage of the first opportunity to find his bearings and determine how far the ruthless elements have driven him from his course. So, too, we may similarly pause in the realization that there has been perhaps no time since the Civil War when thinking Americans have so seriously pondered the necessity of ascertaining how far the New Deal winds have cast the Nation from the course of ordered constitutional government. There are echoes of strange rumblings and rumors of strange forebodings, as we fear the "rock and tempest's roar" and see the "false lights on the shore."

At this ending of the third year of the New Deal Government and the beginning of the year in which the problem of America's future must be accurately solved, we find the battle lines distinctly and definitely drawn. The issue confronting our citizens during the coming months involves the momentous decision as to whether they will timidly abandon their ancient American loyalties and pledge allegiance to a new system of alien ideas germinated in the chancelleries of foreign lands, or whether they will steadfastly and devotedly cling to those timeless ideals that for a century and a half have kept America steady in a changing and restless world.

It is now time to appraise understandingly the policies of the "brain trust" and ask ourselves whether, generally speaking, they have advanced recovery or have retarded it. It requires no detailed analysis to realize that, in spite of the actual tons of New Deal propaganda poured forth from Washington every week—$300,000 being annually wasted for mimeographed sheets to bombard the newspapers alone; despite the regiment of publicity experts paid $1,000,000 a year from your taxes to convince you that everything is happy and serene, it is now apparent that all is not quiet along the Potomac tonight.

Three years ago we were smilingly told that a new dawn had broken upon the world, and like the ghost of Hamlet's father, the ineffectual shades of Washington and of Jefferson, of Madison and of Hamilton, were expected to slink timorously into the uncertain and vanishing gloom before the effulgent and revealing light of the Rooseveltian sun. The millenium was here—and into our eager, outstretched hands there was bountifully dropped, all wrapped in red cellophane, the roseate promise of the more abundant life.

The year 1 had arrived! And, like the post-bellum world created by Woodrow Wilson, it was to be a better place to live in, a languorous utopia in which a benign and paternal Government would relieve us of the lowly and plebian necessity of earning our own money, conducting our own business, thinking our own thoughts, living our own lives. With Mr. Tugwell, we have discarded our hysterical attachment to an American Constitution that had grown too old-fashioned for our new national sages; with Secretary Wallace, we realized that the time had come when we unenlightened Americans needed to have our thinking done for us by the Greek-letter collegians; we were to be ushered into the more ample and radiant life where, we were led to believe, the Hopkins' would cease from troubling and the Ickes' be at rest.

But to those whose senses had not been lulled into political lethargy by the siren song of the New Deal Lorelei the invitation sounded suspiciously like the now shattered promises with which the Soviet Government had once lured Russian energy into early atrophy and final decay. The Bolshevist dictators had decreed that any Russian who owned more than three cows thereby became a capitalist and that, to prevent its confiscation by force, the property must be at once surrendered to the State. Our own benevolent New Deal dictatorship decreed that if any American possessed more than $100 in gold he had the alternate choice of summarily surrendering it to the State or eventually going to jail.

Whereupon, by reducing the gold content, for every dollar the professors confiscated they returned to you 59 cents and then boasted that they had made $2,800,000,000 profit on the transaction. It was the ancient system of "clipping the coin", old as the Caesars and just as honest.

Again, the Soviet decrees that it will use no coercion to induce the Russian peasant to surrender his property to the agricultural associations, the Russian equivalent of the A. A. A., but if the peasant fails to comply, he is compelled to pay as many as four separate prices for what he must purchase in the market. Our genial New Deal decrees that the cotton farmer is at liberty to grow as much cotton as he chooses, but if he produce one bale more than is directed by the bureaucratic buccaneers at Washington he is robbed by a confiscatory tax collected by force. Other American farmers are generously informed that they may plant as much as they wish but if they freely agree not to exercise this freedom, they will be compensated for not planting—and the Government forcibly collects from the people the moneys paid to the farmers for thus lessening the food supply in a hungry world. In other words, under the New Deal administration, a worker in New York or Philadelphia or Chicago or San Francisco may be taxed so that elsewhere another individual may be bribed not to work. The Supreme Court will shortly have something to say about this un-American policy.

Furthermore, just as in Soviet Russia, manufacturing was destroyed, the Government taking over most of the work, so in "brain trust" America no man is exclusive proprietor of the industry or business created by his own ability and initiative. The management of business, like the control of agriculture, is transferred to a New Deal politician, who never created a business or managed a farm, upon the theory, no doubt, that all politicians are infallibly wise, unerringly businesslike, and incorruptibly honest.

Is it any wonder that the people look on in wide-eyed bewilderment when the professors tell them that the accumulated wisdom of the centuries has, by New Deal ukase, suddenly become nonsense, and a supine Congress, losing faith in itself, hastens to echo the pretense that a group of callow classroom theorists are more competent to guide the Nation than those whose lives have been devoted to testing theory in the toilsome laboratory of practice.

Of course, ladies and gentlemen, you cannot make an expert out of a nonentity by giving him a lucrative position on the Federal pay roll, and it is not astonishing that the near Americans in control of the experiments on the body politic soon began to juggle the wrong test tubes. Industry was butchered to make a "brain trust" holiday. The dollar was devalued upon the theory that if it were cut in half it would buy more, which was tantamount to saying that if the foot-rule of 12 inches were reduced to 7 it would make the object measured 5 inches longer. It must have been a "brain truster" who, on first beholding a grapefruit, enthusiastically exclaimed, "It wouldn't take many of those oranges to make a dozen!"

As a singular illustration of the New Dealers' contradictory attitude toward the Nation's business, the professors, though condemning holding companies to death without trial, nevertheless cunningly concealed the inconsistent chartering by the Government in the State of Delaware of six great holding companies under orders of the administration, through four Cabinet members and nine bureau chiefs. Stealthily were the papers of incorporation marked "Secret; do not publish." Documentary evidence proves that chartered Federal corporations have been created to take the place of successful business activities throughout the country. As the eminent Senator Schall, of Minnesota, has revealed, this Fabian approach to the socialization of the United States by the artful method of incorporating Delaware holding companies is not a newly contemplated scheme, but a concrete actuality with a strong international organization behind it.

Though chartered as emergency agencies, they are labeled perpetual, they are enabled to engage in any form of business and, since a Delaware corporation is answerable only to Delaware law, incorporation in that State was apparently intentionally sought so that, as the distinguished Senator said, Government officials might not need to answer for every dollar of property entrusted to them, and the bureaucrats of the alphabetical groups might thus elude opinions by the Attorney General as to legality and have their projects removed from the jurisdiction of the Federal courts to those of the State of Delaware. If Congress, through an agent, can thus nullify the Constitution with its checks and balances, then Congress itself can be nullified by this indirect and insidious circumvention of the Constitution, and the way is prepared for the Super-Government of the United States of America, Inc., and the disappearance of all private rights. In this fashion the New Deal, paying no taxes, without responsibility for losses, with the taxpayers' own money, has sought to scare industry into confidence, has entered into competition with American business, and has its deadly fingers around the arteries through which pulses the lifeblood of the Nation.

It is furthest from my thoughts, ladies and gentlemen, to issue a blanket condemnation of all the policies of the present national overseers, for some of them have won commendation; but perhaps, without being accused of partisanship, I may mention a few of the inconsistencies with which the administration is beclouding the intelligence of the people in its endeavor to have them believe that the New Deal is an unmitigated blessing.

Six days ago, in the city of Atlanta, the President made a startling confession. Surrendering at last to the oft-repeated Republican contention that self-respecting Americans are outraged by the dole and demand real employment and work relief, the President, though alleging that conditions have improved, made the amazing admission that "the average of our citizenship lives today on what would be called by the medical fraternity a third-class diet."

You can readily understand why the masses of our people are thus underfed, when the President's own Secretary of Agriculture, with White House approval, has followed the indefensible and inhuman policy of destroying food while our people starve, of taxing the people for food that is eaten and for food that is not grown, of punishing, by fine or imprisonment, the farmer who dares to sell a potato beyond his allowance without permission from Washington, of penalizing the housewife who buys a bootleg potato, as well as the individuals who know of such a purchase and fail to inform on the criminal. As a result of this policy of sabotage, for the first time in history, the United States has become dependent upon foreign nations for food, and your tax dollars to the extent of hundreds of millions are being sent to the Argentine, Rumania, and the British Empire to purchase wheat and corn, barley and rye, meat, and other foodstuffs to take the place of that which the "brain trust" savants destroyed. Money that should be paid to American farmers is being wantonly siphoned off to enrich the farmers of other lands.

Although the administration has consistently pursued this nature-defying plan of raising prices by promoting scarcity, of seeking to cure starvation in a land of plenty by abolishing the plenty, the President actually told his Georgia audience that: "You and I are enlisted today in a great crusade in every part of the land to cooperate with nature and not to fight her * * * to seek to provide more and better food for the city dwellers of the Nation."

I need not tell you housewives of the stratospheric prices of food today compared with those of a year ago. With the cost of the necessities of life 10 to 250 percent higher, how can any American possibly obtain more and better food? And yet, in spite of this, the President amiably attempts to defend his policy of destroying abundance in the name of the more abundant life.

Does it not cause the average citizen to doubt the wisdom or sincerity of the administration when the President thus speaks of being engaged in a crusade of cooperation with nature to provide more and better food, while less than 1 minute later, in the same address, he admits that our American people, whose tax moneys are being thus paid to foreign nations, are compelled to exist on a third-class diet because they do not have "the purchasing power (as he says), to eat more and better food"?

But, to add to the confusion of the people, the President then complacently proceeds to tell them that although the country was insolvent when he assumed office, now that he has impulsively increased the public debt to some thirty billions—we have suddenly and mysteriously become solvent again. In other words, if you are in debt and insolvent this evening, all you need to do is to increase your indebtedness and thereby become solvent. I confess myself a stranger to such abstruse reasoning. We are deeper in debt than ever before. We are merrily squandering our way into affluence at the rate of $20,000,000 a day. Our taxes are higher, our pockets are empty, our cost of living increasing, and yet we are blandly told that we are ridding ourselves of insolvency by becoming more insolvent. Truly, if this be so—as the Governor of Georgia has said—you can make water run up hill and you can drink yourself sober.

When you are commanded, ladies and gentlemen, to follow blindly in the footsteps of the professors who now dominate our destinies, ask yourselves these questions: If 3 years ago Mr. Roosevelt, as a candidate, had frankly said: "Elect me and I will place a tax of 25 cents on every sack of flour you buy; I will put 53 taxes on every loaf of bread; I will raise the price of food and clothing; I will destroy wheat and hogs while people are in want; I will take half a billion dollars from American farmers and give it to their Canadian competitors; I will fill warehouses with foreign butter churned in Denmark and in Holland; I will repudiate the promises of my platform; I will expand governmental expenditures by 70 percent; I will each month disburse an amount equal to the cost of the Panama Canal; I will enlarge the number of Federal employees to three-quarters of a million and pay these favorites the money which should be used for the relief of the hungry and unemployed; I will abrogate the right of freedom of speech and have enacted a public-utility law that will make it illegal, under penalty of fine or imprisonment, for any citizen to talk or write even to his own Representative in Congress without formal authority from one of my New Deal commissions; I will compel the people to pay and pay in taxes until it hurts; I will call this system the New Deal, even though it has been unsuccessfuly tried in other lands and no phase of it is less than 300 years old; I will cause ridicule to be hurled at the Supreme Court; I will deride the American Constitution which I swore to defend and term it a relic of the horse-and-buggy days—and when the people complain, I will blame it on American business, on the Supreme Court, and our traditional system of Government!" If Candidate Roosevelt had made such statements before his election, would you have voted for him? And might you not now logically inquire: "Mr. President, do your promises of today mean only as much as your promises of 1932?"

Yes; ladies and gentlemen, more than ever before we need honesty and candor to lead us into the light of the new America. The America of the last 3 years is not the real America. It will pass, as do all such unhappy eras, and leave to true Americans a fantastic and humiliating memory of a time when America was not herself. We need today a bold spirit of enterprise, an aggressive and confident national spirit builded upon clear thinking, comprehensive education, and intelligent leadership. We need less showmanship and more statesmanship; less government in business and more business in government; less bureaucracy to tax us and more industry to feed us. We need men who will think, not of the next election but of the next generation.

Conscious of the political forces that grip the world today, realizing the historic role which an inspired and reanimated Republicanism must play in checking the world drift toward collectivism, remembering that the defense of American institutions can be safely entrusted only to those who believe in America—we call all our citizens to the battlefront for the old ideals of free opportunity and constitutional government. To this struggle for the new liberalism, the old Americanism, we call new men, new energies, a new spirit of initiative, new blood. We call the young, as well as those whose American hearts have never grown old. I summon you all, men and women of America, to look American freedom unflinchingly in the eyes, to stand fearlessly face to face with ancient American tradition. I give you a rendezvous with liberty—in 12 months' time! How many of you will have the courage to be there?

PAYMENT OF ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of House Resolution 401, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 401

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the bill H. R. 9870, with the Senate amendment thereto, be, and the same hereby is, taken from the Speaker's table to the end that the Senate amendment be, and the same is hereby, agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, I understand probably the gentleman from North Carolina will give some reasonable time for debate, as there are a few Members who desire to express their opinions on this subject?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is the purpose of the chairman.

Mr. SWEENEY. Reserving the right to object, I wish to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SWEENEY. If this is carried, will it foreclose the right of the Patman forces to present their issue—that is, the plan for paying this obligation?

The SPEAKER. The Patman bill is now upon the Union Calendar.

Mr. SWEENEY. But this will be tantamount to concurrence in the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not passing on the effect of the resolution. The gentleman will have to pass on that himself.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, we are now in the final moments of the consideration of H. R. 9870, the bill which passed this body a few days ago by a vote of 356 to 59. It is my purpose to call the attention of the House to the material differences that exist between the House bill and the bill which passed the Senate a few days ago by a vote of 74 to 16.

The Senate took the House bill as the basis for their substitute. As a matter of fact, there is only one major change. There is one other item that might be characterized as a major change, but, as I see it, there is only one major change in the bill which passed the House. That is section 4. The House bill—H. R. 9870—as the membership will recall, provided for the payment of the certificates in cash upon applications made prior to April 6, 1937, at the face value of the certificates; upon application for cash payment made after that date, then the face value would be paid plus interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum from the date of the enactment of the law until they were paid.

The Senate bill provides for the issuance of nonnegotiable bonds that will be delivered to the veterans in substitution for the adjusted-service certificates. Under this section the veterans will have the opportunity of procuring cash for the face value of the bonds at any time after June 15, 1936. If, however, the bonds are not cashed until after June 15, 1937, they draw interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum from June 15, 1936, until cashed. The bonds are nonnegotiable. They can be used by the veterans to procure cash, and if the veterans hold them they will receive interest on the bonds instead of someone else receiving the interest. This is the major change.

Sections 1 and 2 of the bill now under consideration have an amendment that deals with the cancelation of accrued interest. The Members will remember that under the bill we passed all interest that had accrued or was to accrue was canceled. The Senate drew an arbitrary line, October 1, 1931; and the bill passed by the Senate provides for the cancelation of all interest that has accrued since that date. It does not, however, provide for the cancelation of interest prior to that date. The amount of interest accruing before October 1, 1931, is $61,000,000. The interest accruing since that date to June 15, 1936—which is canceled—is some $263,000,000

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield to my friend from North Carolina.

Mr. LAMBETH. The gentleman stated that under the terms of the Senate bill interest that had accrued would be canceled. The veteran, however, who might have paid interest will not have that interest refunded, will he?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is correct as to the refund of interest paid. Only interest accruing since October 1, 1931, is canceled.

Mr. LAMBETH. In no case will interest which has been paid be refunded.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is correct. The refund item was in the bill as originally introduced. The Ways and Means Committee struck it out. The veterans' organizations were agreeable to the striking. The House passed it without the refund item; and the Senate bill does not contain the refund item. As heretofore stated, the refund item is about six and a half or seven million dollars.

Mr. LAMBETH. How does the gentleman justify penalizing the veteran who has paid his interest but giving a premium to the veteran who has failed to pay his interest? In other words, why make fish of the one and flesh of the other?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman would care to take the time to look at my remarks made when the bill was before the House, he would find them set forth in full on this subject.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Has the Senate amendment which is now before us in the form of a substitute for the House bill been approved by the three great veterans' organizations?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I am glad to say to my friend from Kentucky that the three major veterans' organizations of this country are wholeheartedly behind this measure under consideration at this time. While they have spoken in their conventions resolutions with reference to refund of interest and the cancelation of all interest accrued, they recognize the practical difficulties that confront legislation of this character. The main objective is the immediate payment in cash of the adjusted-service certificates—that was accomplished under the bill that passed the House and under the bill that passed the Senate and is now before us for consideration. As I have heretofore stated, there is one major difference, and that refers to the use of bonds in substitution for the certificates, but, as the veterans may cash any or all of these bonds at such time as they choose, it certainly cannot be considered to be other than a cash payment to those who want cash.

The American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, and the Disabled American Veterans urge the passage of this measure.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. If we pass this resolution the bonus bill will go to the White House today.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. I would much prefer that it carried the Patman plan, so that it would be paid in Government Treasury notes instead of Government interest-bearing bonds. We would save the 3-percent interest and millions of dollars in bookkeeping and incidental expenses. There would be no difference whatever in the stability of the Government's obligation. One would be just as sound as the other. There is no difference between the Government printing Government Treasury notes made sound by reserve gold in the Treasury, and the Government printing baby bonds bearing 3-percent interest. It is the credit of the Government, after all, that makes both sound and secure. While I hate to see the Government lose this 3-percent interest, when there is no occasion for it, I shall vote for this resolution, so that the bill will go to the White House today. And if it is vetoed, I shall vote to override the veto. I wanted to get the above views in this RECORD during this debate.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It was the thought of the committee and of the House that section 4 of the original bill, providing that the certificates should bear interest in lieu of the issuance of bonds, would be a lesser strain upon the Treasury. It is thought by those in the other body, and, as I understand it, by gentlemen who are in another section of town, that the veteran who would want to obtain a small portion of his money through the use of these bonds could perhaps cash one or two bonds as his need demanded, and that the strain upon the Treasury would be lighter. It certainly is a debatable question. If it assists in the enactment of the measure into law, we are willing to accept it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield to my neighbor.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I wish to congratulate the gentleman on the long, arduous, and successful fight he has made for the payment of the bonus. No Member of Congress deserves more credit than he. I should like to ask him one or two questions. As I understand the philosophy back of the issuance of bonds, it is hoped those who receive the bonds may hold them a long time and not cash them, thereby removing as much immediate strain from the Treasury as possible. This being true, why does not the bill carry a provision that those who retain their bonds will be allowed interest from June 1936?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The bill does that if the bonds are not redeemed prior to June 15, 1937. The gentleman understands, of course, the difficulties under which the united front was presented in the House, and I know the gentleman is practical enough to realize the situation that obtained in the Senate. We have definite assurance that the pending bill will do something that no other bill has heretofore done, and that is, it will be able to withstand a veto, if any. So far as I am concerned, I feel that the interest should run from the date of the enactment of the law, rather than from June 15, 1936, but it is a small item and I think we can very well yield on this point.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I appreciate that the gentleman is the real spokesman for many of those vitally interested. I, too, have done my part in this fight to have the bonus paid. Can the gentleman tell those of us whether those to benefit from the passage of this act are satisfied with the proposition that the interest should commence June 15, 1936, if not redeemed prior to June 15, 1937.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I may say that the three veterans' organizations are wholeheartedly cooperating in the passage of this bill and desire the largest vote the House can give in support of the motion.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. With pleasure.

Mr. DOUGHTON. It is a fact, is it not, that the bill provides that certificates not cashed until after June 15, 1937, shall draw interest from June 15, 1936?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is my understanding. The following proviso appears on page 12 of the bill in lines 18 to 20:

Provided, however, That no interest will be paid on any bond redeemed prior to June 15, 1937.

Interest on bonds not cashed until after June 15, 1937, runs from June 15, 1936.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SNELL. In the final analysis, what is the real and fundamental difference whether we print bonds to pay the bonus or print greenbacks?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I feel that with the political philosophy that has been evidenced so splendidly by the gentleman from New York that this question can better be answered by him.

Mr. SNELL. I have no political philosophy about this at all; I am trying to get information and facts. The gentleman opposed the Patman bill because it was inflationary. I would like to have the gentleman tell the House what is the real fundamental difference.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I think the gentleman had better realize the exact position I have maintained. The bill which I introduced last year did not have the inflationary feature of the Patman plan, and I preferred it to the Patman plan. I felt that it had better chance of passage, but I have also supported the Patman plan. The point involved is this——

Mr. SNELL. I think this is important; I should like to have an answer to my question.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I think the question should be answered. The philosophy has grown up in this country due to the able utterances of the gentleman from New York, and other gentlemen of the same school of thought, that the issuance of printing-press money, the issuance of Treasury notes, even though they have safe and secure brakes at the control end, is inflationary and objectionable and hurtful to the credit of the Nation. At the same time it is the gentleman's philosophy—and I certainly do not see that he could disagree with us——

Mr. SNELL. I am not interested in the gentleman's interpretation of my philosophy, I am interested in an answer to my question.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The issuance of bonds will not have the inflationary, destructive, harmful effect upon the credit of the Nation.

Now, with reference to section 1, the only amendment therein deals with the October 1, 1931, cancelation of accrued interest.

Section 2 likewise limits the cancelation of interest to that which has accrued since October 1, 1931.

The House bill provided that notice should be given by the Administrator of Veterans' Administration to any bank or trust company holding the note and certificate to present them to the Veterans' Administration for payment of the loan and the interest thereon. The time of length of notice in the House bill was 45 days and this is changed to 15 days after the mailing of such notice.

I have already dealt with section 4 and the differences there involved.

Section 5 is identical in language with the House bill.

Section 6 in the two bills are identical.

Section 7 in the immediate bill provides that no deduction on account of any indebtedness of the veteran to the United States other than the lien against the adjusted-service certificate shall be made from the amounts due hereunder. This is a new section. We had the identical language submitted to us by the Veterans' Administration, but they came with it at a late hour and it was not included in the House bill. There is one angle in this section that may not have occurred to you. This would slow up the payment of moneys due in a very appreciable degree. It would increase the expense of administration several millions of dollars. It would be necessary that every point in our Government, where a veteran could possibly be indebted to the Government, be checked and certificate made of the finding. It is stated that even the accounts back in the days of service would have to be audited and in the opinion of those who ought to know, it would be of tremendous difficulty and cost.

Section 8. The language in section 8 is identical with the language in section 7 of the House bill.

Section 9. The language in section 9 is identical with the language in section 8 of the House bill.

Section 10. This section of the Senate bill is a new section which carries the usual language relative to the making of any false or fraudulent statements. As I understand it, this is the same language carried in the World War Adjusted Compensation Act.

Section 11. The language in section 11 of this bill is identical with section 10 of the House bill.

I have gone over the bill section by section in order for the Members to know that the two material changes is the substitution of bonds to take place of the certificates, and the limiting of the cancelation of interest since October 1, 1931.

THE CANCELATION OF INTEREST

There is one thought that I want to bring to the attention of the House and that is the cost that will ensue in the cancelation of interest upon loans made the veteran. Many Members, who oppose the payment in full of the certificates, have stated to me that they thought we should proceed to the cancelation of interest charges on loans made to veterans. This statement is based on the assumption that the interest charged upon the loans under the law will, at the maturity date of the certificate, January 1, 1945, practically eat up the remainder of the certificate. These Members who were opposing the cash payment recognize the unfairness of this happening and our failing to cancel the accrued interest and the interest that would accrue upon the loans.

I first had my attention called to the enormity of the figure represented by the cancelation of interest on loans, accrued and to accrue, in the cash-payment hearings before the Ways and Means Committee in 1932. Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, testified at this hearing that the cost figure that would follow such cancelation of interest to the Government would be, as of January 1, 1945, $1,016,708,521 (p. 566, Hearings Before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, 1931). This figure, of course, was based upon the interest rate then prevalent of 4½ percent per annum, compounded annually.

We are told by Col. Harold W. Breining, Assistant Administrator, Veterans' Administration, that as of December 31, 1935, there is an interest accumulation of $297,350,000. He says, further, that computing interest at 3½ percent, compounded annually, interest would accumulate between January 1, 1936, to January 1, 1945, in the amount of $641,602,514.80, and that the total amount of interest that would accumulate as of that latter date, January 1, 1945, would be $938,952,514.80, almost $1,000,000,000. It is self-evident that if the the interest accrued and to accrue upon loans made to the veterans should be canceled at any time between now and January 1, 1945, that it would be necessary for the Government to make good to the adjusted-service certificate sinking fund $938,952,514.80. I do not believe that there are 10 Members in this House, nor that there will be 10 Members in the Congress which convenes January 1, 1945, who would advocate the collection of interest accruing on veterans' loans. I cannot believe that the Congress would dare to be a Shylock, extracting the pound of flesh, in the collection of interest upon moneys which represent the adjustment of pay in the World War.

ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATE SINKING FUND

Passage of this bill saves $1,451,000,000 necessary to be paid into the adjusted-service certificate fund. Upon the authority of Col. Harold W. Breining, Assistant Administrator of the Veterans' Administration, if we continue the nine annual payments of $112,000,000 into the sinking fund, on January 1, 1945, there would be a deficit of $371,000,000. The nine annual payments totalling $1,080,000,000 added to the $371,000,000 deficit in the fund as of January 1, 1945, and you have a grand total of $1,451,000,000 that must be paid into the adjusted-service certificate fund between now and January 1, 1945.

It is self-evident that the moneys necessary to pay in full the World War veteran certificate holders which is said to be $2,237,000,000 as of June 15, 1936, is not added costs. Assuming that the interest charged veterans on loans will not be collected, I respectfully submit to you that settlement of this matter at this time saves money to the Federal Treasury. If you take the $1,451,000,000 necessary to make whole the adjusted-service certificate sinking fund as of January 1, 1945, based upon 9 annual payments to the fund of $112,000,000 and the deficit shown aforesaid and add to that the costs of cancelation of interest, to wit, $938,952,514.80 and you have a total of $2,389,952,514.80 or a saving to the Treasury of the United States of $152,952,514.80. Of course, I want to be plainly understood that this is based upon the cancelation of interest on loans. I do not recall anyone who contemplates that such interest is to be collected.

THE CREDIT OF THE NATION

Just one word in conclusion. Much has been said in regard to the credit of the Nation and the effect of this expenditure upon the credit of the Nation. I present in argument the balance sheet of the public debt, of June 30, 1937, appearing on the front page of the United States News, of January 13, 1936.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. This is the same United States News of which Mr. David Lawrence, as I recall it, is the editor.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks the balance sheet referred to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Balance Sheet of the Public Debt, June 30, 1937

LIABILITIES

Public debt	$31,351,000,000
Work relief for 1937 (estimated)	1,000,000,000
Soldier bonus payments (estimated)	2,000,000,000
Contingent liabilities (H. O. L. C. bonds, F. C. A. bonds, etc., as of Nov. 30, 1935)	4,530,000,000
Total	38,881,000,000

ASSETS

Cash in Treasury	1,504,000,000
Recoverable assets (Government loans as of Nov. 30, 1935)	4,493,000,000
Contingent assets (home owners loans, farm loans, etc., as of Nov. 30, 1935)	4,530,000,000
Allied war loans (Finland)	8,000,000
Stabilization fund (from gold profits)	2,000,000,000
To be raised by future taxation	26,346,000,000
Total	38,881,000,000

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, these are the figures of David Lawrence, the same David Lawrence, one of the most prominent political commentators in our country, who did not know throughout the year 1932 that Mr. Hoover was not going to be returned to the White House and who was not fully convinced that he had been defeated until the electors met and cast their formal votes.

I submit that this balance sheet proves conclusively that this is not such a burden that endangers the credit of the United States. In these figures he shows a total of $38,881,000,000 in assets. Included in those assets is $1,504,000,000 in cash; included in those assets are recoverable assets of almost four and one-half billion dollars; included in those assets are contingent assets of four and a half billion dollars; included in those assets is the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund, the gold profit.

He states here in his balance sheet, "To be raised by future taxation, $26,346,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, on February 28, 1933, the indebtedness of this country was $20,713,000,000. When we subtract that figure from the amount to be raised by future taxation, using the Lawrence figures, we have $5,633,000,000. I say that such sum compares favorably with the expenditures that we saw in the Hoover administration; in other words, a debt increase from $16,000,000,000, March 4, 1929, to $20,713,000,000, February 28, 1933, during those 4 years.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I know that we are all happy that we are this far along toward payment in cash of the adjusted-service certificates. As a cub Member of this House in 1924, a few days before the original bill came on the floor under suspension of the rules, which did not permit of amendment, I voiced my hope that the veterans should be paid in cash. I have never changed my mind from that position. This is an adjusted compensation for personal services rendered a Nation in time of great crisis. I submit that the person who performs the personal service is the person entitled to any adjustment in compensation therefor. Further, I submit that he or she is entitled to the adjustment pay in their lifetime. Eighty World War veterans die each day. Five hundred thousand World War veterans on January 1, 1945, will never be able personally to receive this adjusted pay.

Mr. Speaker, this is a meritorious bill that does justice to the soldiery of this country, and we are all happy that we are near unto a favorable conclusion. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives, in 1924, after the great World War Congress adjusted with the ex-service men the amount to be paid extra for services rendered their country during the war, by paying $1.25 a day for foreign service and $1 a day for home service plus 25 percent extra, interest from 1918 to 1924 made the average amounts of the certificates about $550. This was agreed to by ex-service men's organizations and by Congress to be a satisfactory adjustment in 1924, to be extra compensation or an insurance policy due in 1945. It was a contract between the ex-service men and the Government of the United States.

To be paid today on a strictly business basis would require $847, the surrender value of the original $550 certificate and interest. The face value in 1945, which is the surrender value at that time, would be $1,205. Thus, by paying the certificate today, Members of Congress are actually making further donation to the ex-service men of $358 on each certificate, a gratuity that is an added burden to your country's Treasury and must be met by future taxation. Members of Congress, do you know what you are doing?

That is not all. As suggested by the Senate bill, the bonus be paid in baby bonds—baby bonds—sounds like the Seventy-fourth Congress—if an ex-service man wishes to let his baby bond run to maturity, he gets 3 percent interest on same—more interest than the Government can borrow money for today through normal channels. Is this helping the Federal Treasury or is it a further grant to the ex-service men? The latter surely applies. If they demand the bonus be paid today and our Treasury is sound as you think it is, then pay them the money and borrow it at 1½ percent or less. Why pay 3 percent?

Our duty today is to the country at large, not to any minority group. If you are going to pay the bonus, do it today at its face value without any additional gratuities.

I always thought a contract was sacred and binding on all parties thereto. Is it possible our people of our Nation—as represented by the Seventy-fourth Congress—have no regard for contracts and no regard for their oath?

This is a business proposition, pure and simple and one that requires sound thinking, common sense, and true Americanism. Members of Congress, think of your country—not of yourself. Our country is in the greatest danger morally and financially it has ever been in in its history. Build up our national debt until you must repudiate all of them, and then America loses its form of government and its freedom.

Where will you get the money? [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I want to point out to the Members of Congress the Treasury statement as of January 18, 1936, issued by Mr. Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, showing a growing deficit of $30,521,348,638.11. As stated a few minutes ago by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON], we will pay this bonus either in baby bonds or in cash. You are going to pay it in baby bonds—not cash—creating a further bonded debt on this country. When Mr. Morgenthau was asked a few days ago if the Treasury could stand it, he just laughed. He did not say it could or that it could not. He either did not know or else he was afraid to say that it would be an awful strain on an overburdened National Treasury. The largest debt in our national history, and growing in debt faster and faster each day, notwithstanding the fact the President said, January 3, we were approaching the balancing of the Budget. Let me state to the House of Representatives, it is not the truth, our National Treasury statement does not say so. Our national debt has increased this year $1,820,456,013.66, or $392,564,107.94 more than last year, to this same date of January 18, 1936.

If the Treasury of the United States can stand this additional burden at this time, then let us pay it in cash, like the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] said we were going to pay it and not in baby bonds.

I also want to call your attention to the fact that in 1910 this 100 German mark I hold in my hand was worth 24 cents plus in gold per mark; today it is worthless, not worth the paper it is written on. What is the value of our money going to be 10 years from now if we continue to plunge our Nation into debt as we are doing at the present time? I hold in my hand a $10 bill of the United States of America. It states on it, "This certificate is legal tender for all debts, public and private." Five years ago our dollars were worth 100 cents in gold. Today they are worth 60 cents gold of the same value. The President can make it worth 50 cents in gold of same value by the stroke of a pen. Nationally, our monetary system is not stable. We are building on sand. If we crumble, ex-service men, you lose all Government obligations. I feel confident there is not an ex-service man who will be alive in 10 years that will not thank me for voting "no" on this proposed legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to use to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, we are nearing the end of a long battle. This is probably the last chapter in the fight for the payment of the soldiers' adjusted-service certificates.

I know it is contended by some people that these certificates are not due, but I call your attention to the fact that if the veterans had been allowed the same interest on this debt that was paid to financial interests on their loans, or to the munition makers on money which we owed them, then these certificates would have all been due and payable, at their full face value, in October 1931.

Therefore I feel fully justified in supporting this measure to pay this debt in full.

While I shall vote for this resolution in order that this debt to the veterans may be paid, yet I must say that I am not satisfied with the manner of its payment. A majority of the veterans will cash these bonds without delay. Then, if the Government has to issue additional bonds with which to secure the money to pay off these bonds provided for in this bill, there will be an additional burden of interest charges piled upon the American people in the years to come. If that debt is carried over a period of 40 years, then the money changers will get as much out of it as the veterans will, and the American people will pay in taxes twice as much as this bill calls for, or twice as much as the veterans will receive. In other words, we will be paying the big bankers a bonus in interest charges amounting to as much, over a period of 40 years, as the veterans now receive on these certificates.

In my opinion, that would be unfair, both to the veterans and to the taxpayers.

As everyone knows, I have advocated a reasonable controlled expansion of the currency ever since the beginning of the Hoover panic in 1929. I have urged that the currency be expanded to provide the money to pay off these certificates. That could have been done at any time since 1929, and could be done now, without in any way impairing our gold reserve or injuring the credit of the United States. We have more than ten billions in gold now, with only about half that amount of money in circulation, including currencies of all kinds. Yet the country is suffering from the want of an adequate circulating medium.

I suggested the other day to the "sound money" Members of the House that we might coin $2,200,000,000 of this gold and either pay it out to the veterans or set it aside and issue gold certificates, or United States notes, against it, and thereby give us a reasonable controlled expansion of the currency to the amount necessary to pay these certificates off. Then it would not have been necessary to issue these bonds, and the country would have saved billions of dollars in the interest charges that will be piled upon this debt as the years go by.

Not only that, but such an expansion of the currency, with that currency put into circulation in every nook and corner of the United States, would have done more to restore prosperity to the American people than everything else that has been done since 1929.

Under the present law the President of the United States has the right, under the authority given him during the last Congress, to expand the currency by issuing United States notes. He could issue $2,200,000,000 in currency, with 100-percent gold coverage back of it, without impairing our gold reserve in the least. In fact, we would still have a surplus of gold after allowing 100-percent gold coverage for all the money now in circulation, even including United States notes and silver certificates.

When the veterans begin to cash these so-called baby bonds, as they will do as soon as they receive them, if the President would follow the course I have outlined here, and exercise the power given him by Congress to expand the currency in this way—if he would do that and pay these baby bonds off as the veterans turn them in, instead of issuing additional interest-bearing bonds, then these certificates could be paid off without piling onto the backs of the overburdened taxpayers of this country a single additional dollar in future interest.

That would not be what the money power loves to call wild inflation. It would simply be a liberal controlled expansion. It would be paying this debt out of our own resources, without the accumulation of billions of dollars of interest in the years to come.

Besides, such an expansion would have a most salutary effect upon our economic life. Conditions would begin to improve immediately, farm prices would advance rapidly to their normal levels, without the necessity of curtailing production. The prices of wheat and cotton and corn and land and lumber and dairy products and all other raw materials would rise. The farmers' prosperity would be restored; this would give him purchasing power to buy the things he and his family need. That would start goods to moving and the wheels of industry to turning. This would necessitate the employment of more people in industrial enterprises, and commerce would be stimulated as it has not been for many a day. Our bread lines would melt away, our soup kitchens would disappear, our relief rolls would diminish to the vanishing point, and in the enjoyment of this new prosperity which would reach into every State in the Union, into every nook and corner of these United States—in the enjoyment of that new prosperity the American people would forget the horrible depression through which we have been passing.

Of course, this might not suit the old guard, the Wall Street element of the Republican Party, who are nagging and criticizing every movement the President makes and attempting to frighten the American people by continuously yelling "inflation."

They would rather see the return of prosperity postponed beyond the election, in the hope that they might again gain control of this Government. They know that if the President should pursue the course which I have outlined, and expand the currency sufficiently to cancel these bonds, they know that it would produce such rapid recovery, such prosperity throughout the country, that no power on earth could prevent his reelection.

Nothing would please the soldiers better than to see this country happy and prosperous as result of the payment to them of this debt, which is more than 4 years overdue. I sincerely trust that the President will sign this measure and that he will then use the power given him by Congress to expand the currency as I have indicated and bring back prosperity to all the American people. [Applause.]

This money will be equitably distributed throughout the country; it will go into every precinct in the United States. The number of veterans to be paid and the amount to be received by them in each State is as follows:

	Number of veterans	Amount
Alabama	50,867	$26,888,528.74
Arizona	10,870	6,068,187.11
Arkansas	43,849	21,993,238.27
California	200,424	122,833,011.86
Colorado	34,259	19,362,089.24
Connecticut	44,043	26,914,018.40
Delaware	4,884	3,527,070.50
District of Columbia	28,281	16,278,716.59
Florida	39,535	21,921,858.79
Georgia	58,583	32,262,946.70
Idaho	13,575	7,411,798.88
Illinois	253,843	141,472,589.16
Indiana	95,587	50,730,694.28

	Number of veterans	Amount
Iowa	79,814	$41,019,480.37
Kansas	57,114	31,436,030.43
Kentucky	63,696	34,261,787.60
Louisiana	53,885	27,849,762.05
Maine	21,412	12,121,627.12
Maryland	48,424	27,931,248.31
Massachusetts	137,113	83,147,947.57
Michigan	134,009	77,476,794.12
Minnesota	85,532	52,789,520.36
Mississippi	36,802	19,308,411.76
Missouri	111,706	60,820,922.70
Montana	18,106	10,281,687.92
Nebraska	40,233	21,802,190.95
Nevada	3,066	1,771,846.11
New Hampshire	12,370	7,298,113.14
New Jersey	116,440	69,579,645.59
New Mexico	10,101	5,810,422.87
New York	377,182	221,373,427.96
North Carolina	63,926	34,622,162.80
North Dakota	16,174	8,762,475.18
Ohio	182,692	106,061,344.03
Oklahoma	67,181	35,202,766.82
Oregon	35,376	20,679,034.90
Pennsylvania	259,931	155,594,459.25
Rhode Island	20,789	12,356,383.60
South Carolina	35,747	19,316,831.04
South Dakota	22,713	11,757,600.97
Tennessee	59,009	32,497,586.52
Texas	148,771	83,696,221.25
Utah	14,387	8,035,096.92
Vermont	8,243	5,042,465.50
Virginia	63,132	36,811,791.20
Washington	56,335	34,079,306.15
West Virginia	43,294	23,345,392.42
Wisconsin	88,036	47,177,680.61
Wyoming	11,177	6,329,955.57

MISSISSIPPI

In the State of Mississippi, which I have the honor in part to represent, 36,802 certificate holders will receive $19,308,411.76.

The following amounts will be paid to the veterans in each county in the State:

Counties and amount to be paid
Adams	$226,497.17
Alcorn	227,352.64
Amite	189,471.75
Attala	250,248.42
Benton	94,322.56
Bolivar	682,942.22
Calhoun	173,784.96
Carroll	189,981.18
Chickasaw	200,266.02
Choctaw	118,602.47
Claiborne	116,805.03
Clarke	189,154.55
Clay	172,352.78
Coahoma	445,295.13
Copiah	303,873.77
Covington	144,449.14
De Soto	244,510.06
Forrest	289,465.38
Franklin	117,920.02
George	72,311.08
Greene	102,310.13
Grenada	161,500.83
Hancock	109,720.98
Harrison	424,302.52
Hinds	818,154.22
Holmes	370,388.81
Humphreys	237,695.15
Issaquena	55,115.21
Itawamba	175,178.70
Jackson	153,532.48
Jasper	179,110.01
Jefferson	137,365.10
Jefferson Davis	137,268.98
Jones	398,821.11
Kemper	210,320.18
La Fayette	192,028.54
Lamar	123,454.98
Lauderdale	507,013.78
Lawrence	119,871.26
Leake	209,570.44
Lee	339,428.56
Leflore	514,299.68
Lincoln	253,343.49
Lowndes	288,235.05
Madison	344,071.16
Marion	191,499.88
Marshall	239,404.83
Monroe	347,387.30
Montgomery	144,266.51
Neshoba	256,553.90
Newton	220,210.92
Noxubee	$245,682.72
Oktibbeha	183,771.83
Panola	275,364.58
Pearl River	186,520.86
Perry	78,789.57
Pike	309,516.02
Pontotoc	211,790.81
Prentiss	185,175.18
Quitman	243,222.05
Rankin	195,633.04
Scott	201,026.47
Sharkey	133,385.73
Simpson	200,861.97
Smith	176,908.86
Stone	56,826.85
Sunflower	637,890.77
Tallahatchie	341,879.62
Tate	167,853.66
Tippah	179,340.70
Tishomingo	157,742.54
Tunica	204,091.60
Union	204,428.02
Walthall	123,328.06
Warren	343,965.42
Washington	522,027.72
Wayne	147,025.54
Webster	116,576.34
Wilkinson	134,154.69
Winston	204,149.27
Yalobusha	170,613.00
Yazoo	358,162.35
Total	19,308,411.76

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, in the unavoidable absence of the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] I have been delegated to act as chairman of the steering committee of the Patman group. We had meetings with Mr. PATMAN before he left, and we have decided to concur in the Senate bill today. We should like, of course, to have the Patman bill to pay the adjusted-service certificates with currency and thereby bring about a much-needed expansion of the currency, but we are interested primarily in the passage of the soldiers' bonus to do justice to the veterans of the United States; therefore we intend to vote to concur in the Senate bill. I should like to pay the tribute which he so greatly deserves, to WRIGHT PATMAN today, but as the time for debate is limited, I hope at some future time to take this floor and pay fit tribute to my dear friend the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], who has worked so hard, assiduously, and unselfishly in the cause of the veterans, and who has put in long hours day and night for years in valiant efforts to pass a bonus bill for the men who served their country in war. At some future time I intend to do this.

I have looked up the records, and I find the first bonus bill for World War veterans introduced in the Congress was introduced by the late Honorable James A. Gallivan, a Congressman from Massachusetts, a Democrat, representing the Twelfth Congressional District of Massachusetts. He was a brilliant Member of Congress, and I considered it an honor to call him my friend and colleague. It seems to me peculiarly fitting that my distinguished friend and colleague, the Honorable JOHN W. MCCORMACK'S name should be upon this Vinson-Patman-McCormack bill, representing as he does the same district that Congressman Gallivan formerly represented, a district in South Boston where Mr. MCCORMACK was born and where Mr. Gallivan was born, a district where, during the war, there was no need of the draft. There were so many volunteers from South Boston that they had no draft in that section, their quota being entirely filled and more by volunteers. [Applause.] I am very proud of this fact, because one of the companies in my own regiment, the One Hundred and First Infantry of the Twenty-sixth Division, came from South Boston. JOHN MCCORMACK has always battled in this House for the veterans. As a veteran himself, with other veterans in his family, he knows the real story of the veteran and has always upheld the rights of his comrades. So I say it is peculiarly appropriate that the name of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] should be on this bill in connection with the name of the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] and the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON], who, during all his service in Congress, has worked constantly in an effort to do justice to the veterans of this country. During many years in this House FRED VINSON, as a member of Ways and Means, has worked incessantly to bring about legislation to do justice to veterans and their dependents.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I should like to yield to my friend from Kentucky, but I have only 5 minutes, and as debate is limited I do not want to ask for further time. I hope my friend will excuse me.

I am glad to pay a tribute to these three Members—VINSON, PATMAN, and MCCORMACK—today. They are Members of this House of whom we should all be proud.

I hope the President of the United States will sign this bill in spite of the tremendous propaganda which has been poured in upon him from the vested interests of the United States, who were perfectly willing to see these men go off to France to save their millions and billions, but when it comes time to do justice or attempt to do justice to these men in adjusting their compensation, which was $1 a day or $30 a month during the war, deductions for Liberty bonds, deductions for insurance, deductions for their allotments to their homes, and having little or nothing left of their pay at the end of the month—when we attempt to do a little bit of justice to these men, your big Wall Street interests, your big corporations, step in and say, "No, Mr. President, millions for the profiteers, millions for the moneyed men of the country, but nothing for the veteran who bared his breast on the fields of France to defend the flag of the United States of America."

I hope the President will sign this bill and do eternal honor to himself. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, my remarks at this time will be very brief, as I have many times in the past expressed my feelings and opinion on this legislation.

We have now under consideration the proposition of whether or not the Senate bill providing for the payment of the soldier's adjusted-compensation certificates, through the issuance of baby bonds of $50 denomination, will be substituted for the authorization bill which we passed through the House only a few days ago. This bill will be adopted by an overwhelming majority, and for this I am exceedingly happy, because it will in due time pay to the deserving ex-service men of this Nation a debt long past due, but I am not at all pleased with the means provided in this bill for the payment of said obligation. I shall vote for the passage of this bill. I vote for it for two reasons. First, because I have ever said, and have not changed my mind, that the method of paying this obligation was secondary to the payment itself, and I am here keeping faith with the ex-service men of my district and the Nation in voting for the first bill which came before the House providing for a method of paying their certificates. Second, because under the existing rules of the House, and by reason of the fact that this bill is now before us for consideration under unanimous consent, there is no alternative. In other words, there will be no opportunity to offer as an amendment or a substitute any other method of paying these certificates, other than the method provided for in the bill under consideration, because the rules of the House will not permit even the offering of such an amendment or substitute. Therefore, all of you will be compelled to either vote for or against this bill, with no opportunity to alter it by the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t." However, the fight is not yet over.

The passage of this bill will insure the ex-service men of this Nation the payment of their adjusted-compensation certificates. I sincerely hope, however, that the method of raising the money to retire the baby bonds given to the soldiers, in payment of these certificates, is not yet a closed book, and to this I wish to address myself for only a moment.

I should like to refer this House to a speech made by the distinguished senior Senator from Oklahoma, Mr. ELMER THOMAS, on the floor of the Senate on January 18, last Saturday, wherein he pointed out that to pay these certificates under this method would cost the taxpayers of the United States $2,000,000,000 plus, in excess of the $2,300,000,000 required to pay the face value of the certificates at this time. This caused by reason of the fact that some three or four bond issues will have to be floated in order to raise the money to pay the baby bonds, and, of course, I am against the raising of the money by this method.

When the bill which we now have under consideration finally becomes a law, it will provide for the issuance of baby bonds in $50 denomination. Then immediately arises the question as to where the money will come from to pay the soldier in cash for his bond, or bonds, when he presents it, or them, for payment to the post office, bank, or some other place. There are only two methods by which this money can be raised. One would be by the time-honored banker's method of floating additional tax-exempt, interest-bearing Government securities, the payment of which must come from the taxpayers of this Nation. This is the method proposed under the pending bill, but this Congress could, and I sincerely hope that it will before very long, pass legislation which would provide that United States notes—currency—be issued against the gold and silver reserve now in the United States Treasury, and use that money to retire these baby bonds, thus eliminating the necessity of the levy of additional taxes against the already tax-weary citizens of the United States, and this is the other method.

Therefore, since the battle is won for the ex-service men of this Nation, I pledge myself here and now to carry on the fight, to the end that they will not be burdened with additional taxes amounting to in the end almost dollar for dollar, with which to pay back to the Government the benefits that the Government is now giving them. Thus you will find me on the firing line, fighting for legislation which will provide for the issuance of currency against our metallic reserves in the Treasury, or for the issuance of bonds to be given to the Federal Reserve banks of this Nation as collateral to them for them to issue their currency and retire these bonds, and providing that they should not receive interest on the bonds, but only a service charge for the issuance of such currency.

Either one of these two plans, which incidentally was the Thomas amendment to the present bill in the Senate, would pay these bonds without additional tax burden to the citizens of the United States.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I have no objection if any Democrat claims the credit for introducing the first adjusted-service certificate bill; the RECORD alone can determine that. Nor do I object to the speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], in which he praises members of his own party for the fight they made for the passage of this bill. But I think it is only fair to point out that the adjusted-service certificate bill originated with the Republicans, in a Republican administration, and was put over the veto of a Republican President by a majority in both Houses of Congress which were then Republican. I am perfectly willing that both sides should claim credit, and those who made the fight deserve that credit. [Applause.]

This is the end of the fight that has been waged for 15 years in Congress to partially adjust the pay of World War veterans by a grateful Government, provided the President signs the bill; otherwise it will come back for the determination of the Congress, and the veto will be overridden by a tremendous vote.

I admit that if the Patman bill had been passed by Congress providing for $2,000,000,000 in greenbacks, printing-press or inflationary money, that it would not have impaired the soundness of the dollar with ten billions in gold and a billion in silver in the Treasury.

I have opposed it on principle because I did not want the Congress to start the printing press for payment of the service certificates to the veterans, as once such principle is invoked the Congress might just as well pay off the national debt, the salaries of Members of Congress, and the running expenditures of the Government by issuing greenback or inflationary money.

It is true we have ten billion in the Treasury in gold and one billion in silver, and that we have less than $6,000,000,000 in currency. An additional two billion in currency, if and when needed, would not cause serious inflation.

But the American Legion took the position that the bill should not be involved in the question of inflation, and rightly so. Many members of the Legion feel that the attempt to use the adjusted-service certificate bill as a vehicle for currency expansion was the cause of its failure to be enacted into law last year.

I take the liberty to read into the RECORD the resolution passed at the last national convention of the American Legion, held at St. Louis in September 1935, as follows:

Be it resolved, That—

1. We request immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates at face value, with cancelation of accrued interest on loans, and refund of interest paid, and do hereby reaffirm the Miami convention resolution on this subject.

2. We request the immediate favorable action of the Congress and the approval of the President of the United States upon this clear-cut and single issue, without having it complicated or confused by other issues of Government finance or theories of currency with which the Legion does not intend to become involved.

3. We hereby ratify and approve the efforts of National Commander Belgrano and the national legislative committee on behalf of the Legion's bill at the last session of Congress.

I ask unanimous consent to insert a brief statement of the American Legion as to how this money will be spent by the World War veterans, which I think the American people are entitled to know. I ask unanimous consent to include that in my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. A preliminary check of figures for 40,000 questionnaires is given herewith showing what the veterans propose to do with the cash received from the adjusted-service certificates:

	Percent
Agricultural implements	6.22
Automobile	9.25
Auto truck	1.29
Battery	1.50
Tires	4.63
Build new house	4.52
Clothes for children	25.74
Suit or overcoat for self	26.00
Clothes for wife	28.50
Education, home study course	3.40
Electric or gas refrigerator	5.07
Farm	4.32
Furniture	15.85
Housefurnishings	14.51
Insurance	13.94
Invest in own business	10.46
Invest in stocks or bonds	1.29
Lot for home site	3.28
Men's shirts	11.31
Men's furnishings	13.92
Men's hats	10.03
Men's shoes	13.28
Oil or gas furnace	1.72
Paint house	12.90
Pay notes, mortgages, loans, or old bills	51.80
Purchase home	6.56
Radio	4.36
Repair house	19.16
Rugs	5.87
Start or increase savings account	10.20
All other (miscellaneous)	7.37

It will be noted from the figures that better than 50 percent of the men who will receive adjusted compensation are going to pay up old bills with it. The next thing they are going to do is to take care of the needs of their families and their homes. Thirty per cent are going to provide new clothes for their wives, 29 percent are going to get a suit or overcoat for themselves, and 28 percent will buy new clothes for their children. Approximately 21 percent are going to repair their homes and 14 percent are going to paint their houses. Seventeen percent will buy new furniture and 15 percent other housefurnishings. The tremendous stimulant that will be accorded business of all kinds throughout the United States is readily seen by perusal of the above figures.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think it is fair to say that a great percentage of the money which will be received by the veterans will be spent for serviceable things. Does the gentleman agree with that statement?

Mr. FISH. I am convinced of it.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. In that connection I think it should also be observed, and I believe the figures which will be inserted by the gentleman from New York will show, according to the estimate made by the Veterans' Administration, that only about 7 percent of the money heretofore received by the veterans on their certificates has been, as it is called, wasted or unaccounted for.

Mr. FISH. I go further than the gentleman and say that this money is adjusted-service compensation, to be paid to these veterans because they received only $1 a day during the war when laborers at home received $10 a day, and they have a right to dispose of it in any way they see fit. [Applause.] I believe it will be spent for the benefit of their families, and that most of the veterans are in debt, many are in need and unemployed, and some are actually destitute.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to listen to the concluding remarks of my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. FISH], because I feel that placing into the RECORD the manner in which the money will be spent is a decided contribution to a discussion of this bill at any stage, and particularly at the present stage. When we made provisions for the 50-percent loan, there was considerable argument advanced that the money would be wasted, and, as the gentleman from New York undoubtedly had in mind, and as my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], by his questions, had in mind, a survey of the Veterans' Bureau shows that a very small percentage of the money borrowed at that time was spent in an unwise manner. As the gentleman from Tennessee said, less than 7 percent, and as Mr. FISH said, probably less than that, of the total amount borrowed was spent unwisely. That is a remarkable record. It is a remarkable piece of evidence; it is a very sustaining piece of evidence to those of us who are going to vote for the passage of this bill, and who have fought for such legislation in the past—that the money received will be used by the veterans for purposes which are commendable. While I am speaking on that subject, only a few days ago I was talking with a businessman in Washington who had always opposed the payment of the bonus. He told me that he has changed his mind, and undoubtedly countless businessmen throughout the country have also changed their minds as a result of similar experiences. He told me that five veterans recently visited his place of business, each one of whom owned an automobile. Each one contemplated buying a new car, within their means, and they were going to turn in as a part of the purchase price, as we all do, the cars they now own.

What impressed him was that each one of these men owned a car at the present time and was contemplating buying another car, and that each and every one of them said, "When I get my bonus I intend to come back and see you." That man did not have alone in mind the fact that he was getting business, but what impressed him was that each one of these men owned a car. They were men used to the ownership of a car; they were men who intended to buy a new car which was within their means, and they were going to do so when the bonus bill passed. That man was impressed by the wise and serious manner in which those men were contemplating spending their money. That same thing exists throughout the country. Many veterans when they get their money are going to pay doctors' bills and other bills that they have contracted for themselves and for their families and buy something for their homes for the happiness of themselves and their families. Ninety-five percent of them, at least, are going to make proper expenditures of the money they receive. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] have each made a powerful and very fine contribution to the discussion of this bill today when they so properly and so ably referred to the manner in which the money will be expended.

I hope the veterans of the country, when they spend their money, when they go into stores and buy, after they have received their money, will say, "If I had not received the bonus I would not have been able to make these purchases." They will be conveying to the business men of their communities the fact that they are wisely spending their money and the fact that the businessmen of their community are receiving the benefits of the bonus which has been paid.

I am very appreciative of the remarks made by my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], and I know that my friend from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON], and my friend from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], also appreciate them. Mr. CONNERY has been a hard fighter for the veterans and the veterans will always remember him. They should also remember all their friends. I do not think the veterans should hold against any man who voted against the bonus the fact that he did so, if that man honestly exercised his judgment with a complete disregard of the rest of his record. I do not think the veterans should put themselves in the position of voting against a man because of one vote only. They should judge a man's whole record, and yet those who have fought for it should be remembered by them, whether they are Democrats or Republicans, and foremost among those who have consistently fought for the payment of the bonus and for the best interest of the veterans is our distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY]. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, upon the convening of the first session of the Seventy-third Congress the first vote I cast, on I think the first roll call, was one to grant authority to the President of the United States to take action in connection with the banking emergency, when the American banking system was in chaos. The second vote I cast at that session of Congress, and I believe the third day of the term, was a vote against what is commonly known as the nefarious economy bill that robbed many veterans. Since that time I have cast two votes for the payment of the adjusted-service certificates, and have likewise in each case cast two votes to override Presidential vetoes. For one of those votes I was denounced by a subsidized and partisan public press as a traitor. I am not ashamed of either of them, and if it were to be done over today, and if it becomes necessary tomorrow, I shall not only again vote for the payment of the adjusted-service certificates but I shall again vote to override a Presidential veto, if such veto should again be presented to this House. I voted for this payment because of two things: First, I realized, as I realize now, that it meant the payment of a just debt to a deserving class of creditors of the United States. Second, I believed then, as I believe now, that this is one of the best recovery measures that can possibly be passed by the Congress of the United States. This money will go to every nook and corner of this country where the little blue cards went in 1916 and 1917 when we were calling to the colors of the country the veterans whom we now owe and must pay what is admitted to be a legitimate past-due debt.

I agree with my colleague from Kentucky, Mr. VINSON, and with my colleague from Texas, Mr. PATMAN, and with the two gentlemen from Massachusetts, Mr. MCCORMACK and Mr. CONNERY, who have been warriors for the payment of this debt from the time it was first proposed during this administration, that they are entitled to a leading part in credit for the promotion of this legislation and for payment of these certificates in cash. I shall continue to believe that when we have paid this we have merely met an obligation that we owed to an honest creditor of the Government. [Applause.]

My votes on this question and the record of my activities have been along a line of absolute consistency. Then, if I am again charged with treason, then I say to those who charge it, if that be treason then let them make the most of it. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to unduly prolong this debate. The war veterans are not interested in debate. Everyone understands the issues involved. What the veterans want is less talk and more action by this Congress now. [Applause.]

May I say that I have consistently supported legislation to pay this just obligation of the Government from the beginning of this long fight. I have also consistently supported what is known as the Patman plan, to pay the adjusted-service certificates by issuing new money against the $10,000,000 of actual gold lying idle in the Federal Treasury. I still believe in that plan. One thing is certain, this debt must be paid either by bills or bonds.

This Congress, it seems, has decided to pay it by bonds, by the highly advertised baby-bond method.

But even though I still much prefer the Patman plan, this baby-bond plan is less objectionable than the original plan of the so-called sound-money advocates. It will pay the veterans the cold cash without a lot of red tape and delay, and undoubtedly will greatly stimulate business by placing from one to two billions of money in circulation. It will go into every nook and corner of the United States; it will save the homes of thousands of worthy veterans and permit others to meet other pressing obligations.

When the authorization bill came up in the House, January 9, and during the preliminary conferences we were told over and over again that this was only an authorization bill, and that when the measure came back to the House, Members would have an opportunity to decide what method of payment they desired. The RECORD will show that during the debate on the floor of the House, January 9, I asked the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] the following question:

> Does not the gentleman understand there has been a gentlemen's agreement between the various groups here, including the so-called leaders of this House, that those of us who favor the Patman bill will be given an opportunity somewhere down the line to express ourselves by a vote as to what particular method of payment of the bonus we prefer?

The gentleman's answer was:

> The understanding that I have is that those with whom we conferred would endeavor to obtain that for us, to the best of their ability; but in the event they are not able to obtain that, I suggest that we have a caucus, and in that caucus suggest that a rule be brought in permitting us to offer legislation on the appropriation bill along the line of the Patman bill.

Yet, in the face of that record, we find ourselves in a position where we must support the Senate bill carrying the baby-bond plan or nothing. Under the present rules of the House, those of us advocating the Patman plan and who have exhausted every possible effort to effect payment of this solemn obligation by issuing new money instead of the bond route have no possible opportunity to offer that plan at this time.

Let me say here that I was really surprised that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], who spoke a few minutes ago, should inject partisan politics into this debate. The distinguished and ambitious gentleman, however, has been barnstorming the country for the past several years discussing partisan politics so persistently that it appears impossible for him to make any kind of a speech on the floor of this House without injecting partisan politics into the debate. But all of us know that politics have no place in this discussion.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I will be glad to yield to my colleague from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the rules of the House today are such that it will not be possible for anyone to offer an amendment to this bill that suggests a different method of payment than that provided in the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct. And I might add that, for all practical purposes, it is impossible for those of us who endorse the Patman plan to express ourselves by a vote on that plan today, although this House by a record vote has demonstrated that it prefers the Patman plan to the bond method.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is aware that we are proceeding under unanimous consent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is true.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Any one person could have objected to this proceeding.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; but it would be too bad for anyone who did object. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may care to consume to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, during the discussion of the payment of the adjusted-service certificates to veterans of the World War, I have continually heard the opponents of this measure denounce those who are handling the financial policies of this administration. I believe that, for the information of the Members of the House and the country at large, there should be placed in the RECORD at this time the proportionate per capita national debt existing in three great major countries. In France the per capita debt is $717. In Great Britain it is $524. In the United States it is but $219. I say to the Members of this House, regardless of how individuals may stand upon the payment of the adjusted-service certificates, we in this country are in good condition today in comparison to the other countries.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I trust, as I believe the majority of the membership of this House trusts, that the President will approve this bill when it is sent to him.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I do not yield, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, time marches on! We are today about to do what several of us urged Congress to do in 1919 and 1920. At that time the question of additional pay to the defenders of our country was being pressed in Congress. At that time we had a Democratic administration. Mr. Wilson was in the White House. The administration was against the bonus. It was contended that sufficient money was not available to pay this additional sum to the veterans. As I recall, it was estimated at that time it would take $1,492,000,000 to give the veterans this additional pay—that is, $1 per day additional for service in this country and $1.10 per day additional for service overseas.

I introduced a bill providing for this additional pay to the veterans and for the Government to issue bonds to them. This would enable those who needed it to get their pay in cash immediately and those who did not want the money could hold the bonds as an investment. As I now recall a few others, Republicans and Democrats, introduced similar bills. This is the very thing we are doing today in adopting the Senate amendment to the soldiers' bonus bill that we passed in the House some days ago.

This Senate amendment proposes that bonds be issued to each veteran for the full amount of the adjusted pay now due him. Those who desire can cash these bonds at any post office, and, of course, those who do not need the cash can hold their bonds until 1945, the bonds paying 3-percent interest.

I would not attempt to take away from any Member of this House any credit that may be due to him, either Republican or Democrat, for the service he has rendered in bringing about this legislation. In the early part of this fight, from 1919 up to and including 1924, many of the outstanding leaders on the Democratic side of the House were against the bonus and made vigorous fights against it, and on the other hand there were a number of distinguished Members on the Republican side who opposed the soldiers' bonus. I wish to congratulate Chairman DOUGHTON and my distinguished colleagues from Kentucky, Mr. VINSON, and Mr. JENKINS, from Ohio, and many others on the Ways and Means Committee and in the House here who have pushed this fight to a successful conclusion.

If, in 1919, Congress had issued bonds as it is proposed to do today, $1,492,000,000 would have paid the debt; but we put it off and put it off for nearly 17 years, and we are now confronted with the same situation, but with a large increase in the amount of bonds necessary to pay the obligation.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. Is it not a fact that Congress found several billions to pay munitions makers and the railroads after the war?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes; and that is what irked the defenders of our country. We found the money to pay the war contractors, the railroads, and others, but we could not find the additional $1 per day to pay the defenders of our country.

I believed the other day when I made a speech in favor of this measure that it would be the last; but it is now necessary to act on the Senate amendment, and it is a pleasure to me to raise my voice again in behalf of this just cause. The bonus bill with the Senate amendment as now before us, as I understand, has the sincere approval and the earnest support of the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the Disabled American Veterans. It is very gratifying indeed to all of the friends and supporters of this legislation to see these three great World War veterans' organizations fighting shoulder to shoulder in this great cause, as they did in defense of our country.

Let us indulge the hope that President Roosevelt will not veto this bill, as he did the bill in the last Congress. This proposal is right. I was for it in 1919, I have been for it ever since, and I am for it today, and will welcome an opportunity to vote to override the President's veto if he should so act.

I thank you for your patient hearing. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. BURNHAM].

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. Speaker, I wish to read the following short letter from Mr. John E. Staley, commander of the Veterans' Prosperity Organization, with national headquarters in Los Angeles, Calif.:

VETERANS' PROSPERITY ORGANIZATION,
LOS ANGELES, CALIF., January 20, 1936.

Hon. GEORGE BURNHAM,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: On the occasion of the loan legislation affecting adjusted-compensation certificates in 1931 considerable difficulty was experienced by the many veterans in securing application blanks, with the result that in Los Angeles these were printed, in large part, by the Los Angeles Examiner and given to the applying veterans.

The pending legislation will require the printing of more than 40,000,000 bonds, which includes the bonds to be issued directly to the veteran and the Treasury financing debentures.

Necessarily considerable accounting in the computation of interest between the period of the last loan by the veteran and the date of interest cessation will incur the need of expert services, requiring the enlargement of personnel in the Veterans' Administration and other departments concerned. If civil-service requirements cannot be relaxed to permit of this work being speedily accomplished, special legislation should be enacted.

Veterans' Administration offices in the various cities should provide a corps of notaries public to expeditiously acknowledge the veterans' applications.

These suggestions are prompted by extensive experience in the matter, and I hope that you see fit to give them your consideration.

Respectfully,

JOHN E. STALEY.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT] such time as he may desire.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, the payment of the adjusted-service certificates will prove of tremendous importance to the city of Detroit, the home of the automotive industry, and to the many employees engaged in this highly technicalized activity. There is no doubt that a very proper proportion of the huge fund released under this bill—becoming a law—will find its way into various channels of trade. And who in America today would divorce a just proportion of this sum from being spent for the manufactured products of the automotive industry? Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I correctly stated a dynamic city's position in my opening remark—that the payment of the adjusted certificates will prove of tremendous importance to the workers in the automotive industry at Detroit; the automotive industry whose glorious ascent to supremacy diminishes, so to speak, the story of the Arabian Nights; the automotive industry captained by men of forethought, men of genius, men of action; the automotive industry that has climbed to a pinnacle of accomplishment second to none; the automotive industry that has brought to the traveling public the best and the most economical transportation of the age; the automotive industry that has done things for business and agriculture, bringing of necessity into being the existence of the good road. Yes; Mr. Speaker, the automotive industry awakened and rejuvenated a great city, for from every nook and corner of the land came those mechanically inclined geniuses whose combined effort gives you the perfect automobile of today. Over $2,000,000,000 will be released by this bill or, taking it closer to home, Wayne County's share is $29,998,906.70. So, to those desiring to improve their present mode of transportation, I recommend not only to the veterans receiving their long-cherished, so-called bonus, but even to those Members of this body within the hearing of my voice, the advantages to be gained and the comfort to be acquired and the joy to be instilled by the touch of the wheel of Detroit's new and glorious automobiles. Truly they are the wings of America!

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, we are nearing the time when the last vote will be taken on the question of payment of the adjusted-service certificates. I hope the resolution I have presented today will be overwhelmingly, if not unanimously, adopted.

There is very little difference between the bill passed by the House some days ago, the Vinson-McCormack-Patman bill, and the Senate amendment of the House bill. They both provide for the veterans getting their money, and that is what we are driving at; that is what we are anxious to do.

The bill as passed by the Senate appears to be satisfactory to those who represent the soldiers, especially the organizations. The American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the Disabled American Veterans all say this bill is satisfactory to the veterans; and it is, in my judgment, also fair to the Government.

It is maintained by some that it is more than the original contract. Perhaps this is true so far as some interest is concerned; but, in my judgment, it is no more than the original contract should have been. The soldiers were compelled to accept this settlement. They never have been satisfied with it. They now say they will be satisfied with the settlement proposed in the bill under consideration.

It is said by others that this is a hard time for the Government to pay this bonus; and it is, with the many demands, extra demands upon our Government for relief and recovery purposes. We all realize that it is a hard time for the Government to meet this obligation; but, Mr. Speaker, it is much harder for the American veterans in distress to go without this assistance than it is for the Government to pay it at this time; and I hope this resolution will be overwhelmingly adopted.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. There is no provision in the Senate amendment which confers any benefit on the veterans for retaining their present adjusted-service certificates.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Not for retaining them, but if they hold the bonds provided in this bill, they will draw 3-percent interest.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk called the roll; and there were—yeas 346, nays 59, answered "present" 1, not voting 25, as follows:

[Roll No. 9]

YEAS—346

Adair	Daly	Hildebrandt	Miller
Allen	Darrow	Hill, Ala.	Mitchell, Ill.
Amlie	Deen	Hill, Knute	Mitchell, Tenn.
Andresen	Delaney	Hill, Samuel B.	Monaghan
Arends	Dempsey	Hoffman	Moran
Ashbrook	DeRouen	Holmes	Moritz
Ayers	Dickstein	Hook	Mott
Bacharach	Dies	Hope	Murdock
Bankhead	Dietrich	Houston	Nelson
Barden	Dingell	Huil	Nichols
Barry	Dirksen	Imhoff	Norton
Beam	Disney	Jacobsen	O'Brien
Beiter	Ditter	Jenckes, Ind.	O'Connell
Bell	Dondero	Jenkins, Ohio	O'Connor
Berlin	Dorsey	Johnson, Okla.	O'Leary
Binderup	Doughton	Johnson, Tex.	O'Malley
Blackney	Doutrich	Johnson, W. Va.	Owen
Blanton	Doxey	Jones	Palmisano
Bloom	Driscoll	Kahn	Parks
Boehne	Driver	Keller	Parsons
Boileau	Duncan	Kelly	Patterson
Boland	Dunn, Miss.	Kennedy, Md.	Patton
Boykin	Dunn, Pa.	Kennedy, N. Y.	Pearson
Boylan	Eagle	Kenney	Peterson, Fla.
Brennan	Eckert	Kerr	Peterson, Ga.
Brewster	Edmiston	Kinser	Pettengill
Brooks	Eicher	Kleberg	Pfeifer
Brown, Ga.	Ekwall	Kloeb	Pierce
Brown, Mich.	Ellenbogen	Kniffin	Pittenger
Buck	Engel	Knutson	Polk
Buckbee	Englebright	Kocialkowski	Powers
Buckler, Minn.	Evans	Kopplemann	Quinn
Buckley, N. Y.	Faddis	Kramer	Rabaut
Bulwinkle	Farley	Kvale	Ramsay
Burdick	Fenerty	Lambertson	Ramspeck
Burnham	Ferguson	Lambeth	Randolph
Caldwell	Fiesinger	Lamneck	Rankin
Cannon, Mo.	Fish	Larrabee	Ransley
Cannon, Wis.	Fitzpatrick	Lea, Calif.	Rayburn
Carlson	Fletcher	Lee, Okla.	Reece
Carmichael	Focht	Lemke	Reed, Ill.
Carpenter	Ford, Miss.	Lesinski	Reed, N. Y.
Carter	Frey	Lord	Reilly
Cartwright	Fuller	Lucas	Richards
Cary	Fulmer	Luckey	Richardson
Casey	Gambrill	Ludlow	Risk
Castellow	Gasque	Lundeen	Robinson, Utah
Celler	Gassaway	McAndrews	Robsion, Ky.
Chandler	Gavagan	McClellan	Rogers, N. H.
Chapman	Gearhart	McCormack	Rogers, Okla.
Church	Gilchrist	McGehee	Romjue
Clark, Idaho	Gildea	McGrath	Rudd
Clark, N. C.	Gillette	McGroarty	Ryan
Cochran	Gingery	McKeough	Sabath
Coffee	Goldsborough	McLaughlin	Sadowski
Colden	Granfield	McLeod	Sanders, Tex.
Cole, Md.	Gray, Ind.	McMillan	Sauthoff
Collins	Gray, Pa.	McReynolds	Schaefer
Colmer	Green	McSwain	Schneider, Wis.
Connery	Greenway	Maas	Schuetz
Cooley	Greenwood	Mahon	Schulte
Cooper, Ohio	Greever	Main	Scott
Cooper, Tenn.	Gregory	Mansfield	Scrugham
Costello	Griswold	Marcantonio	Sears
Cravens	Guyer	Marshall	Secrest
Crawford	Gwynne	Martin, Colo.	Seger
Creal	Haines	Martin, Mass.	Shanley
Crosby	Halleck	Mason	Shannon
Cross, Tex.	Hamlin	Massingale	Short
Crosser, Ohio	Hancock, N. C.	Maverick	Sirovich
Crowe	Hart	May	Smith, Conn.
Crowther	Harter	Mead	Smith, Wash.
Cullen	Healey	Meeks	Smith, W. Va.
Cummings	Hess	Merritt, N. Y.	Snyder, Pa.
Curley	Higgins, Mass.	Michener	Somers, N. Y.

South	Thomas	Wallgren	Wilson, Pa.
Spence	Thomason	Walter	Withrow
Stack	Thompson	Warren	Wolcott
Starnes	Thurston	Wearin	Wolfenden
Steagall	Tolan	Weaver	Wolverton
Stefan	Tonry	Welch	Wood
Stubbs	Turner	Werner	Woodruff
Sutphin	Turpin	West	Young
Sweeney	Umstead	Whelchel	Zimmerman
Taylor, Colo.	Underwood	White	The Speaker
Taylor, S. C.	Vinson, Ga.	Wilcox
Taylor, Tenn.	Vinson, Ky.	Williams

NAYS—59

Andrew, Mass.	Drewry	Lewis, Md.	Sisson
Andrews, N. Y.	Duffy, N. Y.	McLean	Smith, Va.
Bacon	Eaton	Mapes	Snell
Biermann	Ford, Calif.	Merritt, Conn.	Sumners, Tex.
Bland	Gifford	Millard	Taber
Bolton	Goodwin	Montague	Tarver
Burch	Hancock, N. Y.	O'Day	Terry
Cavicchia	Hartley	O'Neal	Tinkham
Christianson	Higgins, Conn.	Perkins	Tobey
Claiborne	Hobbs	Peyser	Treadway
Cole, N. Y.	Hollister	Plumley	Utterback
Cox	Huddleston	Rich	Whittington
Culkin	Lanham	Robertson	Wigglesworth
Darden	Lehlbach	Rogers, Mass.	Woodrum
Dobbins	Lewis, Colo.	Russell

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1

Wadsworth

NOT VOTING—25

Buchanan	Flannagan	Maloney	Sullivan
Citron	Gehrmann	Montet	Thom
Corning	Harlan	Oliver	Wilson, La.
Dear	Hennings	Patman	Zioncheck
Dockweiler	Hoeppel	Sanders, La.
Duffey, Ohio	Kee	Sandlin
Fernandez	McFarlane	Stewart

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. BYRNS, and he voted "aye."

So the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Patman (for) with Mr. Wadsworth (against).
Mr. McFarlane (for) with Mr. Corning (against).

General pairs:

Mr. Oliver with Mr. Stewart.
Mr. Sandlin with Mr. Thom.
Mr. Harlan with Mr. Dear.
Mr. Montet with Mr. Duffey of Ohio.
Mr. Wilson of Louisiana with Mr. Zioncheck.
Mr. Hennings with Mr. Maloney.
Mr. Dockweiler with Mr. Sanders of Louisiana.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I voted "nay" on this resolution; however, I have a pair with the gentleman from Texas, Mr. PATMAN, who is unavoidably detained. It is understood, of course, that if the gentleman from Texas, Mr. PATMAN, were present he would have voted "yea" on this resolution. I must therefore withdraw my vote of "nay" and answer "present."

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from New York, Mr. SULLIVAN, is ill at his home, and therefore unavoidably absent. However, he wishes me to state to the Members of the House that if present he would have voted "yea" on this resolution.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. MCFARLANE, is unavoidably absent on account of important business. He has always voted for this measure, and if present today he would have voted "yea." However, he does have a pair with the gentleman from New York, Mr. CORNING.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. GEHRMANN, is unavoidably absent. He has been a consistent supporter of this legislation. He asked me to announce that if present he would have voted "yea" on this resolution.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Louisiana, Mr. FERNANDEZ, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would have voted "yea."

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. PATMAN, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would have voted "yea" on the resolution.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. KEE, is absent on account of illness. If present, he would have voted "yea."

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. CITRON, is detained at home unavoidably on account of illness. If present, he would have voted "yea" on this resolution.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. FLANNAGAN, is unavoidably absent. He has wired me to say that if present he would have voted "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. DOUGHTON, a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the measure just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES A PAST-DUE DEBT

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Speaker, the bonus question should be as free from politics as American neutrality. It involves all of America and America's honor. Both sides of the aisle should observe it that way. Before I ever dreamed of entering Congress I participated in the adjusted-compensation fight as a member in the ranks of the American Legion. The same arguments were advanced then as now, for the case of the veteran has not changed. The justice of his claim has not altered. Oratory will not satisfy the man who wore the khaki or Navy blue in 1917–19. A bill collector cannot be turned away by the description of a sunset or a funny story. He wants pay. After many a weary battle we once more urge immediate payment, and the hour for that accomplishment seems imminent. We may clothe the pro-bonus arguments in slightly varying verbiage, but there are just so many words in the English language and they have almost all been laid end on end in annual array by bonus advocates. When reduced to lowest terms, they say one simple thing: "The adjusted-compensation certificates represent a past-due debt. Pay it."

The manufacturer of World War equipment has long since banked his plenteous profits of 1917–19 days. His lowliest employee has probably spent the generous bonus granted to reduce surtaxes of the employer and received for doing an ordinary day's work at high salary, amid no discomforts or inconveniences. Meanwhile the ex-service man has waited patiently for an adjustment that would at least place a value on his war services equal to that given to noncombatant and unskilled laborers of the war period, who toiled at home. That is what the adjusted-compensation certificates attempted to balance. Some instances of inequalities that never could be liquidated by mere money were cited in my address on this same subject during the last session of this Seventy-fourth Congress. The payment of this past debt has been deferred while the need of the creditor has become immediate. The manufacturer, his employees, and even civilian Government workers have been paid their bonuses and high war salaries, but the soldier still holds an I O U, 17 years after the debt was contracted. In every large family there is apt to be a less demanding member who always is served the neck of the chicken. For 17 long years the ex-service man has been getting the neck, while the war contractor and his employees have had early and generous access to the white meat.

I like to think of our early battles to gain our deserved adjusted compensation. That was before I ever thought of becoming a congressional candidate, for the simple justice of our claim was all that caused me to fare forth. We were arrayed against powerful adversaries. However, we fought with some of the teamwork that service life had taught us but a few years previous. Our opponents were, in fact, if not in name, the Liberty Leaguers of the early 1920's and many of them have survived to fight us up to this last stand and victory. Then, as now, they were alined against any measure which caused them to be taxed. They were quite willing to accumulate huge profits from war but were staunchly opposed to any but regular service pay to the combatant who risked his life. Eugene Grace, of Bethlehem Steel, felt smug and contented with his bonus of several million dollars, but a thousand-dollar adjustment to a man who had cut through the barbed wire of no man's land should be considered as ruinous to America and American principles. Grace and his cohorts had had the white meat so long that they believed they were created to eat white meat and the neck was passed on to the soldier. After all, he should be content with his ideals. Andrew W. Mellon and a number of large and reactionary corporations were the Liberty Leaguers of this period when we began our fight for the bonus. "Andy" and his ilk are the Liberty Leaguers of today.

Once a Liberty Leaguer always a Liberty Leaguer seems to be their motto. The same crowd that "ganged up" on us in the early days of our bonus fight are now lining up against President Roosevelt, and for the same reason. If they cannot get special privilege, they will spend millions to prevent the everyday American from getting what rightfully belongs to him. Today they prate about the Constitution; then they spoke of the bonus ruining America. Andy Mellon had muscled his way into that curious Cabinet of President Harding; and while Colonel Forbes was creating the first odor that became a national stench before Harding's death, Mr. Mellon was being spoken of for his resemblance to Alexander Hamilton—mostly by people unfamiliar with the biography of the versatile first Secretary of the Treasury. These were days when we had not only to fight for justice in the bonus issue; we were combating corruption within the Bureau which was charged with taking care of our disabled. While the Ohio gang was writing its malodorous record of graft, Andy Mellon was directing the policy of Mr. Harding on the bonus question. He was the tin god of big business, for it felt that the adjusted compensation could be averted as long as the modern Hamilton held office.

Mellon constantly implied ruin if the bonus were paid. The Liberty Leaguers of that day decided to bear down on their employees just as they will do this fall. In the 1920's they coerced their employees into writing their Congressmen, and even supplied the sample letters to guide their workers in the style of communication for address to the legislators. They were to bring these into the factory or office, unsealed, for the boss to check and mail—or else. Do I hear you say that this sounds curiously similar to the plan the holding companies employed last summer? Well, there is something in the thought processes of a Liberty Leaguer that makes him believe he can get away with murder as far as the public is concerned. Money has always done anything he asked it to do. Hire a few high-priced executives like Jouett Shouse and several sly publicity men—and presto. But it did not work where the bonus was concerned, and it will not work next fall. John W. Citizen is a pretty smart bird, regardless of what the Liberty Leaguers think of him. When it came to our early bonus fight, we had a cheap little paper called the American Legion Weekly. It came in common newspaper stock and it was not much for looks. But it showed up Mellon, the Hamiltonian, in his true colors. I do not know where or how it got its facts—and who cares?—but it disclosed that Andy was financing a fake soldier organization, opposed to the bonus.

The correspondence it reported and the copies of exhibits it displayed were never disclaimed to my knowledge by the ruler of three Presidents. He maintained a reserved and dignified silence after they appeared in the cheap little sheet that went to every Legionnaire weekly. Andy may have ignored the articles but Congress did not. Despite the loaded poll of the Literary Digest, "Do you vote for the bonus or tax reduction?" the bonus was passed over the Coolidge veto. We had won our fight over the arrayed money powers because we had right and the public on our side. And all the trick ballots of the Digest could not alter the real verdict. America, through its duly elected representatives had acknowledged the bonus debt, Andy, the Liberty Leaguers, and the Literary Digest, notwithstanding. But the ex-service man had yielded some ground along the way. The matter of payment was not what the veteran had in mind. His certificate was an endowment policy, payable in 1945. It was something of a compromise in his mind but then he could struggle along until the pay-off. However, he reckoned not with the Hoover panic and the slow painful pull out of the worst depression of our time. Job went first and then came savings and the regular insurance policy. Finally, as any creditor would, the veteran cried: "Pay me now while my need is great, I may not be here in 1945." In this latter statement he is more accurate than he knows, for veterans are dying at a much higher rate than non-veterans. Arlington, the little country church yards, and the urban cemeteries are testimony to the fact that a large portion of veterandom will have heeded the last call before the year designated on the adjusted-compensation certificates. Their present death rate will probably show even a greater increase within the next 5 years. It may not have been manifest in the immediate post-war days but the World War took something out of the man that cannot be replenished.

While "the greatest Secretary of the Treasury since Alexander Hamilton" was dictator of American finance it was enough to wrest a compromise victory over the Coolidge veto. Seven months after the Hoover accession, America was on the skids, and many veterans were jobless and living off what accumulations they were able to lay up. Business recovery was always around the corner, and veterans and nonveterans alike were straining their eyesight looking for it. Meanwhile Pollyanna utterances emanated from the Hoover study and the offices of Cabinet members. They failed to inspire confidence among the citizenry, so this was not a propitious time for veterans to present their bill. Hoover's financial policy was to deflate to the limit if America was ruined in the process. He could not find the remedy, so he had a way of ascribing our difficulties to Nature and Europe and—well to everything but the 12 years of Republican rule, including Hoover. Clearly, he did not know what it was all about and how to set it right. So there was little chance to prime the pump in the Hoover days, for he believed utterly in inserting Government funds at the top, as with the Dawes bank in Chicago.

Now, we are definitely through with the "let us talk ourselves into prosperity" days. Look at the trade indexes and read the stock quotations in the daily papers. There is no skyrocketing of prices, but the trend is unmistakably upward. Better still, ask the telephone repair man, the grocer, the office-specialty man, and others: "How is business?" Depression has taught them to be conservative, but you will get a good report. Because we are on our way out. Luxury industries are an excellent barometer. You do not have to buy a radio, for instance. It is a luxury.

Well, Philco Radio & Television Corporation, in the heart of my district, has greatly increased its number of workers and its pay roll in dollars since March 1933. Every employee is a member of the radio and television union, which is associated with the A. F. of L. If radio sales are on the increase, staples must be. Other industries, large and small, are on the upswing, some of them for the first time in 6 long years. More and greater taxable incomes will be reported this year. So let us do what any family does as it emerges from debt. Let us pay first the creditor who has waited longest. He is the ex-service man.

Revaluation of gold and other deflation arresting measures of the New Deal have returned the confidence of a sorely afflicted Nation. Our hopes and our accomplishments are turning upward. It is now possible to pay the bonus, and I believe this will be done.

Some churches in my district have made a great ceremony of burning the mortgage which encumbered their house of worship. The members have heard the clergyman read out each month by what sum they have gradually reduced the indebtedness on their edifice. Month after month they learn of the slowly but constantly diminishing amount due and no wonder they look with anticipation to the day when the debt on their church property will be cleared. Finally the great day arrives. The members and their families congregate around the specially prepared pyre and amid much rejoicing the evidence of indebtedness is thrust into the flames. The clergyman must heave a sigh of relief that he does not have to henceforth detail the amounts due and the congregation is no less relieved because the mortgage problem is over with. That is how America will feel when the perennial bonus discussion is history. The citizen will heave a great sigh and relax. In fact a public burning of the adjusted-compensation certificates might be a good idea. The annual agitation for payment will at last be ended.

I could not forego mentioning some of those early days in the bonus fight. We have seen the various agencies of the immediate post-war days merged into the Veterans' Bureau and later, another consolidation which gave us the Veterans' Administration. If we do not get perfection now, we at least have nothing of the corruption that marked the Harding days when Forbes and his buddies lined their pockets while many a veteran died without benefit of hospitalization. We have met and defeated Mellon and his assortment of Liberty Leaguers. We have fought the good fight for simple justice. They have been defeated on the bonus issue but they will, in one guise or another, organize themselves to secure the special privilege which they believe to be their divine right. A Du Pont contributes $128,000 in 1 year to save the dear old Constitution. In the 1920's they were saving America from ruin through their opposition to bonus legislation. We found that they were wrong then and they are no more right now.

The American public presents them with a defeat on the bonus. Over two Republican vetoes, the debt was finally acknowledged. It is now 17 years past due and we can pay. Let's do it.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ST. CLAIR RIVER AT PORT HURON, MICH.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the action in the House on last Monday in connection with the passage of the bill (S. 1788) authorizing the State of Michigan to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the St. Clair River at or near Port Huron, Mich., and to acquire other transportation facilities between said State and Canada be vacated, and that further action in reference to this bill be indefinitely postponed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the reason?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman make some explanation?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a similar bill was introduced in the Senate, being the companion to this bill introduced by me in the House. It involves the construction of a bridge over the St. Clair River at Port Huron, Mich.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Has the gentleman taken this up with the majority members of the committee?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Not as yet. I may say to the gentleman that because of the opposition of certain Members to bridge bills last year, we passed an omnibus bill. This bill was included in the omnibus measure, but was inadvertently left on the calendar and passed last Monday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON INSULAR AFFAIRS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DOUGHTON submits the following resolution:

Resolved, That CAROLINE O'DAY, of New York, be, and is hereby, elected a member of the standing committee of the House on Insular Affairs.

The resolution was agreed to.

GEORGE WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on February 22, next, immediately after the reading of the Journal and disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCLEAN] may be given time to read Washington's Farewell Address.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

LIBERTY AND LAW

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the South Bend (Ind.) Tribune I wrote the following "guest editorial" on Liberty and Law, which appeared in their issue of January 5, 1936:

Law is a restraint against liberty. In logic, therefore, the two cannot exist at the same time. But life, which is so much wiser than logic, knows that without law there can be no liberty; that law wisely written enlarges the liberty of John Citizen by restraining Bill Sykes from destroying that liberty. I do not like the expression "liberty under law." It implies that law is superior to liberty. On the contrary, liberty is the end, and law is only a means to that end. Law is valuable only insofar as it guarantees the equal liberty which is the right of all men.

The state is only a ladder by which man may climb from the jungle to the plateau of civilization and there pursue his happiness on equal terms with his fellows. Worship of the state as an end in itself is always dangerous. It assumes that the state always acts with Godlike benevolence. All history disproves that assumption. The "invisible government" throughout the centuries and under every form of law—monarchy, feudalism, democracy, or dictatorship—has always been at work to use the processes of lawmaking to give Bill Sykes the chief place at the feast of life. John Citizen should carefully scrutinize the state. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty", the only price.

On the other hand, history records its purple pages when government under inspired leadership has served the general welfare as against the privilege of the few. Government can be a great agency for good.

The exact boundary between liberty and law has never been drawn and never can be drawn. It must be moved to right or left as civilization develops. The law is a traffic officer at the crossroads of life. In a tiny hamlet we do not need the traffic officer. In a great city we do. We surrender a part of our liberty to pass and repass at will. But all others yield a like freedom. The result is that you and they have actually gained by the exchange. By obeying the officer we all have a greater freedom of movement than before; traffic jams are avoided. In such case control of liberty increases liberty.

This is the yardstick by which we should measure all legislation. Does it enlarge the liberty and equalize the right of all citizens to travel on life's highway? Does it keep the gates of opportunity open to all men? If it does, welcome it regardless of its name or form. But do not under the name of law ask a privilege for yourself which you are not willing to grant to your fellows. That is treason to democracy. If persisted in, it may mean the end of democracy.

Our objective under the ceaseless flux of human destiny is to draw that fine line between that degree of liberty without which law is tyranny and that degree of law without which liberty is anarchy.

It is a hard task. Government by the people, busy as they are with the daily round, is at once the most precious and the most difficult of all governments.

But because it is your Government assume responsibility for it. Do not rely alone on law, Government, Congress, the courts, or the Constitution to protect your liberty.

The aim of democracy is the economic and political application of the Golden Rule. It is your inheritance from a great and blood-stained past. It is your legacy from the fathers. To guard and bequeath it to your children is your privilege and job.

THE POWER OF THE SUPREME COURT TO DECLARE ACTS OF CONGRESS VOID—THE POWER TO INTERPRET THE CONSTITUTION IS THE POWER TO MAKE THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. RAMSAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSAY. Mr. Speaker, it is claimed by those who support the theory of court determination of acts of Congress that those who oppose such application of power are opposed to the Constitution and seek to destroy our courts of justice.

To my mind, this is a gratuitous insult to a great mass of splendid lawyers and students of our jurisprudence, who assert that the court's duty is to interpret the law and not seek to form the law by the veto of legislation, because the power to interpret the Constitution is the power to make the Constitution.

Speaking for myself, I not only respect but revere our splendid courts, who have done so much to aid the great cause of liberty and freedom of the American people.

I realize that in a great republic like ours that the confidence of the people in their courts and their laws reposes the sure and certain assurance of the perpetuity of our institutions.

Since the foundation of the great American Republic there have been two lines of thought uppermost in the minds of American statesmen.

Did the fathers of our country have in mind the general welfare of the whole people when writing the Constitution, or did they have in mind the restriction of the general welfare whenever this great motive would conflict with the right to own or control property?

The founders of my political party and faith claim that the "preamble" of the Constitution meant what it said, and that all forms and action of government should be diverted and used to promote the general welfare of the people. Therefore they held that the judiciary should have no part in declaring the kind and character of laws Congress should enact, nor should the courts have any right, power, or privilege to declare any act or acts of Congress void.

Those opposed to this view of government claim that the preamble of the Constitution meant nothing and could not be looked to in deciding upon the acts of Congress, and unless specifically authorized by the Constitution, Congress has no power to legislate.

If the Supreme Court had been so careful in marking out its powers to so adjudicate, under specific authorization, under the Constitution, this conflict would never have occurred, because the Constitution in none of its provisions authorizes the courts to hold any acts of Congress void and unconstitutional.

Today we are, in the final analysis, governed by a theory of government that was supposed to have died with the Federalist Party, but we now feel the dead and withered hand of Alexander Hamilton directing through our Supreme Court the policies of every administration, regardless of which political party may be in power.

The decision of the Court in the Marbury case was the first declaration of the right of the Supreme Court to declare acts of Congress void. This decision was the most brazen judicial announcement of a political faith ever made by any body of men in this country. This opinion merely set forth the principles of federalism as announced by Hamilton. It was an obiter dictum opinion, because the Court first announced it did not have jurisdiction, then went on to say what the Court would have decided, if it had jurisdiction. Upon this opinion, rendered without authority or citation, the Court has built up its theory of vetoing and outlawing acts of Congress, thereby placing itself in the position of dictating the political policies of this country. Such decisions of our courts are mere political opinions and not judicial decisions, and are wholly unauthorized by the Constitution, laws, and traditions of our form of government.

When we realize that no court in Great Britain has dared declare any act of Parliament unconstitutional in the past 200 years, and that neither France, Belgium, Germany, nor Italy have any court empowered to set aside the laws of their Parliament, we stand aghast at it all, and as we realize that every court in America, even every justice of the peace, can set aside the acts of Congress and declare the political course our political parties must pursue, we shudder and wonder what the outcome will be.

How long will the American people permit the courts of America to defeat the expressed will and intent of the people of this country by avoiding and destroying the laws that people are demanding? By a decision of 5 to 4 will they continue to permit this Court to deny their Legislature the right to correct the evils and abuses of the ownership of property that have for the past 50 years dictated the course of legislation at the expense of human welfare? The courts apparently will not or cannot recognize the changing social needs of the United States.

To determine whether or not those of us who deny the power of the Court to nullify acts of Congress are radical and opposed to the Constitution, let us, for a moment, review the expressions of our great American statesmen of the past.

The Constitutional Convention held in 1787 three times refused to adopt a resolution that would have granted to the Supreme Court the right to declare acts of Congress void or unconstitutional. (See Reports of Federal Convention, by James Madison, pp. 51, 406–407, and 475.) The last statement on this subject in said record, at page 475, written by Madison himself, reads:

> It was generally supposed that the jurisdiction given (Supreme Court) was constructively limited to cases of a judicial nature.

It was further argued by Madison and others that the Constitution did not grant the right to such Court to declare acts of Congress void. In discussing this question, James Madison said:

> I beg to know upon what principle it can be contended that any one department draws from the Constitution greater powers than another in marking out the limits of the powers of the several departments. Nothing has yet been offered to invalidate the doctrine that the meaning of the Constitution may as well be ascertained by the legislative as by the judicial authority.

Thomas Jefferson, in writing to Mrs. Adams on September 11, 1804, wrote:

> The opinion which gives to the judges the right to decide what laws are constitutional and what not, not only for themselves in their own sphere of action but for the legislature and executive also in their spheres, would make the judiciary a despotic branch.

In a letter written by Jefferson to Mr. Johnson on June 12, 1823, discussing this same question, he stated:

> There must be an ultimate arbiter somewhere. True there must; but does that prove it is either the Congress or the Supreme Court? The ultimate arbiter is the people of the Union, assembled by their deputies in convention at the call of Congress or of two-thirds of the States.

Charles Pinckney, one of the signers of the Constitution, says in discussing this subject:

> On no subject am I more convinced that it is an unsafe and dangerous doctrine in a republic ever to suppose that a judge ought to possess the right of questioning or deciding upon the constitutionality of laws or any act of legislature. It is placing the opinion of an individual, or of two or three, above that of both branches of Congress, a doctrine which is not warranted by the Constitution, and will not, I hope, long have any advocates in this country.

President Jackson, in discussing McCullough against Maryland and of Osborn against United States Bank, in a message to Congress said:

> The Congress, the Executive, and the Court must each for itself be guided by its own opinion of the Constitution. Each public officer who takes an oath to support the Constitution swears he will support it as he understands it and not as it is understood by others.

It is as much the duty of the House of Representatives or the Senate and of the President to decide upon the constitutionality of any bill or resolution which may be presented to them for passage or approval as it is of the Supreme Court when it may be brought before them for judicial decision. The opinion of the Judges has no more authority over Congress than the opinion of Congress has over the Judges. The authority of the Supreme Court must not, therefore, be permitted to control the Congress or the Executives when acting in their legislative capacities.

Abraham Lincoln, in his first inaugural address as President of the United States, said:

> The candid citizen must confess that if the policy of the Government, upon vital questions affecting the whole people, is to be irrevocably fixed by decisions of the Supreme Court the instant they are made, the people will have ceased to be their own rulers, having to that extent practically resigned their Government into the hands of that eminent tribunal.

Justice Clark, of the Supreme Court, in discussing this question in the Ninth American Bar Association Journal, October 1923, page 691, said:

> It is no new suggestion that if the Court would give real and sympathetic effect to this rule by declining to hold a statute unconstitutional whenever several of the Justices conclude that it is valid—by conceding that two or more being of such opinion in any case must necessarily raise a "rational doubt"—an end would be made of five to four constitutional decisions, and great benefit would result to our country and to the Court. To voluntarily impose upon itself such a restraint as this would add greatly to the confidence of the people in the Court and would very certainly increase its power for high service to the country. Anyone at all acquainted with the temper of the people in this grave matter must fear if the rule is not observed in some such manner a greater restraint may be imposed upon the Court by Congress or by the people, probably to the serious detriment of the Nation.

Of course, I am aware that the courts and many in the legal profession contend that the courts have an inherent right to declare acts of the legislative branch of the Government void as a professional dogma or a matter of faith rather than reason. But may I not observe that while this right in question has long been claimed by the judiciary, no judge has ventured to discuss it, except Chief Justice Marshall in the Marberry case, and if the argument of such a distinguished jurist is found to be inconclusive and inconvincing, it must be attributed to the weakness of his position and not to his ability.

The Constitution is a collection of fundamental laws, not to be departed from in practice, nor altered by judicial decisions. Therefore, if the courts assert this right, instead of resting on the claim that it has been universally assumed by the American courts, they ought to be prepared to maintain it on the principles of the Constitution.

I, therefore, maintain that in this country the powers of the judiciary are divisible into those that are political and those that are civil.

The political powers of the judiciary are extraordinary and are derived from certain peculiar provisions in the Constitution, from the common fountain of all political power.

On the other hand, its civil powers are its ordinary powers, existing independently of any grant in the Constitution. But where government exists by virtue of a written constitution, the judiciary does not derive from that circumstance any other than its ordinary and appropriate powers.

Our judiciary is constructed upon the principles of the common law. In adopting the common law, we take it with just such powers and capacities incident to it, at the common law, except where there have been express changes made by our Constitution and enacted law. With us, the people, through their Constitution, have seen fit to clothe Congress with sovereignty and power, to pass and enact laws, and denied this right to other branches of the Government.

It must be conceded, then, that the ordinary and essential powers of the judiciary do not extend to the annulling of an act of Congress. Nor does it follow, because the Constitution did not invest this power in any department of our Government, that it belongs to the judiciary, and I take it that this power could not rest in the judiciary without producing a direct authority for it in the Constitution, either in terms or by the strongest implication from the nature of our Government, without which this power must be considered as reserved for the immediate use of the people.

The Constitution contains no practical rules for the administration of law by the courts, these being furnished by the acts of ordinary legislation enacted by Congress, who are exclusively, with the President, the representatives of the people.

The Constitution and the right of Congress to pass a certain act may be in collision, but is that a legitimate subject for judicial determination? If it is, the judiciary must be a peculiar organ to revise the proceedings of Congress and to correct its mistakes. And where, oh where, are we to look for this proud prerogative in the Constitution?

Viewing it from the other angle, what would be thought of an act of Congress declaring that the Supreme Court had put the wrong construction on the Constitution in the N. R. A. case, and that the judgment ought to be reversed?

I can hear now the howls of usurpation of judicial power.

The passage of an act of Congress is an act of sovereignty, and sovereignty and legislative power are said by Blackstone to be convertible terms.

It is the business of the judiciary to interpret the laws and not to scan the authority of the lawgiver. If the judiciary has the power to inquire into anything other than the form of enactment, where shall it stop? There certainly must be some limitation to such an inquiry. Those who claim this right for the judiciary, claim the legislative branch has no right of legislation, unless specifically granted by the Constitution. Therefore, if the authority to pass certain legislation is not found in the Constitution, such acts are not the acts of the people, but of the Congressmen themselves. But this is putting the argument on bold ground; to say that a high public representative of the people themselves shall challenge no more respect in the passage of legislation than a private individual must be rejected by every fair mind.

The further argument is made that when the Supreme Court holds an act of Congress void, it must acquiesce, although it may think the construction of the judiciary is wrong. But why must it acquiesce? Only because it is bound to show proper respect to the Supreme Court, which it in turn has a right to exact from the Supreme Court. This is the argument.

But it cannot be contended that the Congress has not, at least, an equal right with the judiciary to place a construction on the Constitution, nor can it be said that either are infallible, nor that either ought to surrender its judgment to the other. Certainly the framers of our Government never intended that the legislative and judiciary branches of our Government should ever clash upon the construction of our Constitution, yet we know this has occurred time and again during the history of our country.

What I am trying to say is that the judiciary, if at all possible, should yield to the acts of Congress the same respect that is claimed for the acts of the judiciary.

The great number of cases that have been decided by the Court by a decision of 5 to 4 clearly illustrates that repugnancy to the Constitution is not always self-evident, and that to avoid them requires the act of some tribunal competent, under the Constitution—if any such there be—to pass upon their validity.

The judiciary was not created by the fathers of the Constitution for that purpose. But in theory all the organs of Government were to have equal capacity, or if not equal, each was supposed to have superior power only for those things which peculiarly belong to it, and as legislation peculiarly involves the consideration of those limitations which are put on the lawmaking power, and the interpretation of laws, when made, involves only the construction of the laws themselves, it follows that the construction, in this particular, belongs to the Congress, which ought, therefore, be taken to have superior capacity to judge the constitutionality of its own acts.

The very definition of "law" which is said to be "A rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in the State", shows the intrinsic superiority of the Congress.

It will be said the power of Congress also is limited by prescribed rules. It is so. But it is the power of the people, and sovereign as far as it extends.

The foundation of every argument of every advocate of the judiciary to declare acts of Congress void rests upon the oath taken by the judiciary upon entering their office. Neither the oath of such officer nor his official duty contemplates an inquiry into the authority of Congress.

The fallacy of the argument that courts in approving acts of Congress adopt them as their own leads some of us to believe that this alone requires and compels the court to pass upon the constitutionality of acts of Congress, whereas the enactment of a law and the interpretation of it are not concurrent acts, and as the judiciary is not required to concur in the enactment, neither is it in the breach of the Constitution which is the fault of Congress, and upon it the responsibility rests.

The relief from such legislation rests entirely with the people, and I firmly believe they would see to it that no law would be permitted to stand or remain in our statutes that was a flagrant violation of their Constitution.

DISSENTING OPINIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT

Being a lawyer who has practiced law continuously for the past 35 years, I have been obsessed with the idea that judges and those who are learned in the law are probably better qualified than any other citizen to determine whether or not an act of Congress is derogatory to the Constitution. But if you are a lawyer who has studied legislation adopted by our Congress during the life of our Republic, you will be compelled to confess that your researches of such legislation have disclosed to you that no act was ever passed by Congress with the open or avowed purpose of flaunting or circumventing the Constitution. But, on the contrary, every such act was debated fully, and the majority who enacted such legislation honestly believed that under the terms of the Constitution the Congress was well within its rights and undoubtedly was attempting to carry out the wishes of the people.

And if you have studied the decisions of our Supreme Court on this subject, you will be convinced that the Court in setting aside such acts did not remove from your mind reasonable doubt about the constitutionality of the acts. But, on the contrary, the Court was so divided in opinion that their decisions only added confusion to the doubt they sought to remove.

Our Supreme Court has many times seriously divided its councils upon passing on acts of Congress, and many great members of the Court have charged it with undertaking to usurp the power of legislation and were therefore themselves violating the Constitution and trespassing upon the power of Congress to enact legislation as granted to it by the people under the Constitution itself.

That we may understand the views of some of the greatest of our Supreme Court Judges, I beg to cite and quote from the following:

In the income-tax case known as Pollock v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co. (157 U. S. 429; 158 U. S. 601), decided in 1895. Justices Harlan, Brown, Jackson, and White dissented. In dissenting, Justice Harlan argued:

> That by reversing the earlier law and practice of the Government the majority of the Court rendered it necessary to amend the Constitution to secure principles of right, justice, and equality in Federal taxation, and he insisted that policy and economic consideration rather than law actuated the majority in their conclusion.

Again, in the case of Connally v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. (184 U. S. 540), decided in 1902, Justice McKenna dissenting from the opinion of the Court, said:

> Courts are not to determine, he thought, whether laws arbitrary, oppressive, or capricious, indeed whether such combinations are evils or blessings, or to what extent either, is not a judicial inquiry. * * * To consider their effect would take us from legal problems to economic ones, and this demonstrates to my mind how essentially any judgment or action based upon these differences is legislative and cannot be reviewed by the judiciary.

Again, in Burton v. United States (202 U. S. 344), decided in 1906, Justices Brewer, White, and Peckham dissented from the opinion of the Court and declared:

> That the construction now given writes into the statute an offense which Congress never placed there. It is a criminal case, and in such a case, above all, judicial legislation is to be deprecated.

In the case of Weems v. United States (217 U. S. 349), decided in 1910, Justice White, with the concurrence of Justice Holmes, recorded a vigorous dissent:

> They thought if legislation defining and punishing crime is held repugnant to constitutional limitations it "seems to the judicial mind not to have been sufficiently impelled by motives of reformation of the criminal."

The legislative power is impotent to control crime. Since the decisions subjected to judicial control the degree of severity with which authorized modes of punishment might be inflicted, it seemed to the minority:

> That the demonstration is conclusive that nothing will be left of the independent legislative power to punish and define crime.

The direct result of the decisions, it was maintained, was to expand the judicial power by endowing it with a vast authority to control the legislative department in the exercise of its rightful discretion.

In the case of Lochner v. New York (198 U. S. 45), decided in 1905, Justices Harlan, White, Day, and Holmes dissented. Justice Harlan, writing the dissenting opinion declared:

> It is not the province of the Court to inquire, under our system of government, whether or not this be wise legislation. The courts are not concerned with the wisdom or policy of legislation. We do not regard it as within the function of the Court to determine what is sound economic theory in the realm of labor legislation.

Justice Holmes prepared a separate dissenting opinion, in which he declared:

> This case is decided upon an economic theory, which a large part of the country does not entertain. If it were a question whether I agreed with that theory, I should desire to study it further and long before making up my mind. But I do not conceive that to be my duty, because I strongly believe that my agreement or disagreement has nothing to do with the right of a majority to embody their opinions in law.

Again, in the case of Employers' Liability Cases (207 U. S. 463), decided in 1908, Justices Moody, Harlan, McKenna, and Holmes dissented from the judgment of the Court. Justice Moody, in the course of his dissenting opinion, said:

> The Court has never exercised the mighty power of declaring the acts of a coordinate branch of the Government void, except where there is no possible and sensible construction of the act which is consistent with the fundamental organic law. The presumption that other branches of the Government will restrain themselves within the scope of their authority and the respect which is due to them and their acts admit of no other attitude from this Court. * * * But the economic opinion of the judges and their views of the requirements of justice and public policy, even when crystallized into well-settled doctrines of law, have no constitutional sanctity. They are binding upon succeeding judges, but while they may influence, they cannot control legislators. Legislators have their own economic theories, their views of justice and public policy, and their views when embodied in written law must prevail.

In the case of the Standard Oil Co. v. United States (221 U. S. 1), decided in 1911, dissenting in part from the reasoning of the majority, Justice Harlan claimed—

> That the Court, by its decisions, when interpreted by the language of its opinion, has not only upset the long unsettled interpretation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, but has usurped the constitutional functions of the legislative branch of the Government.

Continuing further, he said:

> I am impelled to say that there is abroad in our land a most harmful tendency to bring about the amending of constitutions and legislative enactments by means alone of judicial construction.

In the case of Burns Baking Co. v. Bryan (264 U. S. 504), decided in 1923, Justice Brandeis, dissenting, said:

> That the Court had decided as a fact that the prohibition of excess weights is not necessary for the protection of the purchasers against imposition and fraud by short weights; that the law subjected bakers and sellers of bread to heavy burdens.

Continuing, he said:

> In my opinion, this is an exercise of the powers of a superlegislature, not the performance of the constitutional function of judicial review.

In the case of Hammer v. Dagenhart (247 U. S. 251), decided in 1918, Justices Holmes, McKenna, Brandeis, and Clark dissented and said:

> We should have thought that the most conspicuous decisions of this Court has made it clear that the power to regulate commerce and other constitutional powers could not be cut down or qualified by the fact that it might interfere with the carrying out of the domestic policy of any State. The act does not meddle with anything belonging to the States. They may regulate their internal affairs and their domestic commerce as they like, but when they seek to send their products across the State line they are no longer within their rights.

In the case of Adkins v. Children's Hospital (261 U. S. 525), decided in 1923, Chief Justice Taft and Justices Sanford and Holmes dissented. In dissenting, Chief Justice Taft said:

> It is not the function of this Court to hold congressional acts invalid simply because they are passed to carry out economic views which the Court believes to be unwise or unsound.

Justice Holmes, in dissenting, said:

> I confess that I do not understand the principle on which the power to fix a minimum for the wages of women can be denied by those who admit the power to fix a maximum for their hours of work. (Hours of work for women in the District of Columbia had previously been upheld by the Court.)

The very latest criticism of the Court by its own members relative to its tendency to pass upon questions of policy rather than law is the case of the United States of America against Gus L. Constantine, which was decided at the October term of Court, 1935, and is not yet in print. In this case Justices Cardozo, Brandeis, and Stone dissented, and in dissenting in this case Justice Cardozo expressed the following:

If I interpret the reasoning aright, it does not rest upon the ruling that Congress would have gone beyond its power, if the purpose that it professed was the purpose truly cherished. The judgment of the Court rests upon the ruling that another purpose, not professed, may be read beneath the surface, and by the purpose so imputed, the statute is destroyed. Thus the progress of psychoanalysis has spread to unaccustomed fields. There is a wise and ancient doctrine that a court will not inquire into the motives of a legislative body or assume them to be wrongful. (Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch 87) (Magnana Co. v. Hamilton, 292 U. S. 40). There is another wise and ancient doctrine that a court will not adjudge the invalidity of a statute except for manifest necessity. Every reasonable doubt must have been explored and extinguished before moving to that grave conclusion. (Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 213.) The warning sounded by this Court in the Sinking Fund Cases (99 U. S. 700) has lost none of its significance. Every presumption is in favor of the validity of a statute, and this continues until the contrary is shown beyond a rational doubt. One branch of the Government cannot encroach on the domain of another without danger. The safety of our institutions depends in no small degree on a strict observance of this salutary rule. I cannot rid myself of the conviction that in the imputation to the lawmakers of a purpose not professed, this salutary rule of caution is now forgotten or neglected after all the many protestations of its cogency and virtue.

It is often said that our Government is divided into three branches—the executive, legislative, and judicial. This is only partly true, since the Court has arrogated to itself the power to override acts of Congress. But the right of the people to grant specifically such powers of Congress, as may now be in doubt, cannot be denied.

The Fort Sumter of 1936 is clearly the massive building where the judges hold sway, and not the Halls of Congress. If any man doubts this statement, let him read the dissenting opinion of the three dissenting Judges, Justices Stone, Brandeis, and Cardozo, in the A. A. A. case, where they said:

The majority opinion hardly rises to the dignity of argument, and must lead to absurd consequences. And that acceptance of the theory that "preservation of our institutions is the exclusive concern of any one of the three branches of government", is far more likely to destroy the Union than the frank recognition that language, even of a constitution, may mean what it says, and that the power to tax and to spend includes the power to relieve a Nation-wide economic maladjustment by conditional gifts of money.

It is my belief that no act of Congress should be set aside by our courts unless the Court can by unanimous decisions declare that the enactment is a violation of the Constitution. This would remove doubt and add great weight to the decisions of our courts and allay the suspicion of our people that the Court has set itself up as a superlegislative body.

I desire to quote from the decision of Chief Justice Marshall in the original case of our Supreme Court, where it decided for the first time the power of Congress to enact legislation under the commerce clause of our Constitution (Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1), where he said:

The wisdom and the discretion of Congress, their identity with the people, and the influence which their constituents possess at elections are in this, as in many other instances as that, for example, of declaring war, the sole restraints on which they have relied to secure them from its abuse. They are the restraints on which the people must often rely solely in all representative governments.

BILL TO LIMIT JURISDICTION OF SUPREME COURT

The first thought or reaction of those who oppose the Supreme Court's tendency to veto statutes enacted by Congress is to exclaim: Let us amend the Constitution. But why resort to this possible but unlikely remedy that would be drawn out for years with long-fought and destructive agitation if the same purpose can be accomplished by a mere simple act of Congress? With this thought in mind, I introduced on May 14, 1935, H. R. 8054, which provides as follows:

(1) That the inferior courts of the United States and the courts of the District of Columbia and the Territories of the United States shall have no jurisdiction to declare any act of Congress unconstitutional. Any question arising upon an attack against any act of Congress, upon the ground that same is unconstitutional and void, raised in any of said courts shall, by the presiding judge thereof, be certified to the Supreme Court of the United States and further proceedings in the case stayed until such question shall have been decided and the decision certified back. The forms of the certificates of such questions, as well as the time and manner of the hearing and notice thereof and the portion of the record to be sent up, shall be as prescribed by the Supreme Court. Entry of such certificate or the fact that it has been made, upon the record of the case in the trial court, shall be sufficient notice to the parties that the questions involved are on application for hearing and determination by the appellate court. Attested copies of the portions of the record of the case or cause necessary to a determination of the questions so certified shall forthwith be presented to the Supreme Court, together with the question certified; and, secondly, that

In all cases now pending, or which may hereafter be pending, in the Supreme Court of the United States, except cases affecting ambassadors or other public ministers and consuls, and those in which a State shall be a party, where is drawn in question an act of Congress or statute of a State on the ground of repugnancy to the Constitution of the United States, at least seven members of the Court shall concur before judgment shall be pronounced or rendered declaring said law or laws unconstitutional and void.

ARGUMENT FOR BILL OF LIMITATION

Has the Congress of the United States the power to pass any law requiring a certain number of the Judges of the Supreme Court to concur before they can declare any act of Congress unconstitutional?

The Constitution of the United States provides:

In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, and those in which a State shall be a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all other cases before mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to fact and law, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make.

The Supreme Court, in passing upon this provision of our Constitution, has declared in Ex parte McCardle (7 Wallace, 74 U. S. 506), as follows:

We are not at liberty to inquire into the motives of the legislature. We can only examine into its power under the Constitution; and the power to make exceptions to the appellate jurisdiction of this Court is given by express words. It is quite clear, therefore, that this Court cannot proceed to pronounce judgment in this case, for it has no longer jurisdiction of the appeal.

I believe that under the provisions of the Constitution Congress has the power to prescribe the number of Judges which shall concur before a statute shall be declared unconstitutional. From the earliest days of the Republic, Congress has determined not only the number of Justices but also the number which shall constitute a quorum. The act of 1789 contained such a provision, and that provision is still in the law, providing that six Justices shall constitute a quorum. Congress has further provided for the Court's adjournment in case of no quorum. It has given to less than a quorum the power to make necessary orders touching a pending case.

The judicial power of the United States is vested in one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as the Congress may create. That judicial power, it will be readily conceded, cannot be invaded by the legislative branch of the Government; but there is a line which separates the appellate jurisdiction of the Court under proper regulations of Congress where legislation cannot be termed an unwarranted invasion of such judicial power.

Did Congress invade the "judicial power" when it declared the number of Justices required to constitute a quorum? I think not. Is it invading the "judicial power" when it provides by law that less than a quorum shall be authorized to do certain things? I believe not.

Is the power to grant certain writs, as provided by statute, by one member of the Court alone an invasion of the "judicial power"? I cannot believe it is. And if these congressional acts were not invasions upon the power of the Court, surely regulations touching the appellate jurisdiction, before an act of Congress can be declared void, at least by seven Judges, cannot by the widest stretch of the imagination be declared an invasion of the "judicial power."

I feel that Congress has the power; and if Congress has the power, it is perfectly clear that it should use it. For unless we do make some such provision, we shall probably have to meet the situation after it becomes vastly more serious.

To establish rules and regulations to govern the courts in determining how they shall act in deciding upon the constitutionality of an act of Congress does not deny the Supreme Court the right to pass upon the validity of such acts. Those who claim this jurisdiction for the Supreme Court base such claim upon article 3 of the Constitution, that "the judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution." To base jurisdiction on this article would require such advocate to admit that Congress is vested with the right to control such action of the Court in the manner and form of arriving at such decision, because the same section further reads, "with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make."

This proposed course is not a new proposition. It is a subject which has had consideration from almost the beginning of our Government by some of our greatest statesmen.

In 1823 a resolution was introduced in Congress proposing to require the concurrence of seven Judges in any opinion concerning the validity of State or Federal legislation.

In 1824 there were several similar proposals. A bill was reported by Martin Van Buren, requiring the concurrence of 7 Judges out of 10, and requiring each Judge to make record of his separate opinion. In 1824 a Member from Kentucky introduced a resolution requiring that a certain number of Judges should concur before the Court should hold a State statute unconstitutional. Henry Clay and Daniel Webster took part in the debate, but so far as I can learn from these debates, no question of the constitutionality of the proposal was raised. The debate seemed to indicate that both of these great statesmen acknowledge the subject to be within the power of Congress, and the debates deal with it solely as a question of policy.

The 5-to-4 decisions of our Supreme Court upon great constitutional questions are always a matter of deep regret, and I imagine that no one feels the responsibility more deeply than the members of our Supreme Court.

These decisions seem to breed and justify a disrespect for the decisions of this great tribunal. They give rise to more criticism of the Court than any one thing which I am able to recall.

When a measure has passed both Houses of Congress and received the approval of the President, it seems unreasonable that such a measure should be rejected by a decision in which no more than five of the nine Judges concur.

In the final analysis it comes to the proposition that one Judge has not only the veto power over the acts of Congress but the veto power over the President when he assented to the measure in question.

When Chief Justice Marshall for the first time after 14 years of government disregarded the three negative votes in the Constitutional Convention denying to his Court the right to decree acts of Congress void, declared the Supreme Court has the power to so act and gave this warning:

> We must never forget that it is a Constitution we are expanding, a Constitution intended to endure for ages to come, consequently to be adapted to the various crises of human affairs.

I am afraid this sound advice to those who act in the judiciary capacity has not always been remembered by the inferior courts when they declare an act of Congress unconstitutional.

Such actions of our inferior courts have grown to be ridiculous in the United States, and have not only brought the judiciary into disrepute but have placed the whole bar and legal profession of the country in the position of always acting as "cat's-paws" for those who seek to defeat the will of the people.

Such decisions are mere vetoes; vetoes exercised by one man. Such power, I submit, should not be exercised by one Judge of the Supreme Court. The Constitution does not grant or authorize it. Then why should the people and its legislature permit this Court to exercise this veto power over laws passed by the Congress and signed by its President?

Such power, exercised at will by one man, not only destroys the will of the majority but makes our Government impotent to legislate and care for the general welfare of the people.

Surely if any court should have the right to decide questions that are so far-reaching to the general welfare of our country and the preservation of its liberties, it should only be the one great Court—the Supreme Court of the United States.

It was certainly never intended by the founders of our Government that every inferior court of the land, including even justices of the peace, should have the right to declare that an act of the highest legislative body in the land, the Congress of the United States, should be declared unconstitutional, and by injunction or otherwise set aside or hold up the operation of such laws in the community in which they live.

There is no more outstanding fact in the history of the Constitutional Convention than the fact that three times this Convention refused even to grant this power to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The 5-to-4 decisions of our highest Court in the land sound to the average citizen like the betting odds at a horse race, and, in fact, they leave the American mind in doubt just what is or should be the law. Such decisions only shake the confidence of the people in the judgment of this great tribune.

The Court itself has said that in construing a law to determine whether or not it violates the Constitution every doubt must be construed in favor of such law, and yet the Court in its 5-to-4 decisions violates this rule of construction that was laid down by it, creating doubt in the minds of the general public that someone must be wrong when only one man out of nine can sway such grave decisions that are so far-reaching in effect upon the life and the happiness of the American people.

The people in America will never be satisfied with the decisions of their courts until they, by their decisions and decrees, recognize that the Constitution was written by the founders of this Government to expand and extend the human rights of man, and that in any conflict between the welfare of mankind and man's right to own, possess, and control property the Constitution must be held by our courts to be the Bill of Rights of the American people that the fathers of this Government intended, and that it can and will protect the people, even to the release of vested interests in property rights, if need be.

But so long as man is mere man, and some of us believe that the rights of man should come first in the passage of laws, first in the balance of the scales of justice, and others of us believe that the right to own and possess property should be the first consideration, then we will continue to have these 5-to-4 decisions, depending wholly upon the thoughts, habits, environments, and conscience of the men who are so called upon to decide.

In declaring any act of Congress unconstitutional the Supreme Court should be required to render such decision in a manner that would clearly impress the American people, free from all reasonable doubt, bias, and caprice. The Court should be required to comport with its own rule, laid down for determination of constitutional questions, and resolve all doubts in favor of the acts of Congress. Such decisions by the Court should be unanimous or by such a preponderance of the Court, so that no reason for doubt of the correctness and fairness of the decision could be left in the minds of the average citizen.

For this reason I have introduced this bill. I believe that its passage will bring back and restore to this great Court the confidence and respect of the American people. It will instill in the people of our country love for its institutions and grant an assurance that the will of the people will be safeguarded against those who stand against progress and a new day.

CITATIONS OF SUPREME COURT DECISIONS

Before closing I desire to cite the very able and admirable brief of Joseph L. Levinson of the Los Angeles (Calif.) bar, that is replete with citations of our courts fully upholding and sustaining the authority of Congress to enact such legislation as I have heretofore proposed:

During the last 5 months of its late term, the Supreme Court declared four Federal statutes and one joint resolution of Congress unconstitutional: Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan (Jan. 7, 1935) (293 U. S. 388); Perry v. United States (Feb. 18, 1935) (294 U. S. 330); Railroad Retirement Board v. Alton Railroad Co. (May 6, 1935) (55 Sup. Ct. 758); A. L. A. Schecter Poultry Corporation v. United States (May 27, 1935) (55 Sup. Ct. 837); Louisville, etc. Bank v. Radford (May 27, 1935) (55 Sup. Ct. 854).

This rate of mortality is without parallel in our history. During the first 75 years but 2 national laws were held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, and by the end of 1934 the number did not exceed 60. (See Warren, Congress, the Constitution, and the Supreme Court (1930), pp. 273–301, compiling 53 decisions from 1789 to June 1924.)

Small wonder that since the recent cases suggestions for constitutional amendments have come from both Members of Congress and the President.

Constitutional amendment is, of course, possible, but unlikely without long agitation and the lapse of years.

I

Meanwhile, is there anything Congress can do to limit judicial review?

The answer to this question may be gathered from an examination of sections 1 and 2 of article III of the Constitution:

SECTION 1. The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish * * *.

SEC. 2. * * * In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and those in which a State shall be party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases * * * the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions, and under such regulations as the Congress shall make. * * *

It is well settled that the inferior Federal courts are dependent upon Congress for their existence and the powers they exercise. (Gillis v. California (1934) (293 U. S. 62).) Once in our early history Congress abolished the inferior Federal courts altogether (Warren, the Supreme Court in the United States History (1922), pp. 204–209), and in our own time Congress abolished the United States circuit courts. (36 Stat. (1911) 1167.) Congress frequently has limited the jurisdiction of the inferior Federal courts. Since 1867 the inferior Federal courts have been prohibited from enjoining the assessment or collection of a Federal tax. (14 Stat. (1867) 475, 26 U. S. C. (1926), sec. 154.) For 25 years district courts have been prohibited, except by a specially constituted court of three judges, from enjoining the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission or of State officers, under State statutes, claimed to be violative of the Federal Constitution. (36 Stat. 1910) 557, amended 36 Stat. (1911) 1162, 37 Stat. (1913) 1013; 43 Stat. (1925) 938, 28 U. S. C. (1926), sec. 380.) And a little more than a year ago Congress passed a statute depriving the United States district courts of jurisdiction under certain circumstances to restrain the enforcement of the orders of State or local utilities commissions under the due-process clause of the Constitution of the United States. (28 U. S. C. (1934), sec. 41, as amended, 48 Stat. (1934) 775.)

The powers of Congress, under sections 1 and 2 of article III, relative to the inferior Federal courts and the status of those courts, are made plain in the following passage from Kline v. Burke Construction Co. (1922) (200 U. S. 226, 234), decided in 1922:

Only the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is derived directly from the Constitution. Every other court created by the General Government derives its jurisdiction wholly from the authority of Congress. That body may give, withhold, or restrict such jurisdiction at its discretion, provided it be not extended beyond the boundaries fixed by the Constitution. [Citing cases.] The Constitution simply gives to the inferior courts the capacity to take jurisdiction in the enumerated cases, but it requires an act of Congress to confer it. [Citing case.] And the jurisdiction, having been conferred, may, at the will of Congress, be taken away in whole or in part; and if withdrawn without a saving clause, all pending cases, though cognizable when commenced, must fall. [Citing case.] A right which thus comes into existence only by virtue of an act of Congress, and which may be withdrawn by an act of Congress after its exercise has begun, cannot well be described as a constitutional right. (See Gillis v. California, supra, note 3; United States v. Mar Ying Yuen (W. D. Tex. 1903), 123 Fed. 159; Mississippi Power & Light Co. v. City of Jackson (S. D. Miss. 1935), 9 Fed. Supp. 564.)

Turning to the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, and the power of Congress to make "exceptions" and "regulations" under section 2 of article III of the Constitution.

In Wiscart v. Dauchy (1796) (3 Dall. (3 U. S.) 321, 327), decided in 1796, Chief Justice Ellsworth, speaking for the majority of the Court, said:

If Congress has provided no rule to regulate our proceedings, we cannot exercise an appellate jurisdiction; and if the rule is provided, we cannot depart from it. The question, therefore, on the constitutional point of an appellate jurisdiction is simply whether Congress has established any rule for regulating its exercise.

Referring to this generalization the Court said in Duncan v. The "Francis Wright" (1882) (105 U. S. 381, 385), decided in 1882:

This was the beginning of the rule, which has always been acted on since, that while the appellate power of this Court under the Constitution extends to all cases within the judicial power of the United States, actual jurisdiction under the power is confined within such limits as Congress sees fit to prescribe.

The later cases are to the same effect.

In American Construction Co. v. Jacksonville, etc., Railway Co. (1893) (148 U. S. 372, 378), after referring to the constitutional provisions, the Supreme Court said:

This Court, therefore, as it has always held, can exercise no appellate jurisdiction except in the cases and in the manner and form defined and prescribed by Congress.

In St. Louis, etc., Co. v. Taylor (1908), 210 U. S. 281, 292 (see Murdock v. Mayor of Memphis (1875) 20 Wall. (87 U. S.) 590; Colorado Cent. Min. Co. v. Turck (1893), 150 U. S. 138; Laurel Oil & Gas Co. v. Morrison (1909), 212 U. S. 291; 1 Cooley, Constitutional Limitations (8th ed. 1927), p. 68, the Court said:

Congress has regulated and limited the appellate jurisdiction of this Court over the State courts by section 709 of the Revised Statutes, and our jurisdiction in this respect extends only to the cases there enumerated, even though a wider jurisdiction might be permitted by the constitutional grant of power.

It should also be observed, as stated in Luckenbach Steamship Co. v. United States (1926), 272 U. S. 533, 536:

* * * that an appellate review is not essential to due process of law, but is matter of grace.

In the leading case of Duncan v. The "Francis Wright", supra, an act of Congress limiting review in admiralty cases to questions of law was upheld, although section 2 of article III provides that—

The judicial power shall extend * * * to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction—

And the—

Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction both as to law and fact.

The following is from the opinion:

The language of the Constitution is that "The Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as Congress shall make." Undoubtedly, if Congress should give an appeal in admiralty causes, and say no more, the facts, as well as the law, would be subjected to review and retrial; but the power to except from—take out of—the jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, clearly implies a power to limit the effect of an appeal to a review of the law as applicable to facts finally determined below. * * * Authority to limit the jurisdiction necessarily carries with it authority to limit the use of the jurisdiction. Not only may whole classes of cases be kept out of the jurisdiction altogether, but particular classes of questions may be subjected to reexamination and review, while others are not. To our minds it is no more unconstitutional to provide that issues of fact shall not be retried in any case than that neither issues of law nor fact shall be retried in cases where the value of the matter in dispute is less than $5,000. The general power to regulate implies power to regulate in all things (ibid. at 386).

The case of Ex parte McCardle (1868) 6 Wall. (73 U. S. 318); (1869) 7 Wall. (74 U. S. 506); was one of the most extraordinary in the history of the Court. The case first came before the Court in 1868 on motion to dismiss an appeal in habeas corpus for want of jurisdiction. The motion was denied. The case again came before the Court in 1868, after it had been argued on the merits and submitted, upon the suggestion of counsel that subsequent to the time the case had been taken under advisement, the act of 1867 authorizing the appeal had been repealed. It was well known that Congress had repealed the act of 1867, fearing that in the pending case the Supreme Court would declare the reconstruction acts unconstitutional. (Warren, the Supreme Court in the United States History (1922) pp. 187, 195–210). In 1869 the appeal was ordered dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

The following is from the opinion:

We are not at liberty to inquire into the motives of the Legislature. We can only examine into its power under the Constitution; and the power to make exceptions to the appellate jurisdiction of this Court is given by express words.

* * * * * * *

It is quite clear, therefore, that this Court cannot proceed to pronounce judgment in this case, for it has no longer jurisdiction of the appeal; and judicial duty is not less fitly performed by declining ungranted jurisdiction than in exercising firmly that which the Constitution and the laws confer.

Ex parte McCardle (supra, at 514, 515), commenting on the McCardle case in Ex parte Yerger ((1869), 8 Wall. (75 U. S.) 85, 104)—

The effect of the act was to oust the Court of its jurisdiction of the particular case then before it on appeal, and it is not to be doubted that such was the effect intended. Nor will it be questioned that legislation of this character is unusual and hardly to be justified except upon some imperious public exigency. It was, doubtless, within the constitutional discretion of Congress to determine whether such an exigency existed.

Returning to the question put above, viz: "Is there anything Congress can do to limit judicial review?" The answer is: "Yes; there is a great deal Congress can do to limit judicial review."

Congress can, unquestionably, prevent judicial review by the Federal courts altogether by abolishing the inferior Federal courts and repealing the laws dealing with the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Congress can also, unquestionably, provide that a national statute shall not be declared unconstitutional by a district court made up of a single judge; and Congress can also provide that no district court, regardless of how it may be constituted, shall enjoin the execution of national laws pending appeals to the Supreme Court.

Can Congress, without taking away jurisdiction in large classes of cases, withhold from the inferior courts the power to pass on the constitutionality of national laws, and except from the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court the right to hear and determine questions of law involving the constitutionality of Federal statutes?

Can Congress require a concurrence of more than a bare majority of the Justices of the Supreme Court to hold national laws unconstitutional under its appellate jurisdiction?

II

Looking only at the language used by the Supreme Court, it is arguable that Congress may withhold jurisdiction to declare laws unconstitutional, without otherwise disturbing the jurisdiction.

The "powers and duties" of the inferior Federal courts "depend upon the acts which called them into existence or subsequent ones which extend or limit." (Gillis v. California, supra, at 66.)

Congress "may give, withhold, or restrict" (Kline v. Burke Construction Co., supra, note 9, at 234, 256 U. S. 688; 260 U. S. 226) the jurisdiction of those courts "at its discretion * * * And the jurisdiction, having been conferred, may, at the will of Congress, be taken away in whole or in part." (Ibid. at 234.)

The whole subject is remitted to the unfettered discretion of Congress. (Home Ins. Co. v. Dunn (1874), 19 Wall. (86 U. S.) 214, 226.)

The Supreme Court "can exercise no appellate jurisdiction, except in the cases, and in the manner and form, defined and prescribed by Congress." (American Construction Co. v. Jacksonville, etc., Ry. Co., supra, note 13, p. 378.)

* * * actual jurisdiction under the power is confined within such limits as Congress sees fit to prescribe (Duncan v. The "Francis Wright", supra, note 12, at 385.)

Authority to limit the jurisdiction necessarily carries with it authority to limit the use of the jurisdiction. Not only may whole classes of cases be kept out of the jurisdiction altogether, but particular classes of questions may be subjected to reexamination and review, while others are not * * *. The general power to regulate implies the power to regulate in all things. (Ibid. at 386.)

We are not at liberty to inquire into the motives of the Legislature. Ex parte McCardle, supra note 20, at 514.)

Logically, the decision in Duncan v. The "Francis Wright", supra, note 12, also lends some support to the proposition that Congress may take away the jurisdiction to declare national laws unconstitutional.

If Congress may except—"take out of"—the jurisdiction to decide questions of fact, why may it not except jurisdiction to decide questions of law?

In Massachusetts v. Mellon (1923), 262 U. S. 447, 488, the court said:

We have no power per se to review and annul acts of Congress on the ground that they are unconstitutional. That question may be considered only when the justification for some direct injury suffered or threatened, presenting a justiciable issue, is made to rest upon such an act. Then the power exercised is that of ascertaining and declaring the law applicable to the controversy. It amounts to little more than the negative power to disregard an unconstitutional enactment, which otherwise would stand in the way of the enforcement of a legal right * * *. If a case for preventive relief be presented, the court enjoins, in effect, not the execution of the statute, but the acts of the official, the statute notwithstanding.

If Congress may except all questions of law, may it except constitutional questions alone?

If such an exception be justified under section 2 of article III, can it be said to undertake to impose an unconstitutional condition? (See on unconstitutional conditions, Terral v. Burke Cons. Co. (1922), 257 U. S. 529; United States v. C. M. St. P. & P. R. Co. (1931), 282 U. S. 311; Stephenson v. Binford (1932), 287 U. S. 251; Hale, Force and the State: A Comparison of "Political" and "Economic" Compulsion (1935), 35 Col. L. Rev. 149.)

Assuming that Congress may not take away "the inherent power of a court incident to a grant of jurisdiction" (Gillis v. California, supra, note 3; see Ex parte Robinson (1874), 19 Wall. (86 U. S. 505; Michaelson v. United States (1924), 266 U. S. 42), can it be said that the inferior Federal courts and the Supreme Court could not function as courts without jurisdiction to declare national laws unconstitutional?

First. For 150 years no English court has undertaken to exercise jurisdiction to review acts of the National Legislature. (See Plucknett, Bonham's Case and Judicial Review (1926), 40 Harv. L. Rev. 30.) In Lee v. Bude & Torrington Junction Ry. (1871), L. R. 6 C. P. 576, 582, Mr. Justice Willes said:

I would observe, as to these acts of Parliament, that they are the law of this land; and we do not sit here as a court of appeal from Parliament. It was once said—I think, in Hobart (1)—that, if an act of Parliament were to create a man judge in his own case, the Court might disregard it. That dictum, however, stands as a warning, rather than an authority to be followed. We sit here as servants of the Queen and the legislature. Are we to act as regents over what is done by Parliament with the consent of Queen, Lords, and Commons? I deny that any such authority exists. * * * The proceedings here are judicial, not autocratic, which they would be if we would make laws instead of administering them.

Second. The Supreme Court declared but one act of Congress unconstitutional during the 34 years that Marshall was Chief Justice, and that act merely conferred original jurisdiction in mandate on the Supreme Court and did not relate to the appellate jurisdiction at all (Marbury v. Madison (1903) 1 Cranch (5 U. S.), 137). The second case to declare a national law unconstitutional—the Dred Scott case, 1857, Nineteenth Howard, Sixty-fourth United States, page 393—was not decided until 1857, and that case was reversed by the decision at Appomattox. So, especially for the first 70 years of our history the significant activity of the Supreme Court in constitutional cases was in passing on the constitutionality of State and local legislation—McLaughlin, A Constitutional History of the United States, 1935, pages 317, 318. Indeed, a conservative historian has observed that the power to hold acts of Congress unconstitutional "certainly appears of no supreme significance before the civil rights cases in 1883." (Ibid.)

Third. There is no express authority in the Constitution for judicial review, and the argument in favor of the authority by implication, as applied to national legislation, is far from conclusive.

The argument for judicial review was formulated by Chief Justice Marshall in 1803. (Marbury v. Madison, supra, note 34.) Briefly, Marshall's argument runs as follows:

> The Constitution is the supreme law of the land; the judges are sworn to observe it; when a statute comes before a court for enforcement, if, upon a comparison of the two writings, the statute is found to conflict with the Constitution, the judges cannot consistently with their oaths give effect to the statute.

It has been pointed out by distinguished commentators that this argument avoids the only question really involved. That question is, merely whether the right to decide rests with Congress or the courts. (Thayer, Legal Essays (1908), pp. 15, 16; McLaughlin, op. cit., supra note 36, at 309.) Marshall's argument fails to take into account that Congress and the President, as well as the courts, are sworn to support the Constitution, and it overemphasizes the duty of the judges when called on to give effect to a statute which is claimed to be unconstitutional.

> What was Andrew Johnson to do when the Reconstruction Act of 1867 had been passed over his veto by the constitutional majority, while his veto had gone on the express ground, still held by him, that they were unconstitutional?
>
> Asks James Bradley Thayer—
>
> He had sworn to support the Constitution. Should he execute an enactment which was contrary to the Constitution, and so void? Or should he say, as he did say, to the Court, through his Attorney General, that "from the moment (these laws) were passed over his veto, there was but one duty, in his estimation, resting upon him, and that was faithfully to carry out and execute these laws"? (Thayer, loc. cit. supra at 16 n.)

Marshall's argument did not notice the distinction between National and State legislation. (Ibid.; Elliott, The Need for Constitutional Reform (1935) pp. 153–158.) In other countries having federal systems and written constitutions, acts of the State legislatures may be declared ultra vires by the courts as not in accordance with fundamental law, but in practically no country in the world, other than the United States, can a statute passed by the national legislature be set aside by the courts. When a Federal court decides that a State law contravenes the Constitution of the United States, the decision merely implies national supremacy; but when a court, whether it be the Supreme Court or a justice court, declared a Federal law void, that means the judiciary is supreme. "I do not think the United States would come to an end if we lost our power to declare an act of Congress void", declared Justice Holmes, speaking in 1913, from the vantage point of 10 years' service on the Supreme Court. "I do think the Union would be imperiled if we could not make that declaration as to the laws of the several States." (Holmes Collected Legal Papers (1920), pp. 295, 296.)

III

An act of Congress requiring the concurrence of more than a bare majority of the Justices of the Supreme Court to hold national laws unconstitutional, under its appellate jurisdiction, would appear to provide for either an exception to or a regulation of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, and thus fall within the very language of section 2 of article III. See Duncan v. The "Francis Wright" (supra note 12. Cf. Goodnow, Social Reform and the Constitution (1911), p. 352; 1 Cooley, op. cit. supra note 14.) If anything, the powers of Congress under sections 1 and 2 of article III have been extended by construction. In addition to the cases reviewed in the text, see Ex parte Bakelite Corp. ((1929) 279 U. S. 438).

Such an act of Congress would also appear to provide for a reasonable exception or regulation, because it would do no more than give legislative sanction to a rule of administration which is an integral part of the doctrine of judicial review.

It is settled by the decisions of the Supreme Court that a statute is presumed to be constitutional and should not be declared unconstitutional unless its unconstitutionality is clear beyond all rational doubt. Can it be said that a national statute is unconstitutional beyond all rational doubt when Congress and the President (who equally with the judges are sworn to support the Constitution) as well as four distinguished Justices of the Supreme Court declare on their oaths that it is constitutional? Only lately the Supreme Court has held that a question of general jurisprudence was "balanced with doubt" merely because State courts had disagreed (Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Johnson (1934) 293 U. S. 335). In Briscoe v. The Commonwealth Bank ((1834) 8 Pet. (33 U. S.) 118), Chief Justice Marshall said that it was the practice of the Court not to deliver judgment in cases involving constitutional questions unless four Judges (a majority of the Court) concurred; and two Judges being absent, it was directed that the case be reargued the following term. (See 1 Cooley, op. cit., supra, note 13, at p. 335.) In Oakley v. Aspinwall ((1850) 3 N. Y. 547), it was held that notwithstanding the provision of the Constitution declaring that the court of appeals should be composed of eight judges, the legislature could enact that a lesser number should constitute a quorum. It is an unvarying rule of the Supreme Court of Georgia that cases should be decided by the entire court consisting of six judges, unless, for a providential or like cause, one or more should be absent (Lester v. State (1923) 155 Ga. 882, 118 S. E. 674). In Merrit v. State ((1921) 152 Ga. 405, 110 S. E. 160), it was held that a decision of the Supreme Court of Georgia rendered by only five justices was not binding authority. In Perkins v. Scales ((1877) 1 Legal Reporter 15), the Supreme Court of Tennessee held unconstitutional an act which provided that upon an even division of the judges the constitutionality of a statute involved, should be upheld, and in all other cases the decree of the inferior court should be affirmed. In Clapp v. Ely ((1858) 27 N. J. L. (3 Dutch) 622), the court, without opinion, by a vote of seven to six, held unconstitutional a statute which provided that no judgment of the supreme court should be reversed by the court of errors and appeals unless a majority of the competent judges should concur in the reversal.

In 1913 Ohio adopted a constitutional amendment prohibiting its highest court from holding laws unconstitutional, if a single judge dissented (Ohio Const., art. IV, sec. 2). In 1919 North Dakota passed a similar amendment (N. D. Const., sec. 89, as amended by art. XXV, applied and discussed in Daly v. Beery (1920), 45 N. D. 287, 178 N. W. 104; Wilson v. City of Fargo (1921), 48 N. D. 447, 186 N. W. 263). In 1923 Senator BORAH introduced a bill providing that no act of Congress could be declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court under its appellate jurisdiction, except with the concurrence of "at least seven members of the court" (Warren, op. cit. supra, note 2, at pp. 179–217). The Ohio amendment was challenged in the United States Supreme Court. The Supreme Court held the amendment was not a denial of due process or equal protection of the laws. The Supreme Court also held that the contention that the amendment deprived Ohio of a republican form of government did not present a justiciable question, saying: "As to the guaranty to every State of a republican form of government (sec. 4, art. 4) it is well settled that the questions arising under it are political, not judicial, in character and thus are for the consideration of the Congress, and not the courts (Ohio v. Akron Park District (1930), 281 U. S. 74, 79, 80)." In discussing the suggested limitation upon judicial review here under discussion, Goodnow, in his Social Reform and the Constitution (1911) said at page 352:

Such a provision would also really bring it about that our practice would accord with our theory, which is that in order that an act of the legislature be declared void by a court its unconstitutionality, like the guilt of a person charged with crime, must be clear beyond a reasonable doubt. Judge Baldwin says in reference to this theory of constitutional law:

"As the judgments declaring a statute inconsistent with the Constitution are often rendered by a divided Court, this position seems practically untenable. The majority must concede that there is a reasonable doubt whether the statute may be consistent with the Constitution, since some of their associates either must have such a doubt, or go further and hold that there is no inconsistency between the two documents."

Many critics feel that if the Court should ever set aside the whole policy of the Government, as it might have done in the gold-clause cases, it should not do so by a bare 5-to-4 majority. There is a growing conviction among students of our Constitution, that where the Supreme Court decided against the constitutionality of an act it should be by a majority of at least two-thirds of the Court. Issues that are so doubtful as to be decided by a single vote are probably policies that should be upheld. If we are to retain the Court as an umpire and censor, we should have at least the protection of an extraordinary majority of the Court in such controversial fields of economics as the cases now before it involve. (Elliott, op. cit. supra note 39, at pp. 150–151.)

The Parliament of Great Britain, indeed, as possessing the sovereignty of the country, has the power to disregard fundamental principles, and pass arbitrary and unjust enactments; but it cannot do this rightfully, and it has the power to do so simply because there is no written constitution from which its authority springs or on which it depends, and by which the courts can test the validity of its declared will. The rules which confine the discretion of Parliament within the ancient landmarks are rules for the construction of the powers of the American legislatures; and however proper and prudent it may be expressly to prohibit those things which are not understood to be within the proper attributes of legislative power, such prohibition can never be regarded as essential, when the extent of the power apportioned to the legislative department is found upon examination not to be broad enough to cover the obnoxious authority. The absence of such prohibition cannot, by implication, confer power (1 Cooley, op. cit., supra, note 14, at p. 358).

The nature of the rule of administration, above mentioned, was stated by Thayer in the following passage:

This rule recognizes that, having regard to the great, complex, ever-unfolding exigencies of government, much which will seem unconstitutional to one man, or body of men, may reasonably not seem so to another; that the Constitution often admits of different interpretations; that there is often a range of choice and judgment; that in such cases the Constitution does not impose upon the legislature any one specific opinion, but leaves open this range of choice; and that whatever choice is rational is constitutional. This is the principle which the rule that I have been illustrating affirms and supports. The meaning and effect of it are shortly and very strikingly intimated by a remark of Judge Cooley (citing Const. Lim., 6th ed., 68; cited with approval by Bryce, Am. Com., 1st ed., p. 431) to the effect that one who is a member of a legislature may vote against a measure as being, in his judgment, unconstitutional; and, being subsequently placed on the bench, when this measure, having been passed by the legislature in spite of his opposition, comes before him judicially, may there find it his duty, although he has in no degree changed his opinion, to declare it constitutional (Thayer, Legal Essays (1908) p. 22).

The ground on which courts lay down this test of a reasonable doubt for juries in criminal cases, is the great gravity of affecting a man with crime. The reason that they lay it down for themselves in reviewing the civil verdict of a jury is a different one, namely, because they are revising the work of another department charged with a duty of its own—having themselves no right to undertake that duty, no right at all in the matter except to hold the other department within the limit of a reasonable interpretation and exercise of its powers. The court must not, even negatively, undertake to pass upon the facts in jury cases. The reason that the same rule is laid down in regard to revising legislative acts is neither the one of these nor the other alone, but it is both. The courts are revising the work of a coordinate department, and must not, even negatively, undertake to legislate. And again, they must not act unless the case is very clear, because the consequences of setting aside legislation may be so serious (ibid. at p. 29).

IV

Lord Birkenhead went to the heart of the question underlying judicial supremacy, in an address to American lawyers:

The decision is premature whether you, and those who agree with you, have been right in trying to control the free will of a free people by judicial authority, or whether we have been right in trusting the free will and a free people to work out their own salvation.

No informed person would advocate abolishing the inferior Federal courts or depriving the Supreme Court of its appellate jurisdiction; and until the American people cease to have more confidence in the courts than in Congress, no responsible statesman is likely to bring forward a proposal entirely to strip the Federal courts of power to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional. It is reasonable to expect, however, that serious proposals will be advanced to limit the jurisdiction of the inferior Federal courts in constitutional cases, to expedite review of their decisions by the Supreme Court, and to provide that the Supreme Court shall not declare acts of Congress unconstitutional by a bare majority vote.

It is desirable before statesmen and publicists commit themselves to proposals for constitutional amendments, that consideration be given to the powers of Congress under sections 1 and 2 of article III of the Constitution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by having printed an address recently delivered by Donald R. Richberg at a luncheon at the Penn Athletic Club in Philadelphia entitled "The Constitution and the New Deal in 1936."

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is Mr. Richberg at the present time a part of the administration?

Mr. KVALE. I believe not.

Mr. SNELL. Then I object, Mr. Speaker.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10464) making appropriations to provide urgent supplemental appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes; and pending that, may I ask the minority Member his judgment as to time for general debate?

Mr. TABER. I have requests for about 2 hours and a half at this time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I would suggest we let the debate run along for the rest of the day without fixing any definite time, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman and myself.

Mr. TABER. That is agreeable.

The SPEAKER. Pending that motion, the gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that general debate continue during the day, to be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. Is there objection?

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Colorado.

The question was taken.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and forty-three Members present, a quorum.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10464, with Mr. COOPER of Tennessee in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include some excerpts.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, after the District appropriation bill for 1934–35 had passed the House and had gone to the Senate committee, Senator COPELAND inserted $63,385 for character education. Although both Chairman CANNON and myself believed that character training belonged primarily in the home and that unless character education was properly taught by proper teachers it would prove a most dangerous experiment, we finally agreed to it, in order to get the bill through conference.

NOTHING WORTH WHILE ACCOMPLISHED

A year passed by. For a period of over 6 months this $63,385 was being expended. Complaints from reliable teachers of highest standing came to our House subcommittee that nothing worth while was being accomplished, and that this $63,385 was being wasted, and that the Dr. W. W. Charters who was being paid $50 per lecture to come to Washington twice a month was advertised by the University of Moscow as one of its lecturers. While he may be a highly respected gentleman, we felt that if communistic Russia would permit its communistic Moscow University to pay for lectures delivered by Dr. W. W. Charters, they would not be the kind of lectures we would want in Washington schools. For Communists teach disbelief in God, in church, in constitutions, and in orderly government. They incite class hatred, causeless strikes, turmoil, and all kinds of sabotage, and preach maiming and murdering to uproot orderly government by force.

SOUGHT MORE MONEY TO WASTE

At our hearings last January, Dr. Ballou sought an additional $87,540 for character education. He testified: "What we are trying to do is to set up a new philosophy of education." Chairman CANNON told him that we had been advised of an unfavorable reaction on any good being accomplished, and Dr. Ballou exclaimed, "I do not see how anyone could expect to start out with this experiment, involving more than 250 teachers, whose philosophy has got to be changed fundamentally." (Hearings, p. 482.)

CHANGING TEACHERS FUNDAMENTALLY

It is possible that all of a sudden it has become necessary to work over all of the many teachers in the Washington schools, whose philosophy has got to be changed fundamentally? What is the matter with them now that such a change fundamentally must occur? Are they all wrong? And will they be "all right" when Dr. Ballou gets through changing them?

There are 2,900 teachers in the Washington schools, and while he is just now trying to change only 250 of them, it was the idea of Dr. Ballou that eventually the philosophy of education of 2,900 teachers in Washington had to be changed fundamentally. I quote from page 521, House hearings last January:

Mr. BLANTON. Up to this time, outside of 250 teachers in 10 schools—5 white schools and 5 colored schools—the 2,650 other teachers have had no instruction and no program?

Dr. BALLOU. We have not yet undertaken to provide instruction for them.

Mr. BLANTON. And they are pursuing no course now, so far as those 2,650 other teachers are concerned?

Dr. BALLOU. No.

COMMUNISM IN HOWARD UNIVERSITY

We knew that in Howard University, supported and maintained by the Government, communism was being propagated openly and without restraint, and we remembered the disgraceful raid communistically inclined students from Howard University made on the Capitol, in an attempt to dictate to Congress, and force us to allow negroes in the Members' restaurant.

Although we know that a majority of the 2,900 teachers in the Washington schools are the finest men and women in the world, we had reliable complaints from substantial citizens born and raised in Washington, that under the guise of merely teaching the fundamentals of communism, some teachers were propagating it. When you teach shorthand you produce stenographers, and when you teach theology you produce theologians. It is very easy for a Communist teacher under the guise of teaching history and government and "fundamentals", to espouse communism and to inculcate it. The matter was too serious. We couldn't afford to take chances.

In reply to Mr. DITTER's pertinent inquiry as to the possibility of un-American doctrines creeping into our schools, Dr. Ballou testified: "I am very conscious of the possibility of it. I do not think we are immune. I am aware of the fact that it is insidious, and that there is always the possibility." Believing it might prove to be a most dangerous experiment, we refused to allow Dr. Ballou this additional $87,540.

BALLOU KNEW WHERE TO GET IT

He immediately importuned the Senate for it. Under demand by Dr. COPELAND, the $87,540 was allowed and put in the bill, and passed by the Senate. In the Senate hearings (p. 119), Dr. Ballou testified that during the summer of 1934, they had Dr. W. W. Charters here in a conference for 2 weeks, and they have had him here 2 days each month since, and that Dr. W. W. Charters "is the one who is, in a broad general way, guiding this experiment." In other words, the character education for the 87,000 school children of Washington is being guided by a man whom the communistic University of Moscow in Soviet Russia has selected as one of its lecturers. He may suit his friends in Missouri. He may suit Dr. Ballou. But if he suits Moscow University, and Soviet Russia, he does not suit me.

Senator COPELAND asserted that unless the House agreed to his $87,540 for character education there would be no bill. Chairman CANNON and I stood out against it. The bill remained in conference for weeks. But we House conferees faced 114 Senate amendments. Something had to be done to get the bill passed. Finally, I agreed that if the Senate would accept a provision stopping all communism in the Washington schools, I would vote for the $87,540. Dr. COPELAND asked to see the amendment. I dictated it to our clerk, Mr. Duvall, and he prepared it, which read as follows:

Hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism.

The Senate conferees agreed to the amendment. Our House conferees agreed to it. Since it was permanent legislation and had to be reported back to the House and Senate for approval, it was agreed that Chairman CANNON when presenting the conference report to the House would ask that this legislation be attached as a rider to Senate Amendment No. 48, which itself likewise was legislation.

PROVISION READ BY CLERK TO THE HOUSE

When presenting the conference report to the House, Chairman CANNON moved that the above provision be added as an amendment to Senate Amendment 48, and the Clerk read at the desk the above provision, after which Chairman CANNON's motion was agreed to unanimously in the House. (See p. 8808, RECORD for June 6, 1935.) The following proceedings of the House of Representatives being quoted from the official RECORD, to wit:

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Before the period at the end of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: 'Provided, That hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism.'"

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which the foregoing amendments were agreed to was laid on the table.

CRITICS CONVICT THEMSELVES OF INATTENTION TO DUTY

Is there in this House any Member who will confess that he did not know what was going on in the House, when under the rules important bills were being enacted? If he did not know what was going on, it was his own fault.

When from the floor the chairman in charge of a bill moves that an amendment be adopted and the clerk reads the amendment from the desk that—those words convey in plain English just what they mean, and if any Member did not know what they meant, it was his duty to arise and ask the chairman about it, and if any Member wanted to be heard against the amendment, under the rules, which gave a whole hour for debate on this one amendment, it was the duty of such Member to ask and secure from the chairman such time as he desired to use against it.

Hereafter, no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating Communism.

NO MEMBER ASKED FOR DEBATE

Not a Member raised any objection to the amendment. Not a Member asked to be heard in debate against it. Not a Member suggested any change in its phraseology. It was accepted unanimously. It is too late now for any Member to plead ignorance.

CHAIRMAN CLARENCE CANNON

Hon. CLARENCE CANNON, of Missouri, chairman of the committee having said bill in charge, is one of the finest, outstanding men in this Congress. He is the soul of honor. He is strictly ethical on every thought and deed. I do not propose to allow any individual or any newspaper to unjustly criticize him in any particular. He is my close personal friend, and I am his friend.

AMENDMENT READ IN THE SENATE

After the House had approved this amendment, and the conference report, it went to the Senate. There from the desk the amendment was read, so that every Senator present who was attending to his duties, had an opportunity to hear it read, and to know every word in it, for the Reading Clerk in the Senate reads such amendments in a loud voice and clearly and distinctly.

I quote from the proceedings of the Senate, pages 8796 of the RECORD for June 6, 1935, the following:

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted the following report:

"The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3973) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:"

Then followed the conference report, which was signed as follows:

ELMER THOMAS, CARTER GLASS, ROYAL S. COPELAND, WILLIAM H. KING, GERALD P. NYE, HENRY W. KEYES, Managers on the part of the Senate.

CLARENCE CANNON, THOMAS L. BLANTON, J. W. DITTER, Managers on the part of the House.

Then the anti-Communist amendment was placed before the Senate, read at the desk in the Senate by the Reading Clerk, and adopted:

The Presiding Officer laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, which was read, as follows:

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 48 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment:

"Before the period at the end of the matter inserted by said amendment insert ': Provided, That hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism.'"

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate nos. 16, 37, and 48.

The motion was agreed to.

Not a Senator raised his voice against the amendment. Is there any Senator who will say that Senator THOMAS and his comanagers on the part of the Senate slipped something over on him? If there is, he will convict himself of not attending to his duty and in not knowing what was going on in the Senate, when it is his duty to be present and know what goes on there.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding this anti-Communist legislation was read in the House and unanimously adopted, and was read in the Senate and there unanimously adopted, simply because one of our colleagues from New York introduced a bill to change this law, and allow communism to be taught but not advocated in the Washington schools, he was quoted by the Washington News yesterday afternoon as saying that Chairman CANNON and myself had "cowardly slipped this legislation through the House. I promptly called him up, and he told me that he made no such reference either to Chairman CANNON or myself. Then what authority did this little Washington News have for printing such a slanderous and libelous statement? Does it not know that its misrepresentations will come to light? Does it not know that it cannot get away with any thing like that?

Yet yesterday afternoon this little News here in Washington in great big headlines, said, "BLANTON is scored in the House." There was no action in this House yesterday except to adjourn. BLANTON was not scored. This was a dirty, infamous lie which they put in this paper, and they knew this when they printed it.

And when this little Washington News, without basis or foundation, asserted that our New York colleague had made the slanderous and libelous statement about Chairman CANNON and myself it knew it was misrepresenting the facts. Yet this newspaper put it in here—a damnable lie. How much longer are they going to keep it up?

Then another Washington paper said this morning that I had demanded on yesterday a lot of stuff from the Board of Education. That was ordered long ago. Chairman CANNON has got to preside over the Agriculture appropriation bill and he has asked me to preside over the District bill this year, and I have agreed to do it.

Lots of citizens of Washington who are substantial men have been filing complaints with me for a month about conditions in the Washington schools. They are citizens who were born here, and some have lived here for 50 or 60 years, and at their instance I wrote a letter on January 10 to the Board of Education and asked them for some data that I wanted to investigate before we took up the hearings.

Here is the letter that the Secretary of the Board of Education wrote me on January 13, 1936:

BOARD OF EDUCATION OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., January 13, 1936.

Representative THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: Your letter of January 10, 1936, requesting specified data respecting the public schools, the Superintendent of Schools, and courses and books used in the schools, was received by me today.

I have begun at once to compile the data you require and will get it to you as promptly as possible. Meanwhile, I will present your letter, addressed to the Board's secretary, to the full Board of Education at its meeting Wednesday, January 15, 1936.

If you should require any additional data which you have not cited in your letter of January 10, 1936, I shall be glad to receive further request from you.

Very sincerely yours,

CHARLES B. DEGGES,
Secretary, Board of Education.

And yet they thought they were hatching out fresh news this morning when they said I had just demanded the data.

I want to tell you something—as long as I am in charge of a bill for this House of Representatives, I am going to get for you every bit of the information that is available on the subject so that I can give it to you when the bill comes up on the floor. [Applause.]

This amendment, which was passed by unanimous consent, to stop communism in schools, is permanent legislation. It is sound legislation. It is on the statute books and it is going to stay on the statute books, and no communistic influence in the United States is going to take it off. [Applause.]

The time has come when we must stop communistic influence in the United States.

Here is the Daily Worker, a communistic paper, not pink but red, which is printed in New York and is sent to our desks in Washington. It preaches the overthrow of government and it is against orderly government, it is against God, it is against the church, it is for breaking down the Constitution of our Government, and Congress is standing for its being distributed.

We ought to deny this Daily Worker and the other communistic papers published in New York and Cleveland, Ohio, and elsewhere in the United States the privileges of the United States mail.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Can the gentleman get us a copy of the lecture that he refers to?

Mr. BLANTON. I will endeavor to do it by the time we report the District appropriation bill.

This Daily Worker I hold in my hand, recently off of the press in New York, under big headlines, "Sweep Away the Autocratic Power of the United States Supreme Court," has its whole front page filled with an attack on our Supreme Court as an institution of government. At the top it says boldly it is—

The central organ of the Communist Party, United States of America (a section of Communist International).

And it says:

Volume XIII, no. 10, entered as second-class matter at the post office at New York, N. Y., under the act of March 8, 1879.

I want to recommend to my good friend, Hon. Jim Farley, Postmaster General, that he immediately withdraw the above privileges from this and every other communist newspaper in the entire United States. And I call on my good friend, Hon. Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, to catch and deport every last mother's son of them from our borders. It is time for us to clean house.

I quote from this Daily Worker the following:

Mr. President, why don't you repudiate the opinion of the Supreme Court autocrats? Call upon Congress to amend the Constitution and deprive the Supreme Court of its rights. We demand these judges be impeached.

We must call mass meetings in every community. We must demonstrate. We must take action in every shop, in every office, in every farm community. Congress and the President should repudiate the Supreme Court, should impeach the judges.

COMMUNISTS HAVE ONE DAILY AND ONE WEEKLY IN CLEVELAND

It is time to check up all of the foreign-language newspapers in Cleveland.

CLEVELAND SECOND IN UNITED STATES IN NUMBER OF ITS FOREIGN-LANGUAGE PUBLICATIONS—53 MONTHLIES, WEEKLIES, AND DAILIES REPRESENT 13 NATIONALITIES

In no other American city except New York are there more foreign-language publications printed and edited than in Cleveland.

To be exact, 53 foreign publications have their editorial and printing offices in Cleveland. Of these, 12 are dailies, 23 are weeklies, and 18 are monthlies.

Thirteen language groups are represented by these publications, namely: Czech, German, Hebrew, Hungarian, Italian, Lithuanian, Polish, Rumanian, Russian, Saxon, Serbian, Slovak, and Slovene.

Seven nationality groups have dailies here—the Bohemians, Germans, Hebrews, Hungarians, Italians, Poles, and Slovenes.

REACH ABOUT 150,000 DAILY

According to the publishers' sworn statements to the United States Post Office, the total circulation of all the foreign-language dailies printed in Cleveland is between 100,000 and 150,000 daily.

The average size of a foreign-language paper is six pages. On special occasions the edition contains as high as 40 pages. In most cases the publications are official organs of fraternal or religious organizations.

Of the 18 monthlies, 10 are of religious character. Of the 23 weeklies, 4 are religious and two-th'rds of the others are organs of some fraternal groups.

The dailies print, besides current world news, much news of old-country affairs or of world events with special bearing on their particular nationality.

Most of the dailies take a definite stand on old-country politics. The Socialists have one weekly, the Communists one daily and one weekly, and the I. W. W. Party has one weekly and one monthly.

As early as 1919 a teacher in the Western High School, which has always been considered one of the best in the city, was charged with propagating "bolshevism and communism while discussing 'current events' in an English class." On March 19, 1919, upon motion duly made and seconded, the Board of Education unanimously passed the following resolution, that this teacher "be suspended, without pay, for a period of 1 week commencing March 20, 1919."

Immediately there were threats of "a strike" unless this teacher was paid. Although the 1,300 policemen and 900 firemen in Washington are prevented by law from belonging to any organization that can call a strike, the 2,900 teachers of Washington are organized in a union that is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and it demanded a recission of said order and that said teacher be paid for the time suspended. A mandamus proceeding was brought in the courts. The Board of Education was under duress. There was then no law preventing communism in our Washington schools. The Board of Education was forced to pay said teacher, and communism won its first battle in the Washington schools.

From the statement of Mr. W. J. Tucker, page 237 of Senate hearings, on March 22, 1935, I quote:

I submit that real worth-while character education can be stated as consisting of honesty, truthfulness, kindness, regard for the rights and interests of others, sobriety, clean living, abstention from vices and harmful practices. These virtues should be instilled in the youthful mind by all teachers. This influence, while taught by word of mouth, should be still more impressed by example. Unless these good impressions are made by and through the example set by teachers, all of the word-of-mouth teaching is well-nigh useless. One cannot properly teach what one does not believe. It is also easy for one who is not in sympathy with the teaching to slight it. It is quite well known that a considerable number of the teachers of Washington do indulge in the use of liquor.

Mr. Philip G. Murray (p. 356, Senate hearings) testified:

It is rather a disgrace, I think, that more than 9,000 felonies should have been committed in the District of Columbia last year, and probably one cause for that was the fact that in a great many of our homes there is practically no character education whatever.

No child will ever find in any school the training which it should receive in the home.

While we disagree frequently, I want to specially commend Mr. William Randolph Hearst for the unswerving fight he and his newspapers are making to free this country from communism. He deserves the thanks of the Nation. Practically all communism here comes from aliens. In the present session of Congress we must pass a law requiring all aliens to register, deporting all aliens here unlawfully, and stopping all immigration for at least 10 years. We must rid the United States of the Bruno Hauptmanns and make it safe again for honest Americans.

If Dr. Ballou will instruct all of his teachers to teach the kind of character education suggested by Mr. W. J. Tucker he will find great sympathy and response from me. Instead of insisting that "the philosophy of education of the 2,900 Washington teachers has to be changed fundamentally", let Dr. Ballou instruct all of his 2,900 teachers to once again begin teaching their students that which the little red schoolhouse years ago taught, that they must be honest, that they must be truthful, that they must be kind, and have due regard for the rights and interests of others, that they must not depart from sobriety and clean living, and that they must abstain from vices and harmful practices.

The above is the kind of character education that will upbuild character. And that is the kind we want and must have in the schools of Washington.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10464, the deficiency appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from New York, in charge of the minority, if we cannot fix time for general debate.

Mr. TABER. I think we will require about 2 hours and a half, or it may be 2 hours and 40 minutes on this side.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 4 hours, to be equally divided between the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Reserving the right to object, I would like 10 minutes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, does the gentleman intend to finish the bill tomorrow?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We hope to.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Reserving the right to object, can we be assured that the bill will not be taken up today?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the debate should run out, we might take it up.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10464) making appropriations to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. COOPER of Tennessee in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF].

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I am going to speak about the dairy farmer and trade agreements.

On Tuesday, January 14, I introduced the following joint resolution:

Joint resolution requesting the President to terminate the concessions on dairy products contained in the Canadian, Netherlands, and Switzerland agreements, and requesting that no further concessions be granted to any country on dairy products

Whereas prior to his election the President of the United States made a definite pledge that there would be no reduction in the tariff rates on agricultural commodities; and

Whereas at the time the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act was pending in Congress administration leaders made a similar pledge that the rates on major farm commodities would not be lowered under trade agreements; and

Whereas the dairy industry is the largest branch of American agriculture, representing from 20 to 25 percent of the national agricultural income; and

Whereas American dairy farmers are able and willing to supply the entire domestic needs of the United States for dairy products at reasonable prices; and

Whereas, notwithstanding the pledges heretofore mentioned, the State Department has concluded agreements with Canada and the Netherlands and Switzerland reducing the tariff on cream and on Cheddar, Edam, and Gouda cheese, Swiss and Gruyère cheese, the said reduction of cheese tariffs being unconditional and applicable to every nation of the world enjoying commercial relations with the United States; and

Whereas said concession will have the effect of opening up domestic markets to foreign producers at a time when under the Agricultural Adjustment Act vast quantities of dairy products are being purchased to sustain domestic price levels and when additional production of dairy products is anticipated because of the use of lands taken out of cultivation of other crops under agricultural adjustment programs: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to impose upon imports of cream and Cheddar, Edam, and Gouda, Swiss and Gruyère cheese quotas as provided for in the Agricultural Adjustment Act (sec. 22), which shall be fixed at 50 percent of the average annual quantity of such commodities which was imported into the United States during the period from July 1, 1928, to June 30, 1933, both dates inclusive, said quotas to apply to every country in the world; and be it further

Resolved, That in accordance with article VII of the treaties with Canada and the Netherlands, and article VI of the treaty with Switzerland, the President and the Secretary of State are requested to notify said countries of the imposition of said quotas and to advise said countries that the imposition of said quotas is deemed necessary by the Senate and House of Representatives as a means of protecting and safeguarding the American dairy farmer; and be it further

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested not to permit in any future agreement any reduction in the present dairy tariff structure of this country.

When President Roosevelt was a candidate for the Presidency he made a speech at Baltimore, October 26, 1932. In that speech he said, among other things:

Again, in my Sioux City speech I made the Democratic position plain where I said that negotiated treaties would be accomplished "by consenting to reduce, to some extent, some of our duties in order to secure a lowering of foreign walls, that a larger measure of our surplus may be sold abroad."

Of course, it is absurd to talk of lowering tariff duties on farm products. I declared that all prosperity in the broader sense springs from the soil. I promised to endeavor to restore the purchasing power of the farm dollar by making the tariff effective for agriculture, and raising the price of farmers' products. I know of no effective excessively high tariff duties on farm products. I do not intend that such duties shall be lowered. To do so would be inconsistent with my entire farm program, and every farmer knows it and will not be deceived.

I consider these statements a definite pledge on the part of Mr. Roosevelt, that, in the event he were elected to the Presidency, there would be no lowering of tariff duties on agricultural products.

Similar assurances were given in the Senate when the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act was under consideration in that body. I quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 17, 1934, page 8996:

Mr. MCNARY. I think I somewhere read that the President did not intend, if given this power—or at least did not have in mind—to decrease tariffs on agricultural products.

Mr. HARRISON. The President has made the statement in some of his speeches, and I think in his message he has said that he is trying to help agriculture; but I should think it would be very bad, almost destructive, to write into this measure a provision that he must not under any circumstances negotiate with reference to agricultural products.

Page 8997:

Mr. VANDENBERG. I hope the Senator from Oregon will not despair of ultimately obtaining the consent of the Senator from Mississippi to the exemption which he asks, because I am confident that when the Senator from Mississippi further contacts the Secretary of State and the White House and gets another letter of instructions tomorrow the President will be found to be standing firmly on his statement at Baltimore on October 25, 1932:

"It is absurd to talk of lowering tariff duties on farm products."

Surely there is not going to be resistance to the removal of any known absurdity which loiters in this pending tariff bill.

I charge that these pledges and assurances have not been kept as far as the dairy farmer is concerned. On the contrary, tariffs have been lowered on cream, butter, cheese, and cattle, and obstacles placed in our path so that we cannot raise the tax of 3 cents per pound now in force on foreign fats and oils. The unfortunate dairy farmer, especially of the North Central States, finds himself harassed and threatened on every side. His markets for cream invaded on the north, and if he should shift his milk into cheese he will meet the competition of Canada, the Netherlands, and Switzerland. If he then resorts to butter as an outlet for his milk he will find the competition even keener—oleomargarine and cheap butter substitutes made of vegetable oils from the South Seas and cottonseed oil from our Southern States. Why wreck the dairy industry of the United States?

We are advised by competent authority that something over 30,000,000 people live on our farms, and that an equal number of our people, who distribute and process farm products also make their living from what is raised on the farms. This vast army constitutes about one-half of our entire population. The dairy industry constitutes the largest branch of this vast enterprise. It is estimated that 20 to 25 percent of the national agricultural income is derived from the dairy industry. This shows the importance of this great calling.

Here is another feature about dairying that must not be overlooked. The dairy farmer of the United States is able and willing to supply all the needs of our people for dairy products at reasonable prices. It is one of the few outstanding industries where the supply and demand are both within our own borders, providing always that no artificial means are devised to interfere. We representatives of the dairy districts stand for the principle that the Government of the United States should provide a tariff structure which would protect the industry against the importations of dairy products. Our goal should always be the cost of production, including a fair profit. Prior to these trade agreements we were making some progress in that direction, although the general level of dairy products in the United States is still far below that which would give dairy products the same purchasing power as in the pre-war period.

INCONSISTENT POLICY

Our Government is defeating its own ends under the present policy. For the past several years we have been curtailing production. A number of agricultural products have been restricted by paying subsidies to farmers who reduced their output. Among these products are cotton, wheat, corn, hogs, tobacco, sugar, and so forth. It is estimated that 50,000,000 acres of crop land were taken out of production by this method. It was the fear of some of us that these acres taken out of production in cotton, wheat, corn, hogs, and so forth, would be used as pasture lands for herds of dairy cows. I am reliably advised that reports from the Middle West show that a large percentage of subsidized crop lands were used for that purpose last year. What is the result? A surplus of milk. I tried to prevent this evil by introducing an amendment when the agricultural adjustment amendments were before the House for consideration. You will find it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for June 18, 1935, page 9593. I quote:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAUTHOFF: Page 51, line 23, after the word "commodities" and the period, add the following: "None of the lands affected under the provisions of section 31 shall be used for creating any agricultural product within the purview of this act."

In support of this amendment, and you must remember that under the rules I only had 5 minutes, I made this statement:

Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering that amendment is this: That no producer shall receive pay from the Government for taking his acreage out of production and shall then be permitted to transfer it into pasturage on which he can raise sheep, beef cattle, or milk cows and go into the dairy business. For that purpose, inasmuch as he is paid to take that acreage out of production, in fairness to the other farmers of the Nation, he ought not to be allowed to go into competition with them.

This amendment was opposed by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and was therefore defeated. I feel confident that had it passed we would have protected our dairy farmers. As it is, the very thing that I feared has come to pass, and now we will have a surplus of milk, which means dairy products in general. What is consistent about a policy that pays the southern cotton grower to quit growing cotton and go into the dairy business and thereby create a surplus of dairy products, which lowers the price and tends to wreck the dairy farmer of Wisconsin and sister States? To that absurd policy has been added another equally absurd, reciprocal trade agreements, which do and will continue to admit dairy products at a lower tariff from every foreign country except Germany. And, last but not least, these trade agreements fix the tax on foreign fats and oils at 3 cents per pound, which creates a hurdle we cannot surmount—we who wish to raise this tax to protect our home industry. So we may justly summarize the present policy of the Government in respect to dairying as a policy of destruction—a domestic policy that subsidized farmers to quit other fields and go into dairying, a foreign policy that lowers the tariff on dairy products so that they may glut our market and lower the price, a foreign policy that even invites the competition of south sea islanders with palm oil and coconut oil. This record entitles the Democratic Party to change its symbol from the donkey to the "coconut cow."

Permit me now to take up the three trade agreements in order that most vitally affect the dairy farmer. These constitute up to the present time the reciprocal trade treaties with the Netherlands, Canada, and Switzerland.

TREATY WITH THE NETHERLANDS

The concessions granted by the Government of the United States to the Kingdom of the Netherlands by the trade agreement entered into on December 20, 1935, insofar as they affect dairy farmers, are as follows:

First. The tariff on Edam and Gouda cheese is reduced from 7 cents per pound, but not less than 35 percent ad valorem. This is a reduction in the rate of duty of approximately 29 percent.

Second. The Government of the United States agrees to maintain palm oil on the free list and further agrees not to increase the excise or processing tax of 3 cents per pound now levied on this oil. This helps out the manufacturer of oleomargarine.

Third. Tapioca, tapioca flour, and cassava, which are starches used in the manufacture of glue and adhesive for envelopes and postage stamps, are also maintained on the free list. These starches are in competition with casein, and casein, as you know, is a byproduct of milk.

With the present price of Edam and Gouda cheese being within 1 or 2 cents of the price of domestic cheeses, and since Edam competes with well-cured domestic Cheddar cheese and Gouda competes with domestic cheeses of the Gouda type, the reduction will undoubtedly mean an increase in the sale of Edam and Gouda cheese in the United States, although until the agreement has been in effect for at least a short while, it will be difficult to determine the actual effect of this concession on domestic-cheese producers.

The most disturbing element in the tariff reduction on these cheeses, when combined with the similar concessions granted on Cheddar cheese under the Canadian agreement, is the apparent program of the State Department to reduce the tariff rates on all foreign-type cheeses down to at least the level of the 1922 Tariff Act.

As though that were not enough, insult must be added to injury by agreeing to maintain palm oil on the free list, and also agreeing not to increase the excise or processing tax on the oil, which makes it practically impossible to obtain any increase in the existing tax on foreign fats and oils. The present tax has given us some help, but nevertheless great quantities of oils and fats keep pouring in from foreign countries to be used in the manufacture of oleomargarine and butter substitutes. Those of us who represent dairy districts have been hopeful that we might raise those taxes and thereby shut out the "coconut cow" that competes so disastrously with our dairy herds. These reciprocal trade agreements make our task an exceedingly difficult one. We had hoped that we might pass at least a 5-cents-a-pound tax on these foreign fats and oils and thus increase the market for our home products by an estimated $100,000,000.

I also want to call your attention to the fact that our dairy farmers must meet stringent sanitary requirements; but cheese brought in from abroad may be made under the vilest unsanitary conditions, and there is nothing in these trade agreements to prevent it. Not only is the foreign producer favored on the price, but he is also favored on cleanliness. Our cheese makers are penalized for being clean.

Another grave injustice to our dairy farmers is the fact that these concessions granted to the Netherlands likewise apply to every country in the world having commercial relationships with the United States with the exception of Germany. Furthermore, when we refer to the Netherlands, we also include Netherland India, Netherland Guiana, and Netherland West Indian Islands.

This is not a trade agreement. It is a star-chamber proceeding to lower the tariff duties on dairy products without notice and without a hearing.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Pardon me, but I have not the time.

TREATY WITH CANADA

The present tariff of 56.6 cents per gallon on cream, fresh and sour, is reduced to 35 cents a gallon on not more than 1,500,000 gallons annually. One million five hundred thousand gallons of cream is the equivalent of 6,000,000 pounds of butter, and applying the ratio of the tariff cut on cream to the butter tariff of 14 cents, this is equivalent to permitting the importation of 6,000,000 pounds of butter on a 9-cent tariff.

If the Canadian cream can meet the sanitary requirements of the Lenroot-Taber Milk and Cream Import Act, it can be used in the eastern markets either in fresh form or it can be made into butter. If in fresh form, it will displace equivalent quantities of middle western cream now finding eastern market outlets. In turn, middle western cream supplies will back up into butter stocks and increase the butter surplus of this country. If made into butter, the same effect upon the butter stocks will be had.

The tariff on dairy cows weighing 700 pounds or more is reduced from 3 cents per pound to 1½ cents per pound on not more than 20,000 head annually. There is also permitted to enter into the United States 51,933 head of cattle weighing less than 175 pounds on which the tariff is reduced from 2½ cents to 1½ cents per pound and 155,799 head of cattle weighing 700 pounds or more on which the tariff has been reduced from 3 cents per pound to 2 cents per pound.

With the lower rate of duty on cheddar cheese and no sanitary requirements upon cheese imports, there may be good reason to believe that imports of cheese from Canada will again give great distress to producers of the United States, particularly those in Wisconsin, New York, Minnesota, and Oregon.

In addition to the concessions to Canada on cheddar cheese, the following countries—Hungary, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, Finland, and Czechoslovakia—will be entitled to the same concession under the most-favored-nation arrangements which our country has with them. Italy and Denmark will also probably receive this concession, as they have conditional most-favored-nation arrangements with this country.

Cream, butter, cheese, and cattle will all be brought into this country to compete with our domestic products. Not only that, but cheddar cheese from Canada and cheddar cheese which will come in from many other nations will not be required to meet the same sanitary standards imposed on American dairy farmers and we will thus be permitting this cheese to come in not only at reduced rates but under lower sanitary conditions than are imposed upon our domestic producers.

TREATY WITH SWITZERLAND

Only a week ago a trade agreement was signed with Switzerland that is a menace to the cheese industry of Wisconsin and many other States. The market for Swiss cheese during the past year or two has been on the verge of collapse because of heavy supplies of Swiss cheese in the United States, and in the face of this condition the administration has granted a reduction in the tariff rate on Swiss cheese which will further weaken our domestic price structure. Our cheese industry needs strengthening, not weakening. Swiss and Gruyere cheese will be admitted into the United States from Switzerland under an ad valorem which has been reduced from 35 to 20 percent. Under our old tariff structure the rate was 7 cents per pound, but not less than 35 percent ad valorem. Under the agreement with Switzerland the rate is left at 7 cents but the ad valorem is reduced to 20 percent.

Thus under the Tariff Act of 1930 the tariff rate on Swiss cheese was 7 cents where the cheese entered the United States at 20 cents per pound or lower, but on all cheese which entered the United States at more than 20 cents, the rate was 35 percent ad valorem. With most of the cheese coming into this country at around 25 cents the tariff is thus reduced from 8¾ cents per pound to 7 cents per pound. The following table indicates the rate of tariff duty under the 1930 act on Swiss cheese coming into the country at prices between 20 and 35 cents:

Import price (cents):	Tariff (cents)
20	7.00
21	7.35
22	7.70
23	8.05
24	8.40
25	8.75
26	9.10
27	9.45
28	9.80
29	10.15
30	10.50
31	10.85
32	11.20
33	11.55
34	11.90
35	12.25

It will be noted from this table that the tariff rate under the 1930 act would run from 7 cents per pound on 20-cent cheese to 12¼ cents per pound on 35-cent cheese. Under the agreement with Switzerland all cheese coming in between 20 and 35 cents will bear a fixed rate of 7 cents per pound.

The State Department in its release indicates that the reduction in imports of Swiss cheese had been occasioned by our Tariff Act of 1930. This is not a fact, because the Tariff Act of 1930 actually reduced our tariff rate on Swiss cheese from 7½ cents per pound, but not less than 37½ percent ad valorem to 7 cents per pound, but not less than 35 percent ad valorem. The actual fact is that Switzerland has during the past 6 years adopted a policy of increasing the manufacture of butter and decreasing the manufacture of cheese. This policy was apparently adopted because Switzerland up to that time had been an importer of butter, and their change in policy was brought about apparently by a desire to become self-sufficient with respect to the production of butter. As a result of this policy, the manufacture of butter in Switzerland increased from 32,000,000 pounds in 1928 to over 50,000,000 pounds in 1932, with a resultant decrease in the manufacture of Swiss cheese from 156,000,000 pounds in 1928 to 110,000,000 pounds in 1932. This development, together with the fact that the Swiss Central Union, which controls the exports of cheese, has attempted to maintain a relatively high price for cheese which it exported in the face of a drastically reduced consumer purchasing power, undoubtedly accounts in a large measure for the fact that imports in the United States have been decreasing.

We are able to produce in the United States a Swiss cheese which is equal in quality, taste, and appearance to that produced in Switzerland or any other country. A special demand and high reputation for Swiss cheese from Switzerland has been built up in this country, however, despite the fact that the imported Swiss and domestic Swiss may be, and in some instances are, exactly equal in quality. These conditions are likely to continue until an effective advertising and educational campaign is undertaken to inform the people of the United States that our Swiss cheese is equal to that produced anywhere in the world. To some observers the only way out of this dilemma involves completely shutting out imported Swiss cheese. Certainly the method followed by our State Department of reducing the tariff on imported Swiss cheese cannot possibly be of any assistance to American producers, and can only react to their detriment.

The folly of the reduction in our tariff rate on Swiss cheese is made more manifest by the fact that the United States now has a favorable balance of trade with Switzerland. On the basis of figures of the trade which flows from Switzerland to the United States, as evidenced by figures from Switzerland, and the flow of trade from the United States to Switzerland, on the basis of United States figures, our exports to Switzerland in 1932 were $22,290,000 and our imports from Switzerland were $12,493,000, leaving a balance of trade in our favor of approximately $10,000,000. This balance of trade in our favor has ranged from $4,000,000 to $8,000,000 in every year since 1928.

Since there are no debts between the Government of Switzerland and the United States, there is obviously no sound economic reason for throwing the balance of trade in the other direction. What explanation is there for these concessions? Perhaps it is to be found in the quota on automobiles. The Swiss quota of 2,406 on American automobiles and trucks was raised to 4,812. In other words, our country made a trade whereby we sold Switzerland 2,406 additional trucks and automobiles and they sell us cheese. The dairy farmer is the forgotten man.

OLEOMARGARINE AND BUTTER SUBSTITUTES

I am indebted to the pamphlet entitled "The Farmer Looks at the Oleomargarine Picture", issued by the National Cooperative Milk Producers' Federation, for the following information. I urge all of you, who have not done so, to read this article.

WHAT IS OLEOMARGARINE?

Oleomargarine is a fatty product sold and used almost entirely as a cheap substitute for butter. It is made of either vegetable oils or animal fats or a combination of the two; and, although it is usually emulsified in milk, it is in no sense a dairy product. Oleomargarine is inferior to butter as a food, deficient in the vitamin content, and lacking in other desirable properties which make butter one of the most valuable parts of the diet. Nevertheless, it is made in imitation of and sold as a direct substitute for butter.

Approximately 80 percent of the oleomargarine manufactured in the United States in the last few years has been manufactured from vegetable or nut oils. The remainder has been made from animal and vegetable oils and fats. Oleomargarine today, therefore, is principally a vegetable product. A typical formula for manufacturing oleomargarine from vegetable oils was made for the Committee on Agriculture by former Representative Brigham. It is as follows:

Eight hundred pounds of coconut oil, 100 pounds of peanut oil, 100 pounds of palm oil. Total, 1,000 pounds of vegetable oils. Add to this 35 pounds of salt and then mulsify the entire mixture in 300 pounds of milk. This formula will produce approximately 1,150 pounds at a cost, based on prices of September 1935, of 9.89 cents per pound. You will note that only 100 pounds of oil come from a domestic product, while 900 pounds come from abroad. How is it possible for the dairy farmer of our country to meet that kind of competition? It is up to us to help solve his problem. At the present time there are three types of oleomargarine manufactured in the United States. One product is a mixture of beef and hog fats with coconut oil, with probably some domestic vegetable oils added. A second product is apparently made almost entirely out of coconut oil, while a third is made almost entirely out of cottonseed oil. Cottonseed oil in the manufacture of oleomargarine has increased during a single year from 12 to 34 percent. I feel that the cotton growers are ruining one of their best markets by supplanting wholesome dairy butter with oleomargarine, because a large quantity of cottonseed meal is consumed yearly by dairy cattle. In 1934 my native State of Wisconsin consumed only $4,000 worth of oleomargarine, while during the same year our cattle consumed $1,200,000 worth of cottonseed meal—a ratio of 30 to 1. Surely it is not sound business to wreck the $1,200,000 worth of business in order to help the $4,000 business. It is to the interest of the South to build up and increase the dairy herds of the North.

HEALTH VALUES

Milk is the best food man has yet discovered. Butter, therefore, contains much of the nutritive value and strength-giving properties of milk. Milk contains many valuable food elements. Two of these are particularly prized—protein of very high quality and butterfat. Butterfat and butter contain many elements necessary as a food, including the all-important vitamin A. The liberal use of dairy products is strongly recommended by all food scientists for children and adults in even the most restricted diets.

Oleomargarine, containing very little milk, has, therefore, very little food value. Particularly true is this of vitamin A. Vitamin A is a necessity in our lives. A lack of it in our food leads to the development of certain eye diseases; to xerophthalmia, a disease found among children of the poorest class; to a breakdown and weakening of cells lining the respiratory, alimentary, and other body tracts, making them more susceptible to infection.

Experiments conducted in scientific laboratories showed that animals fed on butter grew fat and healthy, while those fed on vegetable oils stopped growing, gained no weight, and most of them died.

Of course, one can eat oleomargarine and other butter substitutes made of vegetable oils, but it has no food value. Just like one can eat sawdust and shavings as a substitute for flour made of wheat, but it would not be wholesome and utterly lacking in proteins, vitamin A, and other strength-giving properties. You cannot cheat nature with cheap substitutes.

COMPETITION OF BUTTER AND ITS SUBSTITUTES

Butter and oleomargarine and other butter substitutes are used on bread, buns, biscuits, and notably in cooking. In the kitchen generally and especially in the frying pan, the oil substitutes have made alarming inroads.

I believe oleomargarine is almost as great a menace to the hog industry as it is to the dairy industry. In 1934 over 1,150,000,000 pounds of cooking compounds were produced in the United States, which contained only 2,600,000 pounds of lard, an almost negligible amount, while there was a time when lard, tallow, and butter were exclusively used for cooking.

On the dining-room table butter and its substitutes are also in fierce competition. During the first half of 1934 consumers bought 10 pounds of butter to every 1 pound of oleomargarine, and spent $24 for butter for each dollar spent for oleomargarine. On the other hand, during the first half of 1935 consumers' purchases of butter were only five times as great in terms of pounds and 10 times as great in terms of dollars spent. When the price of butter goes up, or when unemployment increases, the amount of butter sold to the consumer decreases, but the sales of oleomargarine increase. This is due to the difference in price, oleomargarine cost of production being much cheaper. Our problem is to protect the dairy farmer by lessening the price difference and equalizing the competition. This object can be obtained by placing a tax on oleomargarine sufficiently large so that the "spread" in prices is practically wiped out.

The amount of oleomargarine sold last year in the United States was equal to 7,413,431,046 pounds of milk, or the equivalent of the production of 1,482,000 cows. The year before there were 5,060,939,321 pounds of milk, or the equivalent of the production of 1,012,000 cows. These figures are startling and show us the menace our dairy farmer is facing.

In his message to Wisconsin farmers Kenneth W. Hones, of the Farmers Equity Union, said:

> Our main struggle is a dairy program that will put us on a level with other basic commodities. The present dairy prices are a fair example of what they would be if we had our own market for ourselves 12 months in a year and not only 3. These prices will not hold when foreign importation production starts coming in.

Let our slogan be "Home markets for American agriculture." [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL].

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, on page 16 of the bill will be found an appropriation for the enforcement of the Potato Act of 1935, the appropriation consisting of the proceeds arising from taxes imposed by that act, together with the additional sum of $1,250,000. The latter sum, together with the taxes which will be derived from the act, will amount probably to about $1,300,000. Mr. Chairman, unless some member of the committee having precedence offers a similar motion, I shall move during the reading of the bill that this appropriation for the enforcement of the Potato Act of 1935 be struck from the bill. [Applause.]

If it were simply a question of the wisdom of the bill, while I disagreed with the majority who voted for the Potato Act last summer, I would probably in that case be willing that the act and the will of the majority be carried out; but this is not now a question of the wisdom of legislation. Since that time the United States Supreme Court in the A. A. A. case has indicated without question of doubt in my mind—and I do not believe there is a doubt in the mind of anyone here—that the Potato Act of 1935 is unconstitutional and will be so declared when a proper case involving that act reaches the Court.

Therefore, if that is true, any appropriation that we make here is an illegal appropriation of money out of the Treasury of the United States, and I am not going to vote to expend $1,300,000 to enforce an act which is clearly unconstitutional.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes.

Mr. FIESINGER. When we were considering this bill in the last session of Congress, was it not stated here generally that there would be no expense to the Government in connection with the administration of any processing tax?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I believe that statement was made, that the bill would finance itself, although I am not certain about that.

Mr. FIESINGER. I think that statement was made here. The gentleman said that if it had been the will of the majority, he would have gone along with the bill.

Mr. PETTENGILL. I said if it was a question purely of the wisdom of the majority.

Mr. FIESINGER. I regarded the bill unconstitutional and I am sure the gentleman did at that time and voted against it.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes; I voted against the bill.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes.

Mr. LUDLOW. My colleague is an excellent lawyer and a profound student of public affairs. I ask the gentleman whether he has ever known or ever heard of a more vivid and striking illustration of the intrusion of bureaucracy into the rights of the people of this country than is exemplified by this Potato Act.

Mr. PETTENGILL. I think the statutes of this Nation will be searched in vain for anything that approaches it along the line of the gentleman's thought.

Mr. LUDLOW. Then I ask the gentleman if he does not fervently hope that this Congress at this session will do the right thing and repeal that law?

Mr. PETTENGILL. It should be repealed. I call my friend's attention to a statement on page 193 of the hearings, which is a quotation from the President's Budget message:

> Likewise, no estimate for administering the Potato Act has been prepared, since it is believed this act should be amended along lines to be recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture, and a supplemental estimate can then be transmitted.

On that ground, as well as the fact that I believe that this is an illegal appropriation of money, we should defer any appropriation for the enforcement of the act or any act in substitution of it until the act is before us in accordance with the recommendation of the President in his Budget message.

While this matter is not political, and ought not to be such, it ought to be stated to the country that the administration was not in favor of the Potato Act of 1935. Secretary Wallace declared himself against it. He was quoted in the newspapers last fall as saying that in any proper way he could he would see to it that the act was not enforced; so, as I understand it, I am squarely in accord with the views of the administration. And I think that the Democratic Members of this House, who are now being charged before the country by the opposition press and the opposition speakers with having passed the most unpopular act in many years, in justice to ourselves and the administration, ought to take steps ourselves to remove that curse from us at this time.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. I thought the administration was in favor of it and brought it over here and that is the reason I voted for it. I thought the President and the Secretary of Agriculture were in favor of that Potato Act.

Mr. PETTENGILL. The President and Secretary of Agriculture were not in favor of the Potato Act.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. I voted for it because I thought the farmers were going to get some benefit from it.

Mr. PETTENGILL. In any event the President in his Budget message himself recommended no appropriation be made to enforce it.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DONDERO. Just what influence was it that brought that bill before us on this floor at the last session of the Congress?

Mr. PETTENGILL. The gentleman is as fully informed on that subject as I am.

Mr. ENGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I yield.

Mr. ENGEL. If the President was not in favor of it, why did he sign the bill? Why did he not veto it?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I cannot answer for the President, but it was part of a much larger bill. The gentleman knows, and I know, that we are all confronted frequently with a situation where we have to take a whole bill which includes items which we do not want, or reject the entire bill in order to reject items that we are not in favor of.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. We will not violate any committee secrets by stating that this appropriation is in this present bill by the narrow margin of only two votes. Is that not so?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I did not know what the fact was.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, that is the fact; it carried by the narrow margin of two votes.

Mr. PETTENGILL. I did not know that was the fact, but I think it is time for the House of Representatives to assume the responsibility of standing upon the Constitution of the United States until the Constitution is changed by the will of the American people and our powers are extended by them if that be their will.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I yield.

Mr. MAY. In view of the statement which the gentleman just made about standing on the Constitution, what does the gentleman think about the proposition of the A. A. A. decision of the Supreme Court and the effort to get around it by providing subsidies, just exactly as they were under that bill, and calling it "soil erosion", rather than "crop control"?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I will cross that bridge when I come to it, I may say to the gentleman. I have not yet seen the new bill. I should like to say to the gentleman from Kentucky, however, that I am thoroughly in favor of anything that we can do, constitutionally, and can practically administer, to improve the condition of agriculture and bring it into balance with industry. I am in favor of doing it, if we can do it.

However, with reference to potatoes, which are distinct from cotton and wheat, where we can actually count the sheep as they go through the stile of the processing plant, even if the condition of the potato grower is similar to the position of the cotton grower, as far as he is concerned, at the same time this bill is practically incapable of being enforced because the commodity goes to the consumer in exactly the condition as it came out of the ground, and it would lead to the bootlegging of illegal potatoes by millions of people.

Another thing, I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN], who represents a district of a great city, as I understand, potatoes are the poor man's food. It is the staff of life in millions of homes. Why should we now, when they are struggling to get employment in the factories of America, when they are struggling to get wages increased, place upon millions of consumers in the great industrial centers of America a tax upon the very necessity of life? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, the House has always been so generous to me that I certainly would not let any opportunity arise that would not make me equally frank and fair with this body.

I am not here to argue the merits of the potato bill. Much that has been said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] can be successfully refuted, and I may state to him that his own State of Indiana has lately been cooperating wholeheartedly on this measure. The same is true of practically every State in the Union, for the Department tells me that so far as the growers and those affected by the bill are concerned, the opposition, if any, is now more or less negligible. I realize that this bill has been made the football of partisan politics. I realize the untruthful statements that have gone out in some of the press throughout the Nation, but I still say, and you Members who represent potato-growing sections know it, that it is earnestly and ardently desired by the potato farmer, who has been reduced to a state of absolute bankruptcy.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. In just a moment, after I have developed my thought a moment. Now, so much for that.

I frankly admit, after reading the decision of the Supreme Court, that this bill would have no standing before the Court, and it would therefore be declared invalid, were there to be a test case. It is certainly on exactly the same lines as the Bankhead bill and the Kerr-Smith bill. It was my purpose, and I have consulted the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and other members in charge of the bill about it, that when we read the bill I would offer an amendment which I understand is highly satisfactory to them, which entirely disarms and hushes anything that may have been said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] or anyone else. That amendment would be to strike out the language contained in the bill and substitute in lieu thereof this language:

> For the purpose of collecting and disseminating useful information and data with respect to potato production and marketing within the United States, there is hereby appropriated and made available to the Secretary of Agriculture the sum of $1,000,000 for the fiscal year 1936.

Under the A. A. A. they had a personal history on every farmer who was engaged in growing crops covered by the A. A. A. Potatoes were made a basic commodity under the A. A. A. They have full and complete information as to the wheat grower, as to the tobacco grower, as to the corn and peanut growers, and all other growers who are affected by that act, but they do not have this information with respect to potatoes, except for the States of Florida, Texas, California, and, possibly, Louisiana.

They tell me that this information—the collection of these data and the gathering of these statistics—is vital and necessary and will fit in and dovetail with any program that might later be adopted by Congress which would cover other crops as well as potatoes.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Do I understand that the proposed amendment which the gentleman has read, he himself intends to offer as a substitute for the language on page 16 of the bill?

Mr. WARREN. That is correct. The gentleman will see the amendment contains nothing for the enforcement of the act, and this will carry the Department up to April 1 only; and this is all that will be asked for.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. GILCHRIST. What has the gentleman to say as to whether his amendment would be held in order if an objection were made to it?

Mr. WARREN. I may say to the gentleman from Iowa that I have investigated the matter and certainly do not think any point of order against the amendment could be sustained. The gentleman must remember that the law is now upon the statute books and is presumed to be constitutional. It provides for the gathering of statistics, and the appropriation in this bill would be for that purpose.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Would not this be legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. WARREN. It would not, not in any respect, because at three different places the bill provides for the gathering of statistics. Aside from that, and regardless of the bill under discussion, there is already authority of law for the Secretary of Agriculture to gather such information.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman tell the House whether the taxes imposed by the law would provide a fund in addition to the money authorized by his amendment?

Mr. WARREN. That will be stricken out under the amendment.

Mr. DONDERO. Under the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. WARREN. Under the amendment I am offering that would be entirely stricken out.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. LUDLOW. I may say for the information of the gentleman that the amount collected to date is $27,000.

Mr. WARREN. Reverting now to a statement made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL], I challenge the gentleman to find anywhere in the RECORD that I ever said—and I do not recall anybody else ever saying—that this bill would finance itself. It was recognized that it would be financed by an appropriation out of the Treasury, as there have been appropriations for other crops since the gentleman has been a Member of Congress, notably in the case of cotton. It was felt that here was a crop worth $300,000,000 annually in value for which nothing had been done, that for 1 year only it could be financed out of the Treasury.

I yield now to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. I had desired to ask a question of the gentleman with reference to a statement he made at the beginning of his remarks. Perhaps I am going over ancient history now, but the gentleman stated that the farmers in the potato-growing regions were overwhelmingly in support of this legislation. I may remind the gentleman—and I know this from personal contact and experience—that the Association of Potato Growers of the State of New York, which State produces a very large tonnage of potatoes, in a poll voted in the ratio of 70 to 30 against the Potato Control Act.

Mr. WARREN. I said this, and I repeat it: That I am informed by officials of the Department that within the last month the bulk of the opposition—and I will include New York in it—has practically disappeared, and that the farmers were cooperating. One of the reasons, of course—and we will talk a little ancient history now—I am sure one of the reasons for that was the persuasive eloquence of the distinguished gentleman from New York, who has just interrogated me and who openly, so I am informed, went around and scoured the country preaching nullification. Maybe that had something to do with it, but that is now beyond the mark. I have frankly admitted my views, and I am offering to strike out that section.

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that I come from an agricultural State, Nebraska; and our farmers are absolutely opposed to this bill. Repeatedly I have been accosted and asked, "Well, LUCKEY, did you vote for that crazy potato bill?" No; I voted against it.

When I came down here a few weeks ago I prepared a bill to repeal this Potato Act. Then the Supreme Court ruled and I thought we were through with the Potato Act, but if we are not through with it I shall introduce this bill and push for the repeal of the Potato Act.

Mr. WARREN. Well, we are talking about something that is now behind us. So far as my section is concerned and so far as the neighboring State of Virginia is concerned, I know that the farmers are wholeheartedly and unanimously in favor of it; and that the decision of the Supreme Court on the A. A. A. comes to them as a heavy blow.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Should the amendment which the gentleman has suggested be adopted, I understand the $1,000,000 provided would be spent by the Department of Agriculture under authority of the existing potato bill.

Mr. WARREN. It could be spent under that as the act is presumed to be valid, and it could also be spent under authority of existing law that gives the Secretary of Agriculture such power.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. A bill which the gentleman concedes to be unconstitutional.

Mr. WARREN. I have attempted to make the distinction.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. That is, in gathering information and data from the farmers all over this country they would be clothed with authority solely on a bill which the gentleman concedes to be unconstitutional.

Mr. WARREN. While the act is still presumed to be constitutional until the Congress or the courts have acted, this amendment does not depend at all for its parliamentary correctness upon the Potato Act, as an appropriation for this purpose is entirely warranted under the general powers of the Department of Agriculture that have been unquestioned from its inception and continuously exercised.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PETTENGILL. I have read the gentleman's proposed amendment, and I note that he makes no reference at all to the Potato Act of 1935. I therefore wonder if an appropriation of a million dollars for the purpose of gathering this information might stand on its own feet without being predicated upon an unconstitutional act?

Mr. WARREN. I am positive that the amendment as drawn is in order.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I think we spent some $3,000,000 last year in taking a farm census. If I am not mistaken, one of the questions submitted by the census gatherers under that bill requested a list of the various crops. I am wondering why we cannot get the information from this list without spending additional money?

Mr. WARREN. I am told that the information cannot be ascertained from those statistics because they did not ask the information desired and that had nothing whatever to do with the sale or marketing of potatoes. The amendment I propose is both agreeable and satisfactory to those in charge of the bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, our able colleague the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF] has given a correct picture of the disastrous effect of these various trade agreements upon the dairy industry. The House probably knows, and if it does not know I wish to emphasize the fact at this time that these treaties are made under almost the sole auspices of Dr. Francis B. Sayre, a "free trade" professor. I stated on the floor the other day that Professor Sayre was an international economist and therefore philosophically unfitted for this post which he holds as arbiter over American agriculture and American industry. I did not know at that time that Professor Sayre was high in the graces of various foreign governments and that he has been decorated by foreign governments more frequently than any other man in the American public service. I wish to read a list of those decorations which the supreme arbiter over American agriculture and industry has received from various foreign governments. They are as follows:

Created Phya Kalyan Maitri by the King of Siam, 1924; awarded the Grand Cross of Crown of Siam, 1924; Grand Cross of White Elephant, Siam, 1925; Grand Officier Order of Orange-Nassau, Netherlands, 1925; Knight Grand Commander, Chula Chom Klao, Siam, 1926; Commander, Order of the Dannebrog, first class, Denmark, 1926; Grand Cross, Royal Order of Isabel la Catolica, Spain, 1926; Grand Cross of Order of Christ, Portugal, 1926; Commander, Order of St. Olav, first class, Norway, 1927; Grand Cross, Order of Crown of Italy, 1927; Grand Officier de la Lexion d'Honneur, France, 1929.

In addition to these decorations, which speak most vigorously concerning the successful internationalism of Professor Sayre, it is interesting to know that he has written a book entitled "Experiment in International Administration."

The inference from all this, Mr. Chairman, is that not only Professor Sayre's head but his heart is across the seas. His allegiance is not to America, not to the American farmer, or to the American manufacturer. His allegiance is to all the world, and in these days, when, unfortunately internationalism is so vigorous throughout the world, it is regrettable that we should have denatured Americanism at the helm in the making of these treaties which go to the economic and cultural well-being of our people, and to the very existence of America itself. In such a position, may I say to the House that Professor Sayre is more dangerous to American agriculture and American industry than all the rest of the administration "brain trusters" combined, from Wallace to Tugwell and on down.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Is it not a violation of the American Constitution to receive these decorations without the consent of Congress? And will the gentleman from New York permit me to recall article I section 9 of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that "No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States, and no person holding any office of profit or trust under them shall, without the consent of the Congress, accept of any present, emolument, office, or title of any kind whatever, from any king, prince, or foreign state."

Foreign governments are hanging all sorts of decorations, ribbons, and what nots upon uncounted numbers of so-called Americans. It seems to me this helps very materially to soften the Americanism of these individuals and tends to make them foreign-minded. In my opinion we ought to make an end of this.

Mr. CULKIN. I do not think that applies here because Professor Sayre entered the international field years ago, and for his internationalism received these different decorations, prior to his entering the American public service.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KENNEY].

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised to hear the gentleman's reference to Professor Sayre. I, as one Member of this House, would have to learn more facts than the general implications that are made by the gentleman before I could believe there was any foundation in fact for the statements of the gentleman.

I went to college with Professor Sayre. He is a graduate of Williams College, than which there is no better in this land. [Applause.] Never has a graduate of that college, in my time or any other time, given allegiance to any country other than his own while he held himself out to be and was an American citizen. Sayre is as good an American citizen as any Member of this Congress. He studied and absorbed the principles and traditions of Williams College—fundamental Americanism—under President Garfield, a son of President Garfield, a former President of the United States. Francis B. Sayre is grounded in Americanism.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, if this were a court of law, I would move to strike out the statement of the last witness as being purely a self-serving declaration and incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial.

I prescribe for my distinguished friend from New Jersey, for whom I have great admiration, a reading of Professor Sayre's book entitled "Experiments in International Administration", and also a reading of his recent book, "America Must Act." If he reads these he will, I am sure, agree with me that we should have a vigorous national at the helm in the making of these treaties prior to the Supreme Court setting them aside. The distinguished gentleman from New Jersey will also agree, after such a course of reading, that Professor Sayre, with his peculiar views, is no man to make over America. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN].

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to confine my remarks to that part of the pending deficiency appropriation bill which, on page 16, provides an appropriation of $1,250,000 and certain taxes for the enforcement of the potato bill. I am very happy that I was preceded on this floor by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], and I want to congratulate the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] on his statesmanship in proposing an amendment to cut out the appropriation to enforce the Potato Act. If Mr. WARREN had not offered to sponsor such an amendment, I would have offered an amendment to strike out all appropriations of money for the enforcement of the Potato Act.

A study of the A. A. A. decision of the Supreme Court should convince everyone that the Potato Act is unconstitutional; and now that the sponsor of the Potato Act, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] has so stated on the floor of the House, there should not be anyone in the Congress who would deny it.

Inasmuch as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] himself will sponsor such an amendment, I do not believe it will be very difficult to carry the amendment, and there is no need of making any argument for it. However, I should like to add to the amendment which Mr. WARREN expects to offer a provision that no appropriation heretofore made or carried in this bill shall in any manner be used to enforce the provisions of the potato bill. I believe that the appropriation that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] desires for the study and collection of information and data on the production and marketing of potatoes can be passed without any regard to the provisions of the Potato Control Act. However, this is not enough. Now that we know that the act is unconstitutional, why should we wait until it goes to the Supreme Court.

Even before the decision of the Supreme Court was rendered in the A. A. A. case on January 6, I introduced a bill, H. R. 9665, to repeal the Potato Act, and I hope the gentleman from North Carolina will join me in passing this bill. Our hands are tied, Mr. Chairman, when we deal with an appropriation bill; but I hope we can have the unanimous support of the gentlemen who are particularly interested in the Potato Act to repeal that act; and after we repeal that act, if they have any proposition to make in regard to potatoes, we shall certainly be willing to give it most careful and sympathetic consideration.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I will be very pleased to yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. WARREN. Along the same line of reasoning of the gentleman, would he be in favor of repealing the Guffey coal bill?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I may say to the gentleman that neither the A. A. A. decision nor the N. R. A. decision passes at all on the question of the constitutionality of the Guffey coal bill.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman means that in his opinion, they do not.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. That is my opinion, but not only mine. Lawyers who have studied the question have held that in view of certain dicta in the majority opinion in the A. A. A. case, the Guffey bill may well stand the test of the Supreme Court.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I will be very pleased to yield to my distinguished colleague.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that the potato bill did a great deal of good for the poor farmer?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. The potato bill has not yet been fully enforced, but it was reported to us that it would help the farmers and the consumers, and I know the gentleman from North Carolina had the best intentions toward the farmers, as well as the city consumers, when he proposed that bill.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman is entirely incorrect with respect to the enforcement of that bill. It has been enforced and all the Florida crop was sold under it.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. It has been enforced with respect to Florida and California, and that is what prompts me to say to the gentleman from North Carolina that we must have a provision in this bill, in additon to his amendment, which will prohibit further enforcement of a statute which he considers himself unconstitutional.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I yield.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Is it not also a fact that the ones who were opposed to the potato bill were the big chain stores?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. It has been so represented to us, and that was one of the arguments advanced for its passage.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. That is one of the reasons I voted for the bill. I believed it would benefit the poor farmers.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS].

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, in his endeavor to launch his one-man campaign for the position of Vice President on the Republican ticket this fall, Ex-Governor Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, has requested Senator BORAH to conduct an investigation regarding politics in relief. According to the Associated Press, Ex-Governor Pinchot, once named by Ex-Senator David A. Reed as a "common scold", and by Attorney General Charles Margiotti as "the man on the flying trapeze", both titles being appropriate, says, "This embezzlement of public funds for politics is a fraud upon both the man on relief and the taxpayer."

Mr. Pinchot, the ultravirtuous, under whose political skirts hovered such characters as Coyne, Clark, McClure, and Salus, all State senators under his regime, all of whom have either been indicted, convicted, or disbarred for miscarriage of justice! Mr. Pinchot, that archdeacon of nonpartisanship, under whose regime the relief situation of Pennsylvania was the most gigantic political racket ever known! What unmitigated gall Mr. Pinchot must have to criticize work relief in Pennsylvania, when both the reemployment and the relief are functioning under the same set-up which he effected while Governor of Pennsylvania.

What a man to cry "wolf" when under his administration more than 100 of the 114 trustees of the 14 State teachers' colleges were Republicans. Mr. Pinchot, who dismissed men who had been responsible for the splendid system of game conservation and restoration of Pennsylvania, men who had given their time and efforts to their State for $1 per year, because they disagreed with him upon prohibition. Mr. Pinchot, under whose administration it was impossible to get an honest count of the votes cast in Pennsylvania. Mr. Pinchot, under whose administration the State highway employees were ordered out en masse to work on election day to deliver Republican votes to the polls in State cars.

Mr. Pinchot, who while Governor of Pennsylvania was a candidate at the primaries for United States Senator in 1934 and had such orders as the following issued, the originals of which are in Harrisburg:

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA,
DEPARTMENT OF HIGHWAYS.

DIRECTIONS FOR RECEPTION FOR GOVERNOR AT WILKES-BARRE, PA., ON THURSDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1934

1. All cars will meet at the Lackawanna County courthouse at Scranton, Pa., on the Adams Avenue side, at 6:30 p. m.
2. Report personally to superintendent, or assistant superintendent.
3. Caravan will proceed to Luzerne County courthouse, Wilkes-Barre.
4. Reception for Governor Pinchot will be held at Hotel Sterling in Wilkes-Barre at 7:30 p. m.
5. All caretakers, foremen, pushers, timekeepers, truck drivers, rented truck owners, office help, and assistant superintendent will attend this meeting.
6. The names of all your men and any other persons making up your party are to be submitted in writing to this office on Friday, October 5.
7. All manner of work will be shut down at noon on Thursday in order that all may be on hand to accompany pilgrimage to Wilkes-Barre.

An order which is as exact, explicit, and mandatory as the battle order of an army corps. Senator BORAH should remember that in the general election in Pennsylvania, Pinchot's battle cry was, "I cannot stand GUFFEY." Senator BORAH should also remember that the election returns of the preceding primaries had proven that the people of Pennsylvania could and would not stand Pinchot, and the returns of the general election proved that Pennsylvania could and would stand GUFFEY. Clearly, Governor Pinchot's latest utterances show him to still deserve the titles "common scold" and "the man on the flying trapeze."

Why, under Mr. Pinchot's regime no man could secure a job of laboring on the State roads unless he signed a blank obligating himself to support the policies of Mr. Pinchot.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Is this the same Governor Pinchot the gentleman speaks of who after a police officer in Cresson, Camden County, had raided a miner's house and found a couple of drinks of whisky in a bottle and then assaulted the man and afterward was convicted in the criminal court and sentenced by Judge Evans to the penitentiary, is this the same Governor who immediately pardoned him and then the man went to Allegheny County and killed a man?

Mr. FADDIS. I do not recollect that incident, but many such occurred while Mr. Pinchot was Governor.

Mr. DORSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. DORSEY. Is it not true that the party he criticizes as the head of this bunch was appointed upon Governor Pinchot's recommendation?

Mr. FADDIS. Yes.

Mr. MORITZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. MORITZ. Is it not true that this Governor Pinchot faked his way through two elections as the foe of utilities and then turned out to be the best friend they ever had?

Mr. FADDIS. Yes; he was successful in it.

Mr. CREAL. Is it not a fact that there were numerous convictions of fraud and corruption under the administration of Governor Pinchot and has he ever repudiated the connection?

Mr. FADDIS. Not that I know of.

Mr. BOLAND. Is it not a fact that under the administration of Governor Pinchot there were padded pay rolls, and that trucks were paid for that never were furnished?

Mr. FADDIS. I understand so. It has been generally told, and has never been successfully refuted, Mr. Pinchot, in a recent letter to President Roosevelt, charges that Edward Jones, W. P. A. administrator for Pennsylvania, went so far as to permit the employment of two men in the W. P. A. statistical area of Philadelphia through a private employment agency. The fact is, however, that Mr. Jones had no jurisdiction over that matter, and that the man in charge of it was appointed by Mr. Hopkins upon the recommendation of Mr. Pinchot when he was Governor of Pennsylvania, and is a holdover from that time. By his indictment of this man Mr. Pinchot has indicted himself.

Clearly Governor Pinchot's latest utterances show him to still be entitled to deserve the titles "common scold" and "the man on the flying trapeze."

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Is it not true that this Governor Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, was elected Governor and held that high office because of the billingsgate lambasting that he gave the Republican organization in Pennsylvania?

Mr. FADDIS. That is true; and that is why I want to warn the Republicans that when he starts a one-man campaign he is a dangerous man. Twice he has defeated the Republican machine in Pennsylvania in a one-man campaign, and he is liable to defeat the national Republican machine in the same way.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Is it not true that this Governor Pinchot is about to run away with the Pennsylvania delegation to the Republican National Convention in support of Senator BORAH?

Mr. FADDIS. It seems that way. He has always been a foxy politician.

Mr. GINGERY. And is it not true that Governor Pinchot never lived in Pennsylvania, but that he held a residence in Washington?

Mr. FADDIS. That is true, except when he has State political aspirations. He is a resident of Washington at the present time, I see by the papers.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, apparently my Democratic colleagues from Pennsylvania are having a field day today. Lest, however, there be any misunderstanding either on the part of good, stanch Republicans on this side of the House or on the part of any of the brethren from other States on the Democratic side of the House, I direct the attention of the membership to the fact that my genial colleague's indictment is an indictment against Governor Pinchot, and it is not an indictment against regular Republicans in Pennsylvania.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. Not at present. May I further admonish those of you who seem to take a peculiar delight in the statements of the gentleman from Pennsylvania with respect to the late Governor, that during the early days of the present national administration the former Governor of Pennsylvania, Mr. Pinchot, was a very welcome guest, and there seemed to be much in common between the President and the former Governor of Pennsylvania? If there are any causes for complaint with respect to the Governor's tenure, so far as C. W. A. or P. W. A. or any of those machinations and movements looking toward the gathering of the clan at the Lucerne courthouse, referred to by my distinguished Democratic colleague, they were political lessons that were probably learned from his intimacy with his Democratic friend. I am also convinced that the present incumbent of the Governor's chair in Harrisburg has certainly far exceeded the wildest ambitions of the former Governor with respect to such movements and machinations. Now it is not a custom to have highway workmen contribute only at election time.

The program now is that the contributions must be made monthly. Otherwise there be a chance of either dismissal of the employee or that he might die so that the funds that should fall into the Democratic coffers would not be forthcoming. I stand here today well satisfied that anything my genial friend said who spoke immediately preceding me, was purely a personal indictment against Mr. Pinchot and that he directed nothing against regular Republicanism in Pennsylvania.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I must always yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BOLAND. I will not embarrass the gentleman at all.

Mr. DITTER. Oh, I have no fear of that. He is too gracious to attempt it, and he could not if he would.

Mr. BOLAND. The gentleman referred to Mr. Pinchot as the "late" Governor. I presume he meant politically?

Mr. DITTER. The "former" Governor would have been better.

Mr. BOLAND. But the gentleman did say the "late" Governor. I think he meant politically?

Mr. DITTER. May I answer the gentleman by saying that with respect to the present Governor it is not a matter of being late, but never there. And, by the way, may I say further to my genial friend from the coal regions, that he knows that I happen to be the present Governor's Congressman.

Mr. BOLAND. But the gentleman will admit that he is probably the best Governor that the State of Pennsylvania has ever had.

Mr. DITTER. Only in the minds of those who have been deluded like my friend or who have no sense of real values.

Mr. BOLAND. And yet I imagine a majority of the people of Pennsylvania appreciate the fact that Governor George Earle is the best Governor Pennsylvania has ever had.

Mr. DITTER. And may I say that of course we are frequently subject to certain powers that determine what our opinions may be, and that I recognize the gentleman is required to express fealty and pledge loyalty to the present Governor, and that he is not expressing his real personal opinion.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. Yes.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that Governor Earle has sponsored more humanitarian legislation than many of his predecessors, such as old-age pensions and unemployment insurance?

Mr. DITTER. In my opinion, the outstanding and real humanitarian legislation in Pennsylvania—and I believe the gentleman will agree with me in this—was when Pennsylvania started on a program of workmen's compensation when in many States workmen's-compensation laws were neither popular nor approved.

I stand here alone today as a Republican from Pennsylvania. [Laughter.] I am willing to accept all of the challenges that come from my Democratic brethren, but I want to warn them that they should talk during this session, for certainly their tenure is in danger as far as next year is concerned, when Pennsylvania is going to be Republican.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Oh, no; it will not.

Mr. DITTER. May I say to the gentleman with respect to the humanitarian legislation that I believe the present Governor might have made gestures and overtures for the purpose of political expediency, trying to win around to him those who were prompted by humanitarian appeals.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. I should like to make a statement here.

Mr. DITTER. I hope the gentleman will not take all my time.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. I will see that the gentleman gets more time. I can prove and substantiate the statement I made. For example, let us take the pension for the blind in the State of Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania has one of the greatest laws for pensions for the blind in the United States, and it came under the Democrats, although I will say the Republicans supported the bill, but Governor Earle was the man who sponsored the bill.

Mr. DITTER. Now, I wish the gentleman would make his speech in his own time. I will answer the gentleman by saying that probably even with reference to the present Governor it might be said that "some good might even come out of Nazareth."

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. DITTER. I do not have much time.

Earlier in the day the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] sought to indicate to the House a connection between communistic efforts and character education in the District of Columbia. To my mind, there is absolutely no connection between the two. The only basis on which the gentleman presented that plea to the House was the basis that the man who is one of the lecturers here in the District happened to be identified, in a lecturing capacity, with one of the universities of Moscow. The gentleman indicated that there was the possibility of a new philosophy of education being taught under Dr. Ballou's direction. Nowhere in his remarks and, to my mind, nowhere in the hearings, is there any warrant for claiming that the character-education program in the District of Columbia is in any way tied up with the communistic program. I am in hearty accord with the gentleman, as far as his campaign and crusade against communism is concerned. I take no issue with him on that, but I do take issue with him when he tries to indicate that character education in the District has no value, on the ground that it has a communistic taint. I will be with him all the way through on his program of anti-communism, but I differ with him when he definitely tries to lay at Dr. Ballou's door, in connection with his character-education program, any communistic efforts. Would that the distinguished gentleman from Texas were as zealous in removing communistic philosophy from the program of the New Deal as he is in his efforts in the District of Columbia schools.

Now, to direct my attention to that which I really intended to say when I was allotted my time before this field day of Pinchotism broke forth.

The deficiency appropriation bill now before the House includes an appropriation of $1,250,000 to the Secretary of Agriculture for carrying into effect the provisions of the notorious Potato Act of 1935. Because of the widespread and vociferous objections to the attempted curtailment of potato production by Federal fiat, doubt was expressed for a time of the advisability of attempting an enforcement of the legislation. It was thought that a policy might be pursued with this measure similar to the one taken by Postmaster General Farley in nullifying the provisions of the Public Utility Holding Company Act. For certain obvious reasons the Postmaster General decided that it would not be expedient to compel a compliance with certain mandatory provisions of the utility measure, and by formal order announced that he did not intend to comply with the requirements of the statute. While the unique and unprecedented nullification of an act of Congress by a Cabinet member, probably with Executive approval, startled those who still cherished the hope that we lived under a government of laws and not a government of men, nevertheless it was urged by some of the New Deal strategists to venture a similar hazardous course on the Potato Act and nullify it rather than invite the wrath and condemnation of the army of potato protestants. Apparently a deaf ear was turned to the storm of righteous indignation raised by the defenders of a "sterile morality of individualism" in potato growing, and the Triple A, more recently labeled a "cripple A" by the Supreme Court, determined to exercise in the potato field the prerogatives and powers of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. It was decreed that potatoes must be laid side by side with wheat and corn and cotton and suckling pigs on the altar of the gods of rigid regulation and regimentation.

We are now called upon to appropriate more than a million dollars to administer for 2 months the obnoxious and denounced Potato Act, and for the collection of taxes under that publicly rejected invasion of personal rights. Were my objections to the appropriation limited to the protests voiced in my district against regimenting potato growers, I might be confronted with the argument that the Potato Act is a part of the existing law and that Congress should provide the means to prevent nullifications whether by Postmasters General or Secretaries of Agriculture. In this case such an argument, however, is untenable. My objection to the appropriation goes beyond the question of potato control. It is based on the propriety of appropriating public money for purposes which are clearly indicated to be unconstitutional. In the light of the opinion of the Supreme Court delivered by Justice Roberts on January 6 of this year, no reasonable and intelligent man can have any doubt of the fate awaiting the Potato Act. It is unconstitutional.

The act is a part of the general agricultural program of the present administration. It operates on the theory of curtailing production to increase prices. It attempts to justify the proposition that the less you produce the more you are worth. Mr. J. B. Hutson, Director of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, appeared before the committee to attempt to justify the appropriation. In spite of the efforts of the Director to deny that the Potato Act sought to control the production of potatoes, its purpose is plainly manifest. In fact, he admitted that an allotment is made to a farmer of the potatoes which he may produce during a given period and that he is required to pay the tax on all potatoes over the allotment. As was well said by the chairman of the committee, "It is an effort to regulate production by a tax."

Certainly the words of Justice Roberts in the Agricultural Adjustment Act case apply with equal force here:

> The statute not only avows an aim foreign to the procurement of revenue for the support of government, but by its operation shows the exaction laid upon processors to be the necessary means for the intended control of agricultural production.

A further reading of this convincing opinion brings before us these significant statements applicable here, as in the case before the Court when the opinion was rendered:

> The powers of taxation and appropriation extend only to matters of national as distinguished from local welfare. * * * The act invades the reserved rights of the States. It is a statutory plan to regulate and control agricultural production, a matter beyond the powers delegated to the Federal Government. The tax, the appropriation of the funds raised, and the direction for their disbursement are but parts of the plan. They are but means to an unconstitutional end.

The memory of the self-assertiveness of the American people when the Potato Act was passed and the vehement declarations opposing the measure which were heard on all sides lends added force to that part of the opinion bearing on the question of the voluntary cooperation of those upon whom the act seeks to forge its chains:

> The regulation is not in fact voluntary. The farmer, of course, may refuse to comply, but the price of such refusal is the loss of benefits. The amount offered is intended to be sufficient to exert pressure on him to agree to the proposed regulation.
>
> The power to confer or withhold unlimited benefits is the power to coerce or destroy * * *. It is clear that the Department of Agriculture has properly described the plan as one to keep a noncooperating minority in line. This is coercion by economic pressure * * *. At best, it is a scheme for purchasing with Federal funds submission to Federal regulation of a subject reserved to the States * * *. An appropriation to be expended by the United States under contracts calling for violation of a State law clearly would offend the Constitution. Is a statute less objectionable which authorizes expenditures of Federal moneys to induce action in a field in which the United States has no power to intermeddle? The Congress cannot invade State jurisdiction to compel individual action; no more can it purchase such action * * *. Congress has no power to enforce its commands on the farmer to the ends sought by the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

What justification can be found for the appropriation of more than a million dollars for clearly unconstitutional activities by a governmental agency for the next 2 months? How much it would require for a year's unconstitutional excursion in the fields of potato growing can be readily calculated.

The possibilities of profligacy and extravagance in connection with the administration and enforcement of the Potato Act can best be ascertained by a reference to the hearings. The Director made the startling confession that the probable revenue from the measure would be $200,000 for a year, and that the cost for only a fraction of a year to collect this amount would be a million dollars. It was roughly estimated that the cost might reach $10,000,000 a year. The estimate for the year, however, is not before us. The request for $1,250,000 for 2 months is before us. What are our duties? Have we an obligation to those who provide the funds for the Public Treasury, the taxpayers? Have we so lost our realization of values in talking about billions that an unconstitutional appropriation of $1,250,000 makes no impression upon us?

No reason or excuse can be found to justify this appropriation. It has no place in the present appropriation bill. It is a gratuity to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration for the purpose of raising false hopes in the hearts of the farmers, and to continue in office a retinue of faithful political appointees where civil-service status is not a requisite. It contemplates $10,000,000 to be spent annually for unconstitutional interference with the personal rights of the people. It is the cost of maintaining and operating just another extravagant experiment.

We have a duty, an obligation, to reject this raid on the Treasury of the United States by eliminating $1,250,000 for potato control from this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation bill carries $1,250,000 to carry out the provisions of the Potato Act of 1935. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], who is the author of the potato bill, states that he offered an amendment striking out the $1,250,000 and substituting therefor $1,000,000.

Mr. BREWSTER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. BREWSTER. The gentleman said, as I understood him, "an additional million dollars." Did the gentleman understand that it was in substitution for the $1,250,000?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes. The amendment by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] proposes to substitute $1,000,000 for the study of the potato and potato business.

In going through my district last year I spoke at many places and met a great many people. I received many inquiries from individuals and from audiences as to how I had voted on the potato-tax bill. I voted against it, and so stated. I do not know of any measure that has been passed since I have been a Member of Congress that has been so unpopular in my district with the farmers and the people generally as this potato bill. At the time it was up for consideration in the House last summer I could not see how it could be constitutional. It seems to me that a casual reading of the Constitution would convince anyone of its unconstitutionality. Furthermore, I could not see how it could serve any useful purpose.

The great Federal Government, in violation of the Constitution, disregarded the rights of the citizens in giving a lot of bureaucrats the right to say whether or not any citizen could raise a few potatoes without first going before some Government officer and making a declaration as to what land and how much he intended to plant to potatoes, and get a license from this bureaucrat to do so. Now if any farmer, gardener, or little truck-patch man or woman should fail to secure such license and produces more than 5 bushels of potatoes for sale and should attempt to sell more than 5 bushels, he or she would come under the condemnation of this fantastic and obnoxious law, and potato growers under the law would be required to put their potatoes in containers of certain shapes and dimensions and place a stamp thereon, and if the potato raiser should violate this law he would be subject to a heavy fine and prison sentence. Not only that but the person who bought his potatoes would be subject to the same fine, and furthermore, a person knowing of any violation of this law by the potato growers, or by the person who bought potatoes would also be subject to a heavy fine and prison sentence.

In all the history of this country no such fantastic, unfair measure was ever put through Congress. It not only violated the constitutional rights of the citizens of this country, but was ridiculous to the extreme. It was well known before the recent decision of the Supreme Court on the A. A. A. that this act is unconstitutional. It is now admitted by all that whenever this measure comes before the Supreme Court it will be knocked into a cocked hat.

My friend from North Carolina, Mr. WARREN, by his amendment, wants Congress to authorize the expenditure of a million dollars to investigate the potato and potato business. The Department of Agriculture has been investigating and advising about the potato and potato business for many, many years. During my years of service here bulletins have always been available on every feature of potato growing and potato business. We are now taking an agricultural census, spending a tremendous sum of money, giving employment to thousands and thousands of good Democratic politicians. I am sure that they have and will inquire about the potato business. The Department of Agriculture was so well informed about the potato business that it recently was able to make allotments for every State in the Union under this fool Potato Act.

This million dollars is taking that much of the taxpayers' money to give more jobs to the bureaucrats and Democratic politicians. We are spending $12,000,000 a day more than we are taking in in the way of taxes and other revenues. In other words, the Government is going in debt more than $12,000,000 every day. The Government deficits are growing by leaps and bounds. It amounts to approximately $4,000,000,000 a year; yet here is a proposal to throw another million dollars at the birds. Think of it: the New Dealers pushing through Congress this unconstitutional act providing for a tax of 45 cents on the bushel. If this should be allowed to stand, about the next move would be to require each potato to be wrapped in tissue paper or enclosed in celophane. This ridiculous, fantastic measure gives the country some idea of the extent we are being carried by the follies of the "brain trusters" of this administration.

DISABLED VETERANS ARE BEING NEGLECTED

There is another matter to which I desire to call attention in this bill. Some time ago the Federal Government erected a neuropsychiatric hospital at Lexington, Ky., to take care of the mental cases of veterans in Kentucky. This hospital made provision for only 256 beds. It was soon filled. It now has 286 disabled veterans—30 more than its capacity. There are approximately 400 other disabled veterans in Kentucky who require this treatment and care.

Mr. C. N. Florence, chairman of the hospital committee of the American Legion of Kentucky, in a letter to me urged that the capacity of this facility be increased from 260-bed institution to that of a 560-bed facility. Enlargement of the facility at Lexington was likewise urged by Mrs. John Gilmour, president, American Legion Auxiliary, Department of Kentucky; Mr. G. Lee McClain, of the Kentucky Disabled Ex-Service Men's Board; Man O'War Post; and many other veterans' organizations of this state have been strongly urging this same relief for the veterans at this facility at Lexington.

I am advised that there are now more than 100 insane veterans in Kentucky on the hospital waiting list. There are more than 400 insane veterans in Kentucky in State institutions because there is no room for them in the veterans' hospital. It can be seen at once the urgent need of the enlargement of the facility at Lexington for the care of our insane veterans. We have had this matter up a number of times with the Veterans' Administration, and from what was said by them we were lead to believe that this deficiency bill would carry an appropriation that would take care of this situation. It has been pointed out that additional beds are being supplied at the hospital at Danville, Ill., but that institution serves a number of States, and the proposed addition there will not take care of the insane veterans of those States. The Lexington, Ky., facility is the smallest of its kind of any State in the Union.

We must not neglect those who defended us and who are not now mentally capable of taking care of themselves. May I strongly urge those who are in charge of these appropriation bills and may I also strongly urge the Veterans' Administration to provide this needed relief at Lexington, Ky.

I wish to point out another matter that I have discovered. I found a number of instances in my district where the insane veterans had married some years ago. At the time they became insane they had wives and children. These veterans, being totally and permanently disabled, under the law are allowed $30 per month. The families of the veterans to which I refer own no property and have no means of earning or providing support, except what they may receive of the veteran's pension of $30 per month.

It was brought to my attention that the Veterans' Administration requires the clothing of these insane veterans to be paid for out of this $30 per month. In one particular case the authorities at the facility at Lexington had bought two suits of clothes within a period of 6 or 8 months. Each of these suits of clothes took up almost a month's pension. The cost of the other clothing was very considerable, so that very little was left for the wife and children, and they must go without food, clothing, and shelter, or be provided for out of relief funds, and because of the fact that the veteran draws a pension they cannot secure relief. I cannot understand why an insane man should require so many suits of clothes. If he does, this great Government of ours ought to provide for clothing and not take these few dollars away from the poor wives and young children. I understand that the Veterans' Administration and those in charge of these hospitals insist they are forced to do this because of the Economy Act and the regulations issued thereunder by the President.

The administration and our Democratic friends in control of the committees dealing with these problems should report a measure that will correct this condition. This neglect of the insane veterans of Kentucky and their families should be corrected at the earliest date possible.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. The Democrats no doubt feel that Kentucky is in the bag, so why should they spend any money in Kentucky when there are so many States that are not safely in the bag?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. At some future time I shall give the facts and tell how the Democrats got it in the bag last fall by relief money, bribery, and intimidation.

Mr. KNUTSON. Whoever heard of giving bait to a fish after it was in the boat?

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. MORITZ. The gentleman is not blaming all his difficulties entirely on the Democrats is he?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Why, yes.

Mr. MORITZ. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] voted for the potato bill, as did Mr. BREWSTER. There is no more bitter enemy of the Democratic Party than Mr. KNUTSON.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. However that may be, the Republicans are not responsible for this obnoxious potato-tax bill. The Republicans never would have conceived anything so foolish as that. The potato-tax bill came from the "brain trusters" and not the Republicans. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it is with a great deal of hesitancy that I give even the appearance of torturing this subject which has been discussed by several of the members of the committee; that is, the subject of the lowly spud.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief observation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Does the gentleman believe that the eyes of the potatoes of the Nation are now upon us? [Laughter.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; and they are full of tears. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, it is true, as the gentleman from North Carolina has stated, that I protested against this enactment publicly upon more than one occasion during the recent autumn months. My protest was on all fours with the protest which I made futilely here on the floor of the House when the Bankhead cotton-control bill was before us. I have not attempted to discuss the constitutional feature. My opposition to this sort of legislation, I may say, is instinctive. It arises, perhaps, from my sense of rebellion against the employment of force by the Government against a citizen who is endeavoring to earn an honest living. Whether the Government has such power, I, a layman, am not competent to say. I very much doubt it; but whether it has the power or not, I shall ever protest against its employment.

Let us look at this law which is upon the statute books. I am not content to wait for a decision by the Supreme Court. Under its provisions, if I recollect them correctly, no person in the United States may produce and sell more than 5 bushels of potatoes in this next crop year without the permission of the Secretary of Agriculture. Permission, under the terms of the act, is to be evidenced by the granting of an allotment to any person who desires to sell more than that number of bushels. I have been told, during the interval between the adjournment of the last session and the convening of this session, that some authority has been found somewhere in this law to increase that 5-bushel limitation to 50 bushels, but I am not certain about that. Even if that were so, however, I protest against it as a matter of principle just as strenuously as I would protest against the 5-bushel limitation. An allotment having been made to a man who wants to produce, we will say, 10 bushels, he is to be furnished with stamps indicating that the 10 bushels he is selling are within his allotment, the stamps to cost him nothing.

If he should desire to sell more than his allotment of 10, 15, 20, or 1,000 bushels, no matter what it is, he must purchase another sort of stamp, a tax stamp, costing him at the rate of 45 cents a bushel for the excess potatoes that he desires to sell. I know very little about the price range of potatoes in Florida, from which they are now moving, or any other State lying to the south of us, but the price range in the part of the country in which I live during the potato harvesting and selling season was 50 cents a bushel. I know that from having personally engaged in the business. It is obvious that no person can afford to pay a tax of 45 cents per bushel, and it is not expected any farmer will do that. There is no thought of gaining revenue from this bill. For a man to pay any such tax as that on a large scale would simply mean ruin.

The tax is fixed at that rate in order to bring compulsion upon him and to force him to obey the decision of the bureaucracy in Washington. I care not under what auspices that bureaucracy is erected or maintained, I am against it under any administration when it reaches out for power of that sort. [Applause.]

The measure then proceeds, mark you, to provide that if any person sells potatoes above the allotment assigned to him by an all-wise Secretary of Agriculture without paying the 45 cents tax on each excess bushel, he may be fined, after prosecution in a Federal court. On a second offense he may be fined as much as a thousand dollars and sent to jail for as long as a year. Thus the club of the Federal policeman is swung over the head of hundreds and hundreds of thousands of decent men and women who are endeavoring to earn an honest living, and they are told "If you do not do as we say, you go to jail." That is the meaning of it reduced to its final analysis.

More than that, this most extraordinary law proceeds to provide that the purchaser of illegal potatoes shall be equally guilty with the seller, and subjected to the same fines and penalties, including imprisonment for a second offense. More than that, the law proceeds to provide that any person in the United States having knowledge of the illegal sale of potatoes and who fails to report the violation to the proper authorities is likewise guilty. In other words, the entire population of this country is invited, Mr. Chairman, to be snoopers. They are invited to sneak around to see if they cannot find out whether Mrs. Smith, residing in a village, went down the road a half mile to a farmer friend and purchased for her own use in her own house some illegal potatoes. If she is caught doing that a second time, she goes to jail under this extraordinary measure. That is what I mean by the employment of compulsion upon honest people.

Does anyone think that liberty can live in a country whose Congress passes act after act of this kind, if those acts are to be maintained upon the statute books? From the more practical standpoint, does anyone believe that such an act can be enforced? We have had some experience in this country in an endeavor to enforce unenforceable acts. Every time we have tried it we have raised up a welter of evasion, resistance, and corruption. I think it was the gentleman from Indiana who warned the Committee when he spoke upon this measure a little while ago against what he termed the "bootleg potato." Of course, bootleg potatoes would flood the country. There can be no question about that. I invite him to compare the penalties under this potato-control law with the penalties under the previous Volstead Act. Compare the penalties inflicted upon violators of that act who at that time were known as bootleggers.

The penalties for the violation of the Potato Control Act are just about double the penalties that used to be imposed upon bootleggers under the Volstead Act, and under the Volstead Act the purchaser was not subject to prosecution and penalty. Under the Potato Control Act he is. Under the Volstead Act no person in the United States was expected to be a snooper and report violations. Under the Potato Control Act every citizen is put on notice that if he ever finds out about a violation of this act and does not report that fact to the proper authorities he may be prosecuted and punished. One cannot help reaching the conclusion that the authors of this extraordinary measure decided that the lowly spud was more dangerous to society than bathtub gin, because they place a double penalty upon the potato violator as compared with the liquor violator.

There are one or two things in respect to this act that excite my curiosity. When the producer sells 5 bushels or more under a particular allotment, everything he sells must be packed in a container prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture. It will be illegal for him to sell his potatoes in anything except that one type of container and this applies to the entire country. Think of it! I cannot sell to my neighbor a half mile down the road a single bushel of potatoes unless I pack them in a container prescribed by Mr. Wallace. That is utterly silly. I have been wondering what container is to be used. Perhaps it is to be cellophane; perhaps the potatoes are to be wrapped in cellophane and tied up in pink ribbons. Who knows?

My latest information is that the container which has been agreed upon in preliminary discussions as to the regulations for putting this extraordinary law into effect is to be a burlap sack, gathered together at the top and securely tied and closed; that attached to the sack where it is gathered together, there shall be a tag upon which the famous stamp is to be placed.

It is true that something like 70 percent of the potatoes that are marketed in this country are shipped in burlap sacks. The remainder are marketed in open bushel baskets, wagon boxes, wooden crates, tin pails, and, in fact, any kind of handy container that the farmer happens to have on his farm. That has got to be stopped. The wooden crate will be ruled out. The wagon box will be ruled out. The potatoes must be in a container fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and, I assume without having absolute knowledge, it must be a burlap sack. But, Mr. Chairman, I merely mention this as an example of the extraordinary length to which bureaucracy attempts to go in regulating the daily lives of the people. I am not discussing the constitutionality of this thing, although I cannot help agreeing with the gentleman from Indiana that it is unconstitutional. I rejoice at the signs of retreat announced by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], that this thing is not going to be pressed for enforcement on the theory it is unconstitutional; but I am not satisfied with that. Frankly, I want to see this law taken off the statute books by the Congress that put it on. [Applause.] And, once more, I register my protest against the employment of force by government against honest citizens earning an honest living. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. LUCKEY. I want to say to the gentleman that I am in hearty sympathy with everything he has said, and I have just now introduced a bill to repeal the Potato Act. I voted against this measure when it was before the House. I think there is nothing so silly and so nonsensical as this Potato Act, and it is just such measures as this that bring the ridicule of the Nation on the Congress of the United States, and I think it is time we stopped this kind of tomfoolery. The administration did not want this measure. Neither did the Department of Agriculture. The responsibility for this law rests on Congress.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, there are two of us.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, there is an item carried in this bill that interests me very much. I refer to the item relating to trade agreements.

I come from a dairy section in western New York. We have as many dairy cattle in my district as there are cattle in some of our States. If you gentlemen who do not come from dairy States were to travel through my district at about 4 o'clock in the morning, you would see at this season of the year the lights coming on in the stables and in the houses; the people would be getting up preparing an early breakfast. The men would be getting out to work to take care of their dairy herds. Later, about daylight, you would see the trucks or the teams on their way delivering milk either to the railway stations or to the creameries. If you were to notice the buildings on these farms, you would find they have excellent barns, sanitary and clean in every respect. You would see fine homes in these sections and you would see farms where the soil has not been depleted, but has been built up through the years to the highest point of production, and, largely, due to the fact that the manure from the herds of cattle has been utilized to fertilize the soil.

There is no question of soil conservation involved in the real dairy sections of this country. They are one class of farmers who have kept up the sustenance of the soil, so that any program along this line that might be adopted at this time would serve no useful purpose to the real dairy farmers of the country. If all farmers had done as well in supporting the farms, keeping up the soil and keeping up the buildings, there would be no problem along this line.

So it seems to me it is important to protect the dairy interests of this country. The dairy farmer is important to the welfare of this Nation. Moreover, if you go through my district and other dairy sections you will find splendid schools. I can take you into one county in my district where you will find in a small village a central high school costing $600,000 that has every improvement that a modern educational system can suggest, the finest architecture, and every facility for the comfort and convenience of the children. This has been due to the fact that the people who make up the dairy sections, particularly my dairy section, are intelligent, frugal, industrious, and fundamentally patriotic American citizens of the very highest type.

These dairy farmers at the present time are in great danger. Some years ago they had their backs to the wall and this Congress provided some protection through a tariff measure to save their markets from invasion by foreign countries shipping their butter and other dairy products into this country. I wish to call your attention to the fact, because it will appeal, for instance, to Wisconsin and some of the States further removed, that the cost of transportation of milk and butter from my district, at the extreme end of New York State, to the New York City market is more per gallon, per pound, or per ton than to ship similar amounts from Denmark to New York City. The cost of production of dairy products in these foreign lands is much lower than the production costs here. The requirements of sanitation or cleanliness are not so strict as in the State of New York or, as I assume they are, in many of the other States of the Union.

I am going to direct my remarks to a country, the competition from which is seldom mentioned on the floor of the House. I refer to New Zealand. The New Zealand islands are some 9,000 miles from our ports and, naturally, people say, "How can a country as far away as that offer any dangerous competition to the dairymen of this country?"

When England was debating the policy of developing New Zealand for agricultural production, the statesmen of that time assured the farmers of England that by no stretch of the imagination could New Zealand successfully compete with the English farmer in the English market.

And yet it was not many years before New Zealand was laying down farm products in Great Britain, in Liverpool and London, cheaper than the farmers outside the city could supply similar products to them. New Zealand has a farm area about as large as the combined area of New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania.

Pennsylvania and New York and Wisconsin are three of the greatest dairy States in the United States. And yet New Zealand at the present time has more dairy cattle than two of these States combined and almost as many dairy cattle as all three.

To show you the dangers of competition—and if I had time, I would read into the RECORD authentic statements showing that New Zealand has been shipping butter under a trade agreement which Canada had with Australia, under which New Zealand was permitted to ship her products into Canada; that these shipments so endangered the dairy interests of Canada that Canada sought to stop them by putting a 4-cent per pound duty on butter. But this did not stop New Zealand's shipments of dairy products into Canada, to the injury of her domestic market. The duty was raised to 8 cents a pound.

From that time the Canadian market steadily grew better. There came a time later, however, when Canada shipped her products into the United States; then the Congress put a tariff of 56 cents a gallon on cream and 14 cents on butter, and a duty of 6 cents on milk to relieve our dairymen from Canadian competition.

New Zealand has 17 natural ports, into which the largest steamers in the world that carry freight can enter. There is no cost for dredging. Not only that, but the New Zealand railroads are organized for the benefit of the farmer, and the man living on a farm 100 miles from a port can ship his product to the New Zealand ports for processing and export at the same rate that the farmer can who lives 10 miles from the port. This, of course, is done upon the theory that it makes the far-removed farm worth as much as the one close to the port of shipment, which in turn yields a larger revenue in taxation to the New Zealand Government when it comes to taxation of the remote farms. Not only that, but New Zealand has built a system of agricultural stations in every part of the island.

They have built with Government subsidies, creameries and cheese factories that are interchangeable. They can make butter one month and immediately shift to the manufacture of cheese the next month. They can watch our market, then manufacture and ship either butter or cheese, whichever offers the greater price inducement. Usually it is during the winter months that New Zealand dairy products are shipped into this country. These shipments depress the price when our dairymen need the higher prices. I could go into the question of the tonnage shipped into this country in years gone by, but have not the time. Here is what happens. This entering into reciprocal trade agreements and opening up our market to foreign countries is doing just this: New Zealand, Argentina, and other export countries are preparing to take advantage of the opportunity that the lowering of the tariff offers them to invade our market. If they find it is going to be the settled policy of the United States to open up the markets of the United States to the dairy products of other countries, then capital is going into the dairy business in a large way, in foreign countries.

It is going to have the same effect on our dairy market that your cotton bill had on your cotton market. The University of North Carolina and Fiske University through their research departments have made a careful investigation as to the effect of a reduction of acreage in cotton. What do they find? That 50 countries are now engaged in the production of cotton and all going into it more heavily all the time; that our capital is going into Brazil and various other countries to engage in cotton production. Japan is working in unison with Brazil in her program. We want to be careful under these trade agreements. The production of dairy products is one of the largest agricultural interests in the country, and by your trade agreements you are going to ruin it. Not only that, the dairy farmers receive a larger cash income from their products than is received for any other product in agriculture.

This is something more than a political question. We cannot afford, as a Congress, we cannot afford as a country, to adopt a policy, a plan, that will destroy one of our best industries, the one that produces the most cash and that in turn means more to the community than almost any other agricultural activity. While the trade agreements entered into do not specifically mention butter, the lowering of the duty on cream from 56 cents a gallon to 36 cents means that the cream will come in and be processed here. It, in effect, lowers the duty on imported butter.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman made reference to cotton.

Mr. REED of New York. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. Of course, we in the South are very much interested in that, especially in the State of Texas, which normally raises a third of the cotton of the United States and one-fourth of the cotton of the world. By reason of the fact that 90 percent of that crop normally is exported, the matter of our permanent prosperity, inasmuch as cotton is the money crop of the farmer, necessarily depends on the retention of our foreign markets. What suggestion would the gentleman have to make with reference to how those markets may best be maintained, or how the farmer, in view of a restriction of crops, may properly be compensated in connection with a retention of those foreign markets, inasmuch as cotton, being an export crop, cannot be protected under tariff regulations?

Mr. REED of New York. I am not suggesting a tariff for cotton, but certain steps can be taken. The point the gentleman raises should have been raised before we got into this particular method of handling the cotton situation.

Mr. LANHAM. May I say to my friend that I have heretofore spoken in this Chamber in reference to the necessity of retaining these markets, and also the unfortunate situation that obtains in the South by reason of the fact that many of the people who are on relief normally get their living expenses from some phase of the cotton industry.

Mr. REED of New York. Yes. The situation to which the gentleman refers is to be found in a research, which I read with care. I am not familiar with the cotton business except as I have read about it. The two southern universities to which I have referred, that have research departments, claim that because of our restriction of acreage in cotton 1,500,000 families have been put on relief from the South, and that means something like 5,000,000 people.

There is one thing that could be done in this country. If this situation goes on the foreign market will be captured, but there is one thing that the cotton farmers can do. They can at least save their home market. They cannot afford to let Japanese cotton goods come into this country and take what is left of the home market. It is their last line of defense. At the present time we know that these foreign goods are coming in here in terrific volume all the time, to the injury of the cotton farmers.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Just to permit this observation: I want to say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] that I believe the conclusive answer to his question is the philosophy of George Peek, namely, specific trading in specific items on a conditional basis rather than on an unconditional basis. That, of course, is the converse of the policy of Mr. Wallace with respect to foreign trade; but I do believe it is necessary to find a market for these basic commodities for which we have a surplus at the present time.

Mr. REED of New York. I want to say that if opportunity presents itself to vote for the repeal of this power to enter into reciprocal trade agreements, at least without an opportunity for the Senate to ratify those treaties, without opportunity for the interested parties to be heard and to have a chance to come before the committee handling these important agricultural problems, we should vote to repeal the law. It must be known to every reasonable person in this country who knows anything about the dairy situation that this thing is absolutely suicidal to the farmers of the States of New York, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin. The people in my State have built up the finest dairy business in the world. Yet we are throwing our markets wide open to foreign countries, with their lower labor costs, with their low costs of water transportation, and with their government subsidies.

Under the system in effect in New Zealand the Government finances the farmers at ridiculously low interest rates, permits them to buy dairy farms, furnishes the money to build and equip creameries, furnishes them every possible facility to meet all competition. Needless to say, our farmers enjoy no such benefits through Government aid. The United States is the best cash market in the world, which rightly belongs to our farmers, and we must not surrender it under these trade agreements.

Mr. WEARIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. WEARIN. The gentleman has been directing his remarks largely to butter. Has not the importation of butter, to a considerable extent, prevailed for 10 or 12 years in the United States?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes; there has been a tariff built up, and the official reports show that whenever a tariff has been imposed on dairy products the importations decreased. It has improved prices of dairy products.

Mr. WEARIN. If the importations have prevailed for 10 or 12 years, why was not something done about it under the Republican administration and the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill?

Mr. REED of New York. A tariff was given in the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, and the higher rates accomplished great good; but now, under recent trade agreements, you are cutting it down. You are destroying the home market.

Mr. WEARIN. But the importations have continued under the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] has again expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. KNUTE HILL].

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to make any extended remarks today, but there have been a considerable number of partisan political attacks made on the floor of this House since the session began. I am not very much of a partisan. As a student of history, however, I am essentially a Democrat; but I am an American first, and recognize the fact that there are good men in all parties. There have been attacks made on the floor of this House against the administration and against the New Deal. I have differed with the President on some of his bills and on some of his policies, but I have been honest in this stand. The President has told me himself that he respects honest differences of opinion. I am heartily with him in his general policies. Let us take two or three just at random. Take, for example, the bank-deposit guaranty bill, which was passed during the first session of the Seventy-third Congress.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. KNUTE HILL. I would rather go on.

Mr. MICHENER. But right in that connection the gentleman says he is in favor of the bank-deposit guaranty bill, but does he know that the President did not favor the bank-deposit guaranty bill? That was not his policy. Senator VANDENBERG, of Michigan, offered the resolution in the Senate, which the RECORD will show, and the President did not favor that thing.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. But it is a part of the New Deal and was signed by the President.

Mr. MICHENER. But it was passed in spite of the President.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. I refuse to yield further, Mr. Chairman, because I have statements to make, and I insist on making them and will then yield. Now, the bankers were opposed to that, and that very summer the Bankers Association passed a resolution unanimously condemning it and requesting us to repeal it. We rather strengthened it, as it was a protection to the depositors; and that is the New Deal.

There were also the utility bill and the security bill. The utility bill protected the stockholders. That is the New Deal. The A. A. A. protected the farmers, and that is part of the New Deal. I know there are people who say, "Thank God for the Supreme Court, because they declared that law unconstitutional." I am here to say to you: Thank God for a sane minority in the Supreme Court, that has the courage and the Americanism to insist that each department of government in the United States be limited to its constitutional functions—the legislative department to legislate; the judicial department to interpret the laws and construe cases under the law, and not to throw a law into the wastepaper basket; and then the executive department to administer and execute the law. These are some of the New Deals, and we believe they were upheld by the American people in the election of 1934. A larger Democratic majority than ever was returned to Congress, notwithstanding the hue and cry of unconstitutionality by special interests and the big dailies.

I do not need to defend the President of the United States; he is well able to defend himself. Franklin D. Roosevelt! Was it not he who went down into "the valley of the shadow of death" with that dread disease, the worst known to human kind, and because of his strength of will, his courage, his patience, and his sunny nature came back to health and strength again? Does he need defense?

Defend the President! Was it not he who 4 years ago at the Chicago convention fought the reactionaries of the Democratic Party and won out in that convention and won out in the election of 1932? He needs no defense.

The so-called "Happy Warrior" went down there to defeat him. He is coming here this week to speak at the Liberty League dinner. The Happy Warrior!—my dear friends, I would rather dub him "the dog in the manger"—opposing the man who twice nominated him for the Presidency and agreed—against his own inclinations on account of illness—to run for Governor of New York in 1928 in order to aid his friend in his candidacy for the Presidency. Rather should the President be called the "Genial General", the prince of men, who is leading us on to the right solution of our problems in this country.

Defend the President of the United States! Is he not the man about whose mental condition opponents whispered, the man who because of his vigorous speeches and extensive journeys has shown the people that he is strong and healthy in mind as well as in body? He came to us here on the 3d of January to deliver his annual message. Whom did he speak against? Was he partisan? Did he speak against the opposition over here on the left? He did not mention them. He mentioned only the 10 or 15 percent in the United States who have at all times exploited the people of the United States; and some of you over on this left side arose later to defend that 15 percent and make yourselves just as guilty as the men you defend. "If the shoe fits, put it on!"

He needs no defense, Mr. Chairman. A year from now President Roosevelt is going to sit in the White House at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue, elected by the people of the United States for 4 years more to carry on the New Deal for the people of the United States. [Applause.] He needs no defense on my part.

In conclusion, may I say that I rose today to show you that dirt and vituperation is going to be used, and is being used, in spite of the fact that the opposition deny it. I have in my hand an issue of the Washington Herald for last Sunday. On the front page of this wonderful (?) sheet published by William Randolph Hearst is an editorial headed "Dirt and Slush." Here is what he says—he quotes Farley:

> Our opponents will make this the bitterest and certainly the dirtiest struggle that anyone can remember.

Then Hearst says:

> Everybody is surprised at Mr. Farley's declaration, patiently waits for Mr. Farley to submit some evidence in support of his statement, but Farley submits none, none at all; whereupon everybody remembers that the only bitterness which has so far appeared in the present political campaign, that Mr. Roosevelt opened with a bedtime story on the radio at the assembling of Congress, was Mr. Roosevelt's own attack upon American business.

On page 2 of this same paper appear these headlines:

> G. O. P. stickers are barred from the mails because of attack on the character of the President and his wife. It is ascribed to the National Council of Republicans in New York.

I wonder if that is dirt and vituperation! And they say they are not using it! My good friends, again let me say he needs no defense. He will come back, and you and I who have the courage, you and I who have the faith and the patience to go along with him to make the New Deal for the common people come true, will come back with him.

A great President, Theodore Roosevelt, said this, amongst the many great things he uttered:

> This country in the long run will not be a good place for any one of us to live in until and unless it is a good place for all of us to live in.

And Franklin D. Roosevelt, under God, is going to make this dream come true. [Applause.]

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTE HILL. I yield.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Did I understand the gentleman to say something about the Liberty League?

Mr. KNUTE HILL. The Liberty League, the Manufacturers' Association, the United States Chamber of Commerce, and such organizations are what the President assailed here; and these people who are defending them are as guilty as they.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes. I would like for the gentleman to name some of the contributors to the Liberty League.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Well, there are the Du Ponts. The gentleman probably knows the Du Ponts.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I never met them.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. I have not had that privilege either. [Laughter.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take 5 minutes. The gentleman from Washington, who preceded me, made some reference to so-called Republican stickers. I want to assure the membership of this House that no responsible Republican organization has anything whatsoever to do with those so-called stickers.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. Let me finish my statement, and I shall be pleased to yield.

As far as we can make out, a self-constituted group calling themselves the National Republican Council, have taken quarters in the Hotel McAlpin in New York and are trying to put out these stickers which I quite agree with the gentleman are in thoroughly bad taste.

Mr. Fletcher, the chairman of the Republican National Committee, as soon as it was called to his attention, issued a statement saying that the National Committee or none of its members had anything whatsoever to do with this so-called National Republican Council; and as soon as it was called to the attention of the Republican congressional committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOLTON], the chairman, and myself, who happens to be vice chairman, also issued a statement repudiating it and denouncing it.

We are unable to find out who these people are. They have no connection with any Republican organization, either nationally, congressionally, senatorially, or with Republican committees in the State of New York or in the city of New York.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at this point in the RECORD to insert a brief statement made by the chairman of the Republican National Committee, and a statement made by my colleague the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. BOLTON, and myself, repudiating these stickers. These statements have been given to the press.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

NATIONAL REPUBLICAN CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE,
1114 NATIONAL PRESS BUILDING.

[For immediate release, Jan. 15, 1936]

In response to a query the following statement is made, jointly, by Representative CHESTER C. BOLTON, of Ohio, chairman, and Representative ROBERT L. BACON, of New York, vice chairman of the National Republican Congressional Committee:

The National Republican Congressional Committee has no connection, directly or indirectly in any manner whatsoever, with the so-called National Republican Council, claiming quarters in New York City, or the cartoon poster stamps issued by that organization, or in any other activities that this organization may be engaged in.

The National Republican Congressional Committee adds its voice to that of Chairman Fletcher, of the Republican National Committee, in deploring the use of methods of this type. No recognized, reputable Republican organization would countenance the use of these particular stamps being circulated by an organization wholly unknown to any of the national organizations of the Republican Party.

There is no need for any Republican anywhere, individual or organization, to have recourse to this manner of campaigning. There is no call for any Republican to even attempt to sink to the level of presenting issues to an intelligent electorate as that where James A. Farley, Democratic National Committee chairman, now is found. Republicans will not resort to the invective of Mr. Farley. They will not lend aid to Mr. Farley in what he has prophesied will be the "dirtiest" possible campaign.

Facts, devastatingly convincing of the utter failure of the Roosevelt New Deal, are Republican weapons. They are the only weapons needed to insure Republican success.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I also ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a letter that I wrote personally and which appears in newspapers in my district denouncing these stickers as being in thoroughly bad taste and absolutely unauthorized by any Republican organization. This letter also quotes in full Chairman Fletcher's statement that I have referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 14, 1936.

Mr. F. S. LAURENCE,
119 Bayview Avenue, Port Washington, Long Island.

MY DEAR MR. LAURENCE: I want to thank you very much for your recent letter with reference to the stickers gotten out by the so-called National Republican Council.

That this council's activity has absolutely no relation to any bona fide Republican organization, such as the Republican National Committee, the Republican State Organization of New York, or any other Republican movement that is officially sponsored, I want to make crystal clear at the beginning.

This council, from all the information I have, is a self-constituted body whose genesis no one seems to know. It has absolutely no connection or affiliation with the Republican National Committee.

I have gotten in touch with Chairman Fletcher, of the Republican National Committee, and he emphasized the fact that this group is not allied to the Republican National Committee, nor any member thereof; is not financed by it directly or indirectly; and that, in short, he knows nothing about it.

For your information, I quote a release from the Republican National Committee on the activities of the so-called National Republican Council:

"Chairman Fletcher, of the Republican National Committee, today made the following statement:

" 'My attention has been drawn to certain cartoon poster stamps, which, according to the New York Times of last Monday, have been issued by an organization calling itself the National Republican Council.

" 'That organization has no connection or affiliation with the Republican National Committee, nor any member of the committee. It is not financed directly or indirectly by the Republican National Committee, nor is it acting in any manner under the direction of the Republican National Committee, or with the advice or suggestion of the committee. In short, we have nothing to do with it.' "

And the Republican congressional committee, of which I am vice chairman, also make emphatic disclaimer of the activities of this council and of any connection with it, directly or indirectly.

I think the above definitely fixes Republican position in the matter, and that everybody who reads this will appreciate that there is no Republican organization connection with the enterprise of the so-called National Republican Council.

What right this council has to use in its trade name "National Republican" is something I cannot fathom. It strikes me they have plenty of that quality which common vernacular describes best as "crust."

These stickers, to my way of thinking, are nothing short of scurrilous. I could add much in the way of excoriation of the activities of this so-called council in its attempt to get these despicable stickers abroad, but I do not think it necessary.

What the aim of this council is is something I do not know. It has been suggested that perhaps the real desire is to pin this activity onto Republicans, and that subtle politics is at the bottom of the whole enterprise.

However, and whatever, the motives of this so-called council, its activities are receiving the condemnation of the Republican Party, which I think will be concurred in by every fair-minded individual.

Sincerely,

ROBERT L. BACON.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. I am glad that the gentleman from New York disclaims any connection with this matter. It was not my intent to claim they were connected with it. My intent was to show that this paper, in an editorial, said that the opposition was not using dirt, and I do not mean by the "opposition" the Republicans. I mean all opposition. Then I went on to the second page of the paper and showed what the opposition was using, not meaning the gentleman from New York, but the opposition that is fighting the President of the United States.

Mr. BACON. I thought it would be fair to make a statement and tell the membership of the Committee that the Republican National Committee, the Republican State committee in New York, the Republican city committee in New York City, and the Republican congressional committee have nothing to do with it; they do not know who these people are, never heard of them, and repudiate absolutely the use of these stickers.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. It says right here, "Sponsored solely by the Republican National Council in New York."

Mr. BACON. We do not know who they are. However, we cannot prevent self-constituted groups calling themselves anything they please. There is no legal way by which we can stop them.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Has it ever occurred to the gentleman that perhaps this self-constituted group is engaged in a purely self-profitable enterprise?

Mr. BACON. As far as I know, it may be a racket.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, I am particularly concerned with the item which has occasioned some discussion about providing under the amendment proposed by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], that $1,000,000 shall be made available to the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose of collecting and disseminating information and data with respect to potato production and marketing within the United States.

I very much hope that the amendment to the pending bill, which I understand is acceptable to the members of the committee, may be adopted by this House, and the fund made available. I appreciate that the Potato Act is fair game. I appreciate the heroism and agility of the gentlemen, who almost remind one of a matador waving a red flag in front of a dead bull, as they have enjoyed this afternoon in kicking the poor Potato Act and its sponsors about this forum.

As one of those, to some extent, associated with the paternity of this act, about which there seems to be some dispute, it is most intriguing to discover the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] citing with such approval the President of the United States in opposition to this measure.

The potato producers of Maine—individualists for a century—were finally compelled to consider this legislation as the logical fruition of the agricultural policies pursued for the past 2 years, which had descended with a devastating impact upon the potato industry, producing the fourth food crop of the United States, by reason of acreage displaced from other crops. Finally this act was passed.

We defer to the judgment of the Supreme Court. We do not indulge in criticism of the Court. We respectfully and loyally accept its conclusions. But we earnestly hope that the problem of the potato growers of this country may still invite the sympathetic interest of this House. Potatoes selling last spring in Maine at 10 cents a barrel or 1 cent a peck came with a terrific impact upon our section and many other sections of the country.

We appreciate the dangers of governmental compulsion as pointed out by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. We also appreciate the dangers of economic compulsion brought about by situations such as these potato growers face with the producer more and more at the mercy of gigantic agencies of distribution.

Whether there is any solution of this problem yet remains to be determined; but we do believe, and earnestly urge that potatoes should be placed upon a parity with the other 14 major agricultural crops by accumulating without delay the information regarding individual growers, which is not yet possessed in spite of the various State allotments.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. The gentleman's State and my State, Pennsylvania, are two of the great potato-growing States of the Union.

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. His in the number of bushels produced in 1933 and 1934 and mine in the number of dollars the potato growers received for their product. Were the potato growers in the gentleman's State as a whole satisfied in 1931, 1932, 1933, and 1934 with the price they were receiving for their potatoes?

Mr. BREWSTER. For the past 5 years the problem has been growing ever more acute. We had 1 good year out of the past 5 when we practically got back the cost of production. The rest of the time we lost money.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. The same has been true in our State.

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think something else should be done if this is not the thing to do to stabilize the business for our potato farmers?

Mr. BREWSTER. We are vitally interested in any constructive, constitutional legislation which can come to the assistance of this great and vital industry that means so much not only to the prosperity of our section but to the general welfare of citizens of the United States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I have been much interested in this discussion of the potato bill. I am not so sure about the million dollars. As a matter of fact, I might suggest to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] that out in Indiana $1,000,000 is pretty expensive for a funeral. [Laughter.] I suspect, though, we are all interested in information and if this million dollars is to get a million dollars' worth of information, why, maybe we should not kick too much about it.

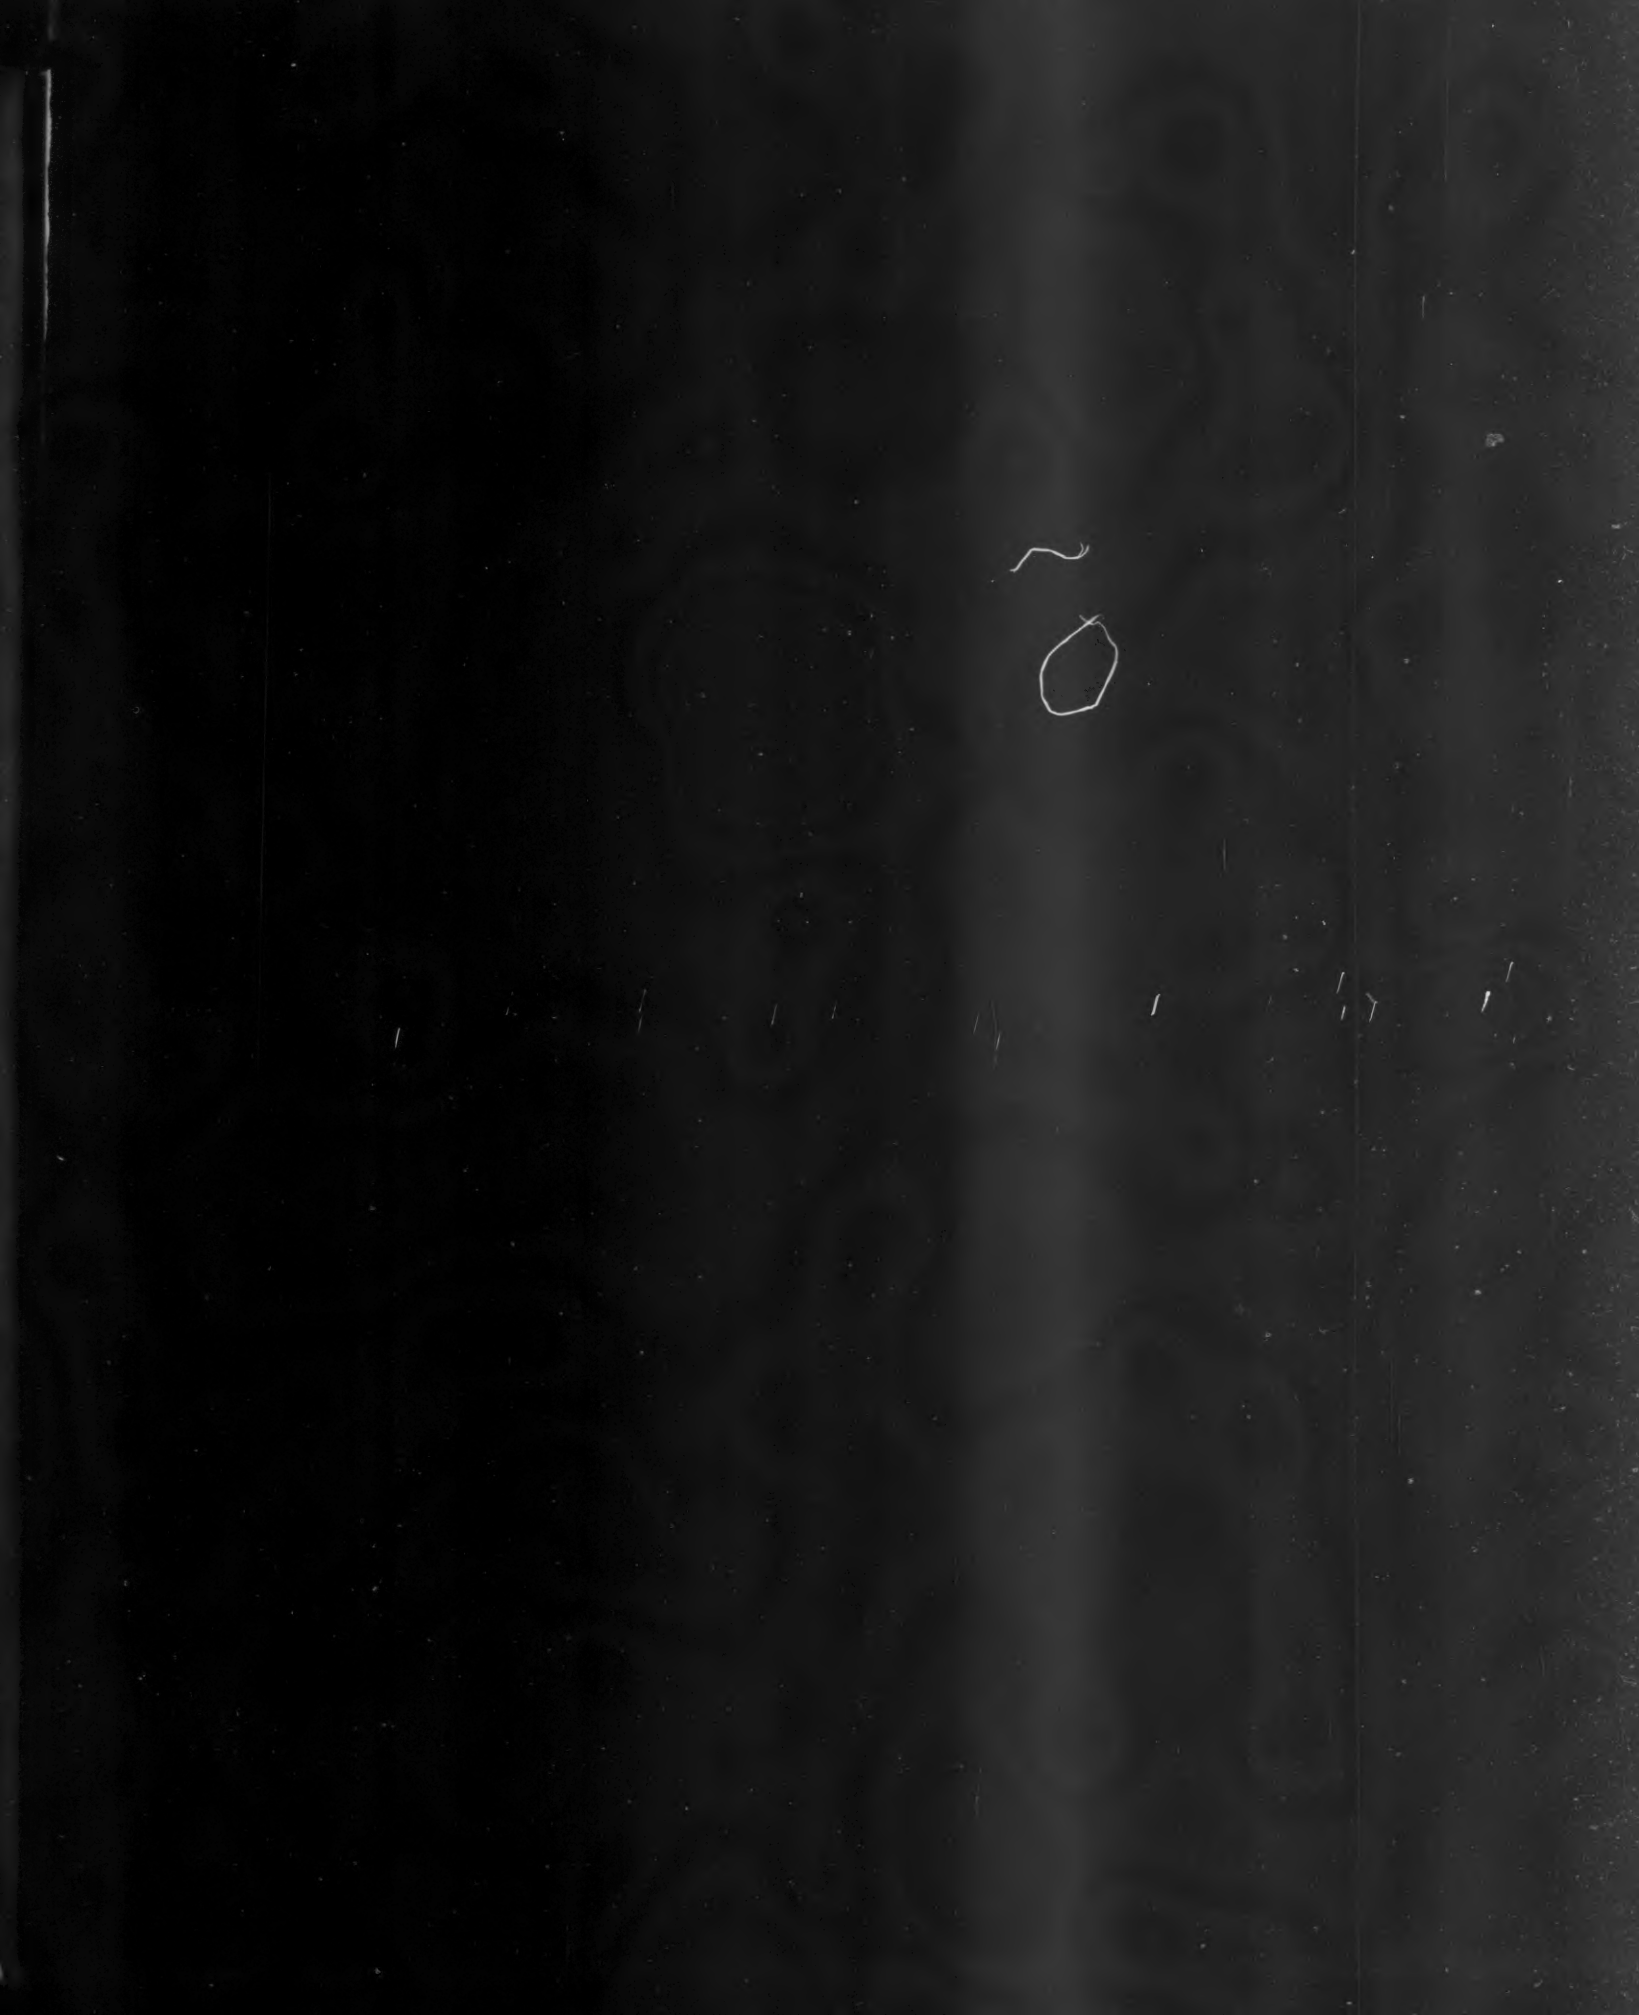
There is another matter, though, about which I wish to speak very briefly. From the inception there have been grave doubts on the part of many people as to whether or not any attempt would ever be made to enforce this iniquitous law. Why, even some of the people who were charged, under the law, with its enforcement, seemed to rebel at the idea of undertaking it. Out in my State the growers have been wondering, and are still wondering, whether or not the provisions of the law will be enforced. As a result, they are, today, spending their time and their money in an effort to comply or get ready to comply with the provisions of this law.

Now, I remember back along the line somewhere something was said by somebody that if any mistakes are made in any legislation in the Congress, he would be the first to recognize them. I say that a mistake has been made as far as this Congress is concerned in the original enactment of this law. Why not recognize it? Why not say, "Yes, we have made a mistake", and repeal the law [applause], to the end that these people in Indiana or in any other State who, today, are thinking about buying seed and fertilizer and arranging their farms for the production of potatoes this coming season, shall know that the law will not be enforced.

Now, I understand that enough things have been said here today to indicate to those of us who are here on the ground that no attempt will be made to enforce the law. But if it is admitted that the law is in violation of the Constitution, and if, as I believe, it is utterly unworkable and un-American, why not get back of one of these bills to repeal the law and get it off the books as a mistake that should be corrected [applause], then everyone will definitely know that it is not to be enforced.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I am reluctant to inflict myself on the Committee at this late hour in the afternoon.



I am sorry that at least one-half of the Members of the House have not been present to hear the felicitous admixture of politics, Pinchot, and potatoes. [Laughter.] It was enlightening and interesting to say the least. I presume it is proper for me to remain in character and also speak of the humble potato.

I had no idea when as a barefooted boy I chased the sprightly potato bugs in a potato field and carried cans of paris green, that the lowly spud would ever become a national issue. But apparently that is the case.

I want to address myself to that celebrated article of diet for only a moment, not so much from the standpoint of the potato bill as from the reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and the Netherlands that comes into being on the 15th of February of this year.

For your information, I want to say that the reciprocal-trade agreement with the Netherlands contains provisions that will reduce the tariff on 41 items—that will bind on the free list some 22 items, and retain the existing duty on 1 item.

It seems rather singular to me that we should reduce the duty on potato dextrine and potato starch and potato flour when a majority of this Congress has sanctioned an act to control the production of potatoes by legislation which is penal in character. I opposed that measure and can find considerable comfort in the efforts of some of the brethren on the majority side to escape the burdens of that act. Now, however, a reciprocal-trade agreement will permit the importation of larger quantities of potato dextrine and potato flour when no one has contended that we do not have manufacturing facilities sufficient for converting our own surplus of potatoes into flour, starches, and dextrines which can be converted into glue, adhesives, and sizing, so much used in the textile mills. Instead of regimenting the production of the toothsome spud on the one hand and permitting the derivatives of potatoes such as flour, starch, and dextrines, to come in at reduced rates from foreign countries on the other, why not a consistent program of keeping out competitive potato products and expanding the domestic use of our own potato crops?

Still another item in the Netherlands treaty is tapioca and cassava starch. For years an effort has been made to secure the imposition of a duty of 2 cents per pound on these starches because they are in direct competition with the starches that are or can be derived from American-grown corn. That effort failed, but to make matters infinitely worse, tapioca and cassava starch have been bound on the free list so that it is impossible to secure relief from these competitive products. The administration, by this treaty provision, has in effect stated to the corn processors and corn farmers of this Nation: "Not only will we permit these starches to come in free of duty, but we will by this treaty give the Netherlands our solemn promises to bind them on the free list so that there will be no possibility of Congress imposing a protective duty on these items so long as this treaty is in effect." In other words, we prevail upon our farmers to curtail and adjust their corn acreage for the benefit of the coolie farmers in the Netherland West Indies. How truly the poet spoke when he said, "Consistency, thou are a jewel."

Approximately 160,000,000 pounds of tapioca flour come into this country annually and since it is in competition with products of corn that is grown in the Corn Belt, over which we have expressed so much solicitude that we made it a basic commodity in the Agricultural Adjustment Act, is it not rather strange, is it not rather short-sighted, rather visionary, that we take all these fertile acres of Illinois, Indiana, and Nebraska corn land out of cultivation, and then open the back door and let these competitive starches hurdle into the country, and thereby diminish the industrial outlet for corn grown in this country?

The same thing is true of other items. The same thing is true of gin. This treaty will permit Holland gin to come into this country at half of the previous duty, and what intrigues me most about gin coming from the Netherlands is the naive comment made by some gentleman in the State Department. You will find it on page 32 of the mimeographed copy of the Netherlands treaty which was sent to every one of us. That gentleman comments in this fashion. He says it is not improbable that revenues will increase rather than decrease as a result of a larger importation from the Netherlands in competition with gin manufactured in this country, and then he says it is not improbable that sales of gin will be attracted away from illegal sources, attracted away, mind you, from those who are illicitly engaged in the bootlegging of gin.

If you follow that theory out to its logical conclusion, then the gentleman might as well say, "Let us pull all the bars down, let us invite gin and distilled spirits to come in from every country in the world, because the more that comes in the merrier, because we will cure the bootlegging evil." By following that gentleman's philosophy to its logical conclusion, we cannot only put the bootleggers out of business, but we will put the legitimate distillers out of business and the farmers out of business, and then we can give the country back to the Indians, and I do not know what the devil they will do with it.

That is the way that theory works out. Then in connection with wheat and wheat flour that is to be exported from the United States to the Netherlands, go back and look at the very sanguinary comment in that treaty. They say that the Netherlands will buy from the United States an amount of wheat flour equal to 5 percent of its consumption, provided they can buy our wheat at a price delivered in the Netherlands that is world competitive, for a grade and quality of wheat that is comparable to our own. On a price delivered in the Netherlands! You have to analyze that fine-spun joker a little to see how little it means to agriculture. If we have to deliver wheat in the Netherlands at that price, how are we going to do justice to the American farmer and keep the domestic price of wheat up without paying a cash subsidy of 30 cents a bushel in order to take advantage of the treaty provision? Look at the figures that are available in the various reports from the Department of Agriculture and you will see that Liverpool prices, or world prices, have been 30 cents per bushel lower than the average price on the six major wheat markets in the United States.

If the Netherlands can buy wheat at 30 cents a bushel cheaper than the price that obtains here on the major wheat markets, do you think those folks over there who are motivated by Dutch thrift are going to pay us 30 cents more a bushel for our wheat, or pay us more for our flour on the basis of wheat that cost them 30 cents a bushel less? Indeed not. That is one of those jokers in the treaty, if you please, and that is the thing that is given to the country at large to show the beautiful benefits that redound to the country from reciprocal trade agreements. It will be interesting to examine the figures of the Department of Commerce that will disclose in the near future, with respect to our trade with Cuba under the reciprocal trade agreement.

They have been holding up Cuba as exhibit A. We shall find these two points of interest in connection with that treaty. In the first place, a treaty with Cuba is not on the same foundation as any other treaty. It is not on an unconditional most-favored-nation basis. Canada, the Netherlands, Switzerland, and all other countries cannot have the benefits that may accrue to Cuba or conversely, because we do not have that status with Cuba that we have with other nations. That is one thing. The second is that while our exports to Cuba will probably show an increase of about $15,000,000, the imports from Cuba to the United States will probably show an increase of about $37,000,000. There is exhibit A in this great program of reciprocal trade treaties, and you can take it for what it is worth.

I submit to you that the reciprocal-trade agreements are not going to do anything for the American farmer, but they are going to do plenty to him before they get through. [Applause.]

It is always a fair question as to what is to be done about foreign trade and its rehabilitation, if reciprocal trade agreements are wrong in principle and in practice. It is a fair question as to how the export markets for agriculture are to be regained.

The answer, of course, is a program of selective imports, together with tariff reductions only where they are specific advantages. It offers the only method of expanding our foreign trade in basic agricultural commodities and at the same time preserving our American markets. It is the old system of barter on an international scale. We can say to any and all nations with whom we seek to build up foreign trade, "You buy certain specific items from us to a given amount and we will in return buy certain specific items from you to a like amount." Such a system has the advantage of protecting our markets against an influx of foreign goods which tend to deprive the American farmer and American industry of its own needed markets and also protects the American worker against the dumping of goods made in countries where a low standard of living and a low-wage scale prevails. It is, if you please, the philosophy that has been expounded by Mr. George Peek, the first administrator of the A. A. A., and whether it is feasible and practical or not can best be judged from the fact that Great Britain has rebuilt her foreign trade to a higher level than any other nation on the face of the earth in the last 2 years by simply following that principle.

Since the provisions of the Netherlands Treaty, the Swiss Treaty, the Canadian Treaty, and all other trade treaties are available alike to every nation with whom we have an unconditional most-favored-nation status, it will be but a little while until this country may become a veritable dumping ground for cheap goods. Since goods are merely the evidences of labor, we thereby take the bread from the mouth of an American worker and hand it to the workers in foreign lands. Since our standards are higher than in foreign countries, we cannot compete in a price market, and the inevitable result will be that our unemployment situation, which is almost as acute now as it was in 1933, will become a dread and permanent thing. When it does it will have deprived the American farmer of the best market in the whole wide world, namely, the American workingman.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. AMLIE].

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Chairman, I should like at this time to ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD a copy of a letter I wrote to the Secretary of State on December 12 on the subject of the reciprocal trade agreement with Canada.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

ELKHORN, WIS., December 12, 1935.

Hon. CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In re Canadian trade agreement.

In a speech at Chicago last Monday President Roosevelt, in endorsing the new Canadian trade treaty, said:

"Agriculture, far from being crucified by this agreement, as some have told you, actually gains from it."

The further reference by the President to opponents of this trade agreement as "calamity howlers" and "political racketeers" leads me to the conclusion that the State Department and the President have not been fully or correctly advised with regard to all of the provisions of this reciprocal-trade agreement.

A few days ago I spent sometime in Monroe, Green County, in the First Wisconsin District, which is commonly known as the Swiss cheese capital of the United States. This is a distinction which Green County has enjoyed since it was first settled by Swiss immigrants nearly a century ago.

The making of cheese in Green County is not in the hands of one or two large companies but is a trade that has been carried on by a great many small factories operated by trained cheese makers since the county was first settled. These cheese makers feel that their industry is being seriously jeopardized by the trade agreement which the United States is making with Canada. Already the buyers for Kraft-Phenix Co. and the National Dairy Co. are using the argument with cheese producers in Green County that they have 50 carloads of Canadian cheese all ready to ship into the United States; that under the trade agreement it is more advantageous for them to purchase this Canadian cheese than domestic cheese, unless the price of domestic cheese is reduced to a figure that they are willing to pay.

At this point I should like to explain a development in the cheese industry which may not be known by the President or the representatives of the State Department who are negotiating this treaty agreement. A number of years ago the Kraft-Phenix Co. began to process cheese; that is, to heat cheese to the melting point, add other ingredients to give it a flavor, and then market this processed cheese in small packages. In the processing of cheese quality does not count. The processor merely uses the cheese as a base. As far as the processor is concerned, he would just as soon have cheese without any flavor at all and add his flavoring to the flavorless base. As a matter of fact, some of the big cheese-processing companies have tried to get these cheese makers to produce a cheese without flavor or any of the other qualities that go to make quality in cheese. These cheese makers of Green County, however, are old craftsmen who take pride in their work. It is for this reason that Green County has been able to maintain its reputation as the Swiss cheese capital of the United States for nearly a century.

It is regrettable that the American consuming public does not appreciate what constitutes good cheese and that it is possible for great corporations with superior merchandizing organizations to sell the poorest kind of cheese with certain flavoring added at practically the same price as that which the very best cheese commands. Kraft-Phenix price list, given me at Monroe, shows that they are receiving 23½ cents for their processed Swiss cheese, while, at the same time, the best type of fancy A no. 1 Swiss cheese in Wisconsin commands only 24½ cents. If the cheese makers in Wisconsin had the right to process cheese, they might also convert the cheap and inferior grades of cheese into processed and packaged cheese and in this way compete in the domestic market. As it is, the great corporations owning the patent rights to the processing methods buy up the cheap and inferior grades of cheese, process it, and use this inferior grade of cheese to destroy the market for the superior brands of domestic cheese.

It should be explained that the method used in the processing of cheese is covered by patents and that these patents are the property of Kraft-Phenix Co. and other large corporations. I was told that a certain cheesemaker in Green County had some litigation on the subject of processing cheese, but that he spent $25,000 in litigation without getting anywhere.

The trade agreement with Canada would, in my opinion, not result in any great benefit to the Canadian cheesemakers. The benefits of this trade agreement would go primarily to Kraft-Phenix and other great corporations who control the right to process cheese in the United States. For instance, the buyers for these great corporations are now using the argument with the cheese producers in Green County that the Canadian cheese has a moisture content of only 33 percent, while the domestic cheese has a moisture content of 39 to 40 percent.

A cheese with a moisture content of 33 percent is not palatable, but, of course, this means nothing to the processors, because they can add the moisture in the course of processing. This gives to the Canadian cheese a much greater advantage in competing for the domestic market than at first seems apparent.

Because a few great corporations in the United States own or control the use of processing patents, they are the ones who are going to benefit from this reciprocal trade agreement. It is doubtful if the consumers will get any great benefit in the way of reduced prices. These processors will merely play the Canadian producers against the American producers, with very little gain to the former, with great loss to the latter, and the real gain to themselves, the $100,000 a year executives, and the small number of people who own stock in these great corporations.

When I was in Green County a few days ago a small cheese producer brought in a picture of a 1-ton cheese that had just been presented by the Cheese Institute of America to the President of the United States. He told me that he had cut this picture out because, as he said, he "smelled a rat."

It should be noted that the Cheese Institute of America does not represent the thousands of small cheese producers in the United States who built the industry, but the great corporations who, because of a monopoly position due to large organization and patent control, have been able to foist on the American public the cheapest kind of cheese, nicely packaged and flavored, at a price as high as that of the very finest kind of domestic cheese. These small, individual cheese producers unfortunately do not have an organization and are not able to reach the officials who are negotiating the actual terms of the reciprocal trade agreement. I do not know if the sending of a high-priced lawyer with a ton cheese to Washington will have any influence with the officials who are negotiating this reciprocal trade agreement. I do know, however, that the corporations behind the Cheese Institute of America are not in the habit of throwing their money away, and presumably they can see where they are going to get their money back. The cheese producers in Green County are beginning to see it too.

The dairy farmers of the United States have received little or no consideration from the New Deal. In protesting against the recent reciprocal trade agreement they are not "political racketeers" or "calamity howlers." If the sacrifice of their interest would result in an increasing gain to the farmers of Canada, which in turn would reflect itself in gains to the industrial sectors of American life, they might see some justification for this trade agreement. As matters stand they can see in this trade agreement only the giving of undue advantage to a few great corporations who are virtual monopolists in their fields and who are enjoying an unconscionable advantage because of patent protection.

Very sincerely yours,

THOMAS R. AMLIE.

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer in the beginning to a statement made on this floor this afternoon by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF]. It was a very capable and very complete statement of the economic condition in which the dairy farmers of the United States find themselves.

I doubt if the Members of this House, particularly the Members who represent districts that have received real benefits from the A. A. A., realize how little has been done for dairying in this country. The dairy industry is more important, from an agricultural standpoint, than is any other type of farming, whether it is the raising of wheat or cotton or cereals or fruit or anything else. The dairy industry has received no benefits from the New Deal program. In addition to that, the interests of the dairy farmer has been sacrificed under the recent trade agreements, because it has permitted, for instance, the importation of cheese from Canada at a lower tariff rate.

Unfortunately, the admission of this cheese is not going to result in benefits to the cheese producers of Canada, but rather to the Kraft-Phenix Co. and other large corporations in this country that own the patents controlling the processing of cheese. I am not going to go into that because I have outlined that carefully in my letter.

We have been in a rather difficult position from the dairy States in outlining a program for the dairy industry, to bring it within the underlying philosophy and purpose of the A. A. A. There are many Representatives who believe that we should have had, in the past, a program calling for the reduction of dairy products. I am not one of those who has ever seen a solution for our difficulties in reducing agricultural products, with the possible exception of wheat, because we do not have production enough to give the American people the liberal diet outlined by the Department of Agriculture.

If we were to give the American people as a whole a liberal diet we should have to increase our production of butter by 100 percent, we should have to increase our production of milk by 70 percent. As we see it, there is no solution in further reducing production of these essential food elements if we are at the present time only producing 50 or 60 percent of that needed to give the American people a liberal diet. If we were to give all of the American people a liberal diet we should have to increase our production of meat by 10 percent. We should have to increase our production of poultry by 35 percent. We should have to increase our production of milk 70 percent; fresh fruits, 70 percent. These statements are based on the cash value of those crops in 1929 and comparing this value with the cash value of crops necessary to give all of the American people in that year the liberal diet, worked out by the Department of Agriculture.

The recently completed survey of national potential product capacity demonstrated that the American farmers could raise the foodstuffs necessary to give all the American people a liberal diet.

The following figures indicate what we produced in 1929 and what we need and can produce in order to feed the American people adequately.

	Produced 1929	What we need and can produce	Percentage increase needed
			Percent
Meats	$5,413,000,000	$5,955,000,000	10
Poultry	879,000,000	1,196,000,000	35
Milk	2,587,000,000	4,449,000,000	75
Butter	1,142,000,000	2,331,000,000	100
Cheese	220,000,000	378,000,000	70
Fresh fruits	955,000,000	1,748,000,000	70

While we produced 25 percent more wheat than we really need, there was only a slight overproduction of corn and hogs in 1929 and actually no overproduction of cotton, if the needs of the people are to be considered. Nevertheless, cotton acreage last year was actually curtailed by 28 percent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. AMLIE] has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10464, the deficiency appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXPLANATION OF VOTE

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, early this afternoon, during roll call no. 9 on the Senate amendment to the bonus bill, I was unavoidably absent from the Chamber on account of important business. If I had been present I would have voter "aye."

CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION IN TEXAS

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 459, to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the participation of the United States in the Texas Centennial Exposition and celebrations to be held in the State of Texas during the years 1935 and 1936, and authorizing the President to invite foreign countries and nations to participate therein, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, and I think perhaps this bill is all right, I think the gentleman should explain to the House exactly what this will provide, so that there will be no misunderstanding later on.

Mr. LANHAM. I shall be glad to. The Members of the House, of course, are familiar with the original joint resolution which passed this body with reference to the Federal participation in the centennial celebration in Texas to be held this year. An appropriation was made for that purpose by the Federal Government, and a Federal Commission appointed to handle it from the Federal angle.

The purpose of this joint resolution is twofold. The need for the amendment proposed here has risen by reason of the fact that certain expenditures which the Federal Commission wishes to make, have met with the suggestion on the part of the Comptroller General that there should be an amendment of the original act to permit them. In other words, as the most striking illustration which really led to the introduction of this amendment, I cite the following: At the battlefield of San Jacinto, one of the decisive battles, I think, of the world, but certainly of this country in the preservation and promotion of liberty, it is contemplated to erect a monument with part of these funds. This monument, of course, would be a permanent structure, and the original authorization does not provide for permanent structures. The Commission wishes to devote some of the funds to this purpose, but the Comptroller General has recommended that the original action be amended to permit it.

The second section of the amendment comes about by reason of the fact that in the original action there was no recommendation and no authority with reference to what the Commission would be authorized to do with any property that came into its hands in the exercise of its functions at the close of the exposition. So this section 2 provides liberal authority in this regard in order that it may be given to the State of Texas or to any public or private agency in the discretion of the Commission that would be most suitable.

Mr. SNELL. At the time we originally passed this resolution, of course, it was not intended that this appropriation or participation on the part of the Federal Government should be for the purpose of erecting permanent monuments, or anything of this kind. It was understood then that the resolution was to provide for participation in the everyday functions of the exposition and for our exhibits down there.

Mr. LANHAM. That is true. It was somewhat broad in scope; but the Commission, in view of the fact that the Battle of San Jacinto was such an important one, especially in the history of our own country, wished to devote a part of these funds to some suitable monument.

Mr. SNELL. Is the entire cost of this monument to be paid out of the Federal appropriation?

Mr. LANHAM. I do not think so. The State of Texas, as the gentleman perhaps knows, has appropriated $3,000,000 to be expended in Texas in conjunction with the money appropriated by the Federal Government.

Mr. SNELL. It is to be taken out of the general fund?

Mr. LANHAM. To be sure.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Gladly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. In connection with the centennial it was contemplated that the main centennial should be held in Dallas; but it was contemplated, also, that there should be markers placed at historic spots in other parts of the State in reference to the historical development of the State. I may say to the gentleman from New York that the expenditures made for these markers will be more or less permanent and will be better expended, perhaps, than though it went for some other purpose.

Mr. SNELL. I agree with the gentleman that some of this money will not be spent to the greatest advantage. I take the position, however, that the original resolution did not provide for the erection of permanent monuments. If the situation is as the gentleman states, and I take the gentleman's word for it, I shall not, however, interpose objections.

Mr. LANHAM. The Commission thought the act ought to be amended so there can be no question about its authority to do these specific things.

Mr. SNELL. I think we may as well spend the money on this as to waste it on something else.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the participation of the United States in the Texas Centennial Exposition and celebrations to be held in the State of Texas during the years 1935 and 1936, and authorizing the President to invite foreign countries and nations to participate therein, and for other purposes"

Resolved, etc., That the United States Texas Centennial Commission established by the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the participation of the United States in the Texas Centennial Exposition and celebrations to be held in the State of Texas during the years 1935 and 1936, and authorizing the President to invite foreign countries and nations to participate therein, and for other purposes", approved June 28, 1935, is authorized, in its discretion, to allocate funds from the appropriation made to carry into effect the provisions of such joint resolution, to the Texas Centennial Commission, the Commission of Control for Texas Centennial Celebrations, the Texas Centennial Central Exposition, and to any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government for the purchase of historic papers and paintings by contract or otherwise without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, the construction and erection of monuments, statues, markers, buildings, and other structures or any part thereof, including purchase of sites, the restoration of historic structures, and the purchase of land in connection with historic structures. The funds so allocated may be expended by such State bodies and Government departments or establishments in any part of the State of Texas in accordance with the allocation by the Commission. Funds allocated to be expended in Bexar County shall be expended in connection with historic purposes only.

SEC. 2. Monuments, statues, markers, buildings, and other structures, erected or constructed, and lands, historic papers, and paintings purchased from funds allocated as herein provided shall become the property of the State of Texas, except that in such cases as the United States Texas Centennial Commission deems it desirable and in the public interest, any such erection, structure, land, or article shall become the property of such organization, or public or private agency as it may designate, subject to such requirements as the Commission may deem necessary or appropriate.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. GINGERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks, and to include therein a radio address made by Secretary of War Dern on January 13, 1936.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GINGERY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of Hon. George H. Dern, Secretary of War, over the N. B. C. network on January 13, 1936, 10:30 p. m.:

Philippine independence is a vital subject in the Philippines. Every Filipino is interested in it and knows about it. Every American ought to be interested in it too, and ought to know about it, for it involves our honor in keeping our promises.

The Philippine Islands are the only Christian country in the Orient, and are about to become the only true Republic in the Far East. Philippine development has been profoundly influenced by two contacts with the Western world.

In 1521, or more than four centuries ago, the first man who ever sailed around the globe, Ferdinand Magellan, by chance brought a Spanish squadron to the Philippines. Sailing across the Atlantic around South America which Columbus had discovered only a few years before, through the Straits which now bear his name, he struck boldly out across the vast unknown western ocean which he named the Pacific, landed first on Guam, now an American island, and then discovered the Philippine Archipelago. He came to the Island of Cebu, with the Bible in one hand and the sword in the other, for he was not only an intrepid explorer and colonizer but also a zealous missionary. He claimed the country for Spain, and within a few days he had baptized the King and most of the population of Cebu. A little group on the small island of Mactan, who had never heard of the great King of Spain, and who objected to having Christianity thrust upon them, gave battle, and Magellan was killed near the spot where his monument now stands.

Magellan's exploits caused other Spanish expeditions to be sent from Mexico, for the Philippine Islands were colonized and governed through the Viceroy of Mexico until Mexico threw off the Spanish yoke and became an independent nation early in the nineteenth century. Forty-three years before the first permanent English settlement in the United States at Jamestown, Va., Legaspi sailed from Mexico, and finally conquered the islands. He named them for the prince who became Spain's great King, Philip II. Gradually Spanish civilization and culture were established among the natives. This was the first contact of the Philippine Islands with western civilization, and it lasted more than 300 years.

The Spaniards gave the Filipinos a religious ideal and the beginnings of education and increased knowledge, as well as better buildings and roads, something like uniform laws, and the outline of a coordinated political system. Nevertheless, the Filipinos were never contented under Spanish rule. During the three centuries between 1573 and 1872 it is estimated that there were more than a hundred revolts, large and small.

On June 19, 1861, was born the great Filipino patriot, Jose Rizal, whose monument now stands in the plaza of practically every considerable town in the islands. He is revered as the national hero and martyr who brought about the downfall of Spanish misrule. He is an outstanding example of that small, select group of men in human history who have profoundly influenced the destiny of their people, and whose names symbolize their national aims and aspirations.

Through his novels and other writing Rizal aroused the Filipinos to a keen sense of their wrongs and a passionate longing for relief. He himself never counseled a violent revolution, but hoped to bring about reforms by peaceful means under the Spanish flag.

Since Rizal would not lead them to revolt, other leaders did so, and on August 26, 1896, the Philippine revolution against Spain began. Rizal was arrested, unjustly accused of having incited the revolution, and on December 30, 1896, was executed.

The revolution gained force, and soon a new leader came to the front. He was a youth of 27 years, only lately out of college, but Emilio Aguinaldo quickly showed great talents of command. Under his direction rapid military progress was made in every Province, until he had driven the Spanish troops into Manila, and had the city surrounded and beseiged, except by way of the sea, the avenue through which the Spanish Army could still get supplies and reinforcements.

Then, on February 15, 1898, the United States battleship Maine was blown up in Habana Harbor, precipitating war between Spain and the United States, which was declared on April 21. On May 1, 1898, occurred the Battle of Manila, in which the Spanish fleet was destroyed by the United States Asiatic squadron, under the command of Commodore Dewey.

Since a fleet alone cannot take and hold territory, American soldiers were sent to Manila, and on August 13 the Spanish authorities surrendered the city to the United States forces. Aguinaldo was not permitted to enter the city with his troops, and friction between him and the Americans developed. On January 21, 1899, General Aguinaldo promulgated the Constitution of the Philippine Republic, and was inaugurated as president, and 2 weeks later the Philippine Insurrection against the United States commenced.

And so we found ourselves fighting the Filipinos—a people who were struggling for independence. Our occupation of the Philippines was not premeditated, but had come about entirely through the fortuitous chance of war. Whatever may be said of us, we certainly did not take the Islands with any thought of territorial aggrandizement. What was then to be the attitude of the United States toward a freedom-loving and freedom-seeking colony which it had so accidently acquired?

There were some imperialists among us who looked toward a policy of colonial expansion and exploitation, and who said, "Where the American flag once goes up it never comes down." Such a departure from our national ideals never commended itself to the American people.

Wisely or unwisely, we had taken the Philippines. Wisely or unwisely, we had assumed the burden and responsibility of governing them. And yet we said the Philippines belonged to the Filipino people; that we were merely their trustees, and that when they were competent to take care of themselves we would resign our trust and let them govern themselves.

Colonial exploitation was repugnant to our minds. We declared that the good of the colony, not our own good, must be the first consideration, which was perhaps a brand new idea in a world which had always colonized for quite different reasons.

Through no fault of their own, the people of the Philippines had not been trained in the difficult art of self-government, and had never been given an opportunity to demonstrate whether they could rule themselves or not, nor whether they would respect the rights and property of others.

How could we tell whether they had been disciplined, as Anglo-Saxons had been disciplined for centuries, to submit to the expressed will of the majority, no matter how wrong the individual might deem that decision to be? Where that principle is not accepted democracy must fail.

And so we set up a military government and proceeded to put down the insurrection. We soon discovered that we had a first-class war on our hands. At first there was heavy fighting between the two armies, in which the Filipino forces were driven back and broken up into small bands. A period of guerrilla warfare ensued, which lasted more than a year and a half. We had more than 70,000 troops scattered all over the Philippines, and we had a garrison in every town of importance and in many places that were mere villages. But the guerrilla warfare continued, under the direction of General Aguinaldo, who was in a remote hiding place. There is no telling how long the insurrection might have lasted if General Frederick Funston had not accidentally learned the whereabouts of General Aguinaldo, and, by bold stratagem, captured him.

The capture of General Aguinaldo soon terminated the insurrection, and the islands were rapidly pacified. The military government, after having established peace and order, and after having made the beginnings of the American type of administration and jurisprudence, of popular education, of building roads, and of modern sanitation, was superseded by a civil government, and step by step self-government was introduced. The second contact of the Philippines with western civilization had begun, this time according to the American style of liberty, enlightenment, and progress. What has been accomplished in the last 37 years is a marvelous story.

Popular election of municipal and provincial officers was instituted 3 years after American occupation, and so the school for democracy was under way. So apt were the native officials that 5 or 6 years later the popular election of the lower house of the Philippine Legislature went into effect. The results were entirely satisfactory, and in 1916, with the encouragement of President Wilson, the Jones Act was passed, making the entire Philippine Legislature elective, and giving the Filipinos an enlarged part in administrative affairs. This was a long step toward self-government.

Let me invite your attention to portions of the preamble of the Jones Act, which was passed by almost the unanimous vote of both parties in Congress:

"It was never the intention of the people of the United States in the incipiency of the war with Spain to make it a war of conquest or for territorial aggrandizement; and

"It is, as it has always been, the purpose of the people of the United States to withdraw their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and to recognize their independence as soon as a stable government can be established therein."

This preamble can only be construed as a definite promise of eventual independence. The Jones Act gave the Filipinos a large measure of self-government and they responded magnificently to their new responsibilities and opportunities.

Meanwhile, that great symbol of democracy, the "little red schoolhouse" of the United States, was transplanted to the Philippines, and universal popular education became and remains as much a Philippine ideal as it is an American ideal. The hunger of the Filipinos, young and old, for education has been remarkable.

At the beginning of American occupation there were practically no decent roads in the Philippines. Today there is an excellent system of highways, those indispensable requisites to agriculture, commerce, industry, and social intercourse. I wish I had time to tell you how the health and well-being of the people has been improved through modern sanitation since American occupation; how public works of various kinds have added to the security, comfort, and self-respect of the people; how the courts have been made temples of justice for rich and poor alike; and how the well-being of the islands has been improved by introducing and fostering new industries which increase the national income, furnish employment, and raise the standard of living.

Perhaps the greatest thing that the United States has done for the Philippines is to give them free access to our markets. Since they have been able to ship their sugar, coconut oil, hemp, tobacco, and other products to the United States without paying duty they have prospered marvelously and are now enjoying a higher standard of living than any other country in the Orient.

Notwithstanding the tremendous benefits which the Filipinos had received from their connection with the United States, their longing for independence continued, and finally the Tyding-McDuffie Act, which is entitled, "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands", etc., was passed. I have just returned from the Philippines where, on the 15th of November, I participated in the inauguration of the new government which was thereby authorized.

By virtue of the independence act there has been created a government called the Commonwealth of the Philippines, which gives the islands almost complete autonomy in their local affairs, putting not only the legislative but also the executive and judicial departments into the hands of the Filipinos. The people elect their own President and Vice President, and also the members of their own legislative department, which consists of one house, known as the National Assembly, and they elect or appoint their own judges.

The inauguration of the Commonwealth of the Philippines deserves to be rated as a historic event in the annals of both the United States and the Philippines.

The question is sometimes asked, "Why does the United States give up so valuable a territorial possession as the Philippine Islands?" The answer is that the value of the islands to the United States does not enter into the calculation. We give them up because we promised them their independence and because of the American conception of the fundamental right of peoples to govern themselves. When the American flag finally comes down in the Philippines it will come down with increased honor for our country.

It is not often that a new nation is launched with such cordial friendship and mutual good will. Often new nations are born in the welter of battles and bloodshed.

President Manuel L. Quezon and Vice President Sergio Osmena are the two undisputed leaders of the Filipino people and have been intimately connected with the development of self-government and the movement for independence. Their long experience in governmental affairs affords every reason to expect a successful administration of the Commonwealth.

Independence is not yet complete, and the islands will remain under American sovereignty for another 10 years. At the end of that period American sovereignty will be withdrawn and the Philippine Republic will supersede the Commonwealth of the Philippines as a completely independent nation.

The 10-year transition period was deemed wise and prudent, principally to enable the Philippines to make the necessary readjustments in their economic life. If they were suddenly required to pay full tariff rates on their exports to the United States, it was feared that it would ruin some of their most important industries, thereby throwing a great many people out of employment and causing much hardship and suffering. The transition period is, therefore, intended to benefit the Filipino people, and to give the new nation a better chance for success. Moreover, the transition period will give the Filipinos a period of training in the executive branch of the government.

The United States still reserves certain powers, including direct supervision and control over foreign affairs, and, in general, the right to intervene in case of serious disorders or failure of the Commonwealth government to meet its obligations. We keep a United States High Commissioner in the islands as the representative of the sovereignty of the United States. The first High Commissioner is the last Governor General, the Honorable Frank Murphy, who has made such an outstanding record during the past 2½ years that he deserves to be ranked among the greatest Governor Generals whom we have sent to the Philippines.

Those who have been in a position to observe closely the part the Filipinos have played in the development of their civil government have nothing but admiration for them and have no misgivings about their fitness for self-government and independence. I see no reason why the Commonwealth should not be a success and why complete independence should not be achieved on schedule time. Certainly we ought to do everything we can to help them on their way.

In granting independence to the Philippines we are fulfilling a promise, and, as President Roosevelt said a few weeks ago, "It is good for a nation to keep its word."

As Americans, therefore, we may be pardoned a natural feeling of gratification over having been true to our national ideals and doing a deed worthy of our ancestry. We rejoice at having had this opportunity to "proclaim liberty through all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof", and to give the world an example of the true meaning of American democracy. May we never falter in putting human rights, human liberties, and human welfare above all selfish ambitions, individually or nationally, at home or abroad, and thereby help to make the world safe through democracy, which may, after all, be more to the point than making the world safe for democracy.

If our own cooperation with the Filipinos in a practical way to establish a new democratic republic, fashioned after the American plan, shall renew our devotion to the high principles which gave birth to our own Nation then our sojourn in the Philippines will have been a blessing to ourselves no less than to the Filipinos. Men always benefit by obeying their noble impulses, and so do nations. The performance of one righteous, unselfish act by America makes it easier and surer for her to be just and upright in all her international relations. It is a proper ambition for her to deserve the esteem and affection, not of the Filipinos alone, but of all right-thinking nations. To deserve them she must keep on high ground.

POLITICAL PHARISEES AND THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein an editorial appearing in the Bergen Evening Record, of Hackensack, N. J.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Bergen Evening Record, of Hackensack, N. J.:

[From the Bergen Evening Record, Tuesday, Jan. 21, 1936]

Former Presidential candidate Alfred E. Smith and his strange bedfellows, the Liberty Leaguers, are vociferously defending the much-revered but overexploited Constitution of the United States. They imply the American democracy was founded upon that document, when, as a matter of historical fact, the Republic was established upon a prior and more liberal Anglo-Saxon assertion of human rights.

The foundation of that new theory of government was the Declaration of Independence, which was adopted in 1776, and became finally effective, after 7 soul-searing years of bloodshed and privation, in 1783. Six years later, in 1789, and 13 years after the signing of the Declaration, the Constitution was adopted, not to establish a new principle of government but to secure by fundamental law and give practical effect to the human governmental principles enunciated in the Declaration itself.

With regard to the Constitution and its inviolacy, its rather pharisaical defenders forget that only 1 year after its adoption, in 1790, 10 amendments had to be annexed to it, and that in every grave national crisis thereafter the document had to be amended to meet the changing human needs in a democracy. Now, there are 21 amendments, all made pursuant to article 5, which prescribes the manner in which such changes may be effected.

The Declaration asserted: "We hold * * * that all men * * * are endowed * * * with certain unalienable rights; * * * that to secure these rights (life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness) governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its power in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness."

In 1933 when the present administration assumed the burdens of government there were 15 million unemployed, who with their 25 million dependents comprised a third of the Nation's population. Failure of the administration to provide relief for these 40 million citizens would have been an omission that most certainly could be destructive of their rights to at least life and the pursuit of happiness.

In some agricultural States the farmers, due to a national economic crisis beyond their control, were faced with the loss of their homes and their means of livelihood through wholesale foreclosures. In their dire necessity they figuratively told the law and the Constitution to go to Hades when by display of organized resistance they compelled local judicial authority to desist from enforcing the mortgage foreclosure and tax-sale laws. Organized society could then have enforced the letter of the Constitution by sending the Federal troops to quell that civic insurrection; but if it had, a conflagration would have resulted that instead of altering a form of government might conceivably have abolished it.

In such circumstances it became necessary for the people of a democracy to preserve at least the liberal spirit, if not the meticulous letter, of their Constitution. Humanity, if not self-preservation, demanded that the other 80 million Americans become their brothers' keeper through any orderly governmental process available to them. They, through their duly elected President and Congress, met that national crisis in the legislative manner prescribed for them by experience and expedience.

The resultant legislation unquestionably relieved a critical condition even though the Nation's future had to be emergently mortgaged to do so, but to assert that our economic and civic problems have been definitely solved is self-delusive. There are still 10,000,000 unemployed and 15,000,000 dependents who, without governmental made work or the morale-shattering dole, would starve and freeze. The other 100,000,000 Americans could not live in social security if those human needs were unprovided for either by industry or by government.

Far from solving our still grave national problems, the adverse decisions of the Supreme Court which have given administration critics so much recent joy have therefore merely accentuated them. Its nine cloistered members doubtless followed judicial precedent faithfully by interpreting meticulously the letter of the Constitution. As the lawful guardians of it, they performed their functions courageously and in accordance with precept.

But the President and Congress, in closer touch with human needs in a period of acute national travail, tried to apply the broader spirit of both the Constitution and the declaration of governmental principles and human rights which was the foundation on which the Republic was established 13 years before the Constitution was adopted.

Liberty Leaguers are trying to capitalize "Thou shalt not", which is exactly what the original Pharisees tried in a grain field to embarrass a great Teacher 20 centuries ago. He replied: "The Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath." The present administration might just as aptly reply to the modern pharisees: "The Constitution was made for the people, not the people for the Constitution."

NEUTRALITY LEGISLATION

Mr. KENNEDY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a radio talk delivered the other evening on the question of neutrality by Mr. Walter Lippmann.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY of New York. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following talk delivered by Walter Lippmann over WEAF, Saturday, January 18, at 11 p. m.

Ladies and gentlemen, in the course of the next 4 or 5 weeks Congress will have to pass some kind of law dealing with the subject of neutrality. I think you will agree that that is a very short time in which to deal with a very big subject. It would be hard enough if Congress had nothing else to do than to discuss this one question for the next month. But there are a dozen other important questions which it has to discuss at the same time. It has the bonus to deal with and the Budget and relief and what is to come after the A. A. A., and the plain fact is that neither Congress nor the President nor the country can give its undivided attention to the question of neutrality. Yet it is perhaps the greatest of all questions. For on it may very well depend the lives of millions of men and the security of the American Republic. It is a question of such overwhelming importance that no one who has any sense of responsibility will wish to settle it in a hurry; to settle it without thorough debate and careful thought.

Why, then, must this momentous question be dealt with in such a hurry? The answer to that is that it is wholly unnecessary to settle it in a hurry. There is now on the statute books a law passed last August which governs American neutrality in the war that is being fought between Italy and Ethiopia. This law is working well enough. It has not involved the United States in any serious controversies with Italy or with Ethiopia. No American interests have been endangered. There is nothing in the immediate situation which gives anyone reason to fear that the United States might be drawn into this particular war. In other words, the law we now have is achieving what the American people want a neutrality law to achieve. It is keeping us out of war with our vital interests and our honor unimpaired. There is only one trouble with the present law. It expires automatically on the 29th of February. So far as this particular war goes, all that is needed, therefore, is for Congress to extend the present law for another year or so. That could be easily done.

If there were no other war in sight that would be all that any one would wish to do. But, of course, there are other wars, much greater wars in sight, and it is these greater wars that Congress and the administration and the people are worried about. There is good reason to be worried. The plain fact is that all the great powers of Europe and Asia are arming feverishly and preparing for war. There is the war in Africa. There is something very much like a war in China. There are gigantic armaments being prepared. There are alliances being formed. There is powerful propaganda in several nations to implant in the minds of the people the conviction that there is no solution for their difficulties except by a resort to force and violence. In short, there exists the real danger of a very great war that might easily involve almost all of the nations of Europe, Africa, and Asia.

Clearly, it is our duty to take every precaution we can take to see to it, if such a great war breaks out, that it does not involve the United States.

The practical question now before the country, the question that has to be decided at once, is whether Congress can, before the 29th of February, determine exactly how the United States shall act in the event of a great European and Asiatic war.

This is the fundamental question on which the American people have to make up their minds. It should be clearly grasped. Can Congress in the next 4 weeks decide how the United States shall act in the event of another great war? This is the real question on which Congress is divided. This is the real issue between the administration and those who think as Senator Nye thinks. It is no use arguing about loans and munitions and cotton and oil and steel and ships and submarines until we make up our minds on this basic question: Are we going to decide now, in the next month, what must be done about all these things? Senator Nye wishes to say what must be done. He wishes to go as far as he can in laying down a rigid policy which the Goverrment must follow.

Those who are opposed to him say that it is in the highest degree dangerous to attempt to say now exactly what the policy of the Government must be. Their contention is that while Congress should give the Government all the powers it might need in order to preserve American neutrality, it is wrong, it is unwise, it is dangerous, for Senator NYE or anyone else to attempt to say precisely what must be done. No one has any objections, on the contrary, everyone agrees, that it may be necessary to do all the things that Senator NYE and his friends wish to do. No one has any objections to giving the Government the power to do them. But there is the most serious objection to saying now, to deciding in a hurry before February 29, that any or all of these things must be done no matter what the circumstances, no matter what the conditions, no matter what the crisis may be, which may at some future time confront the American people.

The attempt to write a binding, cast-iron law today to fix American neutral policy in another great war is like saying, "I may have to play a game of bridge next week and I have decided to lead the eight of diamonds." It is like saying, "I may play football next autumn and on the second play I am going to call for a forward pass." It is like saying, "I have decided that my grandchild is to be a prize fighter", without knowing whether your grandchild is to be a boy or a girl.

In the case of a possible great war in the future nobody knows today, nobody in the Senate, nobody in any country anywhere, when it will break out. Nobody knows where it will break out. Nobody knows who will be fighting. Nobody knows who will be neutral. Nobody knows who will be allied with whom. Nobody knows whether it will be fought on the sea, in the air, or on land. Nobody can look into the future and predict the character of the war which Congress is to make laws about. How, under these circumstances, can any Senator pretend that he knows enough, that he is sufficiently a prophet, to write a law which fixes in advance the correct policy of the United States?

The best proof that this is impossible is to be found in the fact that 17 years after the end of the World War a Senate committee has just spend a hundred thousand dollars trying to find out how and why the United States entered it. That war is over. Yet here we are still arguing and quarreling, still writing books, still making speeches, still holding investigations, and still uncertain as to why we entered the war. If we do not know yet why we entered the last war, how on earth can Congress write a law in 4 weeks telling us exactly how to behave in the next war?

I do not mean to say that we cannot learn much from our mistakes in the last war which will help us to act more wisely the next time. I am sure we can, and that it is our duty to study carefully and dispassionately the history of our attempt to maintain neutrality and the events which caused us to fail. But I am equally certain that we shall not learn much from that experience, if we start with the notion that we already know all about it.

As a matter of fact, if it were possible today to describe the character of the next war, if it were known who is going to fight, and where, and what the military plan of the next war is to be, the next war would almost certainly not take place. If it were known who is going to attack, when he is going to attack, where he is going to attack, who is going to oppose him, there would be no great difficulty in preventing the attack. The very essence of the war danger, however, lies in the inability of the governments and the people to foresee the future. The essence of the danger is that the time, the military strategy, the purposes cannot be foreseen—that the war, if it comes, will come as a surprise and at a moment when the world is not ready for it.

The moral I draw from this is that for the United States to tie its hands today is to increase the danger to the United States, not to diminish it. The only way to be prepared for an unpredictable emergency is to be able to move, to have your hands free, to be alert, resourceful, powerful, and unentangled. These proposals to settle American policy in advance are an attempt to say that we know better today what the emergency will require, though we do not know what the emergency will be, than the President and Congress who actually see what the emergency is.

It is a pretty good rule in human affairs that men should solve the problems of their own day and not try to tell their descendants and their successors how to settle their problems.

The policy of the United States Government is to remain unentangled and free. Let us follow that policy. Let us remain unentangled and free. Let us make no alliances. Let us make no commitments. By the same token let us pass no laws which will bind the future, tie the hands of the Government, deprive it of its freedom, cause it to be entangled in a statute based on what somebody at this moment thinks the Government ought to do in the future.

The simple truth is that we are not wise enough to tell a future Congress and a future President what they must do. We shall be very fortunate if we are wise enough to decide what we must do in the situation that is right before our eyes. We shall need all the wisdom we can find to cross the bridge that we are now trying to cross without deciding also how our successors shall cross the bridges that they will have to cross.

HONOR TO RESERVE OFFICERS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of Reserve officers, and to include therein an article prepared by myself and published in the magazine "The Reserve Officer."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, by permission of the House, I am offering for printing in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, an article prepared by me and published in the Reserve Officer for January 1936. This magazine is the official publication of the Reserve Officers Association of the United States, an organization composed exclusively of Reserve officers and having a membership of approximately 28,000. Of course, all of the 110,000 Reserve officers are eligible for membership in this association. I regard it as a very useful organization of patriotic citizens who devote their time and talents to the cause of national defense, without receiving or expecting any compensation whatsoever.

As I point out in these remarks, military preparedness is the "hobby" of these officers. They are civilians like the rest of us and have to work to support themselves and their families in ordinary business pursuits. But this particular class of citizens, the Reserve officers, devote most of their leisure time to the study of matters affecting their respective military activities. I should personally be greatly pleased if all Reserve officers could see their way clear to become members of this association. The organization uses its strength and influence solely to advance the cause of national defense. They have no selfish ax to grind. I have been more or less intimately associated with this organization for the last 10 or 12 years, and, though I am not now eligible to be a member, I can endorse whole-heartedly and enthusiastically its work.

Mr. Speaker, to you who come from the Volunteer State, this article, emphasizing the high qualities of the volunteer soldier, ought to be very full of appeal. Such a soldier was Andrew Jackson, and such have been practically all of the citizens of Tennessee whenever the Nation has been at war. But Tennessee in this respect is but typical of all the States and of all the sections and of all the citizens of this Republic. But peculiar mention is due to the citizen who, looking far ahead, sees the day of inevitable emergency and begins to prepare in advance, so that he may be the more useful in serving his country.

Here is the article to which I refer:

LET US HONOR THOSE WHO PREPARE

(By Hon. JOHN J. McSWAIN, M. C., chairman, House Military Affairs Committee)

The Romans had a maxim that "Who gives quickly, gives twice." On the same principle, he who volunteers before war to become prepared to fight during war to defend his nation should be twice honored, first for his good sense and vision and next for his patriotic sacrifice of time and strength. All honor to the volunteer soldiers of every war, but more honor to those who volunteer before war and equip themselves to be instantly ready for any unexpected outbreak of war.

Such is the case of the Reserve officers. Since they receive no pay for their time and efforts to become prepared, certainly their motives are not mercenary. Since their services are absolutely vital to the defense of America, they should receive our thanks and our honor. All history, all experience, and common sense warn us that war may break any day. War comes like a thief in the night. I pray never again to see the scourge of war afflict our Nation, but I cannot forget that twice since I was 21 years old wars have come to America and they were separated by 19 years. I volunteered for both, but circumstances prevented my seeing service in the Spanish-American War. If we take the same measure of 19 years, who would be surprised to see war break upon us in 1937? The average interval of time between wars in our history has been about 25 years. Yet who is now ready for war? Have we profited by the great lessons of the last war and the lessons of our history in all wars? Have we passed the necessary law to prevent profiteering upon our Government and upon our civil population? Have we prepared a financial plan whereby we may "pay as we fight"? Have we enough officers competent to organize, train, and lead the millions of unorganized militia? Who would rather see our Nation defeated than to help it become properly prepared to defend itself? Who can guarantee that no war will be forced upon us within 10 years? Who will take the responsibility of having our Nation remain unprepared? Why cannot all of us look ahead and prepare for the possibility of war, just as the Reserve officers are preparing? However peaceful our intentions are, who dare take the risk of having some of the dictators and military cliques of the world force war upon us? Who would have America submit supinely to such dictators and militarists rather than stand up and fight for our rights as our fathers and their fathers have done?

Why be so much interested in the Reserves? Because I am interested in national defense, and because more than 90 percent of the officers who will lead in combat the citizen soldiers mobilized to defend our Nation must be Reserve officers. Ninety percent will certainly leaven the whole lump.

DEFENSE DEPENDS ON THE RESERVES

Since we must have a system of defense, and since the actual defending forces in the field will be led by Reserve officers almost exclusively, the degree of effectiveness of our defense depends upon the efficiency and character of our Reserve officers.

Now, of all times, we must be building up the quality and character of our Reserve officers. The disturbed condition of world affairs, with dictators here and there having hair-trigger power to start a war at their own whim and fancy, and with absolute monarchies under control of militaristic groups, it is necessary for America to look to her defenses. We are the great creditor Nation of the world; we are the richest Nation of the world; we are the most peace-loving Nation in the world. It is therefore too easy for some dictator or militaristic clique to assume, as did the Kaiser and his advisers back in 1915, 1916, and 1917, that Americans will not fight to defend their land, their possessions, their rights, and their honor.

The Kaiser and Von Bethmann-Hollweg and Von Tirpitz discovered their mistake to their sorrow, but we were fortunately circumstanced then, in that the Allies were holding back the German onrush. Though bled almost white and fighting with their backs to the wall, France and Great Britain held the line until the Americans got there. We were slow in getting there. We hardly knew how to start to get ready to fight. It was nearly a year and a half after we declared war before sufficient American armies were organized and trained and put into position to relieve the French and English and to push back the Central Powers so hard that they surrendered. We dare not count upon such a fortunate situation next time. The allies of today may not be our allies of tomorrow. We may have to fight alone a great combination of powers. So long as we fight to defend our own land, if our forces are adequately trained and equipped and provisioned with supplies and ammunition, we will be able to resist invasion and to save our land.

We cannot judge of our adequacy of defense merely by pointing to the Regular Army. It would be hardly a drop in the bucket. Most Regular Army officers would be in position of high command and in staff positions, training and organizing, equipping and supplying the vast armies of civilian soldiers. The officers of the platoons and the companies, and the battalions and of many of the regiments, and of some of the brigades and divisions, must be Reserve officers. These are the officers who will smell the powder, catch the bullets, breathe in the noxious gases, sustain the shock of high explosives, and lead our troops either to victory or defeat. It must not be defeat. Therefore, our Reserve officers must be encouraged and assisted to the highest possible degree of efficiency. They are carrying on a magnificent, unselfish work of preparation. They are constantly studying, answering questionnaires, attending lectures and, as often as Congress appropriates the funds, attending camps for instruction.

Most of these Reserve officers are well educated; most of them are succeeding in their private businesses and professions; most of them have high qualities of natural leadership; most of them are rapidly attaining knowledge and experience in the handling of troops and in the conduct of combat. I lift my hat in honor of these unselfish patriotic Reserve officers.

PREPARATION IS "HOBBY"

A great thinker has said that the character of a man is determined largely by the nature of his hobby. By "hobby" we mean how a man spends his leisure time away from the business by which he makes a living. With the Reserve officers, the study of military history and science, and practicing the art of tactics, constitute their "hobby." After these officers spend a day at hard work to support themselves and their families, and to pay their taxes to their Government, they spend their evenings studying text-books, attending lectures and answering questionnaires to increase their proficiency as officers. Why do they do this? Certainly not for money, because they are paid nothing. After keeping themselves uniformed and paying the expenses of attending lectures, Reserve officers, even those who attend camp, come out at the end of the year showing a loss by reason of working at this "hobby."

This influences their character, this marks their character, because it shows they have the volunteer spirit, the spirit of a patriot and of a far-seeing patriot at that. Most any citizen will volunteer to defend his nation after war breaks. It is the citizen who takes the long look into the future after surveying the history of the past, and realizes that war may break in his age and generation, and realizes that his country will need trained officers as leaders of those who do not look so far ahead, who is a volunteer without compensation, gives his time, his strength, his abilities to preparation as against the day when his country will need him, he is certainly a patriot of the highest type. Such an officer is a volunteer in advance of war. Such citizen is a volunteer soldier of the *n*th degree. Such an unselfish, far-sighted patriotic citizen is entitled now, in peacetime, to the respect and admiration of his fellow citizens. It is common for the Nation to admire and to love those who volunteer in war to defend our shores, but our people ought to admire and love more those citizens who volunteer before war, and get ready for war, so that they may be more useful and helpful, in conducting a war of defense.

NO WAR EXCEPT FOR DEFENSE

In conclusion, I emphasize the thought of defense and defense only. America will never inaugurate a war of aggression. Our people think peace, talk peace and pray for peace. We want to be let alone, but our people, like all worthy people, as revealed by history, will fight and fight heroically in defense of their homes and rights. Without this spirit of willingness to defend by force if need be, our land and our rights, we would not be a Nation today.

I realize the dangers of allowing a militaristic clique to get into control of our Nation. But I also realize the dangers and the fate that awaits a nation not prepared to defend itself. History is full of examples of both sorts of people. But America is not in danger of falling into the hands of a militaristic group. Our system of government, our ideals, and the nature of our people forbid it and will prevent it. On the other hand, America must look to her gates and face the facts of her own history, and of all history, and especially realize that as the world is organized today some unimportant murder, a bullet fired by a maniac assassin, some strange sinking of a ship, may thrust us against our will into a situation where we must fight or surrender our rights. Americans descended from Pilgrim Fathers, from Cavalier pioneers, from all who sought here civil and religious freedom, from fathers who followed Washington, and later followed Jackson, and later still followed Scott and Taylor, and even later still followed Grant on one side and Lee on the other, such Americans, from such sires, knowing their rights, will dare to maintain them. While we wish peace, and seek not only our own peace but the peace of the world, yet we know that times do come when honorable peace, just and enduring peace, may come only at the price of blood and suffering. As sons of sires who settled this land, achieved its independence, erected its Government, developed its resources, and established world leadership in civilization we must be prepared to suffer and sacrifice and shed our blood, in order that the Nation so established by such fathers may be preserved. This is not jingoism; this is not sword rattling; this is not the mark of militarism. It is simply common sense Americanism. It is that America whose defense rests upon civilian soldiers, led by those volunteer soldiers who volunteer to prepare themselves in advance of war. These are called Reserve officers.

These Reserve officers save us from militarism. They are our American substitute for a standing army. They also save us from flabby, selfish, defenseless pleasure-seeking. They keep iron in America's bloodstream. They follow both the example and teaching of Washington. They are preserving our peace, by standing as a warning to any invader.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

JANUARY 22, 1936.

Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby resign my membership from the following committees, to take effect immediately: Merchant Marine and Fisheries; Insular Affairs; Education; Revision of the Laws.

Sincerely,

LOUIS C. RABAUT, M. C.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BUCHANAN, for 1 week, on account of illness.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 9870. An act to provide for the immediate payment of World War adjusted-service certificates, for the cancelation of unpaid interest accrued on loans secured by such certificates, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1626. An act for the refunding of certain countervailing customs duties collected upon logs imported from British Columbia;

S. 2421. An act to amend the act entitled "An act forbidding the transportation of any person in interstate or foreign commerce, kidnaped or otherwise unlawfully detained, and making such act a felony", as amended;

S. 2887. An act authorizing the Perry County Bridge Commission of Perry County, Ind., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cannelton, Ind.;

S. 3120. An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to transfer certain moneys to "Funds of Federal prisoners";

S. 3131. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge and causeway across the water between the mainland, at or near Cedar Point and Dauphin Island, Ala.; and

S. 3425. An act authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Government of Norway in settlement of all claims for reimbursement on account of losses sustained by the owner and crew of the Norwegian steamer Tampen.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 6137. An act for the relief of the Otto Misch Co.; and

H. R. 9870. An act to provide for the immediate payment of World War adjusted-service certificates, for the cancelation of unpaid interest accrued on loans secured by such certificates, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, January 23, 1936, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

614. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated January 20, 1936, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of, and review of reports on, Sabine-Neches waterway, Texas, authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved August 30, 1935, and requested by resolution of the Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, adopted May 25, 1935; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

615. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated January 20, 1936, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of, and review of reports on, Hendricks Harbor, Maine, authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved August 30, 1935, and requested by resolution of the Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, adopted March 28, 1935; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

616. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1936, to remain available until expended, for the Department of Agriculture, amounting to $296,185,000, together with a sum equal in amount to certain unexpended balances (H. Doc. No. 396); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

617. A letter from the assistant secretary to the President, transmitting a bound volume of World Peaceways Pledges of Support, together with copies of correspondence pertaining thereto; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

618. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

619. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a proposed bill to provide for the settlement of claims against the Government for damages arising from the operation of vessels of the Coast Guard and the Public Health Service; to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: Committee on Foreign Affairs. House Joint Resolution 459. Joint resolution to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the participation of the United States in the Texas Centennial Exposition and celebrations to be held in the State of Texas during the years 1935 and 1936, and authorizing the President to invite foreign countries and nations to participate therein, and for other purposes"; without amendment (Rept. No. 1920). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DISNEY: A bill (H. R. 10483) to provide revenue from the importation of crude petroleum and its products; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BACHARACH: A bill (H. R. 10484) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to convey to the city of Atlantic City, N. J., certain portions of the Absecon Lighthouse Reservation, Atlantic City, N. J.; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. BOYLAN: A bill (H. R. 10485) relating to the compensation of certain Immigration and Naturalization Service employees; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. UTTERBACK: A bill (H. R. 10486) to amend section 2 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes", approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C., title 15, sec. 13), and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DIMOND: A bill (H. R. 10487) to authorize a survey of Lowell Creek, Alaska, to determine what, if any, modification should be made in the existing project for the control of its floods; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. KENNEY: A bill (H. R. 10488) to establish a United States Army air base at Teterboro, Bergen County, N. J., to provide a supporting Army air base at a favorable and strategic location for the protection of the North Atlantic coast and coast cities and the national defense; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MILLARD: A bill (H. R. 10489) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding and settlement of the city of New Rochelle, N. Y.; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. WILCOX: A bill (H. R. 10490) to amend chapter 9 of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McSWAIN (by request): A bill (H. R. 10491) to authorize the Secretary of War to acquire by donation land at or near Newburgh, in Orange County, N. Y., for aviation field, military, or other public purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KRAMER: A bill (H. R. 10492) granting a renewal of Patent No. 60731, relating to the badge of the Girl Scouts, Inc.; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. PALMISANO: A bill (H. R. 10493) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to reappoint Henry Lee Woods in the police department of said District; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. STEFAN: A bill (H. R. 10494) to amend section 32 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of certain bridges and to extend the times for commencing and/or completing the construction of other bridges over the navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes", approved August 30, 1935; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GAVAGAN: A bill (H. R. 10495) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint a board of five members to receive donations for establishing a National Conservatory of Music for the education of pupils in music in all its branches, vocal and instrumental, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. LUCKEY: A bill (H. R. 10496) to repeal the Potato Act of 1935; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. McSWAIN (by request): A bill (H. R. 10497) to provide that the holders of the Medal of Honor, Distinguished Service Cross, or the Navy Cross, shall be employed in the civil service without a competitive examination; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. RAMSAY: A bill (H. R. 10498) providing for the establishment of the National Memorial Prehistoric Mound Park in the city of Moundsville, Marshall County, W. Va.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. KOPPLEMANN: A bill (H. R. 10499) to incorporate the Italian-American World War Veterans of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JONES: A bill (H. R. 10500) to make further provision for the conservation and proper utilization of the soil resources of the Nation; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 10501) to amend the National Housing Act, as amended, so as to permit the insurance of financial institutions making certain loans and advances of credit subsequent to March 31, 1936, and prior to April 1, 1938; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. FERGUSON: A bill (H. R. 10502) to amend the Revenue Act of 1934, so as to impose taxes upon the processing of certain agricultural commodities; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KENNEDY of New York: A bill (H. R. 10503) to promote the public health, safety, and welfare by providing for the elimination of insanitary and dangerous housing conditions, to relieve congested areas, to aid in the construction and supervision of low-rental dwelling accommodations, and to further national industrial recovery through the employment of labor and materials; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. REILLY: Joint Resolution (H. J. Res. 463) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of each year General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CONNERY: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 464) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of each year General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLOOM: A bill (H. R. 10504) for the relief of Booth & Co., Inc., a Delaware corporation; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10505) for the relief of Patrick Joseph McEntee; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. BOLAND: A bill (H. R. 10506) for the relief of Thomas A. Coyne; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10507) granting a pension to Mary Elizabeth O'Keefe; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BREWSTER: A bill (H. R. 10508) for the relief of the Van Buren Light & Power District; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CRAVENS: A bill (H. R. 10509) authorizing the President to present in the name of Congress a medal of honor to Harold R. Wood; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CROSBY: A bill (H. R. 10510) granting a pension to Lizzie Lawson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CULKIN: A bill (H. R. 10511) granting an increase of pension to Christiann Perrego; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GAVAGAN: A bill (H. R. 10512) for the relief of Sarah Antokoletz Weintraub; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. HIGGINS of Connecticut: A bill (H. R. 10513) for the relief of Janet Hendel, nee Judith Shapiro; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10514) for the relief of Lena Hendel, nee Lena Goldberg; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. KNUTE HILL: A bill (H. R. 10515) granting a pension to Jennie Ledford McNeill; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOPE: A bill (H. R. 10516) granting an increase of pension to Mary T. Eagy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10517) granting an increase of pension to James E. Mulford; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JACOBSEN: A bill (H. R. 10518) for the relief of Charles French; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10519) for the relief of Martin W. Duffy; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KOCIALKOWSKI: A bill (H. R. 10520) for the relief of Joseph A. Plozy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LORD: A bill (H. R. 10521) for the relief of Joseph Mossew; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LUCAS: A bill (H. R. 10522) granting a pension to Anna Angelow; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10523) granting a pension to Agnes G. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McKEOUGH: A bill (H. R. 10524) granting a pension to Ella F. Stewart; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10525) granting a pension to Annie Marie Swingle; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McSWAIN: A bill (H. R. 10526) for the relief of Edgard B. Ligon; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MAAS: A bill (H. R. 10527) for the relief of Harris Bros. Plumbing Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MAIN: A bill (H. R. 10528) granting a pension to Lena P. Riddick; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MARSHALL: A bill (H. R. 10529) for the relief of Ethel Hale Hayes; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PALMISANO: A bill (H. R. 10530) granting a pension to Sarah J. Tuttle; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10531) granting a pension to Annie M. Oliver; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10532) granting a pension to Lucy Pierce; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10533) for the relief of Chaim (Hyman) Kaplan; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10534) for the relief of the Marocco Construction Co., Inc.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REILLY: A bill (H. R. 10535) granting a pension to Minnie G. S. Spink; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHANLEY: A bill (H. R. 10536) for the relief of Kramp & Co., Inc.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SOMERS of New York: A bill (H. R. 10537) for the relief of Rachel (or Rose) Nussbaum Shildkraut; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. TOLAN: A bill (H. R. 10538) for the relief of Richard Killman; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WELCH: A bill (H. R. 10539) for the relief of Max Weinrib; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. WERNER: A bill (H. R. 10540) granting an increase of pension to Philip F. Wells; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1, of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

9607. By Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts: Petition of National Association of Cotton Manufacturers, protesting against continuing the present policy of the Government which allows imports from foreign countries where wages are less than one-tenth of what is paid in this country; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

9608. By Mr. CHURCH: Petition of Victory Memorial Hospital Association, signed by Fred B. Whitney, president, against enactment of excise or other taxes in lieu of processing taxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

9609. By Mr. CONNERY: Petition protesting against United States participation in the Olympic Games in Germany; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9610. Also, declaration of principles of the Clan-Na-Gael, of Greater Boston, and endorsed by the Emmet Associates of Lynn, Mass., denouncing the activities of the Carnegie Foundation and its subsidiaries, and asking for a congressional investigation of the Carnegie Foundation and its subsidiaries; to the Committee on Rules.

9611. By Mr. CULKIN: Petition of seven residents of Cazenovia, Madison County, N. Y., favoring passage of House bill 8739; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

9612. By Mr. DELANEY: Petition of the American-Italian Union of New York City, requesting the Members of Congress to reenact the neutrality legislation which is now in full force and effect, because the only safe and realistically neutral policy for this Nation to attempt is a policy based upon sound, tested, and accepted international law; namely, to refuse to deal in munitions with any and all nations at war and to trade other commodities freely with all nations, either at war or at peace, provided that in our trade relations with warring nations we treat both equally and alike; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9613. Also, petition of the Italian Chamber of Commerce of New York City, requesting that in the framing of any neutrality law full consideration be given to the legitimate interests of industry and trade, so that the natural flow of trade between the United States and any nations of the world shall not be hindered, but that such a law should limit an embargo on arms, ammunition, and implements exclusively prepared for war purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9614. By Mr. GAVIGAN: Memorial of the Isabella Council, No. 873, Knights of Columbus, supporting policy of allotment of 50 percent of all radio frequencies to educational, religious, agricultural, labor, and similar non-profit-making and human-welfare associations; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9615. By Mr. GOODWIN: Petition of citizens served by star route no. 7467 in the towns of Columbiaville, Stottville, Stockport, and Stuyvesant Falls, N. Y., urging legislation that will indefinitely extend all existing star-route contracts, and increase the compensation thereon, to an equal basis with that paid for other forms of mail transportation; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9616. By Mr. HILDEBRANDT: Resolution submitted by the Sioux Falls Chamber of Commerce, relative to bringing about legislation which will place the farming industry on an equality with other industries; to the Committee on Agriculture.

9617. Also, petition urging immediate provision for seed loans by members of Farm Bureau, the Farmers' Union, Farm Holiday Association, the Grange, or members of allotment committees; to the Committee on Agriculture.

9618. Also, petition of patrons of star route no. 59102, between Sisseton, S. Dak., and Browns Valley, Minn., urging legislation which will extend all existing star-route contracts and increase the compensation thereon to an equal basis with that paid for other forms of mail transportation; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9619. By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: Petition of W. A. Crawford, publisher of the Blooming Grove Times, Blooming Grove, Tex., favoring Senate bill 2883, which provides for funds for vocational agriculture and home economics; to the Committee on Agriculture.

9620. Also, resolutions adopted by Navarro County farmers at Corsicana, Tex., favoring the equalization and adjustment of the tariff burden upon the agricultural classes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

9621. By Mr. KENNEDY of New York: Petition relating to foreign affairs; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9622. By Mr. KENNEY: Resolution of the New Jersey State Planning Board, urging the passage of appropriate legislation by Congress to establish a permanent national planning agency in general accordance with the recommendations of the national resources committee; to the Committee on Appropriations.

9623. By Mr. LORD: Petition of Granville J. Burton and 135 other citizens of Chenango County, N. Y., requesting the enactment of the Townsend old-age revolving pension plan; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

9624. By Mr. LUNDEEN: Petition of the Minnesota State Grange, urging passage of legislation providing for a continuation of some form of production control; to the Committee on Agriculture.

9625. Also, petition of the league of Minnesota Municipalities, Minneapolis, Minn., urging passage of Senate bill 2883, providing for Federal aid to vocational education; to the Committee on Education.

9626. Also, petition of the State Conservation Commission of Minnesota, urging passage of House bill 6594, providing additional park facilities and recreational grounds; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

9627. Also, petition of Lake Stay Local No. 178 of the Farmers Education and Cooperative Union of America, Minnesota Division, Ivanhoe, Minn., urging passage of the Frazier-Lemke farm refinancing bill, and the Thomas-Massingale cost-of-production bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

9628. Also, petition of the County Board of Lincoln County, Minn., urging the passage of the Frazier-Lemke farm refinancing bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

9629. By Mr. MERRITT of New York: Resolution of conference of mayors and other municipal officials of the State of New York, endorsing Senate bill 2883; to the Committee on Agriculture.

9630. Also, resolution of Isabella Council, No. 873, Knights of Columbus, representing 300 men of the city of New York, supporting the policy that 50 percent of all radio frequencies be allotted to educational, religious, and other non-profit-making associations; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9631. Also, telegram sent by the New York Chapter of American Veterans Association to the national commander of the American Legion; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

9632. Also, resolution of the Queens Branch of the American Association of University Women, whose members number 75, urging our Senators and Representatives in the present session of Congress to support all legislation that tends toward world peace and to cooperate in all international efforts to suppress war by pacific methods; and we also ask the neutrality of the United States to the extent that we do not become involved in war, and do not contribute in any way to a prolongation of war by other nations; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9633. Also, resolution of the American-Italian Union, New York City, regarding proposed neutrality bill; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9634. Also, resolution of the Grand Lodge of the Order Sons of Italy in America; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9635. Also, petition of the Italian Chamber of Commerce, regarding proposed neutrality bill; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9636. Also, resolution of the Pontier Democratic Association, Inc., advocating immediate payment of adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

9637. By Mr. MICHENER: Petition signed by Dale Scofield and 21 other residents of Jackson, Mich., urging that legislation be passed at this session of Congress providing for the indefinite extension of all existing star-route contracts, and for increasing the compensation thereon to an equal basis with that paid for other forms of mail transportation; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9638. By Mr. MONAGHAN: Petition of star-route contractors, for extension of all existing star-route contracts and increase in compensation thereon to an equal basis with that paid for other forms of mail transportation; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9639. Also, petition of star-route contractors, favoring extension of all existing star-route contracts and increase in compensation to an equal basis with that paid for other forms of mail transportation; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9640. Also, petiton of star-route contractors, for extension of all existing star-route contracts and increase in compensation thereon to an equal basis with that paid for other forms of mail transportation; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9641. By Mr. PFEIFER: Telegram of the Italian Chamber of Commerce in New York, Ercole H. Locatelli, president, concerning neutrality legislation; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9642. Also, petition of the International Union of Operating Engineers, Local Union No. 319, Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring the Walsh bill (S. 3055); to the Committee on Labor.

9643. By Mr. TARVER: Petition of Mrs. R. E. Hamilton and 10 other ladies of Douglasville, Ga., in the interest of world-wide peace and legislation outlawing war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9644. Also, petition of Mrs. V. R. Smith and nine other ladies of Douglasville, Ga., in the interest of world-wide peace and legislation outlawing war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9645. By Mr. WOLCOTT: Petition of Thomas A. Nichol, of Filion, Mich., and 80 other citizens of the Seventh Congressional District of Michigan, urging the enactment of legislation to indefinitely extend all existing star-route contracts, and increase the compensation thereon to an equal basis with that paid for other forms of mail transportation; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9646. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Pontier Democratic Association, Jamaica, N. Y.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 23, 1936

(Legislative day of Thursday, Jan. 16, 1936)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m., on the expiration of the recess.

MILLARD E. TYDINGS, a Senator from the State of Maryland, appeared in his seat today.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Wednesday, January 22, 1936, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 459) to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the participation of the United States in the Texas Centennial Exposition and celebrations to be held in the State of Texas during the years 1935 and 1936, and authorizing the President to invite foreign countries and nations to participate therein, and for other purposes", in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 1626. An act for the refunding of certain countervailing customs duties collected upon logs imported from British Columbia;

S. 2421. An act to amend the act entitled "An act forbidding the transportation of any person in interstate or foreign commerce, kidnaped, or otherwise unlawfully detained, and making such act a felony", as amended;

S. 2887. An act authorizing the Perry County Bridge Commission, of Perry County, Ind., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cannelton, Ind.;

S. 3120. An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to transfer certain moneys to "Funds of Federal prisoners";

S. 3131. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge and causeway across the water between the mainland, at or near Cedar Point, and Dauphin Island, Ala.;

S. 3245. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at Astoria, Clatsop County, Oreg.; and

S. 3425. An act authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Government of Norway in settlement of all claims for reimbursement on account of losses sustained by the owner and crew of the Norwegian steamer Tampen.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Bilbo	Byrnes	Costigan
Ashurst	Black	Capper	Couzens
Austin	Bone	Caraway	Davis
Bachman	Borah	Carey	Dickinson
Bailey	Brown	Chavez	Dieterich
Bankhead	Bulkley	Clark	Donahey
Barbour	Bulow	Connally	Duffy
Barkley	Burke	Coolidge	Fletcher
Benson	Byrd	Copeland	Frazier
George	King	Murray	Sheppard
Gerry	La Follette	Neely	Shipstead
Gibson	Lewis	Norbeck	Smith
Glass	Logan	Norris	Steiwer
Gore	Lonergan	Nye	Thomas, Okla.
Guffy	McAdoo	O'Mahoney	Thomas, Utah
Hale	McCarran	Overton	Townsend
Harrison	McGill	Pittman	Trammell
Hastings	McKellar	Pope	Truman
Hatch	McNary	Radcliffe	Vandenberg
Hayden	Maloney	Reynolds	Wagner
Holt	Minton	Robinson	Walsh
Johnson	Moore	Russell	White
Keyes	Murphy	Schwellenbach

Mr. MINTON. I announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] is necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

INTERNATIONAL MANUFACTURERS' SALES CO. OF AMERICA, INC.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that on yesterday, in the matter of the bill (H. R. 4178) for the relief of the International Manufacturers' Sales Co. of America, Inc., A. S. Postnikoff, trustee, I was appointed a conferee on the part of the Senate. I wish to withdraw as such conferee, and to ask that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] be appointed in my place. My reason for making the request is that I am opposed to the bill, and not in a position to serve as a Senate conferee in the conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Chair appoints the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] as a conferee on the bill referred to in place of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a proposed draft of legislation to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, relative to corporate reorganizations, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DAMAGES ARISING FROM OPERATION OF VESSELS OF COAST GUARD AND PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine certain claims for damages resulting from the operation of vessels of the Coast Guard and Public Health Service, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT OF PERMANENT APPROPRIATION REPEAL ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend section 21 of the Permanent Appropriation Repeal Act of 1934, and so forth, so as to except specifically from its operation any check heretofore or hereafter drawn by the Treasurer of the United States on account of the public-debt obligations of the Philippine Islands or Puerto Rico, and to authorize the Treasurer to refund the amounts of such checks, which have remained unpaid, to those governments under certain conditions, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Kentucky, which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolution recommending to the Congress and the Senate of the United States that the home site of Gen. George Rogers Clark in Clarksville, Ind., be memorialized

Whereas the expedition of Gen. George Rogers Clark crossed the boundary of the State of Kentucky and came to a rest at a point on the west side of the Ohio River, then known as the Point, and from which started the invasion of the Northwest which culminated in the capture of Fort Sackville on February 25, 1779, and resulted in the acquisition by the new United States of the great Northwest territory, which now comprises five States and a part of a sixth, and having more than one-fifth the population and one-fourth of the wealth and resources of the United States; and

Whereas the Clark expedition was the one and only colonial military campaign of the Revolutionary War west of the Appalachian Mountains; and

Whereas the town of Clarksville, in the county of Clark, State of Indiana, was at one time part of the county of Jefferson, in the State of Kentucky, and was a part of Kentucky when the conquest started, the State of Kentucky now concurs with the Town Board of Clarksville in its interest in commemorating the Revolution in the West because the site of Clarksville was the site of the starting and closing point of the conquest that gave the Colonies the great Northwest, and is the most historic spot in these United States west of the Allegheny Mountains; and

Whereas the Town Board of Clarksville is initiating the movement for the commemoration of George Rogers Clark and his men on the site which by special act of the State of Virginia in 1793 created by patent the town in the wilderness of the Indian territory to be known as the town of Clarksville forever; and

Whereas George Rogers Clark made this site his home, was chairman of its first board of trustees, helped to subdivide it into lots, lay off the streets and name each after an officer of his regiment, and by his acts helped to perpetuate the growth, civic and social welfare of that community; and

Whereas he builded his home in which were few joys, and his greatest sorrows came in the nature of a paralytic stroke, the severe burns which caused the amputation of his leg to the tune of the fife and drum, which was the only anesthetic then known; and

Whereas his last illness, caused by sorrow and heartbreak, resulted in his death; and

Whereas the finances of the town of Clarksville will never be able to permit the building of the shrine in honor of the statesman, soldier, and patriot equal to his deeds and accomplishments, but that the National Government and the people thereof, for whom the privations were suffered and the valorous deeds of war were done, should assist in commemorating the same; and

Whereas the town of Clarksville, Ind., will cause resolution authorizing a Federal appropriation for buying of land, building of roads and paths, grading and landscaping, the erection of a national memorial suitable to the character of the man; and

Whereas there was never greater need than now exists for the revival of the principles which found their expression in the American war for independence: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, That the petition to the Congress of the United States by the town of Clarksville, Ind., for the memorialization of Gen. George Rogers Clark for the reasons set out in this resolution is worthy, and it is hereby recommended to the Congress of the United States that this petition be granted.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution unanimously adopted by the Women's National Democratic Club at New York City, N. Y., favoring the calling of a constitutional convention for the purpose of proposing amendments to the Constitution "and more especially for defining and limiting the power of the Supreme Court to nullify laws passed by the people's chosen representatives in Congress assembled", which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAPPER presented papers in the nature of petitions from the pastors and congregations of the Church of the Brethren of Bloom, Belleville, and Navarre, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the maintenance of peace among the nations and for the pursuance of a policy of strict neutrality on the part of the United States in foreign controversies, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. COPELAND presented resolutions adopted by the Syracuse (N. Y.) Society of Architects, favoring the separation of projects for construction on the work-relief program into two classes: (1) The portion of the work requiring experienced supervision, efficient organization, and a high degree of skill to be undertaken under normal construction contract agreements; (2) all other work requiring largely unskilled labor to be undertaken as direct work-relief projects; and also that other forms of industrial relief be given consideration, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of New York City, N. Y., praying for the making of an appropriation for the continuance of investigations by the special committee on investigation of the munitions industry, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Junior Castelbonian Society, of Brooklyn, N. Y., protesting against the neutrality policy of the administration, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions of the Maritime Association of the Port of New York, N. Y., protesting against the enactment of legislation repealing the so-called long- and short-haul clause of the Interstate Commerce Act, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Concurrent resolution memorializing the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States that it is the sense of the members of the Minnesota Legislature that the Government of the United States should perform its solemn promise and duty and place American agriculture on the basis of equality with other industries by providing an adequate system of credit, and that adequate legislation to that end should be adopted at the earliest possible date

Whereas the farmers throughout the entire United States have lost and are losing their lands and chattels through inability to refinance loans on their property because of high taxes and interest rates and low prices of agricultural commodities; and

Whereas agriculture is the basic industry of this country and there can be no sound business prosperity unless the business of agriculture is placed on a sound basis and on an equal basis with other industries; and

Whereas a bill has been introduced in the Senate of the United States known as the farmers' farm relief act, commonly called the Frazier bill; and

A bill to liquidate and refinance agricultural indebtedness, and to encourage and promote agriculture, commerce, and industry by establishing an efficient credit system, through which the unjust and unequal burdens placed upon agriculture during the period of price fixing and deflation may be lightened by providing for the liquidation and refinancing of farm mortgages and farm indebtedness at a reduced rate of interest through the Federal farm loan system, the Federal Reserve banking system, and the Postal Savings depository system and creating a board of agriculture to supervise the same; and

Whereas this bill is a sound economic measure designed to remedy the inequalities under which agriculture is now laboring: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, urgently petitioned to enact the said bill into law, and that the President of the United States be urged to approve said measure after its passage; be it further

Resolved, That the Minnesota Members of the United States Senate and the Representatives in Congress from the State of Minnesota be, and they are hereby, petitioned and most earnestly urged to use their best efforts to bring about a speedy enactment of said legislation; be it further

Resolved, That a duly authenticated copy of this resolution be presented to the President of the United States, to the Presiding Officers of the Senate and of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Minnesota in the Congress of the United States.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE LIBRARY

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 307) authorizing the erection of a memorial to the early settlers whose land grants embrace the site of the Federal City, reported it without amendment.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 3798) to authorize and direct the Comptroller General to settle and allow the claim of George P. Money for fees for services rendered; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CLARK:

A bill (S. 3799) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Randolph, Mo.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE:

A bill (S. 3800) for the relief of John Reinke; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 3801) for the relief of R. H. Keene; and

A bill (S. 3802) for the relief of Joseph E. Moore (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 3803) to extend the benefits of the Employees' Compensation Act of September 7, 1916, to Josephine Russell, a former nurse in the Indian Service; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3804) granting a pension to Carolyn M. Clawges; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McCARRAN:

A bill (S. 3805) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to reserve certain lands on the public domain in Nevada for addition to the Walker River Indian Reservation; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 3806) to designate a building site for the National Conservatory of Music of America, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. DUFFY:

A bill (S. 3807) for the relief of the estate of O. K. Himley; and

A bill (S. 3808) for the relief of R. D. Stephens and Vera Stephens; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3809) for the relief of Salvatore Mandala; and

A bill (S. 3810) to amend section 2169 of the Revised Statutes, relating to naturalization of aliens; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 3811) to amend section 22 of the act approved March 4, 1925, entitled "An act providing for sundry matters affecting the naval service, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 3812) to make it unlawful to take or receive California sardines (pilchards) for reduction on the high seas contiguous to the Pacific coast of the United States;

A bill (S. 3813) to provide that persons and property in connection with the taking, delivery, receipt, and processing of California sardines (pilchards) on the high seas off the western coast of the United States shall be subject to the laws of the respective adjoining coastal States, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 3814) to make it unlawful for any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States and for certain vessels to deliver California sardines (pilchards) for processing on the high seas off the western coast of the United States, except in accordance with the laws of the western coastal States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 3815) for the relief of Joseph B. Mitchell; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 3816) for the relief of Clyde P. Bogan; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NEELY:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 202) to aid in defraying the expenses of a National Negro Exposition to be held in the city of Atlanta, Ga., during the year 1936; to the Committee on Appropriations.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. SHEPPARD, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 3685) for the relief of George Rabcinski, and it was referred to the Committee on Claims.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN ARIZONA—AMENDMENT

Mr. HAYDEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 813) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to establish a fish-cultural station in Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC GRAZING LANDS—AMENDMENT

Mr. ASHURST and Mr. HAYDEN jointly submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H. R. 10094) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration; to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development; to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range; and for other purposes", approved June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys and ordered to be printed.

MEDICAL CARE OF VETERANS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations a telegram from J. B. McDade, department commander of the American Legion, of Pennsylvania, relative to hospital beds. I recognize his statement as to the needs to be correct, and urge just consideration for the medical care of our veterans. I earnestly trust that the Committee on Appropriations will bear this request in mind in making up the independent offices appropriations bill.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SCRANTON, PA., January 21, 1936.

Senator JAMES DAVIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Necessary that you use influence because independent offices appropriation bill diminishes hospital beds outside of Veterans' Administration facilities. Pennsylvania needs 125 beds at Aspinwall and 250 at Philadelphia at once. We would appreciate your kind support.

J. B. MCDADE,
Department Commander, American Legion, Department of Pennsylvania.

LOCAL ADMINISTRATION OF WORK-RELIEF PROJECTS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations an editorial on Senate bill 3673, which appeared January 18 in the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette.

I introduced this bill on work relief with no thought of criticizing the present administration, but simply with a view to practical business efficiency. My contention is that it is impossible to direct work relief on local projects from Washington, as is now being attempted, and that local administration of local projects would not only eliminate the enormous overhead, but generally speed up a return to recovery. Local officials could put projects under way quickly without red tape and delay.

In his message to Congress the President asked for constructive suggestions, and in this spirit I am offering what I believe to be a practical plan for work relief.

There being no objection, the editorial was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette of Jan. 18, 1936]

DAVIS BILL WOULD CUT RED TAPE IN WORK RELIEF

Senator DAVIS advanced a constructive suggestion in his bill providing for localization of relief and work-relief activities. The details of his plan may not be perfect and need not be reviewed at this time; the essential point is that it would strike at the extravagant political set-up which now exists.

The Senator's proposal is along the lines advocated several months ago by Mayor McNair and Works Director Johnston. Members of council agreed there was "something to it", but held it was a waste of time to press it, since the Federal administration had established its procedure.

If the city wants to undertake a street or sewer project with Federal aid, under the Davis bill it would merely submit the plans to the President or his designated representatives, and if the project were approved as worth while the Government's contribution would be turned over to the city. Details would be handled by the regular departments and administrative force; the municipal authorities would know just where they stood at all times and would not face the danger of having Federal aid cut off in the middle of a job because break-downs elsewhere had exhausted funds. Men could be assigned to work more quickly, and in the aggregate more would be employed. Savings in overhead could be diverted to useful improvements.

A report of the chief engineer of the city department of public works shows that under the present system there are more than 100 separate and distinct steps that have to be gone through in preparing and handling a W. P. A. job. Three-fourths of that red tape could be eliminated under the Davis plan.

But it probably won't go through for just that reason. The political powers in Washington have no idea of giving up a system which, however costly, fits into the plans of State and local bosses with 10 percent of the jobs classed as administrative and handed out brazenly as ward-chairman patronage.

SPEECH OF SENATOR WALSH AT LAUNCHING OF UNITED STATES DESTROYERS

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a speech delivered by my colleague the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] on the occasion of the launching of the United States Navy destroyers Conyngham and Case at the Boston Navy Yard, September 14, 1935.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is my proud privilege as one of the representatives of the State of Massachusetts in the United States Senate to celebrate with you the completion of these two new units of the United States naval forces.

First, I wish to extend my heartiest congratulations to the officers and men of the Navy, who by their devotion to the service of their country, their diligence, their skill, and their engineering genius have made possible this great achievement. I also congratulate the civilian personnel who, with just pride and real enthusiasm, have participated in the building of these naval vessels.

The creation of these two naval ships which are of the most modern construction, carefully designed with a view to incorporating into their structures all of the engineering features and up-to-date appurtenances of present-day naval craft, is an accomplishment of which we may all be proud.

It is perhaps an anomaly and a contradiction on an occasion like this when we are launching craft that will supplement our naval defenses to speak of peace. The very purpose for which these ships have been built would seem to bespeak militancy and those things which we associate with war. But in the real sense this is a superficial view. The policy of preparedness underlying the increases in our Navy, as is evidenced by the launching of these vessels, hides a deep and more significant meaning. We must understand that meaning to appreciate the real purpose for which we have sought to increase our naval forces.

We are a peace-loving people. We are, and I believe have been, a law-abiding people from the earliest days of this Republic. Following the example of the great leaders of our country who founded the democratic institutions under which we now live and who charted our first foreign policies, we have sought in our international relations to follow the precept and principle, "with charity to all nations, with malice to none." We have sought to avoid those alliances, those entanglements with foreign nations which led to war. We have repeatedly fostered and encouraged efforts for the settlement of international problems, by courts of arbitration and by conciliating disputes which led to international strife and discord.

We have made some real sacrifices in the name of peace. We have even fought to preserve world peace when we believe that war, ironically, the very war we fought to guarantee that peace, seems to have followed by a combination of circumstances affecting international relations and creating disturbances likely to culminate in war that may be without precedent in history.

But in spite of this painful reality, our policy has and must still continue to be that of encouraging peace, striving for harmony with the other nations of the world.

Is there any wonder when we look about and consider the present-day world in which we live, the jealousies and rivalries of the nations abroad, that we should be impressed with the need for providing and maintaining an Army and a Navy and an air force that can adequately protect us against foreign invasion? In the Naval Conference of 1921 and again in those conferences which have followed, in pursuance of our aims to promote good will between nations, we have consented to reduce our Navy in common with other nations to the point where it was debatable in the minds of our naval experts and military strategists whether we had not diminished our armed forces to so large an extent that they were not sufficient to provide for our own defense.

Complications, intrigues, alliances, and greed for territories of other peoples have increased and developed in recent times, so that it would appear to the ordinary observer that strife and warfare in the near future are inevitable. It is unthinkable, in view of the horrors and the sacrifices and the bloodshed and the stupendous slaughter of manpower and wealth that accompanied the last Great War, that civilized nations should again rush into the tumult of mutual destruction.

But it seems quite evident to me that the forces working for peace in this world today are far less powerful than the forces working for war. However much we may deprecate this fact, it seems to be obvious that we are confronted by an international arrangement wherein nations since the World War have been arming to the teeth, so to speak, and preparing to make another irrational sacrificial offering to war.

The European nations have not been able to find funds or adjust financial exchanges so as to pay debts which they incurred to save themselves from destruction in the last war, but they have without apparent difficulty laid aside tremendous sums of money from their budgets to increase their armaments, to build up their armies and their navies, and to create air forces which make those of former times pale into insignificance. As a result the frightful specter of another devastation looms up before the eyes of the harassed and suffering peoples of the world, who in their hearts seek and plead for peace.

Here, again, we have the opportunity afforded us, as it was in the last World War, of observing the distinction between the peoples of the world and their leaders—those who must bear the burdens and make the sacrifices cry for peace, while their leaders would drive them into the jaws of war. On previous occasions it was the lust for power of monarchial despots. Now it is the quest for territories and expansion of trade and domain by dominant personalities in the diplomatic affairs of Europe. But in no case in the hearts of the people themselves is there desire for war. Peace is their cry and their hope.

There was a time when we believed we were isolated; isolated geographically beyond the possibility of successful military or naval attack. That thought is now a myth.

Whether economic interdependence of world units is a reality or not, as has been claimed it is, in my opinion the incontrovertible fact that the increased speed of transportation, the progress of machine invention, the development of high-speed aircraft have entirely destroyed any advantage our geographical remoteness has previously given us and has made it possible for other nations, both in Europe and in Asia, if they chose or were incited to do so, to launch an attack upon our shores, our industries, our cities, and our homes.

The development of aircraft, standing by itself, has obliterated the safeguards of distance, and it is now possible for modern airplanes in large numbers, equipped with plummets of destruction, to fly from far over the seas with relative ease.

In the face of this fact, in our quest for peace we have had our armies reduced to a mere police force and, to speak in terms of modern warfare, a mere handful of men. As I have said, we have joined in the recent past with other leading nations of the world in diminishing our naval strength in the hope that by setting the example to some few recalcitrant nations we would be able to induce and to bring about such a resolution of the armed forces of world powers that war on a large scale would be impossible.

This policy of disarmament by example was pursued until recently, but without avail. The present impasse in Europe, where alinements are being made in preparation for the certain hostilities to follow, illustrates realistically and convincingly that this policy of naval reduction by example is doomed to utter futility and failure.

This leaves us, therefore, with but two instrumentalities of defense left available for practical development—our aircraft and increases in our Navy.

In view of the alarming situation abroad, which has been growing with steady intensity for several years past and which is part of the logical outgrowth of a system of international conspiracies and intrigues for the possession of territories and trade markets, there is but one course for this Nation to follow and that is to increase its Navy and armed forces to the point where we will be adequately able to defend ourselves against aggression and invasion.

This will not mean that we will become warlike or aggrandizing or imperialistic. It means that we are determined at all costs to prepare for any eventuality. We do not look for war. We do not seek discord. In building a strong navy we do not by any policy or imperialism or economic penetration seek to extend our territorial and commercial dominions. This policy means that we must be equipped with a navy and air force second to none, which will be amply adequate to protect our shores and our homes from invasion.

We do not propose to permit any American citizens, corporate or otherwise, whether they be the representatives of large banking interests exploiting foreign resources and thus becoming involved with competitors abroad and then turning to this Government for assistance, or whether they be international adventurers to lead us into war.

We have learned our lesson from the sacrifices of 1918, and we hope that it will never be the province of this Government again to launch into a foreign war of aggression. But our people insist that we must not be left at the mercy of foreign nations or combinations of foreign nations who might see fit, attracted by the great resources and wealth within our boundaries, to launch an attack upon us. This policy is not jingoism; it is mere common sense. It is simple self-defense.

Resentment at slurs upon the national honor have precipitated many a nation into war, sometimes for trivial reason. This resentment has been aroused very often by propaganda created, fabricated, and financed by selfish interests seeking to embroil their Nation in war in order that their properties and investments in foreign lands might be protected.

The American people are far too intelligent and far too realistic and sensible to be inveigled by any such method. We shall insist that our nationals, whether they be large corporations or individuals who invest their wealth and extend their commercial activities into foreign lands, must do so at their own risk. As has well been said, "The flag will no longer follow the dollar." And the United States will not be embroiled in foreign squabbles generated by economic interests. It means carnage and slaughter and the sacrifice of life and money which the American people are not in a state of mind to undergo.

These splendid, well-built naval craft, which we so proudly dedicate today to the service of our country, are part of the program that has been inaugurated by this administration to rebuild our Navy to treaty strength and on a parity with other nations.

They will be manned by intelligent, well-trained, patriotic naval officers, and by industrious, courageous, and devoted crews. They will protect our commerce from piracy and pillage, and our shores from invasion. They will supplement and modernize our Navy. They will never be used for aggression. Pray God, they will never be used at all for any warlike purpose.

BUTLER ATTACKS SENATOR BORAH—EDITORIAL FROM THE GAELIC AMERICAN

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I desire to offer for the RECORD an editorial from the Gaelic American of January 18, 1936. It is in the nature of a defense of the record of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] against an attack recently made on him by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, because the Idaho Senator has consistently been against foreign entanglements. I ask that the editorial may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Gaelic American of Jan. 18, 1936]

BUTLER ATTACKS SENATOR BORAH

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University and head of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, is opposed to Senator BORAH's candidacy for the Republican nomination for President. The dispenser of the Carnegie plums is hostile to the Idaho statesman because of his opposition, long-standing opposition, to foreign entanglements. Regardless of what party is in office, Senator BORAH has always been consistently against the adherence of the United States to the League of Nations and its Court.

As the president of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, it is Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler's task to forward internationalism. Year in and year out he is advocating adherence to the League of Nations and the World Court. From the bureaus maintained by the endowment tons of literature are sent out to universities, schools, colleges, libraries, churches, legislatures, Governors, mayors, Congressmen, newspapers, magazines, and every man and woman of any prominence in the country. This activity continues every day in the year, and as the organization behind this work is richly endowed the propaganda will be carried on when this generation will have passed away and joined the big majority. In spite of the efforts of the army of employees of the endowment, the efforts on behalf of foreign entanglements have been so far a failure. At times the internationalists have flattered themselves that they were on the verge of success, as when, a year ago, they were convinced that they would win adherence to the League of Nations' Court. But they failed, and their hopes were once again disappointed.

In spite of the claims of the pacifists, it is no exaggeration to say that more than 95 percent of the American people are against the League of Nations, the World Court, and all kinds of foreign entanglements. In the Presidential elections of 1920 and 1924 the League of Nations was snowed under by overwhelming majorities. Even New York City, the very citadel of the Democratic Party, was carried by Harding in 1920 and by Coolidge in 1924. In his opposition to foreign entanglements, Senator BORAH has the people almost unanimously behind him. His consistent opposition to the schemes of the Carnegie Endowment and the internationalists, native and foreign, has endeared him to patriotic Americans. Should he succeed in obtaining the Republican nomination, Senator BORAH will get many Democratic votes because of his long stand for keeping his country out of the maelstrom of European wars, jealousies, and hatreds.

Senator BORAH is more in touch with the people than the manipulator of Carnegie's millions which are diverted to weaken American patriotism and bring the United States back under the British flag. Carnegie's prophecy that America would again become incorporated in the British Empire is not likely to be realized if the American people practice that vigilance which is the price of freedom. A President of the caliber of BORAH is sorely needed at the present time, when our foreign policy is largely dictated from Downing Street. With the exception of Coolidge, who was possessed of a great deal of the old American spirit, we did not have a President of Cleveland's vigor in 40 years. It is time that we should have a President who would be American before anything else and who would attend to American concerns rather than to world affairs.

A real American President would investigate the Carnegie Foundation and kindred organizations and expose their efforts to denationalize young men in our schools, colleges, and universities. The American people are longing for a Chief Executive who will eschew meddling in the affairs of the world, ignore futile naval conferences, and dismiss roving ambassadors. Another Andrew Jackson is wanted in the White House.

GOVERNMENT IN BUSINESS—ADDRESS BY J. HOWARD PEW

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered before the Convention of the Atlantic States Shippers' Advisory Council by Mr. J. Howard Pew, president the Sun Oil Co., on January 9, 1936. The subject of the address is "Government in Business."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

When I was asked to speak to your organization about "Government in Business", I assumed that you gentlemen had been giving some thought to the country's current experiences with government in business. Nearly everybody seems to have had those experiences on his mind a good deal of late, and I am no exception. The subject is one on which I have some definite views, and it is a pleasure to accept your invitation to express them.

The events of the last 3 years have made plain that the country must give this subject attention, and must do it promptly. Unless we are willing that government shall go on and on to dominate the whole field of industry and enterprise, we must have a major political operation before long. Our situation reminds me of the patient who had just been wheeled from his hospital bed to the operating room. As the nurse appeared with the anesthesia cone and told him to take long, deep breaths, the patient waved her aside and asked:

"Doctor, is it possible for one to recover from an operation like this?"

"If the operation is performed in time, the patient has a good chance", was the reply.

"But", demanded the patient, "are we performing it in time?"

"That, sir, is what we are now going to find out", replied the surgeon, reaching for his instruments.

A good many people in business are nowadays asking those same questions—is it possible for our business patient to recover? And are we going to have the operation in time? They are getting more and more convinced that if the operation isn't performed pretty soon, it will be too late.

Looking ahead to the political operation for which the country will go to the election operating table next November, it is my conviction that unless we do a successful bit of surgery at that time our business patient will be in for a long siege with the malady known as planned economy; and that disorder has generally resulted fatally. Planned economy means Government control of business; it means an end to individualism, to initiative, to equal opportunity, to constitutional democracy, and to personal liberty. It has always meant that. History is largely the record of failures to make predigested economic programs work. So we must deem it an ominous portent that our country should have fallen under a regime that seems ignorant alike of the lessons of history and of the teachings of economics.

In modern medical practice the physician, before prescribing radical treatment, first inquires into the cause and character of infection. This study of case history commonly indicates that bad habits, indulgences, and wrong modes of life are to blame. And I am impressed that our business patient, similarly, is largely responsible for the bad conditions that have now become acute. Business has been too willing, at times positively eager, to submit to Government interferences and controls.

Now, the doctors don't try to cure a disease by prescribing more and larger doses of the very thing that caused it; and we shall not cure our business patient, who is suffering from too much Government control, by giving him more and larger doses of that same poison. Yet that is the treatment that ailing business has too often urged its doctors to prescribe.

A good many of us, rereading our history of late, have been reminded that wherever governments have attempted to dominate business the results have always been disastrous. Whether in ancient Egypt, or China, or Greece, or Rome; or in the Hanseatic League and medieval mercantilism; or in the Tudor era of old England—always we found that government control over commerce and industry ended in disaster. To that extent the students of history have agreed. But too few of them have carried their researches far enough. Had they gone to the bottom of the matter, they would have found that governmental invasion of the sphere of business and enterprise has almost invariably been in response to the invitation, the pleadings, the urgencies of business itself. Go back to the story of Egypt's famine, as told in the good book of Genesis; of how, when the famine was sore in the land, the people cried out to Pharaoh:

"* * * buy us and our land for bread, and we and our land will be servants unto Pharaoh. * * *"

So, his people having urged him to do it, Pharaoh's government took over the land as his property and the people as his servants; and the government of Egypt from that time forth was up to its neck in business. But, remember, the people only got what they asked for.

That is the way it has commonly come about. Under the Empire of Rome the favorites of the emperors were constantly using their pull with the government to get privileges, lands, monopolies, and concessions in industry, shipping, and trade. The people who owned vineyards and made wine easily convinced themselves that there was too much competition. So they petitioned the government to forbid the planting of new vineyards and even to require that a third of those already in production be plowed under; and the government was pleased to accommodate. The growers of olives presented a like case, and again the Government granted their petition. We hardly need point the parallel to the cotton, corn-hog, potato, and other controls that have been set up in this country. The notion that government had some magic touch by which, through an economy of scarcity, it could produce plenty is at least as old as the reign of the Emperor Diocletian, and Diocletian probably borrowed it from somebody a thousand years before him.

In most cases that notion of the magical power of government originated with some interest that saw a chance to profit through special privilege. In the time of Queen Elizabeth a great fleet of British ships traded to Barbary. Some of Elizabeth's favorites among these traders convinced her that there was too much competition; so the Queen set up a system of licensing under which some got licenses and some were refused. Those who got licenses reaped increased profits—for a while; but ultimately the trade into Barbary was well-nigh ruined for everybody.

Again let me emphasize that in all these cases, and in hundreds of others that might be cited, it was the enterprises, the men of business, who asked the Government to intrude into business.

It will be conceded that certain relations of government to business are justifiable, even necessary; but we must distinguish between Government regulation and Government control. It is the responsibility of government to insure to the workers in industry and transportation adequate protection against injury and loss of life. It is also the responsibility of government to pass such measures as will insure the free operation of natural economic law (the law of competition and the law of supply and demand). These, with police protection and proper statutes against fraud and corruption, constitute almost the entire responsibility of government toward business and industry. We may not all agree on the details of regulatory provisions; but if they are too rigid, subsequent legislation can relax them; if too loose, they can be strengthened. In any event, this is government's responsibility.

Government control is quite a different matter. Here a fundamental principle of economics is involved. The fixing of rates for services or prices for commodities, the control of production, the cartel system by which markets are divided between the different producers, these and any other devices which interfere with the free and flexible operations of business constitute an invasion of government into the field of business that is wrong, indefensible, and vicious.

There is no such permanent condition in any business as "just a little Government control." Once started, Government control always grows. When one of that army of bureaucrats at Washington talks to me about "just a little bit" of Government control, I always think of the girl who, having learned that she had an incipient cancer, told her mother not to worry about it; after all, it was only a little one. Never forget that the hand of government, whenever it reaches in to control business, is the cold clammy hand of death. It will destroy everything it touches.

Let me give one recent illustration of how Government control, once set up on a small scale, immediately reaches out for wider jurisdiction and more power. The Interstate Commerce Commission was created to impose certain regulations on the railroads. Opinion varies as to their wisdom, but in any event such measures were a proper function of government. When the Commission's power was extended to include certain features of control, then this control became vicious. At the last session of Congress this control was extended over common and contract carriers by truck, and within the last few weeks our bureaucratic friends who want Government control of everything under the sun have begun grinding out propaganda in favor of having privately owned trucks controlled by the Government. Their propaganda employs choice bits of sophistry and specious arguments, but their real aim is to destroy the usefulness and flexibility of some 3,000,000 privately owned trucks and to open the way to a new monopoly in transportation. The vast majority of trucks serve their owners exclusively. They do no contract or common-carrier service. They are not by any stretch of the imagination proper subjects for Government control. Let Government take over control of them and you scatter Government control to the doorstep of every industry and every home in the land.

We may concede that public authority should limit the length, width, height, and weight of trucks, but we are getting into an entirely different realm when Government prescribes rates for their services, fixes their routes, dictates what kind of freight they may move, and how many trucks an operator may employ. The only authority wise, fair, and impartial enough to exercise such control is the immutable law of supply and demand, operating in a medium in which competition is free and unrestrained.

When Government goes beyond regulation and undertakes economic control, it is beyond its depth. A thousand imponderables enter into the fixing of prices for commodities or charges for services. To say that any governmental agency is competent to weigh all these imponderables and reach just determinations is to assume that a political commission is somehow endowed with a greater wisdom than the whole sum of business experience, economic processes, and human knowledge. That I must deny. Yielding to no one in my admiration for Mr. Farley, I don't believe even he is equal to such a task in directive omniscience.

I have spoken of how ancient and medieval business, seeking Government privileges, delivered business over to Government control. Now let me suggest how heavy a responsibility American business must bear in this regard. We all know that in every Congress or legislature the lawmakers are importuned by organizations, associations, societies, and chambers of commerce to extend immunities or advantages to particular interests. Thus, in 1918, the leading organizations that assumed to speak for business were calling on the Government to develop waterways, to construct equipment, and to build trunk highways. The Government took some hesitant steps toward compliance; but in recent years the same interests that in 1918 demanded these things have protested with all vigor against them and have clamored for Government restriction of all transportation that might compete with the railroads.

Again, so late as 1924, a referendum by the United States Chamber of Commerce endorsed this recommendation:

"* * * the principle of recapture of a fair proportion of excess railroad earnings should be maintained in the public interest as essential to the rule of rate making."

That was an endorsement of the recapture provision of the Transportation Act of 1920. I doubt if today you could find, among those who in 1924 voted for that endorsement, a corporal's guard who would vote the same way. I can recall few things that have been more unanimously denounced—since the depression began—than the recapture measure.

Again, I am one of those who believe in the protective tariff as it was conceived by Hamilton, to strengthen our national economy and relieve our dependence on more developed countries. But in the last generation tariff making has become mere logrolling among seekers after special privileges. This has led the unprotected interests to demand other privileges or subsidies, such as processing taxes. Again let me remind you that the prime inspiration of such measures has almost always been business, seeking advantage, privilege, or immunity from free competition of the open market.

A list of organizations and individuals asking special treatment in the tariff hearings of 1929 covered more than 200 printed pages. Their testimony and briefs before Senate and House committees covered more than 18,000 printed pages. Yet Government is blamed for intruding into the control of business!

There is constant protest against multiplication of Government agencies to direct, police, and control business. These agencies are charged with being useless, or worse; with adding enormously to the cost of Government and the number of its personnel; and with hopelessly confusing the conditions under which business must be carried on. In many cases I sympathize with these criticisms; but who is to blame? The very interests which now condemn these things were only a few years ago asking for them. I recently saw a list of 60 measures that Congress had been petitioned to pass within a few years, and this list represented the demands of only three large business associations. During these same years hundreds of other trade bodies have been presenting their demands, and a large share of these demands have been granted. The agencies and activities established in response to these demands account for the addition of many tens of thousands of people to the Federal pay roll and of hundreds of millions of dollars to the annual Budget. Why, if half the boards, commissions, and authorities that business organizations have petitioned for had been actually created, we would today have the entire population on the Government pay roll and would have to let down the anti-immigration bars in order to bring in some people to perform our nongovernmental tasks.

But this is not all. In 1890 Congress passed the Sherman Anti-Trust Act to protect competition and prevent monopoly. I regard that law as one of the most beneficent enacted in our time. Yet within a few years there began to be urgent demands from organizations of business for modifications, exemptions, and exceptions. A number of laws were passed making such exceptions. The Chamber of Commerce of the United States bore a large responsibility in connection with the framing and adoption of the National Recovery Act. That act undertook to suspend the antitrust law in its application to a wide range of activities and interests; and the country has been grateful for the interposition by which the Supreme Court preserved the integrity of the antitrust legislation.

Considering, then, how often the spokesmen of business have advocated measures which they later condemned and how often they have condemned measures which they later approved, I enter my plea that those who assume to speak for industry and enterprise shall more adequately realize their responsibility. Machinery, power, science, mass production, corporate organization, and mass financing have greatly complicated the problems of society. It has become important as never before to insure the free operation of economic law and the unhampered play of competition. Government control of production and of prices for some industries will expand to control for all industries. Government favoritism to some particular interests will inevitably impose such burdens on other interests as will presently drive them all to seek Government shelter and special privileges, and at last bring all business under Government control. That will be the end of independence, of enterprise, of progress, of industrial freedom, and of the common effort to promote the common welfare.

RIGHTS AND POWERS OF THE STATES AND CONGRESS—ARTICLE BY EDWARD F. M'CLENNEN

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Edward F. McClennen, Esq., a well-known and able attorney of Boston, on Surveying the Boundary Between the Rights and Powers of the States and Those Transferred to the Congress.

Mr. McClennen, in writing, says:

Attacks of a numerous small minority of people on the motives of the Supreme Court in interpreting the Constitution, attempts at unwise amendments of the Constitution, and popular confusion as to the dividing line between the constitutional powers of a State and the constitutional powers of the Nation have excited me to a desire to see whether I could be of any assistance on what seems to be a matter of grave public concern.

Enclosed is an article dated January 20, 1936, which I have written with that object in view. I am anxious to have it reach all people who will give any thought to this subject, and particularly the members of the Judiciary Committee, who have the possibility of constitutional amendments under consideration, and the Senators and Representatives who may be required to vote thereon—these same governing men who are called upon to consider for action now the division between the powers of the States and the powers of the Nation.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SURVEYING THE BOUNDARY BETWEEN THE RIGHTS AND POWERS OF THE STATES AND THOSE TRANSFERRED TO THE CONGRESS

By Edward F. McClennen

To render the right judgment in United States v. Receivers of the Hoosac Mills Corporation (56 Supreme Court Reporter, 297, 312; U. S. ——, decided Jan. 6, 1936), required no determination of the legislative wisdom of chapter 25 of the first session of the Seventy-third Congress, title I, May 12, 1933, commonly known as the Agricultural Adjustment Act; that is, whether or not popular welfare was served by payments to farmers at the expense of processors. To render this judgment did not require the judicial department to invade the legislative department.

The difference of opinion between so able a group as Mr. Justice Brandeis, Mr. Justice Stone, and Mr. Justice Cardozo on the one side, and so able a group as Mr. Chief Justice Hughes, Mr. Justice Van Devanter, Mr. Justice McReynolds, Mr. Justice Sutherland, Mr. Justice Butler, and Mr. Justice Roberts on the other, leaves the ordinary man without the needed assistance to form with certainty an opinion of his own.

This misfortune was avoidable by concentration on the fact that the respective sovereign States never have transferred to the Congress their sovereign control over the farming of the acres within their respective borders by their own citizens.

Consider the circumscribed powers and duties of the Court in this case. The United States had obtained the judgment of the district court that the receivers of the Hoosac Mills owed the United States $81,000 because the Agricultural Adjustment Act laid taxes on them in this amount, notwithstanding the receivers' contention that this act was beyond the powers of the Congress. The circuit court of appeals reversed this judgment because convinced that there was no such act within those powers. The Supreme Court could not but affirm or reverse the circuit court of appeals, as the Supreme Court found that there was or was not such an act within the powers of the Congress. The Court would do wrong if it adjudged that the receivers should pay what they did not owe by law. Such a judgment would be an abuse of the power of the Court, even if the Court was actuated by the conviction that their misconduct would do the receivers but little harm and would do the people of the Nation a great deal of good and would bring more popular approval than the right decision.

The division of opinion was a misfortune. Unanimity in the reasons for the decision in A. L. A. Schechter Poultry Corporation v. The United States (295 U. S. 495), on May 27, 1935, was very likely of more value to the people of the Nation than was the particular conclusion reached. The fact that nine Justices of such diverse experiences predilections, and methods of approach reached a unanimous conclusion carries conviction to most people willing to consider the subject with deliberation and without prejudice, that the decision must be right.

In the conflicting opinions of January 6, 1936, there are phrases readily understandable by the Justices themselves but confusing to the less learned and misleading to many men and women of common intelligence.

If the so-called Agricultural Adjustment Act invaded the legislative rights and powers of the States, it was not an act of Congress, however laudable the intentions of the Senators and Congressmen who favored it and however beneficent it was to any people or to all people.

For the reasons to be stated later it is submitted to the reader that the so-called act was not an act of the Congress, because it attempted to go beyond the powers which the States had given to the Congress. If the opinions had gone no further than this, they would not have aided the widespread misrepresentations of the attitude of the Court in an effort to promote the idea without vestige of foundation that the Court has a disposition to dominate the Congress in the exercise of its powers to govern.

The minority are of opinion that there exists "the power of courts to declare a statute unconstitutional", and that "unconstitutional exercise of power by the executive and legislative branches of the Government is subject to judicial restraint" and that "the only check upon our own exercise of power is our own sense of self-restraint", and that the purpose to be served by the so-called Agricultural Adjustment Act of Congress brought it within the taxing powers of the Congress.

The majority are of opinion to the contrary, for the reason that it is beyond the power of Congress to lay, as an excise, a tax on processors for the sole object of restoring the purchasing power of agricultural products to a parity with that prevailing in an earlier day and to take the money so levied from the processor and to bestow it upon the farmers who will reduce their acreage for the accomplishment of the proposed end, and meanwhile to aid these farmers during the period required to bring the prices of their crops to the desired level and for the reason that the object is not the procurement of revenue for the support of government but that the exaction is as necessary means for the intended control of agricultural products. The majority say that this is not a tax subject to no infirmity, because it is not for the support of government, but the taking of money from one group for the benefit of another when that transfer is not in support of a regulation within the legislative power of the United States and that it is not within that legislative power to regulate agriculture either by the compulsion of the farmer through rewards which he cannot possibly afford to refuse, or by the voluntary cooperation of the farmer, and because such a regulation would invade the rights of the States and not come within the powers delegated to the United States.

Without the help of a unanimous opinion, what way is there open to us in which to determine whether the question now settled has been settled in the most judicious way and to determine what is portended for the coming settlement of related questions?

It seems of little help to consult earlier decisions for enlightenment. In the 147 years of its existence the Supreme Court has never been stronger compositely than at present in perception, in breadth of view, in diversity of predilection, in poise in judgment, in freedom from bias, in intellectual capacity, in knowledge of the accumulated precedents, in devotion to furtherance of the welfare of the Nation and of its people as far as that comes within the province of a court, and in freedom from ambition for political preferment. In all this period no Chief Justice and no Associate Justice of this Court has risen higher in these respects than have individuals of the present Court. If we cannot get the answer from this Court, we cannot expect to get it from reading the wisdom and the errors of its predecessors—all so well known to this Court when it considered this case and found that it could not reach a unanimous conclusion.

The reader now is invited to start with no predilections and undeflected by any knowledge or consideration of what these earlier opinions have stated and to proceed to try to find out what is the right answer. Let the only guide be that which has been described so many times as what every schoolboy knows.

On the morning of September 17, 1787, there was no such nation as the United States of America. In the evening of June 21, 1788, it had been born by a Constitution adopted in convention on the former date and ratified by the ninth State on the latter. Its preamble is that "We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America." The last article provided that "The ratification of the conventions of nine States shall be sufficient for the establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the same." At these times there were in the territory comprehended 13 free and independent States, governed representatively by the people of those States for those separate States, respectively.

In article III of that Constitution it was provided that—

"SECTION 1. The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

"SEC. 2. The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and in equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority;" in particulars further described.

No more power to the Supreme Court or to the inferior courts is given elsewhere in the Constitution. No more has been added since. The judicial power of the United States is the only power that these courts have. That judicial power extends, as far as concerns the matter now in hand, only "to all cases." They are "in law and equity." "Cases" are actions and suits in a court between parties. The Court must decide them according to law. It cannot do so without determining what the applicable law is.

A lawyer familiar with the comparison of a statute with a constitution understands the assertion that the Court has power to declare a statute unconstitutional to mean that when a court had found that there is no statute because what looks like one has been placed in the records of the Congress without congressional authority to place it there, by persons who had no authority to place it there, the Court may say so in an opinion written to account for the decision that there is no statute, when to the casual observer it looks as if there was one.

The assertion as frequently misunderstood is entirely inaccurate. The misunderstanding is not surprising.

There are only two powers "to declare" in the Constitution. The Congress and not the Court has those. The Congress has power "to declare the punishment of treason" and "to declare war." This usage gives a meaning in constitutional relations to the words "to declare." When the Congress declares the punishment of treason it creates the punishment for treason. When the Congress declares war it creates war. War begins then.

In contrast the Court has no power to create unconstitutionality for a statute. It is no more unconstitutional after the Court has said that it is unconstitutional than it was before. The Constitution makes the statute unconstitutional, if it is; or, more accurately, the apparent statute is not a statute.

The Congress cannot make a law that it has no power to make. Its Members may attempt to usurp powers which they do not possess, but they are not acting within their mandate from the people when they do so. In doing so they are not acting as Members of the Congress. Thereby nothing congressional has been done in the way of lawmaking.

If the majority of the Members of the Congress should become impressed again with the belief that the welfare of all the peoples of the 48 States required the enactment of the Volstead Act, without another constitutional amendment, would the courts be under a duty to treat this nullity as a law?

The inaccurate saying that the Court may declare an act of Congress unconstitutional has brought a striking consequence recently. On May 13, 1935, calendar day June 17, in the Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, Senate Joint Resolution 149 was introduced and has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It proposes as an amendment to the Constitution the following article: "The Supreme Court shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction to render judgment declaring any law enacted by Congress in whole or in part is invalid because it conflicts with some provision of the Constitution, but no such judgment shall be rendered unless concurred in by more than two-thirds of the members of the Court and unless the action praying for such judgment shall have been commenced within 6 months after the enactment of the law."

If this is proposed and adopted by the requisite three-fourths of the States, there will be given to the Supreme Court expressly, for the first time, a jurisdiction to render judgment declaring any law enacted by the Congress invalid because it conflicts with some provision of the Constitution. This declaration will make the enactment unconstitutional. The proposed amendment does not give a clue as to how the jurisdiction shall be invoked, except that it must be by an action commenced within 6 months after the enactment of the law. It looks like the modern provisions for enabling courts to give declaratory judgments. It gives no clue as to who shall bring the action or whether it must be a person who has a personal or property interest in the subject matter or in the question. It may be that it was not intended that such interest should be requisite, because it would be seldom that of the multitude of interests which would accrue eventually any would have accrued within 6 months after the enactment of the law. It is not to be supposed that it is the intention of the resolution, in reality, to deprive the people of the United States of the very opportunity which the article seems to be giving. The article seems not intended to give the Supreme Court a jurisdiction to declare conversely that an act of Congress is constitutional. Certainly it cannot be intended that the Supreme Court shall have authority to make such declaration when six of its members deem that there is no constitutional act and only three deem that there is. The resolution does not attempt to say what a district court, whose only jurisdiction is to decide according to law between the parties before it, shall do if the plaintiff's case is based on a claim that there is an act of Congress, when there is, in fact, no act of Congress.

The fact that a majority of the Members of the two Houses of Congress have had inserted in the records of the Congress something which is not in reality an act of Congress because the Congress had no power to make such an enactment, does not make it an act of Congress. The gentlemen who are Senators and Representatives in Congress at the time of this mistake have no greater power than the Congress. They were not the Congress in causing the distortion of its records.

A judge of a district court has no right to give judgment for the plaintiff except according to law as he finds it to be. If there is no law which entitled the plaintiff to recover, it is an abuse of power for the district judge to enter judgment for him.

There is no such thing as a void act of Congress. If you, Mr. Reader, for an adequate consideration, make a bond to murder me, you have made a bond. It is indeed a void bond—that is, a bond of no legal effect; it imposes on you no legal or moral obligation to murder me; but you have made a bond. On the other hand, if you sign the name of the United States and the name of the officials of the United States to a bond which reads like a bond of the United States, there is no bond. It is not merely void. It does not exist. If without authority, a majority of the Senate and House of Representatives had caused to be put on the records of Congress what looked like an act of Congress purporting to authorize you to do what you did, still it would not be a bond of the United States. No more would the apparent act be an act of Congress. When someone sues on the purported bond, the court, with judicial powers only, can but give judgment for the defendant. It pays not the slightest disrespect to the Congress of the United States if it mentions that the reason for its judgment is that there is no bond and no act of Congress. Consider the following:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That if any person engages in divine worship in the Province of Quebec except in accordance with the tenets of the Mohammedan religion he is guilty of the crime of sacrilege, and on conviction he shall be punished by imprisonment for 1 year in the Atlanta Penitentiary and shall forfeit the sum of $1,000, one-half of which shall be payable to the informer on an information filed in any district court of the United States."

Amos presents such an information in the District Court for the District of New Hampshire, setting out that Obadiah committed this crime of sacrilege in the Province of Quebec, and prays for a declaration of the forfeiture of $1,000 by Obadiah and for a judgment against him in favor of the informer for $500. He proves his case. He establishes that the recording officers of the Congress of the United States have entered such a text upon its records and that they did so because a majority of the Members of each House of Congress at a time and place when the Congress was conducting business, directed them to do so. Inasmuch as the Congress has no power of government over the Province of Quebec and as the Constitution which the Members of Congress are sworn to uphold forbids any law which prohibits the free exercise of religion, what shall the district judge do if he is limited to rendering judgment according to law?

Change the text of the document so that it denounces the crime only when committed in Virginia instead of in the Province of Quebec. Does this change the duties of the district judge in any way?

The Congress of the United States has the powers given it by the Constitution, and no others. The men composing the Congress are the representatives of the people of the United States when they are actuating the Congress to the exercise of those powers. They do not represent any of the people of the United States when they are attempting to actuate the Congress of which they are Members to do something which the Congress has no power to do.

When the question comes up whether or not what appears to be an act of Congress is an act of Congress, the question is between, say, 125,000,000 persons on the one hand and some five or six hundred persons on the other, who may have attempted to grasp a power which the larger body has not conferred upon them.

Would it not be better not to say that the courts have power to declare a statute unconstitutional but to say, instead, that the courts have no rightful power to give judgment for a man not according to law, and that being charged with the duty to decide, they are obliged to find out whether there is a law on which to base a decision? If this expression of the fact in simple English is used, it may retard the incautious from saying that observing that there is no act of Congress is "censoring of an act of Congress," or a "domination of Congress by the Court." It may help to disabuse the minds of people generally of any thought that the Court attempts or claims to have the power to make (declare) an act of Congress unconstitutional.

It does not seem that any considerable number of people want to have it so that a judge of a district court of the United States must put a man in jail, even temporarily, if a majority of the Members of the Congress should become high-minded atheists, convinced that the good of the people required their protection from what these Members deem a delusion, and therefore should purport to enact that it was a crime, punishable by imprisonment, to attend a Roman Catholic church or a Protestant prayer meeting. If a constitutional amendment were submitted to them that provided that a district judge must do this, it is unbelievable that they would adopt it. If a constitutional amendment were submitted to them that said that the courts should not have power to make (declare) an act of Congress void, such an amendment might prove acceptable if it was successfully concealed from the people that the Court has no such power under the Constitution as it stands.

If an amendment is submitted to the people which provides in terms that a district judge must find in fact that there is an act of Congress whenever three judges say that there is, even if six judges say that there is not, and regardless of whether or not what purports to be such an act, is within the power of Congress, it does not seem likely that the people would adopt it. Yet this may be the hidden meaning designed for the proposed amendment above quoted.

With the possibility at hand that a constitutional amendment may be submitted, it would be unfortunate to have the idea get abroad that any exercise of power by the executive and legislative branches of the Government "is subject to judicial restraint", as is intimated in the language above quoted from the minority opinion.

The Constitution does not invest the courts with any power to restrain either the President or the Congress in the exercise of any power which either possesses under the Constitution. It does give the courts power to adjudge whether the receivers owe the United States under the laws of the United States. It gives the courts power in the case earlier supposed to judge whether Obadiah must pay Amos $500 because Obadiah attended a Roman Catholic Church or a Protestant prayer meeting.

Turn next to the statement that the only check on the exercise of the power of the Supreme Court is the justices' own sense of self-restraint. The President and the Congress have a very effective power of restraint upon the effective exercise by the courts of their rightful powers.

On May 26, 1861, John Merryman, in due course of law, caused to be laid before the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States the fact that on May 25, 1861, an armed force of men took him into custody and incarcerated him in Fort McHenry in Maryland, and that he was there held contrary to law by Brigadier General Cadwalader, the military commander of that post. Merryman asked for a writ of habeas corpus as a step to his discharge and return to liberty. The Chief Justice, sitting in the circuit court, in due course of law ordered the writ to issue, directing General Cadwalader to produce Merryman. The writ in due form was issued and served. General Cadwalader, through his subordinate, replied in court to the court that Merryman was in his custody charged with treason in the then present rebellion against the Government of the United States, and that he, the general, had been duly authorized by President Lincoln to suspend the writ of habeas corpus in this area for the public safety.

President Lincoln believed that he had the power under the Constitution to suspend this writ, and that the safety of the Nation required the suspension. He had the duty to act. He must decide. When he had decided as he did, it became his duty to suspend the writ. There was no appeal from his decision.

Nevertheless, Chief Justice Taney adjudged that the failure to produce Merryman was in disobedience of the order of the Court and directed that an attachment issue to General Cadwalader for contempt of court. The marshal presented the writ of attachment at Fort McHenry, but was not permitted to enter. The Chief Justice held that the President of the United States could not suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus and that lawfully Merryman could not be arrested and detained as he was. The Chief Justice gave his reasons in a written opinion (17 Federal Cases, p. 144) in which, in conclusion, he pointed out that the Court was restrained from giving effect to its judgment by the power of the President unlawfully exercised.

The President, in the belief which he held, effectively and lawfully restrained the Court, notwithstanding the fact that Chief Justice Taney's opinion may have been right.

The Senate on the presentment by the House of Representatives of articles of impeachment, may give judgment removing a judge from office, whether or not he has been guilty of an offense which is ground for impeachment if in the real judgment of the Senate he has been guilty of such an offense. If a judge with full knowledge and conviction that there is no law of the United States enacted by the Congress but only an injection into the records of the Congress of something which is not an act of the Congress permitted by its powers, proceeds to base judgment upon the existence of such nonexistent law in favor of the person who has no rights under that law otherwise, he is guilty of an impeachable offense and should be removed from office, and more emphatically so if he does it because he gains the impression that such a judgment will receive more popular approval than the right judgment.

If a judge, with full knowledge and conviction that there is an act of the Congress passed within its powers which entitles a party to recover, gives judgment against that party on the ground that there is no such valid act, he commits an impeachable offense—more emphatically so if he gives this judgment because of his political belief that the act is on the whole not a good one for the people or because of his belief that it is an unpopular act.

In the impeachment proceeding the judgment of the Senate, as a court of impeachment, that the purported act is or is not an act of Congress validly passed within its powers, whether that judgment be right or wrong, is binding, and is the judgment which it is the duty of the Senate under the Constitution to give.

The judgment of the Senate as the court of impeachment, whether right or wrong, that the judge rendered his decision not through mistake but for the degraded reason suggested, is binding, and it is their duty under the Constitution to enter it.

When it is entered there is no appeal. The judge is no longer a judge.

The Congress of the United States has plenty of power of restraint on the courts.

On the other hand, the courts cannot restrain the Members of the Congress from continuing to have engrossed on its records as if an act that which is not, because the Congress had no power to enact it. The courts must still go on in the performance of their constitutional duty to adjudge to a party only that to which he is entitled under the actual laws, but the courts cannot impeach the Congress for the failure of the Congress to prevent its Members from distorting its records.

The courts have no power of restraint over the Congress in the exercise of its lawful powers, and no powers of restraint over its Members when, contrary to the Constitution, they seek to make the records of the Congress look as if the Congress had passed an act when it had not, because it had no power to do so.

Consider next, if you will, whether the receivers of the Hoosac Mills owed the United States $81,000. It would seem that the only question open in reaching the decision of "yes" or "no" to that question was whether what is called the Agricultural Adjustment Act is an act of the Congress or only something which the majority of the Senators and Congressmen have caused to be engrossed on its records when the Congress had no power to enact it.

The first step is to look at the Constitution.

The Nation itself—the United States of America—could grant to the Congress thereof no legislative power except that which that Nation possessed at the time of the grant. The Nation had no legislative power except that granted by the Constitution. The Nation granted all its legislative power to the Congress. The Nation retained no legislative power to give to the courts or to the Executive. Article I, section 1, said: "All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives." It is noteworthy that the only legislative power thus conferred is that "herein granted."

Article I, section 8, said: "The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." This was the only power to be considered in determining whether the Congress had power to make such a law as the so-called Agricultural Adjustment Act. Other powers granted in the same section were: "To regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes"; to establish uniform rules of naturalization, uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy; to coin money and regulate its value; to fix the standard of weights and measures; to provide for the punishment of counterfeiting; to establish post offices and post roads; to promote the progress of science and useful arts by granting patents for exclusive rights; to constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court; to define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas; to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures; to raise and support armies and navies; to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions; to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia; to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District as would describe what later became the District of Columbia, if ceded by a State or States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be for the erection of forts and other defensive and aggressive structures; "and to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof."

It will be noted that although the Constitution gives to the Congress power to levy taxes to provide revenue for the general welfare, the Constitution nowhere gives to the Congress any power to legislate for the general welfare. The Nation itself has no power to legislate for the general welfare if general welfare means anything more than the general welfare otherwise specified in the Constitution expressly or by fair implication.

This strongly indicates that the "general welfare" to provide revenue for which the Congress may tax means only that welfare for which the Congress may legislate, namely, only that welfare described elsewhere in the Constitution. This makes "general welfare" mean foreign relations and mutual relations and not intrastate affairs.

Treating taxes, for the moment, in the generic sense as covering also duties, imposts, and excises levied for the support of government, the Constitution gives expressly to the Congress the power to lay and collect taxes to provide revenue required for the common defense and general welfare of the United States. This is the only taxing power that the Nation has. It is noteworthy that there is no express power given to levy and collect taxes to provide the money for an aggressive war or for paying the necessary expenses of conducting a national government, to support its officials, legislative, executive, or judicial, or to keep clear the channels of interstate commerce, or to establish post offices or post roads, or to do the other things, if any, which the Congress is empowered to do, unless these things are comprehended in the phrase "the general welfare of the United States." It is because the Congress has power to provide the revenue for the general welfare of the Nation that it may tax for these purposes. They are a part of the general welfare and in the aggregate comprehend all of the general welfare. They exhaust the term.

Taxes normally means levies imposed by a sovereign government for the support of that government. There seems to be no reason to give that word any different meaning in the Constitution. This Constitution puts a limit on the taxing power. It exists only to provide revenue for the general welfare of the United States. The only kind of welfare of the United States for which the Nation has the power to tax, is the welfare, which is limited to that kind of welfare which is general as distinct from that which is local; local in that it is the welfare of the sovereign States and of the people of those States. This necessitates a determination of what welfare is the limited kind of welfare described as general.

General welfare is described in the preamble of the Constitution. It there may be known partly by the company which it keeps. It is there used in association with forming a more perfect Union, establishing justice, insuring domestic tranquillity, providing for the common defense, and securing the blessings of liberty.

In determining the meaning of these words we are confronted at the outset with the question whether or not they should be construed broadly and liberally or narrowly and restrictively. It is more magnanimous to be broad and liberal. It seems requisite to be so in construing the Constitution. It is not a picayune document. It is one of great breadth and dignity. It is easy to decide to be broad and liberal in this construing. It is not so easy to decide to whom to be broad and liberal. We cannot coin liberality or emit liberality out of nothing. We cannot be liberal here in paying Paul except as we are liberal here in taking from Peter. The persons or groups or identities to which we may be liberal, and by so doing conversely restrictive, are these: The Nation, which was born at the acceptance by the ninth State on June 21, 1788, the 9 and shortly thereafter the existing 13 States, the 9 and shortly thereafter 13 groups of people who owed their complete allegiance to their several sovereigns and were entitled to the protection of their several sovereigns, the single group of people which was made up of the same persons in the aggregate as the 13 groups. Let us defer until later deciding to which of these 28 parties to this contract liberality should be accorded to the detriment of the other parties.

The date for determining the meaning and implications of the language used in this contract is June 21, 1788, when for the first time it was made. It was then that the contracting parties used the language. It got its meaning by the meaning of the language used on that day, under those circumstances, in those places. That meaning never has changed, and never can. The contract may be changed by its amendment in accordance with the methods to which the contracting parties agreed in the contract. It cannot be changed by changing the meaning of the language, because that would hold the contracting parties to a contract which they never made. We know that although the silk handkerchief and the ring borrowed from the audience and placed in the silk hat may seem to be changed into a pigeon as the magician moves across the stage of time; in reality this is but a deception

The application of that language after its meaning has been determined may at different times, as applied to different conditions, produce opposite results. To avoid any misunderstanding as to what is meant by "meaning" and "application", take examples.

In 1788, interstate commerce meant commerce between persons in different States. At that time a purported act of Congress to erect a beacon light of 25-mile penetration on the top of Mount Wachusett would be beyond the powers of the Congress. The Legislature of Massachusetts could erect such a beacon and make it a crime for a Cabinet officer of the United States to smash it. The meaning of the words "interstate commerce" as they were used in 1788 does not change. If it is shown to the Congress that in an authorized manner an interstate transportation company, by airplane, has erected a beacon on top of Mount Watatic and that their night fliers are dangerously deceived by the beacon on Wachusett, Congress has power in regulation of interstate commerce to order the beacon removed and to prohibit any officer of Massachusetts to maintain it. In 1788 the Congress had no power to pass an act prohibiting a citizen of Pennsylvania, in Pennsylvania, from standing with a kite string and a key during a thunderstorm to ascertain what would be the result. As soon as it appears that the interstate making of contracts by radio is interfered with by such an operation, the Congress may prohibit such an experiment.

It is because words used in a constitution mean what they meant when they were used that an astute commentator has commended the wisdom of the nine old men in going back to the horse and buggy days to find out what the words used in those days meant before they determined how they are to be applied to railroads, automobiles, and airplanes.

Let us then get into this buggy for a journey of investigation. To know what was meant by the limitation upon a tax that it must be for the purpose of providing revenue for the limited kind of welfare that was called general, we want to know what the 13 sovereign groups, summing up to, say, 3,000,000 people, understood or should have understood in 1788 from the language used.

On this subject the contemporary opinions of Hamilton and Madison and of Jefferson and Marshall are extremely valuable. They would be more helpful if they did not conflict so often. What we really want to know is what in 1788 should have been understood to be the meaning of these words, not by these men alone but by the millions of voters in the 13 groups which adopted the Constitution; that is, by a cultured merchant Roosevelt, a diligent truckman Smith, a toiling blacksmith Hoover, a student Wilson, a rocky-soiled, corn-hoeing farmer Coolidge of those days, and by the other obscure persons among the 3,000,000 then found within the 13 groups.

In 1765, in New York, at a meeting of the delegates from nine Colonies, it was announced in a declaration of rights—

"1. That His Majesty's subjects in these Colonies owe the same allegiance to the Crown of Great Britain that is owing from his subjects born within the realm, and all due subordination to that august body the Parliament of Great Britain.

* * * * * * *

"3. That it is inseparably essential to the freedom of a people and the undoubted right of Englishmen that no taxes be imposed on them but with their own consent, given personally, or by their representatives.

* * * * * * *

"5. That the only representatives of the people of these colonies are persons chosen therein by themselves and that no taxes ever have been or can be constitutionally imposed on them, but by their respective legislatures."

In 1776 it was declared by the delegates of the Thirteen Colonies that: "We, therefore, the Representatives of the United States of America, in general Congress assembled * * * do in the name, and by authority of the good people of these Colonies, solemnly publish and declare that these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be free and independent States. * * * and that as free and independent States they have full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and do all other acts and things which independent States may of right do."

Eight days later, a committee of these same delegates presented Articles of Confederation which, with changes, were adopted on November 15, 1777, by this Congress of Delegates, to become effective when adopted by the individual States. The last one adopted them on March 1, 1781. This is 6 years before the adoption of the Constitution.

It is noteworthy how continuous for 22 years from 1765 had been the use of some of the expressions contained in 1787 in the Constitution.

The Declaration of Independence had used the term "United States of America" evidently as synonymous with the 13 States of America temporarily "United" by a multilateral international treaty providing for a house of delegates of slight real powers. "United States" was used just as further down "United Colonies" was used. It was not declared that these colonies had become one independent State. They had become 13 free and independent States. In the Articles of Confederation for a "confederation and perpetual Union" between the 13 free and independent States, an agreed title was adopted as the name of the confederation. It was "the United States of America." It started off with the agreement that: "Each State retains its sovereignty, freedom, and independence, and every power, jurisdiction, and right which is not by this confederation expressly delegated to the United States in Congress assembled", namely, to the confederation.

"ART. III. The said States [free and independent sovereign States] hereby severally enter a firm league of friendship with each other for their common defense, the security of their liberties and their mutual and general welfare, binding themselves to assist each other against all force offered to or attacks made upon them or any of them on account of religion, sovereignty, trade, or any other pretense whatever."

Here is nothing but a treaty of alliance for common defense, security, and mutual and general welfare, made between the 13 sovereigns without setting up any other sovereign nation. Each sovereign had one vote in the meeting of the delegates sent by each sovereign State respectively.

Each State contracted what portions of its sovereignty it would not exercise without the consent of this Congress of Delegates. It agreed not to send embassies or to make treaties with foreign nations or with each other. These sovereigns made a number of agreements not to do what, as sovereigns, they continued to have the power to do.

No power of taxation was given to the confederation. It was provided that: "Article VIII. All charges of war and all other expense that shall be incurred for the common defense or general welfare and allowed by the United States in Congress shall be defrayed out of a common treasury which shall be supplied by the several States" in definitely stated proportions. Note that the only purposes of this fund were to meet the expenses of "the common defense or general welfare."

It was agreed that taxes for paying each State's proportion shall be laid on that State by the legislature of that State.

The 13 sovereigns agreed that the Congress of Delegates should have some powers. The 13 sovereigns agreed that the Confederation might declare war, but only with the consent of nine States.

The treaty of September 3, 1783, between the 13 sovereign States through the instrument of the confederation and England—that is, "between the United States of America and His Britannic Majesty"—provided that His Britannic Majesty acknowledged not that the United States of America as a nation was a sovereign nation but that the 13 States by name united in the confederation were "free, sovereign, and independent States"—13 free, independent, sovereign States.

The Congress agreed to "earnestly recommend to the legislatures of the respective States" to provide for the restitution of confiscated property. The Congress obviously recognized that it had no power to agree to a restitution. The treaty provided for a perpetual peace between His Britannic Majesty "and the said States."

There was a provision for exchange of ratifications.

Here, as late as 1783, is the expression that there are 13 sovereign States and no sovereign United States of America.

These important documents show what in the common sense of the time anyone should understand to be the meaning of some phrases of great importance.

Nine Colonies had proclaimed that even the absolute composite sovereign of King and Parliament could not tax them without their consent. By 1787 it had come to be recognized by everyone in the world with a political or proprietary interest that there were 13 sovereigns along the North Atlantic coast that had all the powers of taxation inherent in sovereignty and that those sovereigns were 13 different groups of people living within the territory of 13 separate States emphatically committed to the proposition that no one of the groups could be taxed without the common consent of the individual group. The 13 prospective partners had at least once, in a solemn document spoken of "general welfare." In the Articles of Confederation they had made a treaty for "their common defense, the security of their liberties, and their mutual and general welfare." It was "their", and not each its. It was not only general; it was mutual also. That is, it was welfare for the composite mass in its relation to the outside world, and welfare between the contracting sovereigns in their mutual relations with each other. The predominant element of the welfare involved was in aggressive war upon their late sovereign whose claims they had thrown off, and a defense of their new sovereignties from the attacks of their old sovereign, who had become a pretender. Successful conduct of war and external negotiations was the outstanding feature of the welfare which was properly described as general, and it would seem coextensive with that entire category. Any other welfare that was to be the subject of their treaty of confederation was described as mutual.

Common sense dictates that the Constitution which formed the United States was an improving extension and substitute for the Articles of Confederation and not a contrasting revolutionary document.

At this point it is borne in upon us that the liberality of interpretation for which the 28 parties to the Constitution contracted was liberality to the separate groups of people of the several States and to the 13 separate States who they were. If this be so, the liberality of construction to be indulged is toward the liberties of those several peoples and not toward the President of the United States or toward the Senators thereof or toward the Representatives thereof, to empower them to encroach upon those liberties. If this be not so, Mr. Reader, whom do you propose as the constitutionally determined beneficiary of the liberality and whom do you propose as the ones who shall suffer the burdens which are increased by the extension of liberality to another beneficiary?

As a test of the meaning of "general" in its application to welfare, assume that you made a contract to do everything conceivable for the general welfare of a single partnership of 13 cotton-shirting manufacturers. Doubtless you would think that you had contracted to provide the engines, machinery, and equipment for their processing and the house in which to conduct it. Would you feel that you had contracted to furnish the 13 houses in which the 13 partners were to dwell and to provide the domestic plumbing therein and to persuade them or to force them not to use the north rooms in cold weather lest they incapacitate themselves to do the partnership's processing of the cloth efficiently and with financial success.

Turn now to the partnership articles of 1788 and consider whether the 13 separate constituent groups within the 13 partners should have understood that they were contracting that the Congress of the United States might lay a tax on the wheat growers of Massachusetts and of the other States where wheat was grown and pay it over to the millers of Pennsylvania and of the other States where mills were in operation whenever in the judgment of the Congress the business of the millers was in the doldrums and their power to buy silks from the merchants of New York and the other States where silk merchants were selling had been diminished or destroyed by the lack of prosperity of the millers.

Do you not think that there would have been reasonable surprise on the part of the people of North Carolina and of Rhode Island and of some of the other States if they had been informed that such was the contract which they were making? If there had been a board to secure fair practices in 1788, would it not have required a statement in the prospectus of the Constitution that this was what it meant, if it did mean it?

The wheat-eating farmers of North Carolina might have felt confident that the Congress would never do such a thing. But did they have such confidence in the Congressmen to come from Massachusetts and from Pennsylvania and from the other sovereign States that they would have wanted to entrust that power to them unnecessarily? What is more to the point: Should they not have understood that the kind of welfare promoted by such an act of Congress was only the welfare which was described as general in a document mainly designed to create a new sovereign to protect and advance the external welfare of the group of 13 sovereigns, whether in peace or in war, and the mutual welfare of the 13 sovereigns in their relations with each other?

In such a context as we are discussing, is there any better definition of "welfare" than good of the people? Is there any better definition of "general" than not local? Does it mean "national" and not State?

The revolutionary experiment of the Constitution of the United States was the placement of two absolute and equal sovereigns over one territory. The world had long been familiar with absolute sovereignties—some composed of an imposed czar and some composed of a selected ruler or body of rulers. The world had long been familiar with the extension by the sovereign of the privilege of ruling separately to the people of a province by the chosen officers of that province. The world was not familiar with two independent equal sovereignties over one territory, each absolute and supreme in its sphere.

The sovereignties of the 13 States covered in the aggregate all the territory of those 13 States. As to that territory, the Nation was to have no territory which was not already in a separate sovereignty. The sovereignty was to be equal to the sovereignty of the Nation over that territory. New Hampshire was supreme in its territory. Georgia was supreme in its territory. The Nation also was to be supreme in New Hampshire and in Georgia. Neither was to be superior to the other. Instead of the familiar division by territorial lines, the division was to be by the boundary lines of the different categories of government.

When the boundary lines between the territories of the 13 separate sovereigns came into controversy, it involved a question for judicial determination and not for political or legislative determination.

When the boundaries between the categories came into controversy it involved a question for judicial determination and not for political or legislative determination.

For a legislative body to attempt to determine the judicial question of disputed boundary lines between the territories or between the categories would be an attempt to usurp power.

In the controversy over the boundaries between the categories the Legislature of the State of South Carolina is as authoritative a body as the Congress of the United States.

If that legislative body attempts to invade the category of the Nation, and the Congress attempts to invade the category of the State, who shall decide the boundary dispute? However, that is another story. What we are considering now is where that boundary between the categories lies.

When we are deciding for what welfare the Congress or the legislature of the State has the power to levy a tax to provide revenue, we are to find the line of division between that welfare which is National and that welfare which is State. Is the governing of how many acres of the fields of North Dakota shall be planted to wheat within the power of the State of North Dakota to determine? If it is within the power of the State, it is because it was a sovereign power which has not been contracted away. If it is in the State's category, it is not within the power of the Nation, however beneficent the result to the people of any State or to some or all of the people of the 48 States, it would be if the Congress of the United States could be persuaded to attempt to break the contract. Manifestly, if this lies within the power of the State, it makes no difference whether or not the North Dakota farmer consents contrary to his duties to his government, the State, to be ruled in his planting by another government, the Nation, or whether he feels forced to be ruled by that other government.

On the other hand, if the governing of his planting in North Dakota is in the national category, the Nation is no better off if it has his agreement than if it proceeds to compel him to plant or not to plant by the exercise of governmental power.

We are speaking now of something that is assumed to be proper legislation by the sovereign in its category.

When the power of the Congress to enact a proposed statute is to be considered, there are at least two questions for decision. One is, Is it legislation? and the other is, Is it legislation in the national category or in the State category?

In answering the second question the emphasis is not on welfare; it is on national or State. There are proper acts of legislation that 125,000,000 people would be unanimous are for the welfare of everyone in every one of the 48 groups, and which, notwithstanding that, are in the State category but not in the National category. The parties to that issue are the State on the one hand and the Congress on the other.

When the question whether the act is legislation or not is to be decided, the parties to the issue are the Members of the Congress on the one hand and the people on the other.

In 1788, when all legislative power in the national category was vested in the Congress, there should have been in the people of the thirteen sovereignties an understanding of what is meant by legislation. That understanding very largely existed among them whenever and so far as they gave the matter attention. They were not habituated to government by edict.

An edict for a restriction on the liberty of anyone of the people without a supporting conceivable public purpose was not legislation according to the common understanding of the word in 1788, and it is not now. Most of the acts of a majority of Congressmen restrict liberty of some one or more of the people or take something from them immediately or eventually. The act is not justified and cannot be given validity unless it provides some conceivable good for the people. The determination of this issue in an act such as the attempted Agricultural Adjustment Act, is unnecessary if the governing attempted belonged in the category of the State and not in the category of the Nation. If it was in the State's category, there was no act even if the public purpose served was insufficient to make the act legislative in character and not an unjustified edict to restrict the liberty or to take the property of some of the people.

The decision of January 6, 1936, rested on the ground that the attempted act was not in the national category. This made it unnecessary to consider whether it brought about a public good much to be desired. The Court rightly cannot fix a boundary line with injustice to a State any more than to an individual man, however much the Court might wish that the Constitution could be amended so as to abolish the States.

In determining a boundary line between territories or between categories, if the description of the line is clear, the Court cannot fix another line, however much better it would be. If the description of the line is obscure, an investigation of the effect of drawing the line in one or another of the places that lie within the envelope of the description may be of great assistance in determining where the contracting 13 parties meant the line to go.

If two common owners of a ranch divide it into halves, to be separately held, and their contract of division describes the line in such a way that the watering grounds are wholly in the one half, and grazing in the other is consequently unfeasible, it is the misfortune that comes from the contract which was made, and a court cannot relieve from it by distorting the line. On the other hand, if the description indicates equally well or poorly a line falling so as to exclude from one the watering grounds, or so as to pass through the middle of them, the advantages of the second location may point to the probability that the parties expressed by their obscure language their meaning to have the line this median line.

In passing on this dispute over boundaries between the categories, if the description of the boundary, in the Constitution, is clear, there is no occasion for pointing out the advantages or disadvantages of one or another location of it, because the description fixes the location. The Congress has the power to declare war. It is unnecessary to discuss whether or not this is an advantageous locality for the power. However, if the description in the Constitution is obscure enough so that four able minds may differ from five, or even one from eight, it becomes wise to point out the consequences of the location of the boundary in one spot or another within the confines of the obscure description so that these effects may be taken into consideration in determining whether the contracting parties expressed an intention in the Constitution to have it in one locality or another.

For instance, if it is within the power of the Congress to levy an excise tax on cotton processors to provide revenue to be handed over to cotton growers for laudable reasons, it is within the power of the Congress to levy a capitation tax on all people of the country in proportion to the census to pay over the proceeds to the operators of the cotton mills of Massachusetts if they will enter into agreement not to manufacture as much cotton cloth as they can to the end that the prosperity of these mills may be so far increased that they can buy other goods in the markets of the several States. It may be said that the Congress will not do this even when the Congress has within it a majority convinced that the welfare of the manufacturers and their artisans and mechanics and laborers require it. This makes no difference. The question is, Did the 13 groups of people manifest in the Constitution an intention to vest this power in the Congress?

The attitude of those groups toward each other, the extent of the disposition of the citizens of North Carolina to entrust their concerns to the Representatives of New York and of Massachusetts, beyond what was necessary for the foreign relations of the 13 groups taken together, and necessary for the mutual relations between the groups, is to be taken into account in deciding what they meant by what they said in the Constitution.

What is the guess as to whether the Constitution would ever have gone into effect if foreign relations and mutual relations could have been effectively promoted with nothing but a confederation, or if it had been thought that the Representatives of Georgia and of North Carolina and of others could prevent Rhode Island from deciding how much to plant on the farms within its borders?

The different groups were very fearful that advantages would be taken of them by others of the groups. A compromise of equal representation by States in the Senate, and by unequal in the House and in proportion to population, was because of this fear. The compromise on the slave trade was an illogical way out of the predicament which was presented by the different beliefs and interests.

The Constitution clearly discloses the intention of the 13 contracting States not to give to the Congress any powers which could be kept without impairing the effectiveness of the Nation in foreign relations and in mutual relations between the States.

Disregarding the operating powers given to carry out the ultimate national powers, the others given by the Constitution, all fall within one or the other of the two classes—foreign relations and mutual relations. In the one were war, treaties, foreign trade, naturalization. In the other were interestate commerce, including postal communication and the regulation of money and other measures of the exchanges to be expected therein, and the extension of the rights of inventors in one State to cover all the States.

In an instrument which laid so much emphasis on these categories and the things in aid of them, there was no reasonable chance for implication of greater powers not necessary or proper to give effect to these powers. Notwithstanding this, so sure did the 13 groups wish to be that no such implications were to be drawn that before the last ratified the Constitution the tenth amendment already had been proposed that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States respectively or to the people." When this was ratified the 13 States had contracted in the instrument itself for liberality in construing, to the States, and restriction in construing, to the Congress. As no ultimate powers of sovereignty can be put into the Congress without taking these from the State, liberality requires leaving with the State all that can be left there while recognizing in the Congress all the powers that clearly have been granted, and with liberality to the Congress as to the means necessary or proper to give effect to the powers clearly given. If the Constitution is approached with the necessity for liberal protection of the powers of the States, so as not to deprive the State of any powers by unnecessary implication, it becomes evident that the power to determine whether the agricultural production of Iowa shall be stimulated or restricted, is to be determined by the State of Iowa and not by the Congress of the United States. The Congress of the United States for the good of interstate commerce can prohibit the exportation from Iowa of surplus products, or the importation into Iowa of corn hoed elsewhere cheaply by children under the age of 12, just as Iowa might have prohibited that competition with its expensive adult-produced corn, if Iowa had not handed over that control without any loss of power by evaporation on the way, into the hands of the Congress as a part of the control over interstate commerce. This is not because Congress may abuse its power over interstate commerce to impose its humanitarian ideas on the corn growers of Maine so that they will not exist on this child labor.

It is because the sovereign power of Iowa to prohibit the importation of goods which will compete in interstate commerce unfairly with its own products clearly had been given to Congress by the interstate-commerce clause. But that is still another story.

The boundaries between the welfare which is general or national and that which is local or State are determined by the character of the welfare and not by its extent. If it so chances that the several welfares of each of the 48 States point to a common course, the addition together of the 48 welfares does not make it 1 welfare. Character and not extent determines.

The welfare over which the powers are retained and given, respectively, is the primary and direct welfare and not the secondary and consequential welfare.

In the matter now under consideration the welfare is the liberty of the farmers in a particular State to sow and to reap the acres within that State, and the power of that State to determine the policy which shall govern within that State in that operation. The Congress cannot invade the State welfare just because it will improve the widespread good. No emergency of widespread distress shifts the powers. We are not speaking of that other power of Congress to do everything necessary or proper to conduct successfully a war when that is directly in prospect.

It may be granted that an improvement in the State welfare of the people of any State may have an appreciable secondary and consequential effect upon the welfare of the people of some other States—even 47 of them. This does not shift the power of the State over the primary and direct welfare, if that was in the State's power.

The primary and direct welfare now under consideration is the liberty of the people of a particular State and the control over that liberty by the particular State in the policy of working the acres within that State.

Return to the never-surrendered power of Iowa to determine the agricultural policy within its borders of its people. It may pursue the policy of expansion or the policy of limitation.

Put yourself back in Massachusetts in 1788, and see whether you had the slightest reason to believe when you ratified the Constitution that Massachusetts could no longer encourage an expansion of its agricultural production or a contraction thereof as its governmental determined policy.

A construction liberal to the State as contractually required by the tenth amendment and by the structure, circumstances, and language of the Constitution would compel the common intelligence of Massachusetts to say that welfare did not become general, and therefore national, because that welfare became widespread horizontally over the respective territories of the Thirteen States or vertically through the different classes of rich and poor, employees and employers, manufacturers, farmers, merchants, artisans, laborers, scientists, professors, ministers, and priests. Welfare was general—that is, national—only if it was the welfare of the National Government in the categories in which it became sovereign. Otherwise that welfare was State welfare, and not the welfare of a National or General Government. A sovereign State's control over the policy of expansion or restriction of its agriculture for the purpose of promoting the interests of its consuming citizens by affording them an opportunity to get their food and clothing at lower prices, or for any other public purpose, had long been recognized and exercised by cultural groups composing the Thirteen States and the groups from which they sprang.

The exercise of that policy had often been in the direction of expanding its production and discouraging any restrictions upon it. It had seldom been in the direction of suppressing or discouraging production. Restriction had been denounced, whether it was accomplished by voluntary contract or under compulsion. It had been deemed and enacted that it was contrary to the common good to cut down the volume of products coming to the common markets.

What was deemed offensive to the public policy was the raising of the prices to consumers. This was the attitude in 1788. Of course, it was within the power of a sovereign State to reverse the policy so as to get as much out of the consumers as possible to enrich the producers. What we are now considering is whether the consumers of Massachusetts should have understood that they were giving over to the Congress the power to reverse that policy in Massachusetts against the will of Massachusetts. Could Massachusetts no longer prevent its citizens from entering into contracts to restrain their own freedom to produce, particularly the necessaries of life?

Within 3 years after the adoption of the Declaration of Independence and while the State of Massachusetts was a party to the Articles of Confederation, and 9 years before the Constitution of the United States went into effect, the State of Massachusetts on February 8, 1779—chapter 31 of the Laws of 1778–79—made it a crime for any person to buy more grain than he needed until the next harvesttime, or more meat than he needed, or forestalling wood, grain, flour, dead meat, meal, poultry, butter, cheese, or provisions. It is not necessary to consider the wisdom of this exercise of power by Massachusetts.

It is obvious that the crimes were denounced because of the fear that such acts would raise prices to consumers. Should the people of Massachusetts when they adopted the Constitution have understood that they prevented themselves from continuing to control this policy within the State, or to extend it further not only to trade but to production therein?

If the people of Massachusetts should have understood so, it seems that they misunderstood. That State has enacted laws in the twentieth century which are still in force unless they violate the Constitution of the United States. They declare unlawful (General Laws of Massachusetts (Tercentenary Edition, 1932), ch. 93), arrangements whereby a monopoly of production may be created or maintained, or competition in the State restrained, or the pursuit of any lawful occupation restrained, or the price of any commodity in common use unduly raised, within the State. Is this not within the category over which the State never has given up its power? Does this statute violate the Constitution of the United States? May the people of Massachusetts enter into understandings whereby the prices of any necessary of life may be unreasonably increased notwithstanding the fact that the State of Massachusetts has declared this to be a crime and imposed a penality on it? If the Constitution transferred this power from Massachusetts to the Congress before the point where direct effect upon interstate commerce was reached, then this statute is unconstitutional. Should the people of Massachusetts have understood this when they adopted the Constitution? Where is the man who will enlist himself in support of the proposition that anyone in any one of the thirteen sovereign States in 1788 understood or should have understood that any one of those States was transferring that power to control its own policy within its own State, over its own people, concerning the production of the acres of those people within that State?

If this statute is not an invasion of the category of national powers, the hog raiser of Massachusetts, if in April 1933 he entered into a contract or understanding with his neighbor or with any man, be he the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, that he would suppress his hog production for the avowed purpose of increasing the price of hogs and the price which consumers would pay for bacon, committed a crime against the laws of Massachusetts; and if the other party to the understanding was the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, the Secretary, if he reached the understanding in Massachusetts, also committed a crime against the laws of Massachusetts.

Had the situation changed in July 1933 because a majority of the Members of Congress had caused to be engrossed on its records what was called the Agricultural Adjustment Act?

Have you the vision to see the people of Massachusetts, the people of South Carolina, the people of New Hampshire, the people of Virginia, sitting about the ratification table and reaching the comprehension in 1788 that they were thus destroying the power of their respective sovereign States to deal with these superlatively internal affairs of these respective States? Do you say that they should have understood this to be the meaning of the words used and that this is so plain that a construction of the word "general", liberal to them, should not be deemed to mean national and only national, but that it should be deemed to reach so far into the internals of the State that it is clear that these people have given up forever the right to govern these internal affairs?

It seems clear that it is for the local welfare of the potato growers of Maine to manipulate the price of potatoes to get as high a price as is possible without curtailing their opportunity to market them; but is it for the national welfare of the potato eaters of the other States? It seems clear that it is for the local welfare of the cotton planters of Georgia to increase the price of cotton with the same limitations; but is it for the national welfare of the cotton users—whether for processing or for subsequent wearing? It is clear that it is for the local welfare of the miners of Arizona and Michigan that the price of copper be increased; but is this for the national welfare of the electrical workers of Schenectady and Lynn? It is clear that it is for the local welfare of the plow makers of Illinois that the price of plows be increased; but is it for the national welfare of the farmers of New Hampshire and elsewhere? It is clear that it is for the local welfare of the wheat growers and corn producers of Kansas that the price of these commodities be increased; but is it for the national welfare of the poultry farmers of Massachusetts and Long Island? It is clear that it is for the local welfare of the owners of the productive acres of Iowa that the price of corn be increased; but is it for the national welfare of the hoecake eaters of Alabama? It is clear that it is for the local welfare of the ranchers of Wyoming that the price of cattle be increased; but is it for the national welfare of the beef eaters of Rhode Island?

It is clear that it is for the welfare of every producer and manufacturer that he should prosper, even at the expense of the higher prices which the consumers of his products must pay; but that welfare is the local welfare of the State which governs that producer and that manufacturer and not the welfare of the National Government.

It is for the legislature of the sovereign in control within the bounds of the conceivable and not for the courts to say whether or not it is a policy that makes for the welfare of the people; but it is for the courts and not for the contending legislative bodies—be it the Congress on the one hand or the State legislature on the other—to settle the boundary dispute between the National category and the State category. That involves no question of policy. That is not a legislative question. It is a question to be determined by the exercise of judicial powers and judicial powers only.

The Constitution defines that boundary line. If the description of the line is clear, there is no occasion for discussion. If the description requires construction, the Constitution commands the Court to make that construction liberally to the States to see that they are not deprived of their powers beyond what they granted clearly to the Nation by ratifying the Constitution.

When the court has performed that judicial duty painstakingly and conscientiously, the Senator, the Member of the House of Representatives, the member of the State legislature, or any other man who seeks to malign the umpire who has decided for one litigant against another, is a poor sport and deserves disrepute.

If what has been said so far is approved, it becomes unnecessary to consider the further question whether the purpose of the attempted Agricultural Adjustment Act was conceivably for the good of the people, had the Constitution otherwise permitted it. It also makes it unnecessary to consider whether a tax can be said to be laid to provide revenue for the general welfare when it is laid on the paying group to be handed to particular groups, however worthy and needy they may be. It makes it unnecessary to consider whether it is a tax to raise revenue for any public purpose as distinct from a tax to be used to buy submission to an economic experiment.

It is not the motive which actuates the laying of a tax, but the purpose for which the revenue is raised, which determines whether it comes within the taxing power.

The United States is not a territorial sovereign over the land within the several States, and has not the implied powers of taxation of such a sovereign. It has only the powers of taxation expressly given, namely, "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." A levy for any other purpose is not a tax within the powers of the Congress to lay. It is not that the levy is an abuse of the powers of Congress. It is that Congress has no powers in this respect to abuse.

Congress, under the taxing power cannot lay a duty which is not to provide revenue but to prohibit importation. If the duty does not prohibit the importation, the levy has provided revenue. If it does prohibit importation, nobody has been unlawfully deprived of money paid in unlawful duties. There is another clause of the Constitution which permits the Congress to regulate foreign commerce and, therefore, to prohibit a portion of it whether it be by direct prohibition or by the obstacle of an insurmountable duty. It may order that no Canadian sealskins shall enter or only those which pay a 500-percent duty.

If the proposed act to regulate production within a State invades the domain of the State, it is immaterial whether or not the individual farmer in defiance of his allegiance to the State agrees to the invasion. Coercion or no is important only when another question is under consideration, namely, that of invasion of his individual liberty. It is unnecessary to consider that feature if the attempted act is bad, because it invades the State.

It is also unnecessary to consider whether, even if the attempted imposition is to provide revenue for the national welfare, it is an excise which is uniform throughout the United States. It may be conceded for the purposes of argument that it is territorially uniform in that it applies to every cotton processor or to every miller throughout the United States. In that sense it would be uniform throughout the United States if it was applied to every city throughout the United States that had a population of more than 4,500,000 people and no other. Is it uniform throughout the United States if it applies only to cotton processors and to millers and to slaughterers, if there is no conceivable reason for disclassifying them from those conducting normal operations in industry? Is there any conceivable reason for selecting the particular operations attempted to be selected, even if it is to provide revenue to pay to subservient farmers, when one of the objects sought to be accomplished is to raise the price of the raw materials which the excise-paying processors must pay? Is it a double-or-quit plan? Is there any conceivable reason for placing the burden of the needed levy upon these classes in the community, rather than on the similar operations of the wool manufacturers and of the sugar refiners? Is it uniform throughout the United States if there is no conceivable reason for the selection of the particular classes which it incides? These questions need not be answered if the other considerations dispose of the proposed act. The difference between such an excise and that upon luxuries such as whisky, tobacco, candy, and theater attendance, is obvious at a glance.

Throughout the foregoing submissions of opinion there has been no presumptuous disregard of what has been said by the justices, the judges, the statesmen, and the publicists of the last 147 years, whether they be the wise ones, the less wise, or the foolish, the great, or the small. The effort has been to approach the grave problems afresh, with the application to them of only that intelligence which is so widely possessed by the common thinkers of these 48 sovereign States when they devote themselves to unbiased and dispassionate consideration of grave issues.

What has been said expresses my opinion in many respects first formed since January 6, 1936. They are held firmly, but ready for speedy change and confession of error on being shown it. What has been said has been stated with no more certainty than the opinion is held; but it has been stated didactically with the intention of infuriating others to the point of replying to what is wrong so that the opinion may be changed in those particulars.

Mr. Reader, a long way back you were invited to take a buggy ride to explore this territory in partnership with me. If you have accepted the invitation, and have been able to keep awake to read to this point, you have profited by so much of what has been said as is right. I have performed my part of the partnership agreement, by telling you, as best I can. You, by taking this profit, seem to have come under the obligation to me to write me what is wrong in what has been said, and your reasons for thinking so. In writing me do not tell me what judges and statesmen have said, because that is outside the scope of this particular plan—and those sayings are in the books, readily accessible, and can be read more easily and more safely in the context in which they were uttered. What is wanted is your reasoning as a man or woman of common intelligence.

The statements made, if right, point to this: The Supreme Court of the United States, even by a unanimous opinion, has no authority to declare an act of the Congress unconstitutional. The Congress has no power to make a law which it has no power to make. The Members of Congress cannot, even by a unanimous vote, increase that power. The Supreme Court of the United States is under a duty and obligation to do justice between party and party. It is injustice to adjudge a man to pay what he does not owe by any law, whether the judgment is reached by unanimous decision or less than that. The determination of the boundary lines between and among the 49 sovereign governments is a judicial act, not to be performed by the wisest of legislative bodies. The determination of the boundary between the laudable political aspirations of members of legislative bodies for welfare, on the one hand, and the liberty of the 48 peoples on the other, is a judicial act. The judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals that the receivers of the Hoosac Mills did not owe the United States $81,000 by law was right. A judgment by the Supreme Court to reverse it, because three justices thought that it should be reversed when six thought that it should not be, would have been an error and beyond its constitutional right. The final judgment of the Supreme Court was right. The fact that the conscience of three justices made it impossible to give unanimity to that judgment, brings no loss to the receivers of the Hoosac Mills but a great loss to the people of these 49 Republics, by the absence of that much greater and more widespread solidarity of thought among them which would have come from that unanimity.

Experience has disclosed that in answering the questions as to the locations of the boundaries between and among the respective domains of the 49 sovereign governments and the question of the location of the boundaries of the laudable political aspirations of legislators for welfare on the one hand and the liberties of the 48 peoples on the other, the men who now are and have been Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States have replied, when required by their obligations to decide between party and party, with as much wisdom in judgment and as much freedom from political aspirations as can be expected to be found among humanity. No nearer approach to omniscience on this judicial question is to be expected from the members of the legislative branch of a government.

The settlement of the judicial question of disputed boundaries is placed in the best available human hands. To require the concurrence of more than a majority of the Justices would transfer the power from a majority to a minority of the Court. In the long run that would not be wise.

DEPORTATION OF ALIENS AND RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the American Legion, Department of Vermont, on August 3, 1935, relating to immigration and the deportation of undesirable aliens.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the American Legion, Department of Vermont, in convention assembled this 3d day of August 1935, being duly aware of the widespread unemployment existing in the United States (currently estimated at 10,000,000); and

Whereas it has been estimated by competent authorities that there are resident in the United States at the present time, aliens to the number of 11,000,000, of whom 3,400,000 are here unlawfully; and

Whereas there are now between 1,000,000 and 1,500,000 aliens on public-relief rolls of this country; and

Whereas it must be evident to all thinking persons that the 3,400,000 aliens unlawfully in our midst are either on relief or holding jobs rightfully belonging to United States citizens, or aliens legally resident in this country; and

Whereas it is very evident that if this country were purged of the aliens now unlawfully here and new immigration further restricted, that our unemployment would be greatly reduced and our relief problem much simpler; and

Whereas the Honorable MARTIN DIES, Congressman from Texas, has introduced a bill (H. R. 5921) in Congress, which if enacted, will greatly alleviate the above conditions; first, by reducing all present immigration quotas by 60 percent and placing quotas on all countries on the continents of North and South America; and, second, by deporting all aliens unlawfully resident in the United States and by making mandatory the deportation of certain alien criminals whose deportation is now greatly restricted; and third, by requiring all aliens in the United States as residents to take steps toward becoming American citizens within 1 year from the date of the enactment of said act; and

Whereas other countries have adopted similar measures for the protection of their citizens, and in some cases measures much more drastic than those proposed by H. R. 5921; and

Whereas the betterment of industrial and social conditions in the United States is of prime interest to the American Legion: Now, therefore, let it be

Resolved, That the American Legion, Department of Vermont, in convention assembled, go on record as favoring the passage of H. R. 5921, introduced by the Honorable MARTIN DIES, and that a certified copy of this resolution be forwarded to him, also to the Vermont delegation in Congress, and to the national headquarters for their consideration.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM OF NATIONAL GRANGE

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the legislative program adopted at the recent meeting of the National Grange, one of the great agricultural organizations of the country.

There being no objection, the program was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM OF THE NATIONAL GRANGE

1. EQUALITY FOR AGRICULTURE

The declared purpose of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (invalidated by the Supreme Court since the Grange convention was held) was to give the farmer price parity with industry on the pre-war basis. While the framework of this plan has been found to be out of harmony with the Constitution, its fundamental purpose, to give the farmer a more just proportion of the national income, was sound and must be kept steadily in mind in the framing of a new program. This Nation cannot endure in an economic sense with two price levels—one a high price level for industrial commodities and the other a low price level for agricultural commodities.

2. THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTION

The Grange has an abiding faith in the excellence and fundamental soundness of the basic law of the land. While we do not look upon the Constitution of the United States as sacred in the sense that it should never be changed, even in its minor details, we are firmly convinced that the checks and balances contained in it as between the legislative, executive, and judicial departments must be maintained.

The Grange does not look with favor upon the proposal that the Constitution should be amended in such a manner as to greatly expand the powers of the Federal Government in certain directions, since this could not be done without restricting in a corresponding degree the rights of the States and of individuals.

3. CONTROL OF MONOPOLY

